Jubilemus omnes una. [Advent.] This sequence for the 4th S. in Advent is found in a 12th cent. English Gradual in the British Museum (Reg. 2, B. iv. f. 65), and a Sequentiary, cir. 1199 (Calig. A. xiv. f. 44). Also in two 14th cent. French Missals in the British Museum [Add. 16,905 (of Faris), f. 18 b; and Add. 30,058 (of Sens), f. 16 b], 14th cent. Sarum Missal (Lausdown, 432, f. 11 b), &c. The printed text is in the reprints of the Sarum, York, Hereford and Arbuthnott Missals; in Neale's Sequentiae, 1852, p. 8; Daniel, v. p. 174 (from Neale); Kehrein, No. 5. Tr. as:—

Honour and glory, thanksgiving and praise. By E. A. Dayman, for the Hymnary, and pub. therein, 1872. It is repeated in the Laudes Domini, N.Y., 1884. Other trs. are:—

Jubilemus pia mente. [For the Dying. In Time of Pestilence.] The only ms. form of this sequence we have been able to find is in a 15th cent. Sarum Missal in the Bodleian (Liturg. Misc., 372, f. 261 b). It is also found in the eds. of the Sarum Missal printed at Venice, 1494; London, 1498, &c.; and in the Burntisland reprint is given at cots. 887*-889*.

This sequence occurs in a Mars, Pro mortalitate evitanda (for escaping death by petillence), which is introduced by a notice which states that Pope Clement, with all the Cardinals in conclave, composed and arranged the Mass, and granted to all those who were truly penitent, and had made their confession, and had heard this Mass, 280 days of indulgence (i.e. remission of canonical penalties), and that all those who heard this Mass should carry in the band a lighted candle while hearing Mass on the five days following; and should hold it in the hand, kneeling, throughout the whole Mass. And so sudden death could not hurt them. And this was certified and approved in Avignon and its neighbourhood. The Pope mentioned was Clement VI., elected Pope, May 7, 1342. The contagion alluded to was brought to Italy in 1347 by merchants from the Levant, and soon spread over Europe, causing a fearful amount of mortality. Clement, at Avignon, then the seat of the Papacy, distinguished himself by trying in various ways to alleviate and terminate this scourse, providing for the nursing and support of the sick, the burial of the dead, &c.

Jucundare plebs fidelis. Adam of St. Victor? [Common of Evangelists.] A fine sequence founded on Ezek. f. 4-28, x. 9-22, and Rev. iv. 6-8. The "living creatures" are made symbolical of the Evangelists, St. Matthew being represented by the man, St. Luke by the ox, St. Mark by the lion, and St. John by the eagle. Then under another figure the Evangelists are compared to the four rivers which watered Paradise (by later writers St. Matthew is represented by Gihou, St. Mark by Tigris, St. Luke by Euphrates, and St. John by Pison). sequence has generally been ascribed to Adam of St. Victor, and is included in L. Gautier's ed. of Adam's Ocuvres poetiques, vol. ii., 1858, p. 425; but in his ed. 1881, p. 223, Gautier says that the rhythm is unlike Adam, and as he thinks Adam's authorship is doubtful, he does not print the text, but merely refers to it in a Gradual of St. Victor before 1239 (Bibl. Nat., Paris, No. 14448), a Paris Gradual of the 13th cent. (B. N., No. 15615), and other sources. F. W. E. Roth, in his Lateinische Hymnen des Mittelalters, 1887, No. 252, gives the readings of a Gradual of the end of the 12th cent. (now at Darmstadt), where it is given as a sequence for SS. Mark and Luke. It is in a York Missal, cir. 1390, now in the Bodleian, but belonging to University College, Oxford; in an early 14th cent. Paris Missal in the British Museum (Add. 16905, f. 298); in the Magdeburg Missal of 1480 and others. The printed text is also in Daniel, ii. p. 84; Trench, ed. 1864, p. 62; Rehrein, No. 427; Wraugham's Liturgical Poetry of Adam of St. Victor, 1881, vol. iii. p. 162. In the uses of St. Victor, of Cluny, and of Paris it was the sequence for the festival of St. Matthew. The full trs. of this hymn are, (1) "Faithful flock in whose possessing," by J. M. Neale, in his Med. Hys., 1851, p. 78; altered in later editions to "Children of a heavenly Father": and (2)

"O be joyful, faithful nation," by D. S.
Wrangham, in his Liturgical Poetry of Adam of St. Victor, 1881, iii. p. 163. Portions of the hymn are also included in "Come, pure hearts in sweetest measure" (p. 250, ii.). (See also "Sing to God," in Various.) [J. M.]

Judkin, Thomas James, M.A., s. of a London tradesman, was b. at London, July 25, 1788, and was educated at Caius College, Cambridge (B.A. 1815, M.A. 1818), mainly at the expense of Sir William Curtis, an alderman of the City of London. After taking Holy Orders in 1816, he held various curacies, until 1828, when he was preferred as minister of Somers Chapel, St. Pancras, London. He d. Sept. 11, 1871. He pub. Twelve Signs of the Times; Popirh Aggression; and other works, including a volume of sonnets as Bygons Moods. His hymns were published mainly for the use of his own congregation and appeared as:—

as:—

(1) Church and Home Psalmody; being a Collection of Psalms from the Old and New Versions, and Original Hymns, for Congregational and Domestic Purposes, 1831. In 1834 this was enlarged and issued as (2) Church and Home Melodies, being a New Version of the more devotional parts of the Psalms, together with a version of the Collects, and Original Hymns; for Congregational and Domestic purposes. This was divided into (1) "Spirit of the Psalms." (2) "Collects in Verse." (3) "Hymns on the Gospels," and (4) "Original Hymns." (3) The 3rd ed. was pub. in 1827. At the end of the volume two title-pages were supplied, that the book, if so desired, might be divided into two, one as The Spirit of the Psalme; The Collects in Verse; together with Hymns suggested by the Gospels for the day throughout the Fear; and the other, Sacred Helodies; or Original Hymns for Omgregational and Domestiq Use.

1. Enthroned is Jesus now. Ascension.
2. Holy Spirit, Fount of blessing. Whitsuntide.
3. How shall I pray, O Lord, to Thee. Prayer.
4. We are journeying to a place. Heavenward.
5. When in the dark and cloudy day. Jesus, all in all. [J. J.]

Judson, Adoniram, p.p., b. at Maldon, Massachusetts, Aug. 9, 1788, where his father was Pastor of a Baptist Church. He graduated at Brown University, Providence, Rhode Island, 1807; and went in 1815, together with his first wife, as a Missionary to India. After encountering various hindrances from the East India Company, they began their mis-sion in Burmah. On June 8, 1824, Rangoon having been taken by the British, Dr. Judson was imprisoned by the natives, and was kept in captivity until the Burmese capitulated to the British in 1826. His first wife dying on Oct. 24, 1826, he married the widow of his late colleague, G. D. Boardman (næ Hull, see below), April 10, 1834. He d. at sea, April 12, 1850, and was buried in the deep. He translated the Bible into Burmese, and wrote several tracts in that language. A Burmese-English Dictionary was compiled from his papers. His Memoirs, by Dr. Wayland, were pub, in 1853. His hymns include:

- 1. Our Father God, [Lord] Who art in heaven. The Lord's Prayer. This hymn is dated "Prison, Ava, March 1825," and was written during his imprisonment above referred to. It was given in his Memoirs, 1853, vol. i. p. 308. It is in C. U. in G. Britain and America.
- 2. Our Saviour bowed beneath the wave. Holy Baptism. This dates from 1829, or earlier, and is in 7 st. It is said to have been "sung at the Baptism of several soldiers at Moulmein, British Pegu." St, i.-iii. usually form the hymn,
- Come, Holy Spirit, Dove divine. Holy Baptism. This is composed of st. vii., v., vi. of No. 2, and is found in Winchell's Coll., 1832.

[F. M. B.] Judson, Sarah, née Hull, daughter of Ralph Hull, was b. at Alstead, New Haven, Nov. 4, 1803, and married first to the Rev. George D. Boardman, and afterwards to Dr. Judson (see above). She d. at St. Helena, Sept. 1, 1845. Her fine missionary hymn, "Proclaim the lefty praise," is in W. Urwick's Dublia Coll., 1829, No. 142, in 4 st. of 8 l. Its appearance in America prior to this bas not been traced. [F. M. B.]

Jussu tyranni pro fide. Nicolas le [St. John at the Latin Gate.] Tourneaux. Appeared in the Cluniae Breviary, 1686, p. 188, and the Paris Breviary, 1736, as the hymn at Lauds for the Feast of St. John, Aute Portam Latinam. It is also in several modern French Breviaries; Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865; and J. Chandler's Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1837, No. 45. It is tr. as :-

- 1. John, by a tyrant's stern command. By I. Williams. Pub. in his Hys. Tr. from the Parisian Breviary, 1839, p. 203, in 5 st. of 4 l. It has been repeated in a few hymn-books,
- including the English Hymnal, 1852 and 1861, &c.

 2. An exile for the faith. By E. Caswall.

p. 195. In addition to its use in its original form in Roman Catholic hymn-books for missions and schools, and others, it is also given in part as follows:

1. In H. A. & M., 1861 and 1875, and others which have copied therefrom, st. i.-iii. are by E. Caswall, and iv., v. are by the compilers.

- 2. In the Parish H. Bk., 1863 and 1875, st. i.-iv. are by E. Caswall, with st. iii. re-written, and v., vi. are by G. Phillimore. This was repeated in the S.P.C.K. Church Hys., 1871, and others.
- 3. In the Hymnary, 1872, is the Parish H. Bk. text, slightly altered, with the addition of a dozology based on Caswall's tr.
- 3. For Jesu's sake, to lonely lands. By F. Pott, based upon E. Caswall as above, was given in his Hymns, &c., 1861.

Just as I am, without one plea. Charlotte Elliott. [The Lamb of God.] Writ-ten for and 1st pub in the Invalid's Hymn Book, 1836, in 6 st. of 4 l., and headed with the text, " Him that cometh unto Me, I will in no wise cast out" (see Index to Invalid's H. Bk.). During the same year it also appeared in Miss Elliott's Hours of Sorrow Cheered and Comforted, with the additional stanza, "Just as I am, of that free love," &c. From this last work the hymn has been transferred to almost every hymnal published in English-speaking countries during the past fifty years. It has been translated into almost every European language, and into the lan-guages of many distant lands. The testimony of Miss Elliott's brother (the Rev. H. V Elliott, editor of Psalms and Hymns, 1835) to the great results arising from this one hymn. is very touching. He save:-

"In the course of a long ministry, I hope I have been permitted to see some fruit of my labours; but I feel far more has been done by a single hymn of my sister's."

The text of this hymn is usually given in full, and without alteration, as in Church Hymns, 1871, No. 408. It ranks with the finest hymns in the English language. Its success has given rise to many imitations, the best of which is R. S. Cook's "Just as thou art, without one trace." A Latin rendering, "Ut ego sum! nec alia ratione utene," by R.
Bingbam, is given in his Hymno. Christ. Lat., 1871, and a second by H. M. Macgill, in his Songs of the Christian Creed and Life, 1876, as, "Tibl, qualis sum, O Christe!" [J. J.]

Keach, Benjamin, was b. at Stoke-Hammond, Bucks, Feb. 29, 1640. Early in life he joined a Baptist Church, and at 18 bogan to preach. For the next 10 years he laboured as an evangelist in the towns and villages of his native county, suffering at times much persecution for his principles as a Baptist and Nonconformist. In 1664, he pub. a small book entitled The Child's Instructor; or, a New and Easy Primer. For this he was tried before Lord Chief Justice Hyde, and condemned to a fine, imprisonment and the pillory. In 1668 he removed to London, and became pastor of a Particular Baptist Church which met, first in private houses, and afterwards in Horselydown, Southwark. There a large congregation gathered round him, to which he ministered with great acceptance and usefulness until his death in 1704. Keach deserves special mention for the part be took in introducing singing into Baptist congregations, having been the first who did so. Baptist Hymnody and English Hymnody, Early, § x11.] He wrote many hymns, the earliest appearing in his War with the Powers of Darkness, 4th ed., 1676. Nearly 300 by him were pub. in 1691 as Spiritual Melody, their subjects being the Metaphors of Holy Scripture. This subject had been previously expounded by him in his Tropologia, a Key to open Scripture Metaphors, 2 vols. folio, 1682. His Distressed Sion Relieved, or The Garment of Praise for the Spirit of Heaviness, was pub. in Lond., 1689. It is mainly in blank cated to William and Mary, and is written in praise of Protestantism against Romanism. In 1691 he also pub. The Breach Repaired in God's Worship; or Singing of Psalms. Hymns de Spiritual Songs proved to be a Holy Ordinance of Jesus Christ, &c. (London, J. Hancock); and also Spiritual Melody the same year. His latest poetical work appeared in 1696: A Feast of Fat Things: containing several Scripture Songs and Hymns. Keach was a voluminous writer, forty-two works being pub. by him, in addition to prefaces

Keble, John, M.A., was b. at Fairford, in Gloucestershire, on St. Mark's Day, 1792. His father was Vicar of Coln St. Aldwin's, about three miles distant, but lived at Fairford in a house of his own, where he educated entirely his two sons, John and Thomas, up to the time of their entrance at Oxford. In 1806 John Keble won a Scholarship at Corpus Christi College, and in 1810 a Double First Class, a distinction which up to that time had been gained by no one except Sir Robert Peel. In 1811 he was elected a Fellow of Oriel, a very great honour, especially for a boy under 19 years of age; and in 1811 he won the University Prizes both for the English and Latin Essays. It is somewhat remarkable that amid this brilliantly successful career, one compe-tition in which the future poet was unsuccessful was that for English verse, in which he was defeated by Mr. Rolleston. After his election at Oriel, he resided in College, and engaged in private tuition. At the close of 1813 he was appointed Examining Master in the Schools, and was an exceedingly popular and efficient examiner. On Trinity Sunday, 1815, he was ordained Deacon, and in 1816 Priest, by the Bishop of Oxford, and became Curate of East Leach and Burthorpe, though he still continued to reside at Oxford. In 1818 he was appointed College Tutor at Oriel, which office he retained until 1823. On the death of his mother in the same year, he left Oxford, and returned to live with his father and two surviving sisters at Fairford. In addition to East Leach and Burthorpe, he also accepted the Curacy of Southrop, and the two brothers, John and Thomas, undertook the duties between them, at the same time helping their father at Coln. It should be added, as an apology for Keble thus becoming a sort of pluralist among "the inferior clergy," that the population of all his little cures did not exceed 1000, nor the income £100 a year. In 1824 came the only offer of a dignity in the Church, and that a very humble one, which he ever received. The newly-appointed Bishop of Barbadoes (Coleridge) wished Keble to go out with him as Archideacon, and but for his father's delicate state of health, he would probably have accepted the offer. In 1825 he became Curate of Hursley, on the recommenda-tion of his old pupil, Sir William Heathcote; but in 1826, on the death of his sister, Mary Ann, he returned to Fairford, feeling that he ought not to separate himself from his father and only surviving sister. He supplied his father's place at Colu entirely. 1827 was memorable for the publication of the Christian Year, and 1828 for the election to the Provostship of Oriel, which his friends, rather than himself, seem to have been auxious to secure for him. In 1829 the living of Hursley was offered to him by Sir William Heathcote, but declined on the ground that he could not leave his father. In 1830 he published his admir-able edition of Hooker's Works. In 1891 the Bishop of Exeter (Dr. Philpotts) offered him the valuable living of Paignton, but it was declined for the same reason that Hursley had been declined. In the same year he was also elected to the Poetry Professorship at Oxford. and introductions to the books of others. His His Prelectiones in that capacity were much hymns have passed out of C. U. [W. R. S.] admired. In 1833 he preached his famous Assize Sermon at Oxford, which is said by Dr. Newman to have given the first start to the Oxford Movement. Very soon after the publication of this sermon the Tracts for the Times began to be issued. Of these Tracts Keble wrote Nos. 4, 13, 40, and 89. In 1835 his father died, and Keble and his sister retired from Fairford to Coln. In the same year he married Miss Clarke and the Vicorage of Hursley, again becoming vacant, was again offered to him by Sir W Heathcote, and as the reason for his previous refusal of it no longer existed, he accepted the offer, and in 1836 settled at Hursley for the remainder of his life. That life was simply the life of a devoted and indefatigable parish priest, varied by intellectual pursuits. In 1864 his health began to give way, and on March 29, 1866, he passed away, his dearly loved wife only surviving him six weeks. Both are buried, side by side, in Hursley churchyard.

In his country vicarage he was not idle with his pru. In 1838 he published his Metrical Version of the Psalms. The year before, he began to edit, in conjunction with Drs. Pusey and Newman, the Library of the Fathers. In 1846 he published the Lyra Innocentium, and in 1847 a volume of Academical and Occasional Sermons. His a volume of Academical and Occarional Sermons. His pen then seems to have rested for nearly ten years, when the agitation about the Divorce Bill called forth from him in 1857 an essay entitled, An Argument for not proceeding immediately to repeat the Laws which treat the Nuprial Bond as Indistoluble; and in the same year the decision of Archibishop Sammer in the Denison case elicited another essay, the full title of which is the Worship of Our Lord and Saviour in the Sacrament of the Huly Communion, but which is shortly entitled, Eucharistical Adoration. In 1863 he published his last work, The Life of Bishop Wilson (of Sodor and Men). This cost him more pains than anything he wrote, but it was essentially a labour of love.

In the popular sense of the word "hymn," Keble can scarcely be called a hymn-writer at all. Very many of his verses have found their way into popular collections of Hymns for Public Worship, but these are mostly centos. Often they are violently detached from their context in a way which seriously damages their significance. Two glaring instances of this occur in the Morning and Evening hymns. In the former the verse "Only, O Lord, in Thy dear love, Fit us for perfect rest above," loses half its meaning when the preceding verse, ending "The secret this of rest below," is excised, as it generally is in collections for public worship, and the same may be said of that most familiar of all Keble's lines, "Sun of my soul, thou Saviour dear," which has of course especial reference to the preceding verse, "Tis gone, that bright and orbed blaze," &c. The Lyra Innocentium has furnished but few verses which have been adopted into hymn collections; the Psalter has been more fortunate, but the translations from the Latin are almost unknown.

Taking, however, the word "hymn" in the wider sense in which Dr. Johnson defines it, as "a song of adoration to some superior being," Keble stands in the very first rank of hymn-writers. His uneventful life was the very ideal life for such a poet as Keble was, but not the sort of life which would be best adapted to train a popular hymn-writer. The Christian Year and the Lyra Innocentium reflect in a remarkable degree the surroundings of the writer. They are essentially the works of a refined and cultured mind, and require a refined and cultured mind to enter into their | successful achievement as a whole, it rises in spirit. Keble, all his life long, and never more than in the earlier portion of it, before he wrote, and when he was writing The Christian Year, breathed an atmosphere of culture and refinement. He had imbibed neither the good nor the evil which the training of a pub-lic, or even of a private, school brings. It was not even the ordinary home education which he had received. He had been trained, up to the very time of his going to college, by his father, who was clearly a man of culture and refinement, and had been himself successively Scholar and Fellow of Corpus. When he went to Oxford, he can scarcely be said to have entered into the whirl of university life. The Corpus of those days has been admirably described by Keble's own biographer, Sir John Coleridge, and by Dean Stanley in his Life of Dr. Arnold; and the impression which the two vivid pictures leave upon the mind is that of a home circle, on rather a large scale, composed of about twenty youths, all more or less scholarly and refined, and some of them clearly destined to become men of mark. When he removed across the road to Oriel, he found himself in the midst of a still more distinguished band. Whether at home or at college he had never come into contact with anything rude or coarse. And his poetry is just what one would expect from such a Exquisitely delicate and refined thoughts, expressed in the most delicate and refined language, are characteristic of it all. Even the occasional roughnesses of versification may not be altogether unconnected with the absence of a public school education, when public schools laid excessive stress upon the form of composition, especially in verse. The Christian Year again bears traces of the life which the writer led, in a clerical atmosphere, just at the eve of a great Church Revival, "cujus pars magna fuit." "You know," he writes to a friend, "the C. Y. (as far as I remember it) everywhere supposes the Church to be in a state of decay." Still more obviously is this the case in regard to the Lyra Innocentium. It was being composed during the time when the writer was stricken by what he always seems to have regarded as the great sorrow of his life. Not the death of his nearest relations-and he had several trials of this kind-not the greatest of his own personal troubles dealt to him so severe a blow as the secession of J. H. Newman to the Church of Rome. The whole circumstances of the fierce controversy connected with the Tract movement troubled and unsettled him; and one can well understand with what a sense of relief he turned to write, not for, but about, little children, a most important distinction, which has too often been unnoticed. If the Lyra had been written for children it would have been an almost ludicrous failure, for the obscurity which has been frequently complained of in The Christian Year, is still more conspicuous in the latter work. The title is somewhat misleading, and has caused it to be regarded as a suitable gift-book for the young, who are quite incapable of appreciating it. For the Lyra is written in a deeper tone, and expresses the more matured convictions of the author; and though it is a far less laces to a higher strain of poetry than The Christian Year does.

Another marked feature of Keble's poetry is to a great extent traceable to his early life, viz. the wonderful accuracy and vividness of his descriptions of natural scenery. The ordinary school-boy or undergraduate cares little for natural scenery. The country is to him a mere playing-field. But Keble's training led him to love the country for its own sake. Hence, as Dean Stanley remarks, "Oxford, Bagley Wood, and the neighbour-hood of Hursley might be traced through hundreds of lines, both in The Christian Year and the Lyra Innocentium." The same writer testifies, with an authority which no other Englishman could claim, to "the exactness of the descriptions of Palestine, which be [Keble] had never visited." And may not this remarkable fact be also traced to some extent to his early training? Brought up under the immediate supervision of a pious father, whom he venerated and loved dearly, he had been encouraged to study intelligently his Bible in a way in which a boy differently educated was not likely to do. Hence, as Sir John Coleridge remarks.

"The Christian Year is so wonderfully scriptural. Keble's mind was, by long, patient and affectionate study of Scripture, so imbued with it that its language, its train of thought, its mode of reasoning, seems to flow out into his poetry, almost, one should think, unconsciously to himself."

To this may we not add that the same intimate knowledge of the Bible had rendered the memory of the Holy Land so familiar to him that he was able to describe it as accurately as if he had seen it? One other early influence of Keble's life upon his poetry must be noticed. Circumstances brought him into contact with the "Lake poets." The near relation of one of the greatest of them had been his college friend, and John Coleridge introduced him to the writings not only of his uncle, S. T. Coleridge, but also of Wordsworth, to whom he dedicated his Pralectiones, and whose poetry and personal character he admired enthusiastically. To the same coilege friend he was indebted for an introduction to Southey, whom he found to be "a noble and delightful character," and there is no doubt that the writings of these three great men, but especially Wordsworth, had very much to do with the formation of Keble's own mind as a poet. It has been remarked that in Keble's later life his poetical genius seemed to have, to a great extent, forsaken him; and that the Miscellaneous Poems do not show many traces of the spirit which animated The Christian Year and the Lyra Innocentium. Perhaps one reason for this change may be found in the increased interest which Keble took in public questions which were not conducive to the calm, introspective state of mind so necessary to the production of good poetry. The poet should live in a world of his own, not in a world perpetually wrangling about University Reform, about Courts of Final Appeal, about Marriage with Deceased Wife's Sister, and other like matters into which Keble, in his later years, threw himself-heart and soul.

It is not needful to say much about Keble's other poetical works. The Pealter was not a success, and Keble did not expect it to be. "It was undertaken," he tells us, "in the first instance with a serious apprehension, which has since grown into a full conviction, that the thing attempted is, strictly speaking, impossible." At the same time, if Keble did not achieve what he owned to be impossible, he produced a version which has the rare merit of never offending against good taste; one which in every line reflects the mind of the cultured and elegant scholar, who had been used to the work of translating from other languages into English. Hymnal compilers have hitherto strangely neglected this volume; but it is a volume worth the attention of the hymncompiler of the future. There is scarcely a verse in it which would do discredit to any hymn-book; while there are parts which would be an acquisition to any collection. His translations from the Latin have not commended themselves to hymnal compilers. Some of his detached hymns have been more popular. But it is after all as writer of The Christian Year that Keble has established his claim to be reckoned among the immortals. It would be hardly too much to say that what the Prayer Book is in prose, The Christian Year is in poetry. They never pall upon one; they realise Keble's own exquisite simile:—

" As for some dear familiar strain Untired we ask, and ask again; Ever in its melodious store Finding a spell unheard before."

And it would hardly be too bold to prophery that The Christian Year will live as long as the Prayer Book, whose spirit Keble had so thoroughly imbibed, and whose "soothing in-fluence" it was his especial object to illustrate and commend. [J. H. O.)

Keble's hymns, poetical pieces, and translations appeared in the following works :-

lations appeared in the following works:—

(1.) The Christian Year: Thoughts in Verse for the Sundays and Holydays Throughout the Year. Oxford: John Henry Parker, 1821. Treface duted "May 30th, 1822." The last poem, that on the "Commination," is dated March 9, 1827. The poems on the "Forms of Prayer to be used at Sea," "Gunpowder Treason," "King Charles the Martyr," "The Restoration of the Royal Family," "The Accession," and "Ordination," were added to the 4th edition, 1828. The Messrs. Parker have pub. a large number of editions to date, including a fac-simile reprint of the first edition, and an edition with the addition of the dates of composition of each poem. A fac-simile of Keble's Ks. as it existed in 1822 was also lithographed in 1882, by Kliot Stock, but its publication was suppressed by a legal injunction, and only a few copies came into the hands of the public. Since the expiration of the first copyright other publishers have issued the work in various forms.

(2.) Contributions to the British Magasine, which were included in Lyra Apostolica, 1838, with the signature of "y."

(8.) Miscellaneous Poems by the Rev. J. Rebie, M.A., Vicar of Hursies. Oxford and London: Parker & Co., 1869. The excellent Preface to this postimmous work is dated "Chester, Feb. 22, 1869," and is signed "G. M.," i.e. by George Moberly, late Bp. of Salisbury. This volume contains Kehle's Ode written for the Installation of the Duke of Wellington as Chancellor of the University of Oxford, in 1834, his poems from the Lyra-Apostolica, his hymna named above, his translations from the Latin, and other pieces not published in his works.

The most important centes from The Christian Year, which are in C. U. as hymns, and also the hymns contributed to the Salisbury H. Bk., 1857, are annotated in full under the first lines of the original poems. The trs. from the Latin and Greek are given under the first lines of the originals. There are also several of his more important pieces noted in the body of this work. All these may be found through the Index of Authors and Tre, at the end of this Dictionary. Those that remain (mainly centes) and have no special history, are the following (the dates given being those of the composition of each piece):-

The editor of Keble's Miscellaneous Poems says concerning Nos. 53, 55, and 56:-

"The three hymns for Emigrants, for use at Mid-"the three nymns for antigrants for use as any might, Morning, and Evening, were written at the request of his friend Sir Frederic Rogers, at that time Emigration Commissioner. They were printed in the first edition of the 'Prayers for Emigrants,' which he had compiled, but were subsequently emitted, perhaps as being thought not sufficiently simple for the class of the Royal for the class of the food of Prayers are chieffer. people for whose use the Book of Prayers was chiefly intended." Preface, p. vi.

When, to the 56 centos and hymns given above, are added those annotated elsewhere in this Dictionary, it is found that nearly 100 bymns (counting centos as such) by Keble are in C. U. at the present time, and of these some rank with the finest and most popular in the English language. [J. J.]

Keimann, Christian, s. of Zacharias Keimann, Lutheran paster at Pankratz, in Bohemia, and after 1616 at Ober-Ullersdorf, was b. at Pankratz, Fcb. 27, 1607. In the autumn of 1627 he entered the University of Wittenberg, where he graduated M.A., March 19, 1634; and in the next month was appointed by the Town Council of Zittsu as Conrector of their Gymnasium, of which he became Rector in 1638. He d. at Zittau, Jan. 13, 1662 (Koch, ili. 369; Allg. Deutsche Biog., xv. 535, &c.). Keimann was a dis-tinguished teacher. He was the author of a number of scholastic publications, of a few Scriptural plays, and of some 13 hymns. Almost all of his hymns came into church use. They take high rank among those of the 17th cent., being of genuine poetic ring, fresh, strong, full of faith under manifold and heavy trials, and deeply spiritual. Two have passed into English :-

i. Frenet each, ihr Christen alle. Christmas. This beautiful hymn is included in 4 st. of 10 1. as No. 24 in pt. iv. of A. Hammerschmidt's Masikalische Andachten, pt. iv. of A. Hammerschmidt's Musikalische Andachten, pub. at Freiberg in Saxony, 1646; and is set to a tume by Hammerschmidt introduced by Hallelujah repeated twelve times. In the Unu. L. S., 1851, No. 34. According to Koch, vill. 25, it was composed as part of a piece written by Keimann for his scholars to perform at Christmastide, 1645, and pub. as Der neugeborne Jerus, at Görlitz, 1646. Stanza iv. may refer to the truce of 1646 between Saxony and Sweden. Tr. 38:—

O rejoice, ye Christians, loudly. A good and full tr. by Miss Winkworth, as No. 33 in her C. B. for Eng-land, 1863, where it is set to the original melody.

land, 1863, where it is set to the original melody.

ii. Meinen Jesum lass ich nicht; Weil er sich für mich gegeben. Love to Christ. 1st appeared in A. Hammerschmidt's Fest-Bus- und Dancklieder, Zittau and Leiptig, 1658 (engraved title, 1659), pt. ilt., No. 4, in 6 st. of 6 l. It is an acrostic on the dying words attered on Oct. 8, 1666, by the Elector Johann Georg I. of Saxony: Meinen (l.), Jesum (il.), List (il.) (iv.) nicht (v.); st. vi. giving in the initial letters of lines 1-5 (J. G. C. Z. S.) the name, viz. Johann Georg Churtust zu Sachsen, and then in line 6 the motto in full. Founded on the worde of Jacob in Gen. xxxii. 28, it has exproprete and strengthened many in life and at the hour comforted and strengthened many in life and at the hour of death; and has served as the model of many later hymns. Included as No. 737 in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1883. Tr. as:—

I will leave my Jeaus never! A good tr., omitting st. iii., included as No. 448 in the Pennsylvania Luth. Ch. Bk.; 1868, marked as Unknown tr., 1864.

Keinen hat Gott verlassen. [Trust in God.] Wackernagel, v. p. 275, gives this hymn from the Geistliche Lieder, Erfurt, 1611, and the Christliches Gesangbüchlein, Hamburg, 1612, in 8 st. of 81. Also in Mützell, 1855, No. 590, and the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 847. In the 1612 it is entitled "A hymn on the name of the serene right honourable princess and lady, Lady Katharina, by birth and marriage Margravine and Electress of Bran-denburg." As she d. Sept. 30, 1602, the hymn probably dates from the 16th cent. The initials of the 8 st. form the name Katarina. The common ascription to Andreas Kessler, who was only b. in 1595, is baseless. Tr. as:

who was only v. in 1999, is marriess. ... as ... (1) "Haste, Lord, within my worthless heart." A tr. of st. vi. by C. Kinchen, as Ko. 33 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1742. In 1789 and later eds. (1886, No. 444, ascribed without ground to Catharine Grossmann) it begins "O Lord, accept my worthless heart." (2) "Amen, this the conclusion," a tr. of st. vill., as No. 603, in the Moravian H. Bk., 1801 (1886, No. 719).

Keith, George. [How firm a foundation.]

Kelly, John, was b. at Newcastle-on-Tyne, educated at Glasgow University, studied theology at Bonn, New College, Edinburgh, and the Theological College of the English Presbyterian Church (to which body he belongs) in London. He has ministered to congregations at Hebburn-on-Tyne and Streatham, and is now (1887) Tract Editor of the Religious Tract Society. His translations of rently adverse to original investigation. In

Paul Gerhardt's Spiritual Songs were pub. in 1867. Every piece is given in full, and rendered in the metre of the originals. His Hymns of the Present Century from the German were pub. in 1886 by the R. T. S. In these trs. the metres of the originals have not always been followed, whilst some of the hymns have been abridged and others condensed. His translations lack poetic finish, but are faithful to the originals. [W. G. H.]

Kelly, Thomas, B.A., s. of Thomas Kelly, a Judge of the Irish Court of Common Pleas, was b. in Dublin, July 13, 1769, and educated at Trinity College, Dublin. He was designed for the Bar, and entered the Temple, London, with that intention; but having undergone a very marked spiritual change he took Holy Orders in 1792. His earnest evan-Fowler to inhibit him and his companion preacher, Rowland Hill, from preaching in the city. For some time he preached in two unconsecrated buildings in Dublin, Plunket Street, and the Bethesda, and then, having seconded from the Established Church, he erected places of worship at Athy, Portar-lington, Wexford, &c., in which he conducted divine worship and preached. He d. May 14, 1854. Miller, in his Singers & Songs of the Church, 1869, p. 338 (from which some of the foregoing details are taken), says:—

foregoing details are taken, says:—
"Mr. Kelly was a man of great and varied learning, skilled in the Oriental tongues, and an excellent Bible critic. He was possessed also of musical talent, and composed and published a work that was received with favour, consisting of music adapted to every form of metre in his hymn-book. Naturally of an amiable disposition and thorough in his Christian piety, Mr. Kelly became the friend of good men, and the advocate of every worthy, benevolent, and religious cause. He was admired alike for his zeal and his humility; and his liberality found ample scope in Ireland, especially during ality found ample scope in Ireland, especially during the year of famine."

Kelly's hymns, 765 in all, were composed and published over a period of 51 years, as follows :-

A Collection of Pealms and Hymns extracted from

(1) A Collection of Paclms and Hymns extracted from Various Authors, by Thomas Kelly, A.B., Dublin, 1802. This work contains 247 hymns by various authors, and an Appendix of 33 original hymns by Kelly.
(2) Hymns on Various Passages of Scripture, Dublin, 1804. Of this work several editions were published: 1st, 1804; 2nd, 1806; 3rd, 1809; 4th, 1812. This last edition was published in two divisions, one as Hymns on Various Passages of Scripture, and the second as Hymns adapted for Social Worship. In 1815 Kelly issued Hymns by Thomas Kelly, not before Published. The 5th ed., 1820, included the two divisions of 1812, and the new hymns of 1815, as one work. To the later editions of 1820, 1826, 1836, 1840, 1846, and 1853, new hymns were added, until the last published by M. Moses, of Dublin, 1853, contained the total of 765. 1853, contained the total of 765.

As a hymn-writer Kelly was most successful. As a rule his strength appears in hymns of Praise and in metres not generally adopted by the older hymn-writers. His "Come, see the place where Jesus lay" (from "He's gone, see where His body lay"), "From Egypt gone, see where His body lay",, "From Egyptately come"; "Look, ye saints, the sight is glorious"; "On the mountain's top appearing"; "The Head that once was crowned with thorns"; "Through the day Thy love has spared us"; and "We sing the praise of Him Who died," rank with the first lymns in the English language. Several of his in the English language. Several of his hymns of great merit still remain unknown through so many modern editors being appaaddition to the hymns named and others, which are annotated under their respective first lines, the following are also in C. All these hymns, together with those annotated under their respective first lines are in the 1853 ed. of Kelly's Hymns pub. in Dublin by M. Moses, and in London by Simpkin, Marshall & Co. Kelly's musical editions are issued by the same publishers. [J. J.]

Kempenfelt, Richard, of Swedish deseent, was b. Oct., 1718. In Jan., 1741, he obtained a lieutenant's commission in the British Navy. He became captain in 1757, and admiral in 1780. He was drowned in the "Royal George," which sank in harbour at Portsmouth on Aug. 29, 1782. Admiral Kempenfelt was an admirer of Whitefield and the Wesleys, and interested himself much in evangelistic work. His hymns were pub. as Original Hymns and Poems. By Philotheorus. Exeter, printed by B. Thorn, 1777, and were dedicated "To the Rev. Mr. Fletcher, Vicar of Madeley, in Shropshire." They were reprinted, with a Preface, by D. Sedgwick, in 1861. Although most of these hymns are given in the older collections, only a few remain in modern hymn-books, and, including centes, are:—

1. Bear me on Thy rapid wing. Praise to Jesus in Heaven.

2. Burst, ye emerald gates, and bring. Praise to Jesus in Heaven.

 Gentie Spirit, waft me over. Heaven desired.
 Hali, Thou eternal Logos, hail. Adoration of Jesus.

5. Hark, 'tie the trump of God. The Last Day. 6. O my Redeemer, come. The Last Day.

Of these Nos. 1 and 2 are from the same hymn; and Nos. 5 and 6 also from another. The original texts of Nos. 3, 5, and 6 are in Lyra Brit., 1867, pp. 349-52. [J. J.]

Kempff, Johann. [Kämpff, J.]

Kempis, Thomas à. [Thomas of Kempen.]

Kempthorne, John, B.D., s. of Admiral Kempthorne, was b. at Plymouth, June 24, 1775, and educated at St. John's, Cambridge (B.A. 1796, B.D. 1807), of which he subsequently became a Fellow. On taking Holy Orders, he became Vicar of Northleach, Glouesteralire, in 1816; Vicar of Wedmore, Somersetshire, 1827, and the same year Rector of St. Michael's and Chaplain of St. Mary de Grace, Gloucester. He was also a Prebendary in Lichfield Cathedral from 1826, and sometime Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of that diocese. Ho d. at Gloucester, Nov. 6, 1838. His hymnological work is:—

Select Portions of Pealms from Various Translations, and Hymns, from Various Authors. The whole Arranged according to the yearly Seasons of the Church of England, with attempts at corrections and improvements. By the Rev. John Kempthorne, B.D. . . . London. Hatchard. 1810.

In this collection there are a few hymns of merit, as "Forgive, O Lord, our wanderings past," "Great God, to Thee our songs we raise," and "Praise the Lord, ye heavens adore Him," which are usually ascribed, on D. Sedgwick's authority, to J. Kempthorne. These hymns, however, are not by Kempthorne, but were taken by him for his collection from the Foundling Hospital Ps. & Hys., 1796 and 1801-9; and there is no evidence whatever that he had anything to do with that hymn-book. As that book is frequently quoted by hymnologists, we append the title-page of the 1801 ed., which is a reprint of that of 1797:—

Praims, Hymns, and Anthems; sung in the Chapel of the Hospital for the Maintenance and Education of Expected and Deserted Toung Children. London, Printed in the Year M.DCC.I. At the end of some coples of this edition there is pasted in a four-paged sheet of hymns which include, with others, "Praise the Lord, ye heavens after Him" (q.v.).

In the 1st ed. of his own Select Portions of Psalms, &c., 1810, Kempthorne did not in any way indicate his own hymns, but in the 2nd ed. of 1813 (which is a reprint of the 1st ed. with an Appendix of 11 hymns) he says in his Preface:—

"For Hymn 140 and Hymn, p. 267. Appendix; for almost all of Ps. 42, p. 187; Ps. 51, p. 57 and 61; Ps. 84, p. 185; Ps. 86, p. 184; Ps. 115, p. 49; Hymn 127; and ior a considerable part of Ps. 22, p. 64; Ps. 122, p. 103; Ps. 133, p. 141; Ps. 139, p. 38; Hymns 20, 43, 54, 81, 97, 101, 118, and several others, the Editor is responsible, and acknowledges his obligations to some kind friends."

Of these hymns and psalm versions, which Kempthorne claims as his own, only one or two are in C. U.

Ken, Thomas, D.D. The bare details of Bp. Ken's life, when summarised, produce these results:—Born at Berkhampstead, July, 1687; Scholar of Winchester. 1651; Fellow of New College, Oxford, 1657; B.A., 1661; Rector of Little Easton, 1663; Fellow of Winchester, 1666; Rector of Brighstone, 1667; Bector of Woodhay and Prebendary of Winchester, 1669; Chaplain to the Princess Mary at the Hague, 1679; returns to Winchester, 1680; Bp. of Bath and Wells, 1685; imprisoned in the Tower, 1688; deprived, 1691; died at Longleat, March 19, 1718.

The parents of Ken both died during his childhood, and he grew up under the guar-dianship of Izaak Walton, who had married Ken's elder sister, Ann. The dominant Presbyterianism of Winchester and Oxford did not shake the firm attachment to the English Church, which such a home had instilled. His life until the renewal of his connection with Winchester, through his fellowship, his chaplaincy to Morley (Watton's staunch friend, then bishop of Winchester), and his prebend in the Cathedral, calls for no special remark here. But this second association with Wiuchester, there seems little doubt, originated his three well-known hymns. In 1674 he published A Manual of Prayers for the Use of the Scholars of Winchester College, and reference is made in this book to three hymns, for "Morning,"
"Midnight," and "Evening," the scholars being recommended to use them. It can scarcely be questioned that the Morning, Evening, and Midnight hymns, pub. in the 1695 edition of The Manual, are the ones referred to. He used to sing these hymns to the viol or spinet, but the tunes he used are unknown. He left Winchester for a short time to be chaplain to the Princess Mary at the Hague, but was dismissed for his faithful remonstrance against a case of immorality at the Court, and returned to Winchester. A similar act of faithfulness at Winchester singularly enough won him his bishopric. He stoutly refused Nell Gwynne the use of his house, when Charles II. came to Winchester, and the easy king, either from humour or respect for his honesty, gave him not long afterwards the bishopric of Bath and Wells. Among the many acts of piety and munificence that characterised his tenure of the see, his ministration to the prisoners and sufferers after the battle of Sedgmoor and the Bloody Assize are conspicuous. He interceded for them with the king, and retrenched his own state to assist them. He attended Monmouth on the scaffold. James II. pro-nounced him the most eloquent preacher among the Protestants of his time; the judgment of Charles II. appears from his pithy saying that he would go and hear Ken "tell him of his faults." Among the faithful words of the bishops at Charles's death-bed, none were so noble in their faithfulness as his. He was one of the Seven Bishops who refused to read the Declaration of Indulgence, and were imprisoned in the Tower by James for their refusal, but triumphantly acquitted on their trial. At the accession of William III. he refused, after some doubt on the subject, to take the oaths, and was at length (1691) deprived of his see. His charities had left him at this time only seven hundred pounds, and his library, as a means of subsistence; but he received hospitality for his remain-ing years with his friend Lord Weymouth, at Longleat. The see of Bath and Wells was again offered him, but in vain, at the death of his successor, Bp. Kidder. He sur-vived all the deprived prelates. His attitude as a nonjuror was remarkable for its conciliatory spirit. The saintliness of Ken's character, its combination of boldness, gentleness, modesty and love, has been universally recognized. The verdict of Macaulay is that it approached "as near as human infirmity permits to the ideal perfection of Christian virtue." The principal work of Ken's that remains is that on the Catechism, entitled The Practice of Divine Love. His poetical works were published after his death, in 4 vols, Among the contents are, the Hymns for the Festivals, which are said to have suggested to Keble the idea of The Christian Year; the Anodynes against the acute physical sufferings of his closing years; and the Preparatives for Death. Although many passages in them are full of tender devotion, they cannot rank either in style or strength with the three great hymns written at Winchester. (See English Hymnedy, Early, § z.) The best biometric of Kannot The Life of Kannot Law. grapies of Ken are The Life of Ken by a Lag-man, and, specially, his Life, by the Very Rev. E. H. Plumpire, Dean of Wells, 1888. [H. L. B.]

Bishop Ken is known to hymnody as the author of the Morning, Evening, and Midnight Hymns, the first and second of which at least have found a place in almost every English collection for the last 150 years. The general history of these hymns, as we now know it, is as follows:—

1. In 1674 Ken pub. his Manual of Prayers for Winchester Scholars as

A Manual of Prayers For the Use of the Scholars of Winchester College (here arms of William of Wykeham within a border]. London, Printed for John Martyn, 1874, 12mo, pp. 89.

From a passage in this work it may fairly be inferred that the author had already composed hymns for the use of the scholars. He says:—

"Be sure to sing the Morning and Evening Hymn in your chamber devoutly, remembering that the Psalmist, upon happy experience, assures you that it is a good thing to tell of the loving kindness of the Lord early in the morning and of his truth in the night season."

Two hymns only seem to be here referred to, but the expression "night season" may include both the Evening and Midnight hymns, and the latter would be only used occasionally. The hymns are not given in the Manual of 1674, or succeeding editions, until that of 1695, when the three hymns are added as an Appendix. The title of this edition is:—

A Manual of Prayers For the Use of the Scholars of Winchester College. And all other Devout Christians. To which is added three Hymns for Morning, Recuing, and Midnight; not in former Ratitions. By the Same Author. Newly Revised. London, Printed for Ciarles Brome at the Gon, at the West end of St. Paul's Church, 1885.

2. In 1704 Richard Smith, a London pub. Hosts of Heaven, to celebrate that unknown lisher, issued a book similar in appearance to the Manual, and entitled A Conference between the Soul and Body concerning the Present and Future State. This edition contained a strong recommendation by Dodwell, an intimate friend of Ken, but no hymns. To the 2nd ed., however (1705), were added two (Morning and Evening) hymns, with Ken's name appended, but containing two additional verses to the Evening hymn, and differing in several other respects from the text of the Manual. Thereupon Charles Brome, to whom the copyright of the latter belonged, issued a new edition with an Advertisement stating that Ken "absolutely disowned" the hymns appended to the Conference, "as being very false and uncorrect," and that the genuine text was that given in the Manual only. Brome's Advertisement reads:-

"Advertisement. Teads:—
"Advertisement... Whereas at the end of a Book lately Publish'd call'd, 'A Conference between the Soul and Body,' there are some Hymna said to be writ by Bishop Ken, who absolutely discowns them, as being very false and uncorrect; but the Genuine ones are to be had only of Charles Brome. Bookseller, whose just Propriety the Original copy is."

3. In 1709, however, the spurious hymns were again pub. as Ken's in a book entitled A New Year's Gift: in Two Parts: to which is added A Morning and Evening Hymn. By Thomas, late L. B. of Bath and Wells. The Third Elition with additions. London Printed by W. Onley. 1709.

Brome met this, as before, with a new edition of the Manual, in which the Advertisement of 1705 as above was repeated, but the text of the hymns considerably revised. This revised text was followed in all subsequent editions of the Manual, but as, until lately, it was thought to have appeared first in the edition of 1712, published soon after Ken's death, its genuineness was suspected by The question as it then stood was fully discussed in an able letter by Sir Roundell Palmer (Lord Selborne), prefixed to the reprint of Ken's Hymns, pub. by D. Sedgwick in 1864. Since that time the discovery in the Bodleian Library of a copy of the Manual of 1709 shows that the revision was made in that year, and confirms the conclusion at which Lord Selborne had previously arrived, that it was Ken's genuine revised text. The title of this edition is:-

A Manual of Prayers For the Use of the Scholars of Winchester College, And all other Devont Christians, To which is added three Hymns for Morning, Evening, and Midnight: By the same Author. Newly Revised. London: Printed for Charles Brome at the Gun, the West end of St. Paul's Church, 1709.

The Advertisement before referred to is at p. 130. The alterations of 1709 may therefore be accepted as being made by Ken himself, and it seems not improbable that the revision was suggested by the recent republication of the spurious text in spite of Brome's disclaimer in 1705, and possibly by adverse criticism of the original text. Lord Selborne pointed out in his Letter that Ken altered a passage in his Practice of Divine Love (1st ed., 1685) because "some Roman Catholic writer professed to discover the doctrine of Transubstantiation" therein. This alteration was made in the 2nd ed., 1686, and explained in the Preface to have been made "to prevent all misunderstanding for the future." A passage also in the Manual—"Help me, then, ye blessed serrow, &c." -- was claimed in a Roman Catholic pamphlet as a passage which "taught the scholars of Winchester to invocate the whole Court of Heaven." This passage Ken altered "to prevent all future misinterpretations," and prefixed an Advertisement to the 1687 ed. of the Manual explaining why he had done so. In looking through the texts of the three hymns for 1695, and 1709, and especially at the doxologies, and at st. x. and xi. in the Evening Hymn, "You my Blest Guardian, whilst I sleep," &c. (1695); and "O may my Guardian while I sleep," &c. (1709), do we not see a good and sufficient reason to account for the revision of the hymns?

4. With regard to the text given in the Conference, Lord Selborne observes that it is not improbable that alterations and various readings, originating with Ken himself, might have obtained private circulation among his friends, long before he had made up his own mind to give them to the public; a suggestion which may possibly help to explain the fact, that a writer, patronised by Dodwell, was misled into believing (for such a writer ought not lightly to be accused of a wilful fraud) that the text, pub. in the Conference in Ken's name was really from his hand. That Ken occasionally altered passages in his writings when for any reason he considered it necessary, is certain; and there can be little doubt that the text of the three Winchester hymns was more or less unsettled before 1695. At any rate, before their first appearance in that year in the Manual the Evening hymn had found its way into print. It was pub. in

"Harmonia Sacra; or Divine Hymns and Dialogues Composed by the Best Masters... The Words by several Learned and Pious Persons. The Second Book," London, Henry Playford, 1693.

The first volume of this work appeared in 88, and was dedicated to Ken. It is not 1688, and was dedicated to Ken. improbable therefore that Playford, when collecting materials for his second volume, obtained the words of the Evening Hymn directly from the author. The text is here subjoined:-

> " As Evening Hyun, " The words by Bishop Ken. "Set by Mr. Jeremiah Clarke. " All praise to Thee my God this night For all the blessings of the light; Keep me, oh keep me, King of kings, Under Thy own Almighty Wings.

"Forgive me, Lord, for Thy dear Son, The ill that I this day have done, That with the world, myself and Thee, I, ere I sleep, at peace may be.

" Teach me to live, that I may dread The Grave as little as my bed; Teach me to die, so that I may Triumphing rise at the last day.

" On may my Soul on Thee repose And with sweet sleep mine eyelids close, Sleep that may me more vig'rous make, To praise my God when I awake.

"When in the night I sleepless lie, My sout with heav'nly thoughts supply; Let no tli dreams disturb my rest, No pow'rs of derkness me molest.

" My dearest Lord, how am I griev'd
To lye so long of Thee bereav'd!
Dull sleep of sence me to deprive,
I am but half my days alive.

⁴⁴ But though sleep o'er my weakness reigns, Let it not bold me long in chains, But now and then let loose my heart, Till it an Hallelujah dart :

- 44 The faster sleep the sence does bind, The more unfetter'd is the mind; Oh may my soul from matter free The unvell'd Goodness waking see.
- "Oh! when shall I in endless day, For ever chase dark steep away, And endless praise with th' heavenly choir, Incessant sing and never tire;
- "You my best Guardians, whilst I sleep, Close to my bed your vigils keep, And in my ster4 all the night long Sing to my God a grateful song.
- " Praise God from whom all blessings flow, Praise Him all creatures here below; Praise Him above, the angelick host, Praise Father, Son, and Holy Ghoat.

In comparing this text with that of 1695, the following differences are found:—

1893 St. 1., 1. 1, All praise St. iii., 1. 3, so that St. iv., 1. 4, praise St. vi., II. 1 and 2 ,, II. 3 and 4 Glory. that so. ser ve rewritten. " Il. 3 and 4 St. vii., l. 1, weakness " l. 3, But now St. viii., l. 4, The St. x., l. 1, best Guardians transposed as I and 2. frailty. And now. Thy.

blest Guardian. Stanza x. was also expanded in 1696 into two by the addition of new 3rd and 4th lines to st. x., and the construction of st. xi. out of two new lines followed by lines 3 and 4 of 1693.

The hymn was set by Clarke as a Cantata. for a solo voice, with the Doxology as a chorus in four parts.

We now submit the texts of the Morning, Evening, and Midnight hymns, as they appear in the 1695 and the 1709 editions of the Manual respectively:-

Awake my soul and with the sun. [Morning.] The texts of 1695 and 1709 are subjoined in parallel columns for the purpose of comparison, the variations of 1709 being printed in italics.

Among the alterations made in 1709, the word joyful instead of early in st. i. occurs in the Conference of 1705, thus seeming to confirm the suggestion of Lord Selborne, referred to above, that some at least of the readings in the Conference may have originated with Ken himself. The change in the order of two words in st. x., Thou not for not Thou, made in 1712, is also anticipated by the Conference. In st. vi. l. 1 of the hymn, some later editions of the Manual issued by C. Brome after 1712 give "Awake, awake," for "I wake, I wake." Lord Selborne inclines to the belief that the latter reading is possibly due to the printers, but as it is found not only in every edition up to 1712, including the revision of 1709, but in the Conference of 1705, this seems improbable. Lord Selborne adds, "'I wake' in the sense of hodily waking from natural sleep, would be out of place, after five whole stanzas had been already spoken or sung," but is it not rather a response to the exhortation with which the 1st and 5th stanzas commence? After addressing in them his own Soul, the singer suddenly exclaims, "I wake," and then turns to the "Heavenly Choir" with an expression of hope to be enabled to follow their example of unceasing adoration of the Most High. If this be so, it is far more likely that the reading "Awake" is due to some later editor or printer who failed to catch the author's full meaning.

The various Morning Hynnus by Ken which have appeared in the Appendix to Tate and Brady's Version of the Psalms, and in most hymnals published during the past 150 years are compilations from this hymn, with, in many instances, slight alterations of the text either of 1695 or of that of 1709. In some modern hymnals the difficulty of the length of the hymn is overcome by dividing it into two or more parts.

All praise [Glory] to Thee, my God, this night. [Evening.] The texts of 1695 and of 1709 are as follows :-

8. A reference to the text given in Harmonia Sacra shows that the change from "Glory" to "All praise" in 1, 1, is only a restoration of the original reading; and without being aware of this fact, Lord Selborne points out that the expression "All praise" is remarkably consistent with Ken's frequent use of it in other writings. The same alteration was made in 1709 in the Morning Hymn, st. 9, and in the Midnight Hymn, st. 7: while at the same time "Glory" in the Morning Hymn, st. v. l. 4, is changed to "High Praise."

As in the case of "Awake my soul," this hymn has been divided, subdivided, and rearranged in a great many ways during the last 150 years. In one form or another it will be found in most hymnals pub. during that period.

The following list of editions of the Manual from 1674 to 1712 inclusive, and the libraries in which they are to be found, was kindly supplied by the late Mr. G. W. Napier:—

1674, B. M. (British Museum); 1675, B. M. and Bodleian; 1877, B. M.; 1679, Bod.; 1681, B. M.; 1681, B. M. (the first pub. with Bishop Ken's name); 1692, B. M. and G. W. Napier; 1695, Bod. (the first cl. containing the three hymne); 1697, B. M.; 1700, B. M.; 1703, Nap.; 1705, Nap.; 1709, Bod. and Nap.; 1712, Bp. Ken has not escaped the not unusual charge of plagiarism, in connection with his celebrated hymns. Charges of this kind have been made from time to time, the nature and value of which we will endeavour to summarize. These are: (1) he borrowed from Sir Thomas Browne; (2) he did the same from Thomas Flatman; (3) he did neither, but Paraphrased from the Latin.

(1) Sir Thomas Browne. In 1843 Sir Thomas Browne pub. his Religio Medici (It was pub. surreptitionsly in 1842), and therein (Pt. il. 9 12) gave the following hymn in a monologue on Sleep:

"It is that death which Adam died before his mor-tality; a death whereby we live a middle and moderat-ing point between life and death. In fine, so like death, I dare not trust it without my prayers, and an half adieu unto the world, and take my ferewell in a colloquy with God.

"The night is come, like to the day
Depart not thon, great God, away.
Let not my sine, black as the night,
Eclipse the lustre of thy light.
Reep still in my borizon; for to me
The sun makes not the day, but Thee.
Thou Whose nature cannot sleep,
On my termiles sentry keep. On my temples sentry keep; Guard me 'gainst those watchful foes, Whose eyes are open while mine close, Let no dreams my head infest, But such as Jacob's temples blest, But such as Jesus semples bles, while I do rest, my soul advance:
Make my sleep a holy trance:
That I may, my rest being wrought, Awake into some holy thought and with as active vigour run And with as active vigour run My course as doth the nimble sun-cliesp is a death;—O make me try By sleeping, what it is to die! And as gently lay my head On my grave, as now my bed. Howe'er! rest, great God, let me Awake again at last with Thee. And thus assur'd, behold I lie Securely, or to wake or die.

These are my drowsy days: in vain I do not wake to sleep again: O come that hour, when I shall never Sleep again, but wake for ever!

"This is the dormitive I take to bedward : I need no other leadenses than this to make me sleep; after which I chose who eyes in security, content to take my leave of the sun and sleep unto the resurrection."

The poet James Montgomery drew attention to the

The poet James Montgomery drew attention to the striking similarity of thought and mode of expression between this hymn and the Evening Hymn by Ken, in his Select Christian Authors, 1827. This has also been done several times in Notes and Queries, during the past twenty years, and not always in the best spirit. That the similarity pointed out by Montgomery does exist is very clear: but to say that Ken deliberately stoke Browne's work no one with any acquaintance with poots and profound thinkers would venture to affirm. Possibly set 3, below may do something towards adjunct the sect, 3 below may do something towards solving the difficulty.
(2) Thomas Matman. In his Poems and Songs, small

8vo, 1674, be has the following

"HYMR FOR THE MORKING. "Awake my soul, awake mine eyes! Awake my drowey faculties! Awake and see the newborn light Spring from the darksome womb of night! Look up and see the unwearied sun Already has his race begun : The pretty lark is mounted high, And sings her matine in the sky.

Arise my soul : and thou, my voice,
In songs of praise early rejoice.

O great Creator! Heavenly King! O great Creator! Heavenly King!
Thy praises let me ever sing!
Thy power has made, thy goodness kept
This fenceless body while ! slept.
Yet one day more hast given me
From all the powers of darkness free;
O keep my heart from an secure,
My life unblameable and pore.
That when the last of all my days is com That when the last of all my days is come, Cheerful and fearless I may wait my doom."

In Notes and Queries, 3rd S., x. 205, Mr. W. T. Brooke suggests that this is the origin of Ken's Northing Hymn. It is impossible to say that Ken never saw Flatman's hymn, but certainly if he had he made very little direct use of it. The subject is the same, and a few expressions are almost identical; but the mode of treatment and the burden of the thought are essentially different. Such similarity as does exist in the two hymns suggests and the burden of the thought are essentially different. Such similarity as does exist in the two hymns suggests two men looking at and writing about the same thing in the same plous and thankful spirit, rather than one man copying from another.

(3) Paraphrases from the Latin. A writer in Notes and Queries, 3rd 8., xii. 327, says:—"Bishop Ren's Hymns.—These are certainly not original compositions. They are paraphrases, and very beautiful ones, of three noble hymns in the Roman Breviary. "Awake, my soul," is "A soils ortus"; "Glory to Thee "Is "Te lucis ente terminum." The Midnight Hymn has a similar origin, but I forget the Latin. S. J." This idea of a Latin origin of the hymns is also set forth by Dr. Greenbill in his edition of Browne's Religio Medici, 1881, p. 288: "Compare this (Browne's hymn of Bishop Ken; and these again with several of the Hymns Ecclesiae (Card. Newman's 1833 and 1885), especially that beginning 'Sslvator mundi, Domine,' with which Ken and Browne, both Wykehemists, must have been familiar." To our mind this suggestion is nearer the truth than any other; but even from this point of view it is too much to call the three hymns paraphrases. The most that can be said of them is that the Latin hymns referred to may, and possibly did, suggest them, but only as a text of Holy Scripture suggests a sermon. Holy Scripture suggests a sermon

8. The title of Bp. Ken's hymns on the Festivals of the Church, published post-humously in 1721, is: Hys. for all the Festivals of the Year. They were republished by Pickering as: Bishop Ken's Christian Year or Hymns and Poems for the Holy Days and Festivals of the Church, Lond., 1868. From this work the following contos have come into C. U. :-

All human succours now are flown. Visitation of the Sick.

2. I had one only thing to do. A New Creature.
3. O purify my soul from stain. 10th S. after frinity, or A Prayer for Purity.

5. Unction the Christian name implies. Confirmation. [G. A. C.] See New Appendix.

103. Israel of God, be Christ your Guide. Ps. czv.
104. Who in the Lord securely lay. Ps. czzv.

iii. To the Rev. A. T. Russell's Psalms & Hymns, 1851, Dr. Kennedy was indebted to a limited extent in preparing his Psaltes, 1860. In his Preface he says, p. viii., "Mr. Russell's metres, and occasionally his words, have been adopted in the following Psalms: 2, 24, 39, 45, 46, 50, 84, 85, 90, 110, 111, 113." Of these the following, sometimes with alterations of the 1860 text, were given in the Hymno. Christ., 1863 :-

105. God is our sure defence, our aid. Ps. zlvi.
106. My heart is full, and I must sing. Ps. zlv.
107. Not vain, O Lord, Thy loving word. Ps. lxzzv.

v. Besides the foregoing the Hymno. Christ. included numerous translations from the German, recasts of hymns by other writers, versions of individual Psalms, and additional original hymns, by Dr. Kennedy, many of which have passed into other collections, and all of which are annotated in this work under their respective first lines. Altogether his contributions to the Hymno. Christ. number about two hundred, and embrace two thirds, or more, of his Pealter of 1860. As a popular hymnal the Hymno. Christ. has been a faiture: but as a storehouse to which compilers of hymn-books can resort, it is of great and permanent value. D. April 6, 1889. [J. J.]

Kent, John, was b. at Bideford, Devonshire, Dec. 1766, and d. Nov. 15, 1843. As a working shipwright his opportunities for acquiring the education and polish necessary for the production of refined verse were naturally limited. His hymns are strongly worded, very earnest and simple, and intensely Calvinistic. A few were published in Samuel Reece's Collection, 1799. The 1st ed. of his Collection of Original Gospel Hymns, was pub. in 1803, and the 10th ed., with "The Author's Experience," in verse, 264 hymns, 15 longer pieces, and a Life by his Son in 1861. The Calvinistic teaching so prominent in his hymps has restricted their use to a limited number of collections. The greatest use made of them in modern hymn-books has been by Mr. Spurgeon (O. O. H. Bk., 1866) and Mr. Snepp (Songs of G. & G., 1872). In the following list the dates in brackets indicate the dates of publication:

Kern, Christian Gottlob, was b. Jan. 13, 1792, at Sölmstetten, near Heidenheim, Württemberg, where his father was pastor. After the completion of his theological studies at Tübingen he was for two years assistant clergyman at Plochingen. In 1817 he became Theological Tutor (repetent) at Tübingen, in 1820 Second Pastor (Helfer) at Besigheim, and, in 1824, Preacher and Professor at the Clergy School of Schönthal. He finally became, in 1829, Pastor of Dürrmenz-Mählacker, near Pforzheim, and d. there Aug. 5, 1835 (Koch, vii. 210; Allg. Deutsche Biog., xv. 632). His hymns appeared mostly in Knapp's Christoterpe. One has been tr., viz. :-

Wie könnt ich sein vergessen. Holy Communion. This beautiful hymn was let pub. in Knapp's Christoterpe, 1837, p. 192, in 5 st. of 8 l., headed "At the Celebration of Holy Communion." Included in Knapp's Ev. L. S., 1837, No. 956 (1865, No. 948), the Württemberg G. B., 1842, and others. Dr. Schaff, in his Beutzekes G. B., 1874, No. 171, gives it from a Ms. copy supplied by the daughter of the author, and says it was written in 1820.

B. for England, 1863; in Holy Song, 1869; in the College Hymnal, N. Y., 1876, and others. Another tr. is, "Will not my memory treasure," in J. D. Burns's Memoir & Remains, 1869, p. 271.

[J. M.] Kethe, William, is said by Thomas Warton in his Hist. of Eng. Poetry, and by John Strype in his Annals of the Reformation. to have been a Scotsman. Where he was born, or whether he held any preferment in England in the time of Edward VI., we have been unable to discover. In the Brieff discours off the troubles begonne at Franckford, 1575, he is mentioned as in exile at Frankfurt in 1555, at Geneva in 1557; as being sent on a mission to the exiles in Basel, Strassburg, &c., in 1558; and as returning with their answers to Geneva in 1559. Whether he was one of those left behind in 1559 to "finishe the bible, and the psalmes bothe in meeter and prose," does not appear. The Discours further mentions him as being with the Earl of Warwick and the Queen's forces at Newhaven [Havre] in 1563, and in the north in 1569. John Hutchins in his County history of Dorset, 1774, vol. ii. p. 316, says that he was instituted in 1561 as Rector of Childo Okeford, near Blandford. But as there were two Rectors and only one church, leave of absence might easily be extended. His connection with Okeford seems to have ceased by death or otherwise about 1593.

The Rev. Sir Talbot H. B. Baker, Bart., of Ranaton, Blandford, who very kindly made researches on the spot, has informed me that the Begisters at Childe Okeford begin with 1652-53, that the copies kept in Blandford date only from 1732 (the earlier having probably perished in the great fire there in 1731), that no will can be found in the district Probate Court, and that no monument or tablet is now to be found at Childe Okeford.

By a communication to me from the Diocesan Registrar of Bristol, it appears that in a book professing to contain a list of Presentations deposited in the Consistory Court, Kethe is said to have been presented in 1665 by Henry Capel, the Patron of Childe Okeford Inferior. In the 1813 ed. of Hutchkun, vol. iii. pp. 355-6, William Wat-kinson is said to have been presented to this moiety by Inson is said to have been presented to this moiery by Arthur Capel in 1583.

Twenty-five Psalm versions by Kethe are included in the Anglo-Genevas Psalier of 1661, viz. Ps. 27, 36, 47, 54, 58, 62, 70, 88, 88, 90, 91, 94, 100, 101, 104, 107, 111, 112, 113, 122, 125, 126, 134, 138, 142,—the whole of which were adopted in the Scotist Psalier of 1564-65. Only nine, viz. Ps. 104, 107, 111, 112, 113, 122, 125, 126, 124, were included in the English Psalier of 1562; Fs. 100 being however added in 1565 (see first lines of the rest under Scottish Hymnedy. II. 42.). Being mostly in being however added in 1565 (see first lines of the rest under Souttish Hymnody, II. of 2). Being mostly in peculiar metres, only one, Ps. 100, was transferred to the Scottish Pratter of 1550. The version of Ps. 104, "My oul, praise the Lord," is found, in a greatly altered form, in some modern hymnals. Warton calls him "a Scotch divine, no unready rhy-mer," says he had seen a moralisation of some of Ovid by thus, and also mentions verses by him prefixed to a

Key, Francis Scott, was b. in Frederick County, Maryland, 1779, and educated at St. John's College, Annapolis. He practised as a lawyer in Washington, District of Columbia, and was the United States District Attorney there till his death on Jan. 11, 1843. His poetical pieces, which were printed in various works, were collected and pub. in N. Y. as Poems in 1857. His hymns in C.U. include:-

- 1. Before the Lerd we bow. National Thanksgiving. This Thanksgiving hymn for the 4th July was pub. in 1832, and was probably written for the celebration of that year. It is in use in G. Britain and America.
- 2. If life's pleasures charm [cheer] thee. heart for God only. Appeared in The Christian Lyre, 1830.
 - 3. Faith is the Christian's evidence. Finith.
- 4. Lord, with glowing heart I'll praise Thee. Praise for Pardon and Peace. Pub. in Dr. Mühlenberg's Church Poetry, 1823, the Prayer Bk. Coll., 1826, &c.; and altered as "Lord, with ferror I would praise Thee," in the Unitarian Hys. for the Church of Christ, Boston, 1853. In the Oberlin, Ohio, Manual of Praise, 1880, it begins with st. ii., "Praise, my soul, the God that

Of these hymns Nos. 1, 2, and 4 are in the Lyra Sac. Americana, 1868, together with the following :-

Kiel, Tobias, was b. Oct. 29, 1584, at Ballstädt near Gotha. After completing his theological studies at Jena, he became in 1606 Schoolmaster at Balistädt, and in 1613 Pastor at Eschenbergen. He was then, in 1627, appointed Pastor at Ballstädt, and d. there six days after his settlement. (Brückner's Kir-chen und Schulenstaat des Herzogthums Gotha, 1753, ii., pt. xii. p. 13; iii., pt. viii. p. 12, &c.) In 1721 some 60 of his hymns were extant in ms. The only one tr. into English is Herr Gott, nun sohleuss den Himmel auf. For the Dying. In J. M. Altenburg's Kirchen- und Hausgesänge. Erfurt, 1620, No. 8, in 3 st., entitled "On the Festival of the Purification of Mary:" and in the Fun. L. S., 1851, No. 818. Tr. as "Lord God, now open wide Thy heaven," by Miss Winkworth, 1858, p. 216.

Killinghall, John. The date of his birth is unknown. He was admitted pastor of a congregation at Beccles, Suffolk, Oct. 13, 1697. Through some indiscretion of conduct he retired from the ministry for a time. Subsequently, about 1702, he became the pastor of the Congregational Church, Southwark, then meeting in Deadman's Place (the Church of the Pilgrim Fathers). He d. Jan. 1740. His memoir is included in the Brief Records of the Independent Church at Beccles, 1838, by S. W. Rix. (Miller's Singers & Songs, 1869, p. 156.) His hymn:

In all my troubles, sharp and long (Joy in Affliction) appeared in the Life of Pasith exemplified and recommended in a Letter found in the Study of the Rev. Joseph Beicher, late of Dedham, in New England, since his Decease. An Answer to this question, "How to the in this World so as to live in Heaven?" To which is in this World to as to live in Reamen?" To which is added a few Verses by the late Rev. Killinghall, upon reading of it. London. 1741. It is in 3 st. of 4 1., and is found in modern hymn-books in the following forms:—(1) "In all my troubles, sharp and strong," in Reed's H. Bk., 1842, and others; (2) "In every trouble, sharp and strong," in several collections, including the Enlarged London H. Bk., 1973, &c.; and (3) "In every trying hour," in several American books, as Songs for the Sanctuary, N. Y., 1885, &c. In several of the older collections this hymn is attributed to "Coombes"—why we know not.

Kimbali, Harriet McEwan, a native and resident of Portsmouth, Newhaven, is the author of Hymns, Boston, 1866; Swallow Flights of Song, 1874, &c. Her hymns include :-

- At times on Tabor's height. Faith and Joy.
- 2. Dear Lord, to Thee alone. Lent.
- 3. It is an easy thing to say. Humble Service.
- 4. We have no tears Thou wilt not dry. Affliction. Appeared in the Poets of Portsmouth. 1864, and the Unitarian Hys. of the Spirit, 1864, and others. In Miss Kimball's Hymns, 1866, this hymn begins with st. iii. of "Jesus the Ladder of my faith."

Several of Miss Kimball's poems were included in Baynes's Illustrated Book of Sacred Poems. 1867. [F. M. B.]

Kindred in Christ, for His dear sake. J. Newton. [Welcome to Christian Friends.] Pub. in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. ii., No. 70, in 6 st. of 4 l., and headed, "A Welcome to Christian Friends." It is in C. U. in its original form, and also as:
(1) "Kindred in Christ, to us 'tis given,' adapted for Union and Home Missionary Meetings: and (2) "May He by Whose kind care we meet," also suitable for similar gatherings.

King, Catherine. [Pennefather, C.] King, Elizabeth, [Kills, Elizabeth.] Kingsbury, William, was b. in 1744, educated at an Independent academy in London, and became Pastor of the ancient Congregational Church, Above Bar, in Southampton, where he d. in 1818, after an honourable and useful ministry of fifty-four years. He was the author of several published sermons and pamphlets, including:—(1) A Sermon on the King's recovery, 1780; (2) The Manner in which Protestant Dissenters perform Public Worship represented and vindicated, 1796; (3) An Apology for Village Preachers, 1799; (4) A Funeral Sermon on the Death of the Rev. Mr. Towle, 1807, &c. Kingsbury was one of the ministers under whose patronage Dobell pub. his New Selection, 1806, and to that book contributed two hymns:—"Great Lord of all thy churches, hear!" No. 213 (Divine Worship), and "Let us awake our joys," No. 100 (Jesus the King). Both these hymns are in C. U., the second being specially popular in America.

Kinner, Samuel, was a native of Breslau, and after he had graduated M.D. was for some time a physician there. He then entered the service of the Duke of Liegnitz-Brieg as Bath and Court Physician, and d. at Brieg, Aug. 10, 1668, at the age of 65 (J. H. Cunradue's Silesia Togata, Liegnitz, 1706, p. 150). One hymn ascribed to him has been tr., viz.:—

Herr Jeeu Christ, du hast bereit. Holy Communion. In Jeremias Weber's G. B., Leipzig, 1838, p. 394, in 8 st. of 7 L., entitled "A beautiful hymnon the Supper of the Lord. Samuel Kinner." In Burg's G. B., Breslan, 1746, No. 1866, entitled "For worthy reception, before Holy Communion." Tr. as:—

Lord Jerus. Thou art truly good. A full and good tr. by E. Cronenwett, as No. 286 in the Ohio Lutheran Hymnol, 1880.

Kippis, Andrew, D.D., was b. at Not-tingham, March 28, 1725, and educated for the ministry under Dr. Doddridge at Northampton, 1741-46. After a short residence with cougregations at Boston and Dorking, he settled in London in 1753, as minister of the Princes Street Chapel, Westminster. There he remained till his death in 1795, holding rank as the leading Presbyterian minister in the metropolis. For many years he was classical tutor at the Hoxton Academy, and afterwards at the Hackney College. He contributed largely to the Gentleman's Magazine and the Monthly Review, and edited five volumes of a new edition of the Biographia Britannica, a work commenced in 1778, and interrupted by his death on Oct. 8, 1795. His Life of Captain Cook was also pub. separately, and to his edition of Lardner's Works (1788) a Memoir was prefixed. His degree of D.D. was conferred by the University of Edinburgh in 1767.

He was joint editor of A Collection of Hymns and Psalms for Public and Private Workhy, selected and prepared by Andrew Kippis, b.D., &c.; Abraham Rees, D., &c.; Rev. Thomas Jervis, and Rev. Thomas Morgan, L.D., London, 1795. This collection, commonly known as Kippis's, but sometimes as Rees's, passed through many editions, a Supplement being added in 1807, and was very generally used during the early decades of this century by congregations of Presbyterians and others, then become Unitarian in London and throughout the country [Unitarian Hymnsdy, § 9]. It contained $80 hymns.

throughout the country [Unitarian Hymnad, § 3]. It contained 630 hymna.

The aim of the editors in their celection was to avoid "averything of a doubtful or disputable kind," and they adopt the language of Dr. Wasts in the preface to his Hymna, "The contentious and distinguishing words of I sects and parties are excluded." The alterations and omissions to adapt various hymns to the standard of the editors are considerable, though very little compared to what was done by others before and after them. The tone of the collection is somewhat colourless, and it gradually gave place among Unitarians to others which contained fuller and more varied expression of distinctively Christian feeling.

Two hymns by Kippis appear in this Collection.

 "Great God, in vain man's narrow view," The Incomprehentibility of God, which was generally adopted in later Unitarian books, and appears in Martinean's Hymns, 1840 and 1873.

Hymns, 1840 and 1873.

3. "How rich thy gifts, Almighty King," National Thankspicing, which is four stanzas of the hymn, "Say, should we search the globe around," written for the thankspiving appointed Nov. 29, 1750, and appended to bis Setmon on that occasion. It was given in full in Pope's Coll., 1780; and the Liverpool Octagon Coll., 1763. In Lindsey's Coll., 1774, five stanzas are given; in other early books only four, as in Kippis. The last two stanzas, somewhat altered, appear anonymously as: "With grateful hearts, with joyful tongues," in the Cong. H. Bk., 1836, and the New Cong., 1859.

Kirkham. [How firm a foundation, &c.]

Klantendorfer, Paulus, was a minister among the Bohemian Brethren, and d. in 1566. To their Kirchengeseng, 1566, he contributed one hymn, viz.:—

Wall dieser Tag ist vargangen. Ebening. 1586, as above, and thence in Wackernagel, iv. p. 349, in 6 st. of 41. Tr. as, "Because this day is at an end," as No. 291 in pt. i. of the Moravian H. Bk., 1754. In 1789 str. of st. vi. of "Herr Jesu! meines Leben Hell (see Naumeister) was added. In later eds. (1886, No. 1179) it begins, "Another day is at an end." [J. M.]

Klopstock, Friedrich Gottlieb, the eldest of the 17 children of Gottlob Heinrich Klopstock (then advocate and commissionsrath at Quedlinburg, and after 1735 amimann at Friedeburg, on the Saale, near Halle), was b. at Quedlinburg, July 2, 1724. From 1739 to 1745 he attended the famous school at Schulpforte, near Naumburg (where he con-ceived the first idea of his Messias); then he entered the University of Jena, in the autumn of 1745, as a student of theology, and the University of Leipzig at Easter, 1746. At Leipzig he made acquaintance with J. A. Cramer (q.v.); and became one of the contributors to the Bremer Besträge, in which the first three books of his Messias appeared. In 1748 he became tutor in the house of a merchant named Weiss at Langensalza; and in 1750 accepted an invitation to visit Zürich (the literary capital of Switzerland), where his Messias had been received with great enthusiasm. He was then, in the spring of 1751, invited by the Danish prime minister, Count von Bernstorff, to take up his residence at the Court of King Frederick V., at Copenhagen, in order to be able to finish his Messias free from the cares of a profession: and was, in 1763, appointed Legationsrath. After the Count ceased, in the end of 1770, to be prime minister, Klopetock retired to Hamburg, in 1771, on a pension. The rest of his life was passed mainly at Hamburg, except about a year spent at Carlsruhe, at the Court of the Margave Carl Friedrich of Baden, who appointed him Hofrath. He d. at Hamburg, March 14, 1803, and was buried with civic honours on the 22nd, under a lime-tree in the churchyard at Ottensen (Koch, vi. 822; Allq. Deutsche Biog., xvi. 201, &c.).

Klopstock ranks among the classic poets of Germany. In his Oden (collected at Hamburg, 1771; enlarged, Leipzig, 1793; finally enlarged, Leipzig, 1894) he is seen at his best; his earlier compositions of this class being the finest modern examples for perfection of form, lyric grace, majes: y, and purity of rivythm. His most famous work is his Messias, which on its first appearance created an enthusiasm such as had not been awakened by any German work for centuries. It was suggested by Milton's Paradite Lost, but Milton's calm majesty, firmess of touch, and unity of section were all foreign to ions Turnasse 2055, but bitton's cam majesty, irm-ness of touch, and unity of action were all foreign to Klopstock's nature—bis genius was lyric rather than epic. With all its defects of style and construction, it is still a noble work, and could only have been written by a true poet and a sincere Christian; though to us its interest perhaps consists as much in its historical importance and results as in its intrinsic merits. (Books portance and results as in 16 intrinsic merits. (1800ks 1-3 written in prose at Jens, and then in hexameter verse at Jeipzig, and 1st pub. in the Neue Beyträge, Bremen, 1748. Books 1-3 revised, and 4, 5 added at Halle, 1781; 6-10 added in the Copenhagen ed., 1755; 11-15, Copenhagen, 1768; 16-20, Halle, 1773. Finally revised ed. in 4 vols., Leipzig, 1800.)

In his hymns Klopstock is not seen at his best. He seems to have had little appreciation of the requirements which the writer of hymns for use in public worship has to meet. His hymns are emotional and subjective, little suited to congregational tunes, and not sufficiently simple in style. In his first collection (1) Geistliche Lieder, Copenhagen, 1758, he included a number of indifferent recasts of earlier German hymns; his second collection (2) Geistliche Lieder, Copenhagen, 1769, consists entirely of original compositions. only one of his hymns which is still much used in Germany is "Auferstehn, ja auferstehn, wirst du" (q.v.). The others which have passed into English C. U. are:—

i. Daine hellige Geburt. Supplication. In his Geistlicke Lieder, 1758, p. 44, in 14 l., repeated in Knapp's Ev. L. S., 1837, No. 468. Tr. as "Saviour! by Thy holy birth," by Dr. W. L. Besides the above a considerable number of Klopstock's Oden are tr. by J. Sheppard in his Foreign Sacred Lyre, 1857. A full sciection from the Oden appeared as Odes of Klopstock from 1747 to 1780. Translated from the German by William Nind, London, W. Pickering, 1848. [J. M.]

Knak, Gustav Friedrich Ludwig, s. of Christian F. L. Knak, Justiz Commissarius at Berlin, was b. at Berlin, July 12, He matriculated as a student of theology at the University of Berlin, Easter, 1826. In the autumn of 1829 he became tutor in a private school at Königs-Wusterhausen, near Berlin, where he worked manfully for the sick and dying during the cholera year 1831. He returned to Berlin in August, 1832, and acted as one of the editors of the well-known Geistlicher Lieder Schatz (referred to in this Dictionary as the Berlin G. L. S.), to which he contributed a number of hymns, and for which he wrote the preface dated Dec. 11, 1832. In the autumn of 1834 he was ordained pastor of Wusterwitz, near Dramburg, in Pomerania; and in the end of 1849 was appointed Gossner's successor as Pastor of the Lutheran-Bohemian congregation (Bethlehemskirche) in Berlin. During a holiday visit to a married daughter at Dünnow, near Stolpemunde, he was taken suddenly ill, and d. there July 27, 1878; his body being removed to Berlin and laid to rest in the graveyard belonging to his church (O. Kraus, 1879, p. 266; Allg. Deutsche Biog., xvi. 261, &c.).

p. 266; Allg. Deutsche Biog., xvi. 261, &c.).

Knak was a man of prayer, a faithful and successful preacher and pastor, and greatly interested in Missions at home and abroad, especially in the Lutheran missions to China and the Chinese Orphanage at Hong Kong. As a hymn-writer he is distinguished by elegance of siyle, harmony of rhythm, and deep love to the personal Christ. His hymns appeared in his Simon Johanna, hast du mich lieb? Berlin, 1829 (enlarged editions pub. at Berlin 1840, and again in 1843 as his Zionsharfe); in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1821; and in his Liebe un Liebe ... Nachtrag zu dessen Zionsharfe. Werder, 2nd ed. 1849 (3rd ed. Berlin, 1850).

Those of Knak's hymns which have passed i into English are:-

1. Lasst mich geh'n, lasst mich geh'n. Longing for Heaven. Of the origin of this favourite hymn, O. Kraus, 1879, p. 269, gives the following account :-

"Knak's carnest real in the cause of missions to the heathen had the natural result, that for many years he was summoned as festival preacher to the most distant Mission services. On the way to fulfil these engage-ments many of Knak's bymne had their origin. About ments many of Knak's hymne had their origin. About 1845, one day the pastor of Wusterwitz [his cure] came to pastor Sendermann at Coprieben, and asked him to play the well-known popular melody 'Morgenroth, Morgenroth,' as he had just composed a hymn to that tune. As the desired melody rang out, the poet struck une. As the centred melody rang out, the poet struck up for the first time that hymn since sung by hundreds of thousands, 'Lasst mich geb'n! Lasst mich geh'n.' Later, Knak's blind organist, Volgiländer, in Berlin, composed the pleasing melody, to which at the present time the hymn is generally sung."

This hymn appears to have been written on July 23, 1846, and is included in his Liebe um Liebe, 1849 (3rd ed., 1850, No. 48), in 5 st. of 5 l., entitled "Longing after Jerusalem." It soon attained wide popularity, and is given as No. 1597 in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863. Tr.

1. To the sky, to the sky. A good and full tr. by J. M. Sloan, contributed to J. H. Wilson's Service of Praise, 1865, No. 165, and Songs of Zion, 1878, No. 94; in both cases set to Voigtländer's melody.

2. Let me go, let me go, Jesus, face to face, to know. In full, by Mrs. Edmund Ashley, in the British Herald, Sept., 1867, p. 139; repeated in Reid's Praise Bk., 1872. In the Christian Hys., Adelaide, 1872, No. 347 begins will st. ii. "Glorious light, glorious light."

Other trs. are, (1) "Let me close, let me close," as No. 12 in Haari Melodies, Lond., Morgan, N.D., signed "A. P. E. J." (2) "Let me flee, let me flee," by E. Massie, 1866. (3) "Let me go, let me go, Lord to me," by Mrs. H. R. Spaeth, in the Southern Luth. Service & Hys. for S. Schools, Philadelphia, 1885. (4) "Let me go ah, let me go," by J. Felly, 1885.

Other hymns by Knak which have been tr. into English are:

ii. Herr, du hast uns reich gesegnet. Close of Divine Service. Zionshurfe, 1843, No. 92, in 2 st. Tr. as "Lord, we've tasted Thy rich blessing," in L. Rehfuess's Church at Sea, 1868.

tii. Ich bin ein Pilger Gottes hier auf Erden. Pilgrimage of Life. Liebe um Liebe, 3rd ed. 1850, No. 45, in 4 st. 7r. as "God's pilgrim am I here, on earth below," by J. Kelly, 1885.

Knapp, Albert, was b. July 25, 1798, at Tübingen, where his father (1800, Oberamt-mann at Alpirabach in the Black Forest, and 1809. Oberamtmann at Rottweil) was then advocate at the Court of Appeal. In the autumn of 1814 he entered the Theological Seminary at Maulbronn, and in 1816 the Theological College at Tübingen, where he also graduated M.A. at the University. In November, 1820, he became assistant clergyman at Feuerbach, near Stuttgart; and in July, 1821, at Gaisburg, near Stuttgart. He was appointed, in Feb., 1825, diaconus (Helfer) at Sulz on the Neckar, and also pastor of the neighbouring village of Holzhausen; in June. 1831, archidiaconus at Kirchheim-unter-Teck, along with Bahnmaier (q.v.); in May, 1836. diaconus of the Hospitalkirche in Stuttgart; and in October, 1837, archidiaconus of the Stiftskirche. He was finally appointed, in December, 1845, Stadtpfarrer at St. Leonhard's Church in Stuttgart, where, after having been for some time partially disabled by paralysis, he preached his last sermon, Feb. 13, 1863. He d. at Stuttgart, June 18, 1864 (Koch, vii. 213; Allg. Deutsche Biog., xvi. 263, &c.).

Knapp as a Poet possessed not merely very considerable taient, but also natural originality. He was presembently a lyric poet; the best of his secular poems being those which celebrate the history and the scenery of his those which celebrate the history and the scenery of his beloved Swabia. His poems are characterised by rich play of fancy, wealth of ideas and of figures, masterly word-painting, capacity of feeling, ease of expression, and sonorous and musical rhythm. Unfortunately theory flow of his imagination betrayed him, for the greatest fault of his poems is that they are at once too numerous and too long (and it must be added sometimes too rhetorical and too eager to point a moral); what was easy writing becomes hard reading.

As a Hyma-toriter, among the recent hymn-writers of Germany, Knapp holds a high place, perhaps we might say the highest of all. To his hymn-writing he brought his powers as a poet, and the depth of hie nature as an earnest and sincere disciple of Jesus Christ. In his hymns his aim was to make known the fulness of the grace of God, and to reveal the wealth and depth of Holy hymns his aim was to make known the fulness of the grace of God, and to reveal the wealth and depth of Holy Scripture, and the love of God to all mankind. Their earnestness, their experimental Christianity, their Scripturalness and their beauty of form have gained for many of them a place in all recent German hymn-books. They have comewhat unaccountably been neglected by English translators. It is certainly surprising that in the Hymns from the Land of Luther not one version from Knapp finds a place. While all the hymns of Spitta's Psalter und Harfe have passed into English, and many of them in half a dozen different versions. and many of them in helf a dozen different versions, comparatively few of Knapp's hymns have been translated, though they rank much higher as poetry, and are more suited for Church use than those by Spitts.

As a Bymnologist Knapp did good service by his Christoterpe [complete set in Berlin], an annual which he edited from 1833 to 1853, in which many of his own he edited from 1833 to 1853, in which many of his own pieces appeared, and also many of the best poems and hymns of Hey, Mcta Heusser-Schweizer, and various others. He was also the compiler of the Evangetizcher Leider-Schatz (frequently referred to in this Dictionary as Knapp's Ev. L. S.), the most elaborate German hymnobook of recent times. Of this the 1st ed., with 3890 hymns, appeared at Stuttgart in 1837, and a Supplement entitled Christenlieder, 1841, added 250 more. In his entitled Christentecter, 1841, added 200 more. In fils 2nd ed., 1856 (3067 hymns) he omitted many of the third-rate hymns of his let ed., added many of a higher class, and gave the hymns more nearly (but by no means exactly) as the authors wrote them. The 3rd ed., 1865 (3130 hymns, concluded by his son), was further improved, and the notices of the authors of the hymns proved, and the notices of the authors of the hymns were revised and enlarged. As a comprehensive collection with a specially full representation of good modern hymns it has no rival in German. He was also one of the editors of the Württemberg G. B. of 1842. The editions which he prepared of the Hymns of Gottfried Arnold (1845) and N. L. von Zinzendorf (1845) are of interest, but he took most unwarrantable liberties with the originals. The property shyldred the originals; many pieces being not merely abridged but rewritten "to suit the requirements of the 19th Knapp's original hymns appeared principally in his Christoterpe and Evangelischer Lieder-Schatz, as above; and also in his Christliche Gedichte, 2 vols., Basel, 1829.

 Neuere Gedichte, 2 vols., Basel, 1834, sometimes ranked as vols. iii., iv. of No. 1. (3) Gedichte, Neueste Folge, Stuttgart, 1843. (4) Herbstbüthen, Stuttgart, 1859. Those which have passed into English C. U. arc:—

i. Aus deiner Eltern Armen. Holy Baptism. This and No. iv. seem to have been written for the baptism of his own children. 1st pub. in his Christoterpe, 1850, p. 222, in 3 st. of 8 l., entitled "Baptismal Hymn," and repeated in his Ev. L. S., 1850, No. 846 (1865, No. 875). The tr. in C. U. is Thy parent's arms new yield thee. In the original metre by Miss Winkworth in her Lyra Ger., 2nd Ser., 1858, p. 89; and thence in Kennedy, 1863. Slightly altered for metrical reasons in her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 89.

xi. Reulend spielen Stürme mit den Schliffen. For those at Sea. 1st pub. in his Christiche Gedichte, 1829, ii. p. 26, in 10 st., entitled "The Walk on the Sea, Matthew xiv. 24-32." Fr. as "Howling storms are sporting with the vessel," in I. Rehfuese's Church at Sea, 1869, p. 38.

zii. Ihr Kinder israt von Anfang gern. Children. Written 1839, and 1st pub. in his Christenlieder, 1841, No. 212, in 9 st., entitled "The Use of the Fourth (Fifth) Commandment." Tr. as "Betimes O learn, ye children, well," by Dr. G. Walker, 1850, p. 83.

xiti. Jesus, sw'ge Sonne. The Glory of Christ. In his Neuere Gedichte, 1834, it. p. 50, in 7 st. Tr. as "Jesus, everlasting Sun," by J. Kelly, 1885, p. 35.

niv. Schwellet sanft, the weissen Segel. For these at Sec. 1st pub in his Fe. L. S., 1837, No. 3199, in 5 st. Tr. as "Gently swell, ye white salts, driven," in L. Rehfness's Church at Sec, 1868, p. 13.

zv. Sohn des Vaters, Herr dar Ehren. Waiting on God. In his Christliche Gedichte, 1829, i. p. 162, in 3 st. Tr. as (1) "Son of the Father! mighty Lord, An answer," by C. T. Asticy, 1860, p. 1. (2) "Lord of glory, God's dear Son, Let this thing," &c., by R. Massie, 1864, p. 124.

xvi. Streichet hin, ihr leisen Flügel. The Fleetness of Time. In his Ev. J. S., 1837, No. 2903, in 3 st. Tr. as "O ye winds of time! still hielng," in L. Rehfuess's Church at Sea, 1868, p. 42.

xvii. Weh mich vom sanften Mittag an. The Waiting Soul. The original of this hymn is J. Newton's "Breathe from the gentle South, O Lord" (Gluey Hys., 1279, Bk. iii., No. 10). Knapp's tr. is full and good, and is included in his Christoterpe, 1837, p. 224, and Ec. S., 1831, No. 2251. The text tr. is that in S. Hofer's Pilgerharfe, Basel, 1863, No. 118, which begins with st. iii. altered to "O Herr, ich möchte stille sein." Mr. R. Massie was quite unconscious that he was reproducing a hymn of Newton's by a process of double translation. His versions are, (1) "O Lord, I gladly would be still," in the British Herald, June, 1865, p. 25, (2) "Lord, I would still and patient be," in the Day of Rest, 1877, vol. viii. p. 379.

Massie, in the British Herald, April, 1865, p. 56, and Reid's Praise Bk., 1872. (2) "When from my alsep awaking," by R. Massie, in the Day of Rest, 1877, p. 275.

xix. Wie hold ist diese Stille. Sunday Morning. Written 1842. In his Gedichte, Neueste Folge, 1843, p. 3, in ? st. In his Le. L. S., 1850, No 1178 (1865, No. 1217), it begins "Wie slüss." Fr. as "O quiet, silent sweetness," in L. Rehfuess's Church at Sea, 1868, p. 27.

Five additional hymns by Knapp are tr. by Dr. H. Mills in his Horae Germanicae, 1845 and 1856. A version by Knapp from Cassar Malan is noted under "Non, ce nest pas mourir." [J. M.]

Knight, Joel Abel. In Dohell's New Selection of 700 Ecangetical Hymns, 1806, is a hymn on the death of a child, commencing, "Alas I how changed that lovely flower," the name affixed being "Knight." It also appears with the same signature in Denham's Selection, 1837, and in some American hymnbooks. The writer was most probably the Rev. Joel Abel Knight, an Evangetical divine, who, in 1789, pub. a vol. of Sermons, and was the author of a small volume of Sacred Poems. Knight was a man of some note, and friend of J. Newton, Greathead, Rippon, and Ryland. He was also the author of "My Father's at the helm."

Knoll, Christoph, was b. in 1563 at Bunzlau in Silesia, and entered the University of Frankfurt a. Oder in 1583. In 1586 he was appointed assistant (Signator) in the school at Sprottau in Silesia. He then became, in 1591, diaconus, and in 1620 archidiaconus, at Sprottau. On Nov. 23, 1628, he was expelled by the Lichtenstein dragoons, but was eventually allowed to become pastor at the neighbouring village of Wittgendorf, where he d. in 1650 (S. J. Ehrhardt's Presbyterologie Schlesions, 1780-89, iii. pp. 386, 505, &c.). His well-known hymn, Hardish that minds verlanges, For the Dying, is said to have been written during a pestilence in 1599, and was first printed at Görlitz in 1865 (see Ritter für Hymnologic, 1881, pp. 8, 65, &c.). In Wackernagel, v. p. 850 (from Bachwalder's G. B., Görlitz, 1611, &c.), the Unu. L. S. 1861, No. 822, &c., in 11 st. of 8 l. Tr. as "My heart is filled with longing," by Miss Winkworth in her C. B. for England, 1863, Appx. No. iv. [J. M.]

Knollis, Francis Minden, D.D., s. of the Rev. James Knollis, Vicar of Penu, Bucks, was b. Nov. 14, 1815, and d. at Bournemouth, Aug. 25, 1863. He was educated at Magdalen, Oxford (B.A. 1837, D.D. 1851), and took Holy Orders in 1838. He was for sometime Fellow of his College, Chaplain to Lord Ribblesdale, and Incumbent of Fitzhead. His publications were somewhat numerous, including A Wreath for the Altar; A Garland for the School, or Sacred Verses for Sunday Scholars, 1854. His well-known hymn, "There is no night in heaven" (Heaven and its blessedness), appeared in Rutherford's Lays of the Sanctuary and Other Poems, 1859, p. 134, in 10 st. of 41. It is headed "The One Family. Thoughts for the Feast of St. Michael and All Angels.' [J. J.]

Knöpken, Andreas (Cnophius), was b. at Küstrin (Cüstrin) about 1490. He was for some time assistant in the school at Treptow, in East Pomerania, under Bugenhagen. But as they both espoused the cause of the Reformation, they had to flee from Treptow in 1521, Bugenhagen to Wittenberg, and Knöpken to Riga. At Riga Knöpken conducted a successful disputation with the monks, and was appointed by the Council and burgesses evangelical archidiaconus of St. Peter's Church, where he began his work Oct. 23, 1522. He d. at Riga, Feb. 18, 1539.

Knopken's hymns are almost all Psaim versions. Three appeared under the title of Ethice psalmen dorch Andream Knopken vorditischt as an Appendix to B. Waldis's De parabell vom vortorn Scohn, Bigs., 1827. The rest appeared in the Riga Kirchenordamy, 1530, 1531, &c. See the introduction to Dr. J. Geffcken's reprint (Hannover, 1862) of the various eds. of this Kirchenordamy.

Knöpken's hymns tr. into English are:-

I. Rill Gott, wie geht das immer su. Pt. ii. 1527, ss ubove, and thence in Wackernagel, iii. pp. 99-103, in 8 st. of 7 l., beginning "Help Godt, wo goyt dat yamer to." The High German form is in the Zwicken Encharidion, 1128, Tr. as "Quhat is the caus, O God compipotent" in the Gude and Goddie Ballaice, 1508, f. 44 (1868, p. 74).

n. ac (1808, p. 14).

ii. You allen Menschen abgewandt. Ps. zzv. 1527, ss above, and thence in Wackernagel, iii. pp. 105-108, in 13 st. of 7 l., beginning. 'Van allen Mynechen aippewandt.' In High German in V. Schumann's G. B., Leipzig, 1639. Tr. as "I lyft my soule, Lorde, up to the, My God," by Bp. Coverdale, 1639 (Remains, 1846, p. 578).

A hymn frequently, but erroneously, ascribed to Knöpken is noted under Cruciger, E. (p. 271 i.). [J. M.)

Knorr, Christian, Baron von Rosenroth, s. of Abraham Knorr von Resenroth, pastor at Altrauden in Silesia, was b. at Altrauden, July 15, 1636. After studying at the Universities of Leipzig (where he graduated M.A. 1659, along with J. B. Carpzov, the famous Orientalist) and Wittenberg, he made an extended tour through France, England, and Holland. At Amsterdam he became acquainted with an Armenian prince, with the chief Rabbi, Meier Stern, from Frankfurt-am-Main, with Dr. John Lightfoot, Dr. Heury More, and others, and as the result of intercourse with them, devoted himself to the study of the Oriental languages, of chemistry, and of the cabalistic sciences. For his learning in these departments he was taken into the service of the like-minded Palsgrave Christian August of Sulzbach, who in 1668 appointed him Geheimrath and prime minister (Kanzlei-director). He was created Baron won Resenroth by the Emperor Leopold I, in 1677, and d. at Sulzbach (near Amberg, Bavaria), May 8, 1689, it is said at the hour he had himself predicted. (Wetzel, ii. 48, and A. H., ii. 444; Hörner's Nachrichten von Liederdichtern, Schwabach, 1775, p. 142, &c.)

Knorr edited various Rabbinical writings, published various cabalistic works (e.g. his Kabbata denudata, 2 vols., Sulzbach, 1877), and was one of the seekers after the philosopher's stone. His hymns appeared as Neuer Helicon mit seiner Neun Musen, das ist: Geistliche Sitten-Lieder, &c. Nürnberg, 1884 (Hamburg Library), a work containing 70 hymns mostly flowing in expression and metre. Of these 12 are poetic versions from Bachinica B. Gransfactions. Philosophica. 8 are in expression and metre. Of there is any present consentence from Boethins's De Consolatione Philosophia, 8 are from Latin hymns, and 8 are recasts of older German hymns. Stateen of his hymns were included by Feedlinghansen in his G. B., 1704 and 1714. Rock Freylinghausen in his G. B., 1704 and 1714. Rock speaks of them not unjustly as "truly pious and spiritual," as "of genuine poetical elevation and giowing desire after inner union with Christ," and as the fruits of a "noble and chastely earnest mysticism."

Two of Knorr's hymns have passed into English. One is a tr. of "Ad coenam Agni" (p. 12 ii.). The other is Morgenglanz der Ewigkeit. Morning. This fine hymn appeared, 1684, as above, p. 159, in 7 st. of 6 l., entitled "Morning Prayer," and is included in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 1121. It is based on a hymn by M. Opitz (see Opits, No. ii.), but is more happily expressed, and has attained much greater popularity. Fischer, ii. 94, speaks of it as "one of the freshest, most original, and spirited of Morning Hymns, as if born from the dew of the sunrise. In all the trs. in C. U. st. ii., v. are omitted,

1. Light of heaven's eternal day! A good tr. by A. T. Russell, as No. 68 in the Dalston Hospital H. Bk., 1848, repeated in his own Ps. 4 Hys., 1851, and the Cheltenham College H. Bk., 1866.

2. Dayspring of Eternity! Dawn on us this morning-tide. A good tr. by Miss Winkworth in her Lyra Ger., 1st Ser., 1855, p. 219. In full in the Hyl. for St. John's, Aberdeen, 1870, and E. Courtauld's Ps., Hys. & Anthons, 1860; and abridged in Hys. of the Spirit, Boston, U.S., 1864, Dr. Martineau's Hymns, 1873, and others.

S. Jesus, Sun of Righteonsness. A good but rather free tr. by Miss Borthwick, in H. L. L., 2nd Ser., 1855, p. 23 (1884, p. 88), included in the Hy. Comp., 1876; Ecang. Union Hyl., 1878; Ch. Praise, 1883, &c.; and in America in the Sabbath H. Bk., 1858; Pennsylvania Luth. Ch. Bk., 1868, and others. In E. T. Prust's Suppl. H. Bk., 1869, Baptist Hyl., 1879, and others, ll. 5, 6 of each st. are omitted. In Hatfield's Church H. Bk., N. Y., 1872, Hys. & Songs of Proise, N. Y., 1874, and others, it is rewritten to 6 lines of 7's.

4. Come, Thou bright and morning star. A good

tr. contributed by R. Massie to the 1857 ed. of | Mercer's C. P. & H. Bk., No. 502 (Ox. ed. 1864, No. 1), and in his own Lyra Domestica, 1864, p. 136. Repeated in R. Minton Taylor's Hymnal, 1872, No. 42; Marlborough College H. Bk., 1869; Rugby School H. Bh., 1876, and others.

5. Sun of heaven's eternal day. A good tr. contributed by Dr. John Ker to the United Presb. Jun. Miss. Mag., 1858, p. 73; repeated in the Ibrox Hyl., 1871.

6. Dayspring of Eternity, Light of uncreated Light. By Dr. B. H. Kennedy, as No. 824 in his Hymno. Christ., 1863.

7. Dayspring of Eternity! Hide no more thy radiant dawning. A good tr. by Miss Winkworth (based on her 1855 version), as No. 159 in her C. B. for England, 1863. Repeated in R. Minton Taylor's Hymnal, 1872, No. 43, and the Bk. of Ch. Praise, 1865 (Bosworth).

8. Dayspring of Eternity, Brightness of the Father's glory. A good but free tr. by J. H. Hopkins, 1st pub. in Dr. Walter's Chorals of Hys., 1866, and then in his own Carols, Hys. & Songs, 1882, p. 145. Included in the Hys. & Songs of Praise, N. Y., 1874.

9. Dayspring of Eternity, Brightness of the Light divine. In Brown-Borthwick's Select Hys., 1871, and Ch. Hys., 1871, compiled mainly from the trs. by Miss Winkworth and Miss Borthwick, but partly from Dr. Kennedy and Mr. Russell. Thence in J. L. Porter's Coll., 1876, and the Psalmist, 1878.

10. Dayspring of eternal day. A good tr. by Edward Thring, contributed to the Uppingham and Sherborne School H. Bh., 1874, No. 5.

Knowles, James Davis, an American Baptist Minister, was b. at Providence, Rhode Island, 1798; educated at Columbian College; became pastor of the 2nd Baptist Church, Boston, 1825, and Professor at New-ton Theological Institute, 1832. He d. in 1838. His hymn, "O God, through countless worlds of light" (Dedication of a Place of Worship), appeared in the Baptist Psalmist, 1843; the Meth. Episco. Hymns, 1849, &c. [F. M. B.]

Knox, William, b. at Firth, Lilliesleaf, Roxburgh, Aug. 17, 1789, and educated at the parish school, and the grammar school at Musselburgh. For some time he was engaged in farming at Wrae, near Langholm, Dumfriesshire; but not succeeding to his satisfaction, he left Wrac in 1817, and finally settled in Edinburgh in 1820, where he subsequently obtained employment as a contributor to the public journals. He d. in Edinburgh, Nov. 12, 1825. His poetical works were, (1) The Lonely Hearth. North Shields, 1818; (2) Songs of Israel, 1824; (3) The Harp of Zion, 1825; and (4) these three works, to-gether with a short Memoir, as his Poems, &c., Lond., J. Johnson, 1847. The Songs and Harp are mainly paraphrases of portions of Holy Scripture. A few have come into use as con-gregational hymns, as, "A voice comes from Ramah," "Acquaint thee, O mortal," "O sweet as vernal dews that fall" (Ps. czaziii.), and others.

Koch, Eduard Emil, was b. Jan. 30, 1809, at the Solitude, near Stuttgart. After the completion of his theological studies at Tübingen in 1830, he was for some time assistant elergyman at Ehningen, near Böblingen, and in 1837 became pastor at Gross-Aspach, near Marbach, on the Neckar. In 1847 he was appointed third pastor, then second, and in 1853 chief pastor and decan at Heilbronn. In 1864 he took an easier post as pastor at Erdmannhausen, near Marbach. He d. while on a visit to Stuttgart, April 27, 1871 (Allg. Deutsche Biog., xvi. 373-375).

Koch claims notice here as the author of the Geschichte des Kirchenlieds and Kirchengesangs der Christischen, inbbesondere der deutschen vangelischen Kirche. The 1st ed. appeared at Stuttgart, 1847, in 2 vols., and the second at Stuttgart, in 4 vols., 1862-53. Of the 3rd ed. he only lived to complete vols. 1-8, 1866-1869, vol. 7 being edited from his use. by his son (recently Court chaplain to Prince Alexander of Bulgaria), and pub. 1872; with an 8th volume by R. Lauxmann (founded on vol. iv. of 1853), 1876, and finally a very incomplete index in 1877. All the references in this Dictionary are to the third ed., unless the contrary is stated, and the following notice refers exclusively to it. Regarded as the work of one man, and as covering the whole field of German Hymnody, it is a wonderful achievement, and worthy of the highest admiration. It was a great advance on anything proviously attempted, Koch claims notice here as the author of the Geschichte achievement, and worthy of the highest admiration. It was a great advance on anything previously attempted, and as a comprehensive survey will not soon be superseded. Regarded more in detail, it has two main sides, blographical and bibliographical. As a collection of biographies with historical connections it possesses great merit. The biographies are for the most part full, careful, and interesting, and have been taken as the basis of the biographical notices by the present writer, who has pleasure in directing attention to them as containing especially much fuller details of the spiritual life of the authors than be has been able to give. As a collection of notes upon individual hymna, and notices of the works of the authors brought under review it is of the works of the nuthors brought under review it is impossible to speak by any means so highly. Had Koch been content to indicate in any way the information which he had himself gathered from the books he was able to consult, his work might not have appeared so complete, but would in reality have been much more valuable. As it is, the information given is very often confused and inexact, and what is much worse, it is often when definite totally wrong, plainly showing that the writer had never seen many of the books which he cites: writer had never seen many of the books which he cites: so that no single statement (especially of the period 1600-1750) can be taken without verification. The practical result to the present writer was that he was compelled in 1885 to make a visit to Germany for the purpose of consulting the hymnological collections in various of the principal libraries. All the references by page or number to the works of German authors have been made either by himself or by others at his request specially for this Dictionary.

Koitsch, Christian Jacob, was b. Sept. 13, 1671, at Meissen, where his father was a leathercutter. He entered the University of Leipzig in 1692, and then went as a student of theology to Halle, where, under the in-fluence of Francke and Breithaupt, he be-came one of the first "awakened" students. After he had finished his course, Francke appointed him, in 1696, as one of the Masters, and in 1700 as Inspector, of the Paedagogium at Halle. In 1705 he became Professor and Rector of the Gymnasium at Elbing, and d. at Elbing, Aug. 21, 1734. (Bode, p. 99; Allg. Deutsche Biog., xvi. 455, &c.) To Freylinghausen's Geistreiches G. B., 1704, and its 2nd ed., 1705, he contributed 8 (or 9) hymns; and two others to his Neues geistreiches G. B., 1714. Of these the following have passed into English, viz. :-

i. Du bist ja, Jesu, meine Frends. Christian Warfare. 1704, as above, No. 308, in 6 st. 7r. as "Taou, Jesu, art my Consolation," by Miss Burlingham, in the British Herald, March, 1866, p. 232, repeated in Beid's Praise Bk., 1872.

ii. Lasset uns den Herren preisen. Thanktgiving.
Founded on Ps. Lxxii. 18, 19. 1704, as above, No. 488, in 7 st. 7r. as "Now unite to render praises," by W.
Okely, as No. 800 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1789 (1886,
No. 648).

iii. Mein Herre, wie wankest und fiedderst du noch. Self-Renneciation. 1705, as above, No. 718, in 8 st. Tr. as "O Saviour, the truest, the best of all friends" (st. vl.), as No. 429 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1886.

(st. vi.), as No. 429 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1886.
iv. O Ursprung des Lebens, o swiges Licht. Love to Christ. A fine hymn on Christ as the Fountain of Life.
1704. as above, No. 356, in 7 st. of 6 h.; and in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 826. The tr. in C. U. is
"O Fountain eternal of life and of light." A good tr., omitting st. iii., as No. 1100 in the Suppl. of 1808 to the Moravian H. Bk., 1801. In the 1826 and later eds.
(1886, No. 631), a tr. by J. Swertner of st. iii. was incorporated—this st. having appeared as No. 267 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1801. Included, altered and abridged, in Mercer's C. P. and H. Bk., 1855 and 1854, and the Frish Ch. Hyl., 1873. Another tr. is "O everlasting
1862, p. 79 (1884, p. 241).

Kolbe, Frederick William, was b. Nov. 3, 1821, at Gütersloh, Westphalia, and having been trained at the Mission College of the Rhenish Society at Barmen, was sent, in 1844, as a missionary to the Cape of Good Hope. There he laboured in the district of Worcester till 1848, when he proceeded to Damaraland and joined the first missionaries to the Ovaherero. There he contributed 35 hymns and school songs to the first Herero hymnal, printed at Cape Town, in 1849. In 1853 he joined the London Missionary Society, and since then his sphere of work has again been in the Colony, first at George, and for nearly 20 years at the Paarl. There he prepared an enlarged edition of the Dutch hymnbook of the London Missionary Society, adding 100 hymns written by himself (some original, but) most of them translations of well-known English and German hymns. Many of these translations by Mr. Kolbe are now in extensive use among the Church of England, Congregational, and Dutch Reformed native congregations throughout South Africa. The Church of England Dutch Hymnal, compiled by Rev. J. A. Hewitt in 1877, comprising 201 hymns, has 37 of Mr. Kolbe's translations and four of his original hymns. Mr. Kolbe has recently prepared a new Supplement to the Dutch Hymn-book of the London Society, referred to above, containing translations of "Lead, kindly light," "Art thou weary," "Take my life," and other modern English hymns, [W. Kolross, Johann (Rhodanthracius), is said to have been a pastor at Basel, and to have died there in 1558. In his Encheridion, Nürnberg, 1529 (later ed., 1534. It is a manual of orthography), he calls himself teacher of German (Teutsch Lehermayster) at Basel; and so in his Soriptural play (Einschön spil von Fünferley betrachtnussen den menschen zur Büss reytzende. It is on the motives of the Dance of Death at Basel), performed at Basel on the 1st S. after Easter, 1532, and printed at Basel, 1552 (Goedeke's Grundriss, 1886, ii. 181, 337, 343, &c.). The only hymn by him tr. into English is:—

Ich dank dir lieber Herre. Morning. 1st pub. separately st Nürnberg, c. 1535, and thence in Wackernagel, ili. p. 86, ins st. of 81. Included in V. Schumann's G. B., Leipzig, 1639, the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 1111, &c. It has been characterised as constaining "all the leading thoughts of the Reformation." The trs. are from the greatly altered form in 6 st., beginning "Das walten deine Wunden," given as No. 1800 in Appx. xii., c. 1744, to the Herrnhauf G. B. 1738, and in the Brider G. B., 1738, No. 1509. They are, (1) "Thy Wounds, Lord, be my Safeguard," as No. 344 in pt. i. of the Horavian H. Bk., 1754. In the ed. of 1849, 2 st. are repeated, st. v. beginning "Lord Christ! I give Thee praises," as No. 1008, and st. iv. beginning "Amidst this world's profansuese," as No. 610.

To Kolross has also been ascribed (as in the Zürich G. B., 1570) a version of Ps. exzvii., which 1st appeared in the Zwickau Enchiridion, 1525, and begins "So (Wo) Gott zum Haus nicht giebt sein Gunst." A rendering of Ps. exzwii. is given under this first line in J. C. Jacobi's Psalmodia Germanica, 1722, p. 35 (1732, p. 60), but it is not from the German, and is simply the L.M. version of this Psalm by Isaac Watts. A hymn slso ascribed to Kolross is noted under Magdeburg, J. [J. M.]

Komm heiliger Geist, Herre Gott. Luther. [Whitsuntide.] Wackernagel, ii. M. Luther. [Whitsuntide.] Wackernagel, ii. p. 748, gives as No. 986 a double form of st. i. from two MSS. of the 15th cent. at Munich; as No. 987 a form from the Basel Plenarium, 1514; and as No. 988 a form from the Obsequiale, Ingolstadt, 1570. This stanza is a tr. of an antiphon, not earlier than the 11th cent., which reads "Veni Sancte Spiritus; reple tuorum corda fidelium, et tui amoris in eis ignem accende: Qui per diversitatem linguarum cunctarum gentes in unitate fidei congregasti. Alleluia. Alleluia" (see Daniel, ii. p. 315). Bäunker, i. pp. 648, 644, says the Latin antiphon is still song in many dioceses in Germany on Sundays before High Mass, and cites the German as in the Crailsheim Schul-ordnung of 1480. Martin Luther adopted this old German stanza with alterations, and adding two original stanzas, pub. the whole in Eyn Enchiridion, Erfurt, 1524. The complete form in 3 st. of 8 l., with "Alleluis," is in Wackernagel, iii. p. 14, in Schircks's ed. of Luther's Geistl. Lieder, 1854, p. 28, and the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 174. The hymn soon become popular in Germany. Koch, viii. 87, says that in the Peasants' War it was sung by Münzer and his forces immediately before the battle of Frankenhausen, May 25, 1525; that it was sung by Leonhard Kayser when at the stake at Passau, Aug. 16, 1527; and that st. ii. was the last pulpit utterance of J. M. Dilherr, in March, 1669. Tr. as:-

1. Come Holy Chest! Come Lord our God! In full by J. C. Jacobi, in his Psalmodia Germanica, 1722, p. 25 (1732, p. 42). Included in the Moravian H. Bk., 1754, slightly altered, but in the 1789 and later eds. (1886, No. 239) greatly altered, probably by J. Swertner. The text of 1789 is repeated in the Irish Church Hyl., 1873. In 1846 W. J. Blew printed a recast for choir use, and included it in his Ch. H. & Tune Bk., 1852-55, with an added doxology.

2. Kely Spirit, gracious Lord. By Miss Fry,

2. Rely Spirit, gracious Lord. By Miss Fry, in her Hys. of the Reformation, 1845, p. 108, in 40 lines. Her version of st. i., rewritten to 2 st. of 8 l., is No. 152 in Whittemore's Suppl. to all Bl. 1980

H. Bks., 1860.

3. Blest Comforter! come; —Lord our God! In full by A. T. Russell, as No. 17 in his Ps. & Hys., 1851; repeated by Dr. Bacon in his Hys. of

Martin Luther, 1884, p. 27, altered to "Come, Holy Spirit, Lord our God, And pour."

- 4. Come, Holy Chest! Lord God, fulfil. A good and full tr. by R. Massie, in his Martin Luther's Spir. Songs, 1854, p. 19. Repeated in Mercer's C. P. 4 H. Bk., 1857, unaltered save "full fill" in st. i. l. 1. (Ox. ed., 1864, No. 435, as 6 st. of 4 l.); and in the Ohio Luth. Hyl., 1880, reading wand fill.
- 5. Come, Hely Spirit, God and Lord. In full by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger., 1st Ser., 1855, p. 117; and her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 72. Repeated in Dr. Thomas's Augustine H. Bk., 1866, and the Pennsylvania Luth. Church Bk., 1868.
- 6. Come, Holy Spirit! gracious Lord! Help us. By M. E. Tupper, as No. 57 in Judd's S. S. H. Bk., Halifax, 1870.

Other trs. are :—
(1) "Come, holy Spirite, most blessed Lorde," by Bp. Coverdale, 1539 (Remains, 1846, p. 542). (2) "Come holy holy Ghost, Lord our God," In Lyra Bavidica, 1708, p. 51. (3)" Lord God, the Holy Spirit, come, 1909. J. Anderson, 1846, p. 17 (1847, p. 41). (4) "Come, Holy Ghost! Come, Lord our God! Thy," by J. Hunt, 1853, p. 49. (5) "Come, Holy Ghost! rule Thou within," by Dr. H. Mills, 1856, p. 143. (6) "Come, Holy Ghost, one, mighty God," by E. Massie, 1867, p. 290. (7) "Come, Holy Spirit, Lord and God," by Dr. G. Macdonaki in the Sanday Mag., 1867, p. 388, and his Exotics, 1878, p. 67.

Kommt, Kinder, lasst uns gehen. G. Tereteegen. [Christian Pilgrimage.] 1st pub. in the 3rd ed., 1738, of his Geistliches Blumengärtlein, Bk. iii. No. 62, in 19 st of 8 l., entitled "Hymn of Encouragement for Pilgrims." Repeated in full in the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 322; and, abridged, in many other German collections. Illustrating this hymn, Lauxmann, in Koch, viii. 564, says that Tersteegen

"once said to some of his friends, who visited him on his birthday: "My friends, if I should die to-day I would only have three words to say to you as a last farewell:

1. Place your whole confidence on the grace of God in Christ Jesus; 2. Love one another; 3. Watch and pray! This is the quintessence of this noble travelling pray: Into so the quantessence of this more traveling song for Christian pligrims and strangers here below (1 St. Peter il. 11, 12), whose course is a march through the Desert to Canaan. The whole life of Tersteegen is proof of the genulneness and sincerity of the spirit that breathes throughout this hymn."

Translations in C. U. :--

1. Come, brothers, let us onward. A tr. of st. i., ii., v., x., xiv., xvii., xviii., by Mrs. Findlater, in H. L. L., 1st Ser., 1854, p. 51 (1884, p. 52). The trs. of st. i., ii., xvii., xviii., were included in J. A. Johnston's English Hyl. (ed. 1861, No. 192).

2. Come, brethren, let us go. A good tr. of st. i., ii., vi. xi., xii., xiv.-xix., by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger., 1st Ser., 1855, p. 161. A cento in 6 st. of 4 l., from the trs. of st. i., xi., xvi., zvii., is included in the Parish H. Bk., 1863 and 1875. Centos beginning with the tr. of st. xi., "Come, children, let us go," are in the Eng. Presb. Ps. & Hys., 1867, and the Cong. School Hyl., 1881.

Other trs. are, (1) "Come, children! on; this way," by Miss Warner, 1858, p. 224. (2) "Come, children, let's be going," in the Christian Examiner, Boston, U. S., Sept., 1869, p. 252. (3) "Come, brethren, let us hurry," in L. Rehfuese's Church at Sea, 1868, p. 99.

Kovtáklov. [Greek Hymnody, § XII. 1-

Κόπον τε καὶ κάματον. [Rest in Jesus.] In the 1st ed. of Dr. Neale's Hys. of the Eastern Church he gives this hymn as by "S. Stephen the Sabaite, A.D. 725—A.D. 794" calls it "Idiomela in the Week of the First Oblique Tone," and adds, "These stanzas, which strike me as very sweet, are not in all the editions of the Octoechus. I copy from a dateless Constantinopolitan book." In sub-sequent editions of the Hys. of the E. Church the words "I copy from a dateless Constantinopolitan book" were omitted. This omission has caused numerous fruitless searches for the text in the authorized editions of the Octoechus. The Constantinopolitan book referred to by Dr. Neale cannot be found amongst Dr. Neale's books, nor has a copy corresponding thereto been as yet discovered.

The so-called translation of this Idiomela, "Art thou weary, art thou languid?" was accompanied in the 3rd ed., 1866, of Dr. Neale's Hys. of the E. Church, with a note in the Preface to this effect :--

"The Hymns at page 206 ['O happy band of pilgrims'], 209 ['Safe home,' &c.], and 'Art thou weary,' contain so little that is from the Greek, that they ought not to have been included in this collection; in any future Edition they shall appear as an Appendix."

In accordance with this expressed wish of Dr. Neale's these hymns were given as an Appendix to the 4th ed. of the Hys. of the E. Church, 1882, edited by the Very Rev. S. G. Hatherley. The most therefore that can be said of these three hymns is that they are based upon the few words quoted by Dr. Neale which he found in his extensive reading of the Greek Sacred Poets, and that those words have yet to be traced to their original source.

"Art thou weary, art thou languid," appeared in the 1st ed. of the Hys. of the E. Church, 1862, in 7 st. of 4 l. It was at once included in T. Darling's Hys. for the Ch. of England, 1862; and the Parish H. Bk., 1863; and subsequently in almost every hymn-book published in G. Britain and America. It has been set to a great number of tunes, those in H. A. & M. being Christus Consolator by Dr. Dykes; and Stephanos by Sir H. W. Baker, harmonized by W. H. Monk. Sir A. Sullivan's tune in Church Hymns is entitled Rest. In the Contemporary Review for Dec. 1875, there is a rendering of "Art thou weary," &c., into Latin by W. E. Gladstone. This, together with Dr. Neale's text and a short note, were given in the Times of Dec. 2, 1875. The Latin begins, "Scis te lassum? scis languentem?" Another rendering by H. M. Macgill in his Songs of the Christian Creed & Life, 1876, is " Sisne lassus, aerumnosus." An expanded version of this hymn appeared in 1887 under the following circumstances:-"Several years ago," says Dr. Boyd of St. Andrews, N.B., "an anonymous correspondent sent me 'Art thou weary,' in print with the added stanzas." Thinking that he had been favoured with Dr. Neale's original form of the hymn, and not having Dr. Neale's works at hand for correction, Dr. Boyd wrote a short notice of the bymn in this expanded form, and had it inserted in the May, 1887, number of Life and Work. A Scottish Magazine, &c., p. 73, as 'A Regrettable Omission in a Favourite Hymn.' The added stanzas are:—

" ' 5. Is this all He hath to give me In my life below?

Joy unspeakable and glorious Thou shalt know.

- 4 ° 6. All thy sins shall be forgiven— All things work fer good: Thou shalt Bread of Life from Heaven Have for food.
- " 17. From the fountains of Solvation Thou shalt Water draw: Sweet shall be thy meditation In God's Law.
- " '9. Festal Paims, and Crowns of Glory. Robes in Blood wash'd white, God in Christ His People's Temple— There no night.'"

The hymn as thus expanded into 11 st. has been printed as a leaflet, with the heading "Complete Version of Hymn 163" [in the Scottish Hymnal, 1884]. That these additional stanzas are neither by Dr. Neale nor from a Greek hymn, is evident to any one acquainted with Dr. Neale's works and with the Service Books of the Greek Church.

In King's Anglican Hymnology, 1885, 194, there is a most striking account of Mr. King's visit to the Monastery at Mar Saba, where St. Stephen resided and wrote. It is one of the redeeming features of that most unsatisfactory and unreliable work. [J. J.]

Kosegarten, Ludwig Gotthard, was b. Feb. 1. 1758, at Grevismühlen, Mecklenburg, and studied at the University of Rostock-Bützow (PH. D. 1785, D.D. 1792). After being for some time Rector of the school at being for some time Rector of the school at Wolgast, near Greifswald, he became, in 1792, pastor at Altenkirchen, on the island of Rügen. This post he held till the 21st S. after Trinity, 1815 (officiating during vacations), though he had in 1808 been also appointed Professor of History at Greifswald. In 1817 he became third Professor of Theology and pastor of St. James's Church at Greifswald, and d. there Oct. 26, 1818. His Dicktungen appeared at Greifswald, 1812-18, in 8 vols., and 1824-27 in 12 vols. Four additional bymns are given at the end of his Akademische Reden, ed. by G. C. F. Mohnike, and pub. at Stralsund, 1832. One is tr., viz.:—

Jarusalem, du hochgebaute Stadt. Eternal Life.
1832, as above, p. 287, in 5 st. of 8 l., entitled "Homesickness." He wrote this, his last poem, with a fore-boding of his approaching death, and recited it in the introduction to his last sermon on the 9th S. after Trinity 1818 (July 19). It is a beautiful poem, founded on the better-known hymn by Meyfart (q.v.), and on the Latin hymn "Uris beats Hiernesiem," q.v. Abp. Trench in his Sac. Lat. Poetry, 1884, p. 312, quotes ii.-iv. with approbation. Tr. as:

— Jerusalem, thou city built on high, Would God I were in thee. A full and good tr. by J. M. Neale in his Hys. chiefly Mediaceal on the Joys and Glories of Paradise, 1885, p. 97. Repeated in the St. Margaret's Hyl. (Kast Grinstead), 1878.

Krause, Jonathan, s. of Christian Wilhelm Krause, Master of the Clothworkers and Sexton at Hirschberg, in Silesia, was b. at Hirschberg, April 5, 1701. Entering the University of Leipzig in 1718, he went in 1723 to Wittenberg, where he graduated M.A. He was then for some time travelling tutor to a young Baron von Birken, and 1727-32 a tutor in the family of Baron von Nostitz, at Polgsen, near Wohlau. On Aug. 20, 1732, he was ordained as Diaconus of Probathayn, near Liegnitz, and in 1739 became chief pastor of the Church of St. Peter and St. Paul at Liegnitz. In 1741 he was also appointed Lieguitz. In 1741 he was also appointed and finally, in 1821, he became chief pastor of Superintendent and Assessor of the Consistory.

He d. at Liegnitz, Dec. 13, 1762 (S. J. Ehrhardt's Presbyterologie Schlesiens, 1780-89, iv. p. 280, &c.). He edited the Liegnitz G. B. of 1745. His hymns appeared in his

(1) Die zum Lobe Gottes eröffnete Lippen der Gläu-bigen, Sc., Hamburg, 1732, and (2) Gnade und Wahr-keit Gottes in Christo Jean, in heitigen Liedern über alle Sonn- und Feit-Tags Bonngelten und Episteln, Leipzig and Lauban, 1739. [Berlin Royal Library.]

The only hymn by Krause tr. into English is Alleluja! schöner Morgen. Sunday Morning. This hymn, a great favourite in Southern Germany, let appeared 1739 as above, p. 487, in 9 st. of 6 l., entitled "Morning-Hymn on Sunday." Repeated thus in the Liegnitz G. B., 1745, No. 1; but in recent cells., as the Wirttemberg G. B., 1842, and the Unu. L. S., 1851, No. 482, it begins "Hallelujah!" Sometimes erroneously ascribed to B. Schmolck. Tr. as:—

Hallelujah! Fairest morning. A good ir., omitting st. v., vii., viii., by Miss Borthwick, in H. L. L., 3rd Ser., 1858, p. 28 (1884, p. 180). Included in full in the Appa. of 1869 to the S. P. C. K. Pr. & Hys.; in Holy Song, 1889, and others. In the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871, the frz. of st. iii., iv. are omitted, and the rest elightly altered; and this form is followed in Lauder Dominis, N. Y., 1884. In G. S. Jellicoe's Coll., 1867, it begins "Alleluis."

Other trs. are, (1) "Halleluish! beautoous morning," by Miss Manington, 1863. (2) "Halleluish! day of gladness," by R. Massie, in the Day of Rest, 1876, p. 35.

Krewziger, Elizabethe. [Cruciger.]

Krishnu Pal, the first Hindoo who was baptized in Bengal, was b. about 1764, and baptized at Serampore by the celebrated Baptist missionary, William Carey, on Dec. 28, 1800. He became a useful Christian minister, and wrote several hymns in the Bengali language. One of these was tr. into English by Dr. Marshman in 1801 as "O thou, my soul, forget no more" (Christ the Friend). It was included in the 27th ed. of Rippon's Bap. Sel., 1827, No. 170, Pt. 2, in 6 st. of 4 l., in Bickersteth's Christian Psalmody, 1833, in 5 st., and again in later collections, including the Baptist Hymnal, 1879, and others. Krishnu d. at Serampore, Aug. 22, 1822. W. R. S.1

Krummacher, Friedrich Adolf, was a native of Tecklenburg, Westphalia, where his father, Friedrich Jacob Krummacher was Burgomaster and Hoffiscal. He was baptized there, July 22, 1767, and apparently born July 13, 1767. In 1786 he entered the University of Lingen (since 1819 ranked as a Gymnesium), and in 1787 that of Halle. After concluding his theological studies in 1789, he was for some time tutor in the family of Senator Meyer in Bremen; was then appointed, in 1790, Conrector of the Gymnasium at Hamm, and in 1793 Rector of the Gymnasium at Mörs (Meurs), near Düsseldorf. In the end of 1800 he became Professor of Theology and Eloquence at the Reformed University of Duis-When, after the battle of Jena (Oct. 14, 1806), Duisburg was taken from Prussia, the salaries of the professors ceased, but Krummacher lectured on till his audience consisted of one student. He was then, in the autumn of 1807, appointed pastor of Kettwig, on the Ruhr; in 1812 Chief Court Preacher and General Superintendent at Bernburg; reason of growing infirmities he resigned his ! charge in June, 1843, and d. at Bremen, April 4, 1815 (O. Kraus, 1879, p. 310; Blätter für Hymnologie, 1886, p. 80, &c.).

Krunmacher is best known as a preacher; and as the author of the well-known Parabein, first pub. 1895, which passed through many eds., and ranks as the standard German work of its class. His hymns are little suited for church use, being often allegorical and high-flown, and not for the most part sufficiently simple and direct, though in some cases he does write in a popular, natural style, and with a beauty of his own. His hymns mostly appeared in his Festbücklein, a work consisting of allegorical narratives, conversations, &c., with interspersed hymns. Of this the 1st part, cutilled Per Sorntag, was pub. 1808 (and ed. 1812; and ed. 1813; 4th ed. 1819); pt. ii., entitled Das Christfest, in 1820 (2nd ed. 1914; 3rd ed. 1821); and pt. iii., entitled Das Neugahrsfest, in 1818. Neujahrsfest, in 1819.

Those of Krummscher's hymns tr. into

i. Allgemach aus Dämmerung und Nacht. vent. In his Festbüchlein, pt. ii., 1810 (1814, p. 154), in 5 st. of 4 l., entitled "The Prophets of Nature"; and given after the conversation on Zacharias, the father of St. John the Baptist. Included as No. 34 in J. P. Lange's Deutsches Kirchenliederbuch, Zürich, 1843. The unity of idea is violated by the concluding lines of st. v.

"Wie die leisen Liepel den Propheten Einst auf Horeb's Felsenspitz umwehten," And thus in his preface, p. vii., Dr. Lange suggests that st. v. should read thus : "Allgemach und siegreich fort und fort Bricht durch unser Fleisch das ew'ge Wort; Die Propheten grüsst es durch Gesichte, Dann wir'l's Mensch und könmilische Geschichte."

Slowly, slowly from the caves of night. A full and good tr. from Lange by Dr. Kennedy, as No. 42 in his Hymno. Christ., 1863.

- ii. Rine Heerde und ein Hirt. Missions. 1st pub. in the 3rd. ed., 1821, of pt. ii. of his Festbuchlein, p. 163, in 6 st. of 6 l., at the close of the section on "Israel and the Strangers." In the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 1365, and many other recent collections. The trs. are:
- 1. One, only One, shall be the fold. By Miss Dunn, in her Hys. from the German, 1857, p. 49.
- 2. One Shepherd and one fold to be. In Cantica Sanctorum, 1880, No. 96.
- ili. Ja fürwahr! uns führt mit sanfter Hand. Ps. xxiii. In his Festbüchlein, pt. i. (3rd ed. 1813, p. 118), in 5 st. of 4 l., with Hallelujahs. It is given in the story of the festal rededication of a village church destroyed in time of war, as a choral hymn sung by boys and girls after the Holy Communion. In the Württemberg G. B., 1842, No. 72. Tr. as:-
- 1. Yes! our Shepherd leads with gentle hand, Through. A good and full tr. by Miss Borthwick, in H. L. L., 1st Ser., 1854, p. 59 (1884, p. 60), repeated in Kennedy, 1863; Mrs. Brock's Children's H. Bk., 1881; the Christian H. Bk., Cincinnati, 1865, and others.
- 2. Yea! our Shepherd leads, with gentle hand, Along. In full by M. W. Stryker, as No. 164 in his Christian Chorals, 1885.
- iv. Mag auch die Liebe weinen. Love, Faith and Hope. Festbuchlein, pt. i., 1808, p. 136, in 3 st. of 4 l., in the section entitled "The Setting Sun," for Sunday evening. It is appended to a story in which the father has been speaking of the Resurrection of Christ the Sun of Righteousness, as celebrated on that day, family and neighbours, as he ceased to speak. Included in the Württemberg G. B., 1842, No. 628. It is most suited to be sung at a choral funeral. Koch, 2nd ed., iv. p. 695, says it was sung at the author's funeral at Bremen, April 10, 1845, and that st. iii. is on the cross over his grave. He adds that st. i., iii. were sung July 17, 1850, at the funeral of Dr. August Neander, the church historian in Berlin; followed by an address by Krummacher's son, Friedrich Wilhelm (author of the well-known Elijah, Elisha, and other works). Tr. as:--

Though Love may weep with breaking heart. A good and full tr. by Miss Winkworth in her Lyra Ger., 2nd Ser., 1858, p. 121. Repeated in Flett's Coll., Paisley, 1871, and in H. L. Hastings's Songs of Pilgrimage, 1887.

Other trs. are, (1) "Let love weep,—It cometh," by Miss Warner, 1888, p. 584. (2) "Yea, Love may weep when death prevails," by Dr. G. Walker, 1860, p. 57.

A number of other pieces by Krummacher are tr. in the Sacred Lyrics from the German, Philadelphia, 1859; by C. T. Brooks, 1847; by Mrs. Follen, 1851; and by Miss Fry, 1859. As they are poems rather than hymns they are not noted here. [J. M.]

Kunth, Johann Sigismund, was b. Oct. 3, 1700, at Lieguitz, Silesia, and studied theology at the Universities of Jena, Wittenberg, and Leipzig. He was in 1730 appointed pastor at Pölzig and Bröckau, near Ronueburg, by Count Henkel von Donnersmark. In 1737 he became chief pastor at Löwen, Silesia, and in 1743 pastor and superintendent at Baruth, near Jüterbog, Branden-burg. He d. at Baruth, Sept. 7, 1779 (S. J. Ehrhardt's Presbyterologie Schlesiens, 1780-89, ii. p. 137, &c.). The only hymn by him tr. into English is Es iat noch eine Ruh vorhanden. Eternal Life. This fine hymn (founded on Heb. iv. 9; St. Matt. xi. 28, 29; Job. vii. 1-3; Ps. cxxvi. 5, 6, and Rev. vii. 16, 17) appears in the Einige generate Lieder. Cüthen, 1733. No. 22, in 7 st. of 7 i. In the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 1836.

According to Richter (Biog. Lexikon, 1804, p. 183) it was written by Kunth while on a journey from Wittenberg to Silesia, i.e. c. 1725; and this agrees with the statement of Fischer (Supplement, 1886, pt. l. p. 48) that it appeared in the Nos cingerichtetts geistrieded G. B., Leipzig, 1730. Kock, 2nd ed., vol. iv. p. 712, says it was written in 1731 or 1732, while Kunth was journeying with his patron, Count Erdmann Heinrich von Henkel, who was on his way to take possession of some property in Silesia. On the way the carriage broke down, and this delay gave the Count occasion to nurmur at the ceaseless unrest of this life. Kunth, reminding him of the believer's everlastine rest, stepped According to Richter (Biog. Lexikon, 1804, p. 183) it minding him of the believer's everlasting rest, stepped aside a moment, and then returned with this hymn.

Acch adds that it comforted the dying hours of Heinrich

Möwes (q.v.), being read to him by his wife in his last

Küster, Samuel Christian Gottfried. s. of S. C. K. Küster, inspector and chief pastor at Havelberg, Brandenburg, was b. at Havelberg, Aug. 18, 1762. After studying at the University of Berlin (D.D. 1835) he became third pastor of the Friedrich-Werder Church at Berlin, in 1786; in 1793 second pastor; the hymn being introduced as sung by the and in 1797 chief pastor and superintendent, on the death of his father (who had been called to this church in 1771). He d. at Eberswalde (Neustadt-E.), near Berlin, Aug. 22, 1838 (Allg. Deutsche Biog., xvi. 439, &c.):

He was one of the editors of the Berlin G. B., 1829. and contributed to it two hymns, Nos. 294 and 549; and in 1831 pub. a small volume of Kurze lebengezehichtliche Nachrichten regarding the authors of the hymns therein contained.

One of Küster's hymns has passed into English, viz.:—

English, viz.:—

O Jesu, Freund der Seelen. Love to Christ. 1829, as above, No. 549, in 6 st. of 3 l. Suggested by the "Schatz über alle Schätze" [see Lissovius]. Tr. as:—
O Jesus, Friend unfailing. A good and full tr. by Miss Burlingham, written June 13, 1865, and 1st publia the British Herald, July, 1865, p. 100. Repeated in full in Red's Fraise Bk., 1872; W. F. Stevenson's H. för Ch. & Home, 1873; Dale's English H. Bk., 1875, and others; and abridged in Newman Hall's Christ Church Hyd., 1876; Raptich Hyd., 1879; Suppl. of 1880 to Bapt. Pz. & Hyz., 1658, &c.

Kvinaston. Horbort. D.D., was b. Nov. 23.

Kynaston, Herbert, D.D., was b. Nov. 23, 1809, and educated at Westminster School, and Christ Church, Oxford (of which he was sometime Student), where he graduated in 1831 (1st class Lit. Hum.). Taking Holy Orders in 1834, he became Head Master of St. Paul's School, London, in 1838; Select Preacher of the University of Oxford, 1842-43; Rector of St. Nicholas-Cole-Abbey, with St. Nicholas Olave, 1850-66; and Prebendary of Holborn in St. Paul's Cathedral, 1853. He d. Oct. 1878. His Miscellaneous Poems were pub. in 1840, and his hymns as follows:—

(1) Occasional Hymns (original and translated), 1862.
(2) Occasional Hymns, 2nd series, pt. 1., 1864. (3) Occasional Hymns, 2nd series, pt. ii., chiefly on the Miracles, 1866.

These hymns and translations, which are of more than usual merit, have been either strangely overlooked or are unknown to most modern editors. A few were included in the Hymnary, 1872. Dr. Kynaston also contributed to the Guardian from time to time several renderings into Lutin of his own hymns, and of hymns by others, but these have not been republished.

Kyrie eleison. M. Luther. [The Litany.] This setting of the Litany was composed in the beginning of 1529, and first pub. in Klug's G. B., Wittenberg, 1529, and thence in the Riga G. B., 1530, and the Rostock G. B., 1531. It is No. 959 in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863. Tr. as:—(1) "Good Lord! us deliver," by J. Anderson, 1846, p. 62. In his ed., 1847, rewritten, beginning, "Lord save! and keep us free." (2) "Have mercy on us, Lord, we pray," by Dr. J. Hunt, 1853, p. 90. (3) "Lord, have mercy," by R. Massie, 1854, p. 64.

Ryrie! Gott Vater in Ewigkeit, [Public Worship.] A recast of the Kyrie sommum ("Kyrie fons bonitatis"), sung in mediaval times on Festivals from Trinity to Christmas, and found in a 12th cent. Ms. In the B. Museum (Reg. 2 B. iv. f. 12b.) It was printed apparently at Wittenberg, in 1541, and thence in Wackernagel, iii. p. 226, in 3 st. of unequal length; repeated in the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 176. Two "Kyries" by Johann Spangenberg, somewhat resembling this, are given by Wackernagel, iii. p. 928. Tr. as:—"O Lord God the Father for evermore." A good and full version by A. T. Russell, as No. 14 in his Ps. & Hys., 1851. [J. M.]

La Trobe, Benjamin, was b. in Dublin, April 19, 1725, and educated at the University of Glasgow. He entered the Ministry of the Moravians, and subsequently became superintendent of that body in England. He d. Nov. 29, 1786. Several of his trs. of German hymns appeared in the Moravian H. Bk., 1789. [G. A. C.]

La Trobe, Christian Ignatius, eldest s. of the above Benjamin Ia Trobe, was b. at the Moravian Settlement, Fulneck, Leeds, Yorkshire, Feb. 12, 1758, and educated in England and at the Brethren's College, Niesky, Silesia. Taking orders in the Moravian Church, he became in 1784 Secretary to their Society for the Furtherance of the Gospel, and in 1795 Secretary to the Unity of the Brethren in England. He d. at Fairfield, near Liverpool, May 6, 1836. Ho is best known through his Selection of Sacred Music, in six volumes, which appeared in 1806-25. His hymnological contributions consist of a few translations from the German. [G. A. C.]

La Trobe, John Antes, M.A., grandson of B. La Trobe, and s. of C. I. La Trobe, was b. in London in 1795, and educated at St. Edmund Hall, Oxford, graduating B.A. 1826, and M.A. 1829. Having taken Holy Orders in the Church of England, he was appointed Incumbent of St. Thomas, Kendal, in 1846, and retained the same to 1865. In 1858 he was nominated Hon. Canon of Carlisle Cathedral. He d. in 1879. His musical works include The Music of the Church, 1831, and his poetical, Sacred Lays and Lyrics, 1850. He also published a Selection of Hymns, including Versions of Psalms, arranged under Subjects, so as to form A Small Hody of Divinity, and swited for Private, Social, and Public Worskip. Lond., Socieys, 1841.

This selection contains many of his own hymns. In 1852 a 2nd ed. was pub. with authors' names. "How strange is heavenly love" (The love of God), "O bring to Jehovah [the Lord] your tribute of praise" (Ps. l.), are two of the very few of his hymns in C. U.

Labente jam solis rotā. C. Coffin. [Afternoon, Sunday.] Appeared in his Hymni Sacri, 1736, p. 93, as "Prono volutus impetu," and again in the Paris Breviary the same year, as "Labente jam solis rotā." It is also in J. Chandler's Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1837, No. 8, and in Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. Tr. as:—

1. Now the day's declining wheel. By I. Williams, in the British Magazine, Jan. 1834; and again in his Hys. Tr. from the Parisian Breviary, 1839, p. 9, in 14 irregular lines. Rearranged as a hymn in 3 st. of 4 l., in 4 of L.M., it was given in the English Hymnal, 1852, No. 10, and repeated in 1856 and 1861.

2. As now the sun's declining rays. By J. Chandler, in his Hys. of the Prim. Church, 1837, p. 7. It was soon incorporated in several hymnbooks as an afternoon hymn, and gradually grew in favour until few modern hymn-books of the first rank are found without it. Usually the text is given without alteration as in the Peo-ple's H., 1867. The text of H. A. & M., 1861 and 1875, is Chandler altered by the Compilers, the changes being in st. i. and the doxology. This text is repeated in Thring's Coll., 1882, and others. In Kennedy, 1863, Chandler's tr. is rewised by the Editor.

2. As now the sun's departing rays. By. R. C: Singleton, written in 1870, and given in his Anglican H. Bk., 2nd ed., 1871.

Laetabundus exultet fidelis chorus: Alleluia. Regem regum. St. Bernard of Clairvaux. [Christmas.] The earliest form known of this Sequence is in a Gradual apparently written in England during the 12th cent. and now in the British Museum (Reg. 2 B. iv. f. 177), and another Ms. in the B. M. containing a collection of Sequences, apparently written c. 1199 (Calig. A. xiv. f. 50 b). It is in the St. Gall Ms., No. 338, at p. 334, in a hand of the 13th cent. Among Missalsitis found in an early 14th cent. Paris, and a 14th cent. Sens in the British Museum; in a Sarum, c. 1370; a Hereford, c. 1370; and a York, c. 1390, all now in the Bodleian; in the St. Andrews, the Magdeburg of 1480, and many French and German Missals. It was also used as a hymn in the Sarum Breviary, e.g. in a Ms. of the 14th cent. in the British Museum (Reg. 2 A. xiv. f. 187 b). The printed text is also in Daniel, ii. p. 61 ; Kehrein, No. 13, and others.

of this poem Dr. Neale says "This Sequence or Hymn is of rare perfection in its kind, and perhaps as widely known as any hymn of the Church" (Mei. Hys. 1851, p. 49). As will be seen by the note above, its use was specially general in England and in France. In the Sarams Mireal it was used as the Sequence on the Fourth Day in the octave of the Assumption of the B. V. M.; and in the Sarum Breviary as a hymn at the second Vespers of the Purification, and also of the Assumption of the B. V. M. In the Hereford Missal it is appointed of the B. V. M. In the Hereford Missai it is appointed for use within the octave of the Epiphany; and in the Nork Hissai in the Mass at Daybreak on Christmas day. [J. M.]

 Full of gladness, Let our faithful choir, &c. By J. M. Neale, in the Hymnal N., 1854, in 6 st.

2. With hallowed mirth, sing all ye faithful choirs on earth. By J. D. Chambers, in his Lauda Syon, Pt. ii., 1866, p. 65. This was repeated with slight variations in the People's H., 1867.

3. Come, ye faithful choirs on earth. This rendering in the Hymnary, 1872, is based upon the Hymnal N., as above.

 Faithful ohorus, Loud exult, &c. In the Hymner, 1882, is based upon the Hymnel N., as above.

Lamb of God for sinners slain, By Thy mercy born again. Bp. J. R. Woodford. [Holy Baptism.] Pub. in his Hymns, forc., 1852, No. 55, in 4 st. of 4 l., and repeated in the Parish H. Bk., 1863 and 1875; the Sarum, 1868; the 1863 Appendix to the S. P. C. K. Ps. & Hys., No. 291, and others. In Skinner's Daily Service Hymnal, 1864, it is adapted for Holy Baptism, and for Confirmation, and in each case Skinner has attributed it to C. Wesley in error. The Sarum is also in error in giving the date of its composition as 1860. {J. J.}

Lamb of God for sinners slain, To Thee I feebly pray. C. Wesley. [Looking unto Jesus.] Appeared in Hys. & Sac. Poems, 1742, p. 49, in 6 st. of 8 l. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. ii. p. 98). In 1776, st. i.-iii, and vi. were included in Toplady's Ps. & Hys., No. 279, and thus came into use in the Church of England. J. Wesley's cento for the Wes. H. Bh., 1780, No. 161, was composed of st. i., iii., v., vi. This is retained in the ed. of 1875, and is in extensive use. [J. J.]

Lamb of God, that in the bosom. [Advent.] This cento appeared in Bayley's Manchester Ps. & Hys., 1789, No. 4, and again in others, including Stowell's Manchester Ps. & Hys., 1831, p. 95, in 8 st. of 4 l., st. i., iii., v., vii. being the "Air," and the alternate stanzas the "Chorus." Stanzas iii. and iv. are from C. Wesley's "Love divine, all loves excelling," q.v., and the rest are anonymous. This cento is in the 1877 ed. of Stowell's Ps. the Hys., and several other collections. In Chope's Hymnol, 1864, No. 192, st. i. is the opening stanza of this cento, and the remaining 4 stanzas are from C. Wesley's "Love divine, all loves excelling." [J. J.]

Lamb of God, Whose bleeding love. C. Wesley. [Holy Communion.] This is No. 20 of the Wesley Hys. on the Lord's Supper, 1745, in 4 st. of 8 l. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. iii. p. 228). It was given in the older hymnbooks of the Church of England as Madan's Ps. & Hys., 1760; Toplady's Ps. & Hys., 1776, and others, and also in some Nonconformist collections, but was not included in the Wes. H. Bk. until the Supplement of 1830. An altered version of this hymn, beginning, "Lamb of God, Whose dying love," appeared in Hall's Mitre H. Bk., 1836, No. 269, in 2 st. of 8 l. That arrangement was by E. Osler, and was repeated, with slight changes, in his Church & King, March, 1837. Another form of the hymn is, "Blest Lamb of God, whose dying love." It is found in the Rugby School H. Bk., 1850; Kennedy, 1863, and others.

church at Detmold, was b. at Detmold, apparently Feb. 18, and was certainly baptized there Feb. 19, 1683. He remained at Detmold till the death of his grandfather (General-Superintendent Zeller) in 1691, and then joined his widowed mother at Bremen. He entered the Lyceum (Academic Gymnasium) at Bremen, in 1698; and in 1702 went to the University of Francker in Holland. After a short residence at the University of Utrecht he became, in 1703, pastor of the Reformed church at Weeze, near Cleve; in 1706 at Duisburg; and in 1709 second pastor of St. Stephen's Church in Bremen, where in 1719 he became pastor primarius. In 1720 he was appointed German preacher and professor of dogmatics at the University of Utrecht (the degree of p.p. being also conferred on him); and in 1726 professor of Church History and Rector of the University. After a severe illness in the winter of 1726-27 he resigned in June, 1727, and returned to Bremen as third pastor of St. Ansgar's Church and professor at the Lyceum. He d. at Bremen, Dec. 8, 1729. (Allg. Deutsche Biog., xvii. 579; F. A. Lampe Sein Leben und seine Theo-logie. By Dr. Otto Thelemann, 1868, &c.)

Lampe was the most important theologian that had appeared in the German Reformed Church since the appeared in the German Reformed Church since the Reformation period. He was the great exponent of the Federal or Covenant theology in his Geheiment des Gwadenbundes, 1712 ff.; the author of a well-known commentary on St. John's Gospel, 1724-26; of various catechetical works, &c. As a hymn-writer Lampe is not so important; but yet ranks as one of the best writers in the Reformed Church. His hymne are Scriptural and characterized by allowing platy deep and thus tural, and characterised by glowing plety, deep spiritual insight, firm fath, and play of fancy; but are often somewhat obscure and involved, and not seldem very lengthy. Nine first appeared in his Balsam aus Gilead, sengary. Nine inst appeared in the Jackson are viceds, Bremen, 1713, and the rest principally in his Böndlein XXV. Gottseliger Gesdinge, Bremen, 1723 (Royal Library, Berlin), and later eds. The ed. of 1731 (XXX. Gentiliche Lieder, &c.) contains also an appendix of 13 hymns from his us.

Comparatively few of Lampe's hymns are in modern German C. U. Those which have passed into English are:--

i. Mein Leben ist ein Pilgrimstand. For Travellers. 1723, No. 10, p. 39, in 8 st., entitled "Travelling Thoughts." In the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863. Tr. as, "My life is but a pilgrim-stand," by Dr. H. Mills, 1845 il. O Fela des Hails am Kreureastamm. Holy Communion. 1723, No. 5, p. 21, in 12 st. of 5 l. entitled "Devotional Hymn at Holy Communion." In Dr. J. P. Lange's Krivchenicderbuch, 1843, st. xii. is omitted, and it begins "O Fels des Heils, O Gotteslamm." The tr.

(1856, p. 180).

on C. U. is:

O healing Rock, O Lamb of God. A tr. of st. i.-iii.,

N. xii., by Dr. R. Maguire, in his Melodies of the Father-land, 1883, p. 107. Repeated, omitting st. iii., in R. Gauit's H. Bh. for Ch. of England, 1886.

iii. O Llebesgiuth, wie soil ich dich. Love to Christ.
Founded on St. John iii. 16. 1723, No. 19, p. 50, in 6 st. Previously in his Gehemniss des Gondendundes, pt. iv., vol. ii., 2nd cd., Bremen, 1721, p. 1088. In 6 st. Previously in his Geheimniss des Gnadenbundes, pt. iv., vol. ii., 2nd ed., Bremen, 1721, p. 1988. In Bunnen's Versuch, 1833, omitting st. ii., iv. Tr. 48: (1) "O Fire of Love, what earthly words," by Mrs. Bevan, 1885, p. 51. (2) "O wondrous love of Christ! how bright," by Mr. G. Walker, 1860, p. 75. iv. 80 ist von mainer kursen Filgrimschaft. New Fear. 1723, No. 24, p. 69, in 16 st. The form ir. is that in the Berlin G. B., 1829, No. 624, altered, and beginning "Wie schnell verstrich, O Herr voll Mild, and Huld." Tr. as, "How switt, O Lord, most kind, most bountiful," by N. L. Prothingkam, 1810, p. 255. [J. M.]

Langbecker, Emanuel Christian Gottlieb, s. of Christian Gottlieb Langbecker, clothier in Berlin, was b. at Berlin, Aug. 31, his father's business, he entered the service of Prince Waldemar of Prussia in 1827, becoming his household secretary in 1840. He d. at Berlin, Oct. 24, 1843 (Koch, vii. 39-42; Registers of St. George's Church, Berlin, &c.).

Megisters of Be. Creorge's Church, Berlin, &C.).

His hymns appeared in the Berlin Wockenblatt, 1822, &c.; in his Gedichte, Berlin, 1824, and Series, 1829; and in the Berlin G. L. S., of which he was the principal editor, and for which he compiled the hiographical notices in the 1st cd., 1832. He also pub. verious hymnological works, including his historical sketch had deatsch enangetische Kirchenlied, Berlin, 1830; the first critical ed. of P. Gerhardt's Leben und Lieder, Berlin, 1831; Gesang-Bittler aus dem zwi. Jahrhundert, Berlin, 1833, &c.

One of his hymns is in English C. U.:—

Wie wird mir sein, wann ich dich, Jesus, sehe. Longing for Heaven. Founded on 1 John iii. 2. In his Gedichte, Zweite Sammlung, Berlin, 1829, p. 65, in 5 st. of 6 l., entitled, "In prospect of Eternity." It was a favourite hymn of C. H. Zeller (q.v.) Included in the Berlin G. L. S., 1832, No. 1922 (1863, No. 722). The tr. is:-

What shall I be ! my Lord, when I behold thee. A full and good tr. by Mrs. Findlater, in H. L. L., 2nd Ser., 1855, p. 56 (1884, p. 114). Repeated, in full. in Bp. Ryle's Coll., 1860; and, omitting st. iv., in the Meth. N. Conn. H. Bh., 1863.

Lange, Ernst, was b. at Danzig, Jan. 3, 1650, where his father, Matthias Lange, was in the service of the Senate. He was for some timesecretary in Danzig, and thereafter in Warsaw. In 1691 he was appointed judge in the Altstadt of Dauzig, and in 1694 senator. He d. at Danzig, Aug. 20, 1727 (Bods, p. 103; Allg. Deutsche Biog., xvii. 623, &c.). After a visit to the Netherlands in 1698, Lange allied himself with the Mennonites and Pietists in Danzig. and came into conflict with the Lutheran clergy. His hymns were mostly written about the time when the pestilence visited Danzig, in 1710, and principally appeared in his LXI.

Gott geheiligte Stunden, without place or date of pub., but probably at Danzig, 1711 (Preface dated "Danzig, Feb. 12, 1711"). The idea of this work was as a thankoffering for preservation during this trying time; and it embraced 61 hymns, viz., one for each year of his life. A number of additional hymns seem to have been contributed in Ms. to Freylinghausen's Neues geistreiches G. B., 1714. His Psalm versions are noted under Psalters, German. Lange's hymns which have passed into English are:-

i. Im Abend blinkt der Morgenstern. Epiphany. 1711, as above, p. 4, in 19 st. of 4 L. entitled, "The Saviour Who appeared at Bethlehem to the Wise men from the East, set forth; from Matt. ii. 1-12." A new et. was added as xx. (probably from his MS.), when the hymn was included by Freylinghausen, 1714, No. 59. Repeated, abridged, in Knapp's Ev. L. S., 1837, No. 435 (1865, No. 414). The tr. in C. U. is:— The wondering sages trace from far. A tr. of st.

., ii., xx., by Miss Cox, in her Sacres H. from the German, 1841, p. 23 (1864, p. 43). Repeated in Hedge & Huntington's American Hys. for the Ch. of Christ, Boston, 1853; Schaff's Christ in Song, 1869 and 1870, &c.

Another tr. is: "At eve appears the Morning Star," by Lady E. Fortescue, 1843, p. 5.

ii. O Gott, du Tiefe sonder Grund. God's Majesty. 1792. After being for some time engaged in | 1st printed as No. 140, in Freylinghausen, 1714. in 10 st. of 141.; repeated in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863. F. Schleiermacher called it "A masterpiece of sacred poetry." The tr. in C. U. is :--

O God, Thou bottomless abyee. A spirited tr., omitting st. vi., ix., and in 8 st. of 12 l., by J. Wesley, in his Coll. of Ps. & Hys., Charlestown, 1737, No. 16, and the Wesley Hys. and Sacred Poems, 1739 (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. i. p. 143). The lines-

are adapted from the New Version of Ps. cili. 8. The hymn passed into the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, in two parts, Nos. 231 and 232 (ed. 1875, Nos. 240, 241). In other hymn-books it has appeared in a variety of centos. As these are all from the text of the Wes. H. Bk., more or less altered and transposed, it will suffice to give their first lines with references to the text of 1780. These centos include:--

(1) While Thee, Unsearchable, I set (i., l. 9 alt.). Martineau's Hymns, 1848.

(2) Unchangeable, all-perfect Lord (ii., l. 9). Longfellow & Johnson's Bk. of Hys., Beston, U.S., 1848.

(3) Thy parent-hand, Thy forming skill (iii). Amer. Meth. Epis. South Coll., 1847.

(4) Theu, true and only God, lead'st forth (v.). Wes.

H. Bk., 1780, No. 232.

(5) Thine, Lord, is Wisdom, Thine alone (vi.). Scottish Econg. Union H. Bk., 1856.

(6) Parent of good! Thy bountoous hand (vii.). Martineau's Hymns, 1840.

(7) Parent of good! Thy genial ray (vil. alt.). Dr. Thomas's Augustine B. Bk., 1866.

These details show the extensive use of this hymn in English-speaking countries.

Another tr. is, "O God, Thou bottomless Abyss! How shall I competently know Thee," as No. 673 in pt. i. of the Moravian H. Bk., 1754. In the ed. 1886, No. 174, it begins, "O God, Thou fathomicse abyss."

iii. Unter denen grossen Gütern. Brotherly Love, or, Quinquagesima. A fine paraphrase of 1 Cor. xiii. 1st pub. 1711, as above, p. 37, in 5 st. of 10 I., entitled, "The preeminence of Love. From 1 Cor. xiii. 1, 2, 3, 13." When included as No. 423, in Freylinghausen, 1714, a new stanza was added as st. vi., and this form is No. 798 in the Unv. L. S., 1851. Tr. as:

Many a gift did Christ impart. A full and good tr. by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger., 1855, p. 50; repeated, abridged, in Kennedy, 1863. In the American Unitarian Hys. of the Spirit, Boston, 1864, and in the Laudes Domini, N. Y. 1884, &c., it begins with the tr. of st. ii., l. 5. "Though I speak with angel tongues." [J. M.]

Lange, Joachim, D.D., s. of Mauritius Lange, senior councillor at Gardelegen in the Altmark, was b. at Gardelegen, Oct. 26, 1670. He entered the University of Leipzig in the autumn of 1689, where he shared rooms with A. H. Francke; and in 1690 followed Francke to Erfurt, and in 1692 to Halle. By the recommendation of J. C. Schade he was appointed, in 1693, tutor to the only son of F. R. L. von Canitz, at Berlin. Subsequently he became, in 1696, rector of the school at Cöslin in Pomerania; in 1698 rector of the Friedrichswerder Gymnasium at Berlin, and in 1699 pastor of the Friedrichstadt church; and in 1709, professor of theology at Halle (D.D. 1717), where he d. May 7, 1744 (Koch, iv. 343; Allg. Deutsche Biog., xvii. 634, &c.). In his day Lange was best known as a commendox." Lutheran controversialists of the early 18th cent.; and as the author of over 100 theological works. Only two hymns are known by him, one of which is :-

O Jesu, susses Licht. Morning. 1st pub. in the Geistreiches G. B., Halle, 1697, p. 4, in 8 st. of 8 l. Repeated in Freylinghausen's G. B., 1704, No. 608, and recently, as No. 469, in the Unv. L. S., 1851. Tr. as:-

Jesu, Thy light again I view. A free tr., in 7 st. of 6 l., by J. Wesley, in Hys. & Sacred Poems, 1739 (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. i. p. 159); repeated as No. 661 in pt. i. of the Moravian H. Bk., 1754 (1886, No. 344, abridged). form most used is that in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, No. 419, where st. i. is omitted; and it begins with st. ii., altered to "O God, what offering shall I give." This form is in Mercer, 1857 and 1864, Kennedy, 1863, and others; and in America, in the Meth. Epis. Hymns, 1849, Evang. Association H. Bk., 1882, &c. In the American Subbath H. Bk., 1858, a cente from Wesley's st. iii., vi., vii., is given as No. 917, beginning, "Now, O my God, Thou hast my soul."

Other trs. are: (1) "O let me always think Thou'rt Other trs. are: (1) "O let me always think Thou'rt near," by J. Swertner, of st. vii., as No. 430 in the Borawian H. Bk., 1789. In the 1801 and later eds. (1888, No. 567) it is altered, and begins, "O let us always think Thee near." (2) "O Jean, welcome Light," by H. J. Buckoll, 1842, p. 47. (3) "O Jean, Light most sweet." In the Fumily Treasury, 1879, p. 230. [J, M]

Lange, Johann Christian, p.p., was b. at Leipzig, Dec. 25, 1669, and studied at the University of Leipzig (M.A. 1689). In 1697 he was appointed extraordinary professor of Philosophy, in 1698 professor of Morals, and in 1707 professor of Logic and Metaphysics at the University of Giessen. He then became, in 1716, superintendent and first court preacher at Idstein, near Wiesbaden, graduating D.D. in the same year; the districts of Saarbrück and Usingen being also put under his care respectively in 1722 and 1728. He d. at Idstein, Dec. 16, 1756 (Koch, iv. 398, &c.). His hymns, distinguished by fervent love to Christ, were written mostly during his residence at Lüneburg, 1691-94, as tutor in the house of J. W. Petersen (q.v.). Only one has passed into English, viz :

Mein Herzens-Jesu, meine Lust. Love to Christ. On the Names and Offices of Christ. This is found, without his name, in J. H. Hävecker's Kirchen Echa, 1695, No. 84, in 18 st. of 7 l., repeated in the Geistreiches 1895, No. 64, In 18 st. of 7 1., repeated in the Geistreickee G. B., Halle, 1997, p. 149, Porst's C. B., ed. 1855, No. 64, &c. With this hymn Lange comforted himself on his death-bed. Tr. as: (1) "Sweet Jesus who my Wish Inlilie." In Lyra Davisica, 1798, p. 44. (2) "Jesu! my Heart's most joyful Rest." In the Suppl. to Ger. Psalmody, ed. 1765, p. 7, and Steet Hys. from the Ger. Psal., Tranquebar, 1754, p. 9. (3) "Jesu, Thou my Heart's pleasing Feast." As No. 676 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1754. (4) "Jesus, Thou art my heart's delight." As No. 274 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1789 (1886, No. 388). No. 358).

Lange, Johann Peter, p.p., s. of Peter Lang or Lange, farmer and carrier on the estate of Bies, near Somborn, Elberfeld, was b. at the Bies, April 10, 1802. In 1822 he entered the University of Bonn as a student of theology; and in the beginning of 1826 he became assistant to Pastor Emil Krum-macher of Langenberg. In June 1826 he tator on the whole Bible (Biblisches Licht und Recht, &c., 7 folio vols., Halle, 1730-1738); was appointed second pastor at Wald near Recht, &c., 7 folio vols., Halle, 1730-1738); Solingen; in 1828 second pastor of the Reas a defender of Pietism against the "Ortho-formed church at Langenberg, and in 1832 second pastor at Duisburg. He was then appointed professor of Church History and Dogmatics at Zürich, as successor to D. F. Strauss, and entered on his duties at Easter, 1841; receiving shortly thereafter D.D. from Bonn. After Easter, 1854, he was professor of Systematic Theology at Bonn (also Consistorialrath after 1860), and continued to lecture up to five days before his death. He d. at Bonn, July 8, 1884 (Koch, vii. 361; O. Kraus, 1879, p. 324, &c.).

Lange is best known as a theologian, and by such works as his Life of Christ, 1844; his Ribel-Werk, 1857, ff., a commentary on the whole Bible which he Notice as his Live of Carast, lock; his account of the child in conjunction with verious German scholars (English ed. by Dr. P. Schaff and others), &c. During bis tenure of office at Zürich, he began the fashion of giving University lectures on hymnology (1842), and pub. a large hymn-book (Beutscher Kirchentiederbuch, Zürich, 1843) with an elaborate introduction and a considerable body of notes. He is the most important modern hymn-writer of the German Reformed Church. He was, however, a thinker rather than a poet. His productions are primarily thoughtful, picturesque, imaginative, and deeply spiritual poems for private reading; and have little of the popular tone and style fitted for use in the services of the church. They appeared mostly in his (1) Biblitecke Dicktungen, vol. i., Elberfeld, 1832; vol. ii. Elberfeld, 1832; vol. ii. Elberfeld, 1843; (2) Gedichte, Essen, 1843; (3) Fom Oelberge, Frankfurt-am-Main, 1852; 2nd ed. 1858.

Langford, John. The time and place of this person's birth are unknown. He is said to have been connected with the early Methodists, and then to have become a member of the Baptist church in Eagle Street, London. In 1765 he began to preach in a chapel called Blacksfields, in Gainsford Street, London, and in the following year was ordained pastor. There he remained for 12 years, then removed to Rose Lane, Ratcliff, and afterwards to a small place in Bunhill Row. But his imprudent conduct compelled him at length to give up preaching. He inherited considerable property, but squandered it in extravagance, and died in great wretchedness about 1790.

J. Langford pub. a few Sermons, and, in 1776, a collection of Hymnz & Spiritual Songs, which reached a second ed. The excellent and well-known hymn "Now begin the heavenly theme," has been seribed to him. It is in his collection; but since, in the preface to his second ed., be tells us that he has marked his own hymns with an asterisk, and this one is not so marked, it is clearly not of his composition. W. R. S.1

Langhans, Urban, was a native of Schneeberg, in Saxony. He was for some time cantor, i.e. choirmaster, at Glauchau, in Saxony; and then from 1546 to 1554 diaconus In 1554 he became diaconus at Schneeberg, and still held this position in 1562. The date of his death is not known; but his successor in office d. in 1571 (Blätter für Hymnologie, 1884, pp. 7-12, 25-27, 190). Whether he wrote any hymns is doubtful.

The only one ascribed to him which has passed into English is:-

Lasst une alle fröhlich sein. Christmas. The first stanza of this hymn is found at p. 17 of Martin Hammer's Laudes Ipenancelis (a sermon on "Grates nuncomnes reddamus"), pub. at Leipzig, 1630 (Ducal Library, Goths). The full form, in 4 st. of 41, has not yet been traced earlier than to the Ander Theil of the Dresden G. B., 1632. It is also in J. Niedling's Lutherisch Handbücklein, 1655, p. 578, in Freylinghausen's G. B., 1704; the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 171, &c. In the Arnstadt G. B., 1711, Langhans is given as the Lasst une alle frohlich sein. Christmas. The first author of the text, and in the Dresden G. B., 1656, as the author of the melody. Dr. J. Zahn, in his Praiter und Harfe, 1865, No. 27, gives both text and melody from the Dresden G. B., 1632. Tr. as:—

1. Let us all in fed rejoice. In full, by Dr. M. Loy, in the Erang. Review, Gettysburg, July, 1861, p. 152, repeated in the Ohio Evang. Luth. Byl., 1880, No. 19.

2. Let us all with gladsoms voice. In full, by Miss Winkworth, 25 No. 29 in her C. B. for England, 1863, Lapsus est annus : redit annus alter. [New Year.] In the Meaux Breviary, 1713, and 1884, this is the hymn at compline after the first vespers of the festival of the Circumcision of our Lord. This would of course be said as the last office on Dec. 81. There is a rubric directing that at stanza v. all kneel down. So also in the Poictiers Breviury (Pictaviense), in which it probably originated. Neale, in his Hymni Ecclestae, 1851. p. 162, gives the text e Breviario Meldensi, i.e. the Meaux Breviary. It is also in the Le Mans Brev. of 1748. Daniel, iv. 319, repeats the text from Neale. Also in L. C. Biggs's annotated H. A. [W. A. S.] & M., 1867.

Translations in C. U.:-

1. The year is gone beyond recall. By F. Pott. Appeared in L. M. in his Hys. fitted to the Order of Common Prayer, 1861, No. 48, in 6 st. of 4 l., and was repeated, unaltered, in the People's H., 1867, and others; and, abbreviated and altered, in the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871. In 1861 the compilers of H. A. & M. transposed Archdeacon Pott's L. M. tr. into C. M., thus necessitating many alterations. This text has been adopted by several hymnals, including Kennedy, 1863, Allon's Cong. Psal. Hymnal, 1886, and others. In these forms this tr. is extensively Lasset Klag und Trauern fahren.

J. Heermann? [Eternal Life.] This hymn is not found in any of the works of Heermann now extant. It appeared, with his name, in the Königsberg G. B., 1650, p. 702, in 9 st. of 8 l. Thence in Mützell, 1858, No. 136. In Bunsen's Allg. G. B., 1846, No. 432, is st. i. ll. 1-4, ii. ll. 5-8, iv., vii., ix. The ascription to Heermann may have arisen from confounding with his "Lasset ab, ihr meine Lieben," 1st pub. in his Devoti musica cordis, Leipzig, 1636 (1644, p. 186), thence in Mützell, 1858, No. 98, in 12 st. of 8 l. The Lasset Klag has been called a version of "Jam moesta quiesce querela," but has greater resemblance to "Ad perennis vitae fontem." Tr. as:—

Latin Hymnody.—A complete history of Latin Hymnody has never yet been written. It would occupy a considerable volume. This dissertation therefore must be considered as a mere epitome of an extensive and interesting subject, which is, in fact, intimately connected and interwoven with Christianity itself; and, as St. Chrysostom remarks (on Ps. 41). "Nothing gladdens the soul like modulated verse—a Divine song composed in metre."

i. Ancient definition of Hymn.

What, then, is a Hymn, and whence originally was the Hymnody of the Western Church derived? "Know ye," asks St. Augustine, commenting on the 148th Ps., " what a hymn is? It is a song with praise of God. If thou praisest God and singest not, thou utterest no hymn. If thou singest and praisest not God, thou utterest no hymn. A hymn, then, containeth these three things: song (conticum), and praise (laudem), and that of God. Praise, then, of God in song is called a " The Septuagint (v. 14) has here " όμνος πᾶσι τοῖς ὁσίοις αὐτοῦ." Augustine proceeds—" What, then, meaneth this: 'An hymn to all His Saints?' 'Let His Saints receive a hymn. Let His Saints utter a hymn." Modulata laus est hymnus, says St. Gregory of Nazianzus (Iamb. 142). In the Cotton MS., Vespasian D. xii., in the British Museum, exists a Hymnary with an interlinear Saxon version of the 10th or 11th century. The scribe on the first fly-leaf writes thus:

"It is clear that David the Prophet first composed and "It is clear that David the Prophet first composed and sang hymns, then the other prophets, afterwards the three youths when cast into the furnace. There are then Divine hymns; there are also those composed by human understanding. Hilarius, Bisbop of Poletiers, flourished first in versified hymns; after whom Ambrose, Bishop of Milan, is known to have excelled in this kind of poetry. Whatever poems, then, are sung in praise of God are called hymns. A hymn, moreover, is of those who sing and praise, which from Greek into Joy and praise; but properly hymns are those containing the praise of God."

This definition, then, excludes propen and

This definition, then, excludes prose anthems, meditative, didactic, historical, merely religious poetry, and private devotional pieces unsuited for public worship. According to this definition, to constitute a hymn three conditions are requisite: it must be praise of God or of His saints, be capable of being sung, and be metrical.

The Hymns of Holy Scripture.

The substantive fures and the derived verb ύμνέω - ω intransitively occur in the Septuagint Version of the Old Testament—Ps. lxv. 13; 2 Chron. xxix. 80; Prov. i. 20; Eccles. xxxix. 35; xlvii. 8; li. 11; 1 Macc. iv. 24; xiii. 47: and in Is. xlii. 10-ύμνήσατε τῷ κυρίφ δμνον namer. It is used intransitively governing an accusative-2 Chron. xxix. 33; Ps. xxii. 23- (25 (which is quoted verbatim, Heb. ii. 12, " èv μέσφ ἐκκλησίας δμνήσω σε"), and Is. xii. 4. The substantive δμνος occurs also in the Septuagint, Is. xii. 5; xxv. 1; Neh. xii. 46; Ps. xl. 8; lxv. 1; c. 4; cxlviii. 1; Is. xlii. 10; also in the titles to Ps. vi., liv., lv., and at the end of Ps. lxxii. The conclusion is that the Greek word "Hymn" and its equivalent in the Hebrew (see Is. xii. 5; xxv. 1) or Syriac, were in common use among the Jews at the coming of our Lord to signify a Song of Praise to God; whence it passed to the whole Chris-tian Church. Matthew xxvi. 30 and Mark xiv. 26, relate how Christ and his disciples "δμνησαντες," literally "having hymned," went forth. This hymn, it seems, was the "Hallel" or Ps. exiii .- exviii., beginning with Halleluvah. The next notice of hymns in the New Testament is in the 16th ch. of the Acts, v. 25. Paul and Silas "praying were hymning The God," προσευχόμενοι δμεσυν τον θεόν. What these hymns were is doubtful; scarcely the Psalms. St. James v. 13, says "Is any merry? let him sing psalms" (\psi\)er\(\si\)er\(\si\)); thus, as well as St. Paul in two passages hereafter cited, particularising this kind of praise, and distinguishing it from others. Some hymnologists, however, have included the Psalms and the Canticles of the Old and New Testament, as the Songs of Miriam and Deborah, with other songs of praise, such as the Sanctus, Magnificat, and Nunc Dimittis, under the general name of Hymns. Le Brun, in his Explicatio Missae, i. 82, has done this. So also Whitby confounds the Psalms of David with the hymns composed by spiritual men, such as Zacharias and Symeon. St. Paul himself, however, distinguishes between the three kinds of divine praises, "Speaking one to another in pealms and hymns and spiritual songs" (&daîs, i.e. Odes or Canticles), Ephes. v. 19. And again, "Teaching and admonishing one another with psalms and hymns and appritual songs ($\delta a \text{cars}, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord." Col. iii, 16. "Where," says Bishop Beveridge," by psalms I understand those of David's composing; by hymns such anthems as were made up, chiefly of praise and thanksgiving by whomsoever composed; by spiritual songs all sorts of songs upon any spiritual subject." And this division is quite in accordance with that made in the first age by Hippolytus. (De Con-summatione Mundi sub fin.—Bouth, Reliquiae Sacrae, ii. 146; iii. 314.) "I have prepared your mouth for giving glory and praise, and psalms and odes." What, then, were these hymns as apart from the other two species of praise?

iii. Hymne of the Early Church.

"We find," continues Beveridge, "from the testimony of the younger Pliny (2nd cent., Lib. x., Epist. 97), under Trajau, that the Christians in the first age were accustomed to meet before day, and to sing a hymu to Christ as God by turns one after another;" and to the same effect is Tertullian (Apolog. 2.), and Eusebius (Hist. iii.). Caius, a Greek author writing in the beginning of the third century against the Montanists, speaks of "psalms and odes; such as were from the beginning written by the faithful, hymns to the Christ, the Word of God, calling Him God." (Routh, Reliq. Sacr., ii. 127.) So that very early after Pentecest Christian and not mere Jewish hymns must have been composed, which were publicly sung in the congregations, and these chants and hymns were conducted by an order of persons called Psaltae or Cantores. (Sozomen, Lib. iv., c. 3; Socrates, Lib. v., c. 22.) Philo, in his "Vita Contemplativa," describes how the Ascetics in Egypt, then and before his time (circa A.D. 40 to 68), "composed hymns in various metres and rhythms in honour of the true God, some in the ancient trimeter; others newly composed. The president begins, and the choirs follow in various modulations, with a chorus of all the people in two choirs of men and women, each having its leader, but all equally joining at the end." The Christians of St. Mark there possibly followed this example. Eusebius (Lib. ii., c. 17, Histor.), quoting Philo, speaks of these Therapeutae: "Not only do they use the aucient hymns, but they make new ones to God, modulating them in metre and sounds in a very excellent and sweet composition, which is also practised in the Church and in monasteries"; and he subsequently speaks of these (Lib. v., c. 28) as "Cantica fratrum," wherein "a primordio a fidelibus con-scripta Christum Verbum Dci concelebrant." In a well-known place of St. Basil (quoted Gerbert i., 233) "The pealtery (i.e. tunes) of these harmonic rhythms has its origin from above, whence we should be anxious to seek them, and not to be carried away by delight in the melody to the pleasures of the flesh"; and in his epistle to the Neocaesarienses, 63, "Divided into two companies, they sing in alternate parts; then to one person is allotted that he should begin first what is to be sung by the next following him." Paul of Samo-sata was condemned in a council, held at Antioch, A.D. 260, for rejecting these hymns. St. Ephrem of Nisibis (died 379) says, "We honour our festivals in psalms and hymns and spiritual songa." In 506 the Council of Agde (Can. 30) ordered the singing of hymns every day, morning and evening. The Council of Tours still more plainly, after having formally recommended the adoption of the Ambrosian hymns, "There are yet some others which are worthy of being sung which have the names of authors, who were constant in the faith, prefixed." Still more important and decisive was the decree of the 6th Council of Toledo in 633. (Can. 18, Labbs, iv. p. 1709.)

"For singing hymne and pealms publicly in the church we have the example of Christ and His apostles. Hymns are composed like masses or petitions, or commendations or laying on of hands, of which there are many, just as with prayers; let none of you for the future withhold hymns com-posed in praise of God, but let Gaul and Spain celebrate them alike. Those should be excommunicated who shall dare to reject hymns."

iv. Influence of Greek Hymns.

writing in the beginning of the third century against the Montanists, speaks of "psalms and trical or non-metrical, had their origin in the odes; such as were from the beginning written | East, and thence travelled to the West, is evident historically. Eusebius (Lib. v. 28) speaks of the "Cantica fratrum a primordio a fidelibus conscripta"; so also Tertullian. So Sozomen (Lib. vi., c. 25), speaks of the "Sacros hymnos qui in ecclesia cani solent." St. Chrysostom speaks of the hymns after the psalms in divine service; and the tradition related by Socrates is that Ignatius (who first came to Antioch A.D. 68) had learnt in a vision of angels " how in antiphonal hymns to hymn the Holy Trinity"; to whom may be added Hierotheus, greatly commended by Dionysius and Noethus (see Gerbert, i. 75); Hippolytus and others of the second century. The rise and growth of Greek hymns, and the use made of the earliest by Latin writers of a later date, are fully set forth in the articles on Greek Hymnody, p. 456, i.; Doxologies, p. 308, i.; Gloria in Excelsis, p. 425, i., and the Te Deum. See also Syriao Hymnody. If any proofs were wanting that Latin Hymnody originated in, and was derived from, the East, it may be found in these articles; for, with a few exceptions, there are daily hymns for the Hours, and for the Festivals, Fasts, and Seasons in each case; and the Apostles and Saints are celebrated by hymns in a similar manner and on the same occasions. Nor are the Spanish and Mozarabic Christians any exception, who originally received their hymnody partly from Rome and the East, partly from the Greekspeaking Christians of Africa. The very ancient Irish Latin Hymn of the Apostles, beginning Precamur Patrem (from the Antiphonarium Benchorense-Bangor, in the county of Down) and reprinted by Daniel, vol. iv. p. 31, bears evident marks of a translation from an Eastern original. These early hymns soon made their way with Christiauity itself, from the East to Rome, Africa, Spain, and all other parts of the Roman Empire; except, perhaps, Northern Gaul, where, as St. Jerome com-plains in his preface to the Second Book of his Commentary on the Galatians, hymns were uuscoeptable. They were very soon introduced into public worship, but were not originally sung in the Latin tongue; for, in the first Christian times, Greek, or dialects of it, continued to be spoken in Italy, the South of Gaul, Germany and Africa, and Latin had not yet come into common use; nor was it possible to compress into classical measures the fervid devotion of the earlier converts.

v. Earliest Latin Hymns.

Gerbert (De Cantu et Musica Sacra, vol. i., p. 80, pub. 1774), after examining all the authorities, finds that no name can be connected with any hymn in the Latin language till we arrive at St. Hilary and Pope Damasus, in the beginning of the 4th century. Isidore of Seville, who d. 636 (De Officiis, Lib. i., c. 6) says: "Hilary of Gaul, Bishop of Poictiers, was the first who flourished in composing hymns in verse," and St. Jerome, who d. 420, makes a similar statement. It would appear, from Hilary's own words, that he brought some from the East (in Ps. lxviii., lxiv.). Those beginning Lucis largitor splendide; the Lenten hymn, Jesu quadragenariae; three short ferial morning hymns, Deus pater ingenite, In matutinis surginus, and Jam meta noctis transiit, in the Mozarabic Breviary; one for Vespers in the Epiphany, Jesus refulsit omnium; another for Compline or Lauds at Pentecost, Beata nobis gaudia, have been ascribed to Hilary by Fabricius, Cassander, Tommasi, and Daniel. To Hilary also is ascribed by the Antiphonarium Benchorense [see Hymnarium] the noble matin hymn in praise of Christ, Hymnum dicat turba fratrum hymnum cantus personet, in trochaic tetra-meters, which is by Bede denominated pulcherrimus (De arte metrica); but it would seem rather to be an anonymous poem of the 6th century. By the consent of most authorities to Pope Damasus I. (A.D. 366) are ascribed two short Latin hymns, one for St. Andrew, Decus sacrati nominis, the other for St. Agatha (martyred A.D. 251), Martyris ecce dies Agathae. The latter is the earliest hymn respecting any Saint: it is in thyme, and the ordinary laws of Latin metre are ignored.

vi. St. Ambrose and Ambrosian Hymns.

We arrive in succession at the great name of St. Ambrose (b. at Treves 340, d. 397), the main founder of the original, simple, dignified, objective school of popular Latin Hymnody, which for so many ages, almost without intermixture, prevailed over the Roman Empire, and before the 6th century penetrated oven into Spain (See Arevali Dissertationes, vi. 21–23), and is still in use in the Divine Office all over Europe. As Mabillon writes (Liturgio Gallicana, 381), "St. Ambrose took care that, after the manner of the Eastern Fathers, psalms and hymns should be sung by the people also, when previously they had only been recited by individuals singly, and among the Italians by clerks only." St. Augustine, speaking of the hymns at Milan, says, "These hymns and psalms are sung after the manner of the Easterns, lest the people be wearied, which is imitated by almost all the congregations in the world."

A fact which now strikes the inquirer is this; that in the 101 hymns up to this date (6th cent.) printed by Daniel, vol. i., 91 of which (a very few excepted) he attributes to St. Ambrose or his contemporaries and followers, the ancient classical metres are abandoned, prosody is neglected, accentuation substituted for correct quantity, and the Iambic dimeter is mostly adapted as best suited for congregational singing. With the exception of here and there an Alcaic or Sapphic, or tetrameter, or pentameter, or hexameter usually in honour of some festival or Saint, this lambic dimeter of eight syllables remained the favourite for all hymns for public worship which are to be found in the Office books down to and beyond the introduction of the Sequences hereinafter mentioned. Those in the Ambrosian Breviary (re-edited by St. Charles Borromeo, 1582) were almost exclusively in that metre. The same may be said of those in the Gotho-Isidorian, edited by Cardinal Ximenes 1502, and the Mozarabic Hymnal pub. in folio at Madrid, 1775. This was so almost exclusively in the ancient English Church, with the exception, indeed, of two or three of St. Gregory's, in Sapphics, and a few others for Festivals Out of 130 hymns in 11th century English Benedictine Hymnals (Harl. 2961; Jul. A. vi. &c.) there are not a dozen in other measures. [See Bymnarium, p. 546, ii.] The same may be predicated of Germany, France, and Spain, and so it continued to be down to the Reformation. Vast additions were doubtless made at and after the epoch of the Sequences, and from the 13th century downwards, which will hereafter be noticed.

vii. Early Ritual Use.

These hymns were very soon appropriated to the great and minor Festivals and Fasts of the year, the Seven days of the week, and the Seven hours of Prayer, as among the Easterns. It is a question, however, whether this definite appropriation was first made by St. Ambrose himself, or mainly by St. Benedict after him. In the rule of the monastery at Lerins (A.D. 523), similar to that of St. Cæsarius of Arles, some of these (Bolland. ad diem, January 12) are so appropriated; so in that of St. Isidore, and in that of St. Aurelian of Arles, who d. 555. Respecting the rule of St. Benedict there can be no doubt. Benedict founded his Order, promulgated his rule, and pre-scribed the time, the method, and course of his liturgical offices in the beginning of the 6th century. It spread rapidly over Europe, and Reyner, in his Apostolatus Benedictorum (Dousy, 1626), maintained that for many hundreds of years no other Order really existed. Doubtless also the customs of this vast community would exercise a great influence over the seculars, and determine their usages, as well as those of the succeeding Orders. St. Benedict expressly adapted the Hymns of Ambrose, composed either by him or his successors and imitators, to his Order of Worship (Regula xviii.). Walafrid Strabo, who d. 849 (De Rebus Ecclesiasticis, c. 25), writes, "As our sainted Abbot Benedict ordained, the hymns are said in the Canonical Hours which Ambrose himself composed, or others in imitation of him." "Which," says Hinemar, in his book on the Trinity (857), "is written in the rule of St. Benedict, and in which the Catholic faith is redolent; and they are pious prayers, and the composition is admirable." (See Gerbert de Re Musica, i. 510.) In No. 391, C. C. C. Library, Cambridge, in the Liber Sanctae Marie Wygornensis Ecclesiae per Sanctum Osvaldum, is an old English Benedictine Office book and Hymnary, Anno 1064, the title of the latter being Incipiunt Hymni Ambrosiani canendi per singulas horas secundum constitutionem Patris nostri Benedicti. [See Hymnarium, p. 547, i.] These are nearly identical with what constituted the English Church Hymnody down to the year 1556. Other Ms. English Hymnals of the 12th, 13th and 14th centuries, described in detail in Hymnarium, pp. 546, 547, 551, are nearly identical in the hymns which they contain, varying from 115 to 130 in number. The same hymns may be found repeated in the English Hymnals up to 1556, with some local variations, and the addition of such as were composed for Festivals (such as the Name of Jesus and the Transfiguration) instituted later on. The Ambrosian and Benediotine scheme was thus adhered to, through-

viii. From the IV. to the XI. Century.

With the Ambrosiani must be grouped the succeeding composers of Christian poetry, several of them laymen, for the next five or six hundred years, for they wrote mainly on the same subjects, in the same vein, with the same intent, mostly in the same metre. We recall with pleasure the names of Aurelius Clemens Prudentius, Sedulius, Felix, Sidonius Apollinaris, Juvencus, Ennodius, Venantius Fortunatus, St. Gregorius Magnus, St. Columba, St. Isidore of Seville, Beda Venerabilis, Paulus Diaconus, Carolus Magnus, Theodulphus, Rhabanus Maurus, St. Odo of Cluny, St. Fulbert, St. Peter Damiani, with a number of anonymous poems extending over the same period, some of them most beautiful and remarkable, up to the epoch of St. Bernard.

Amongst these must be reckoned the hymn Exultet jam angelica turba coelorum (found equally in the old Roman, Gallican, Ambrosian, and Mozorabic rite, as well as others, such as Sarum), whose glorious strains at the Benediction of the Paschal candle (probably with the same music from the beginning, as in the Sarum Missal), and on the new light, are probably, with a consensus of critics, those of St. Augustine (Daniel, ii. 312). As he was said to have been a deacon when he composed it, it was always afterwards sung by the deacon.

In the last half of the 4th and in the beginning of the 5th century lived Aurelius Člemens Prudentius (q. v.). He was born probably at Saragossa or at Calahorra in Spain. About his fiftieth year he determined to abandon his earthly pursuits and to spend the remainder of his days in promoting the honour of God and the kingdom of Christ. In his fifty-seventh year, according to his own preface, he published many of his poems, and continued to do so up to the year 405, about which time he went to Rome (Hio mihi cum peterem te rerum maxima Roma, &c.; Innumeros cineres Sanctorum Romula in urbe Vidimus, Peristeph. ix. 3, xi. 1), and afterwards took up his abode at Imola. He seems to have died about A.D. 413. He was a prolific author. His Christian Lyrics are his Cathemerinon, or twelve hymns adapted to all the actions of the day: his Peristephanon, or fourteen hymns of the "Crowns of the Martyrs"; and his Apotheosis of the Divinity of Christ. Amongst his hymns are the daily hymns Ales dici nuntius, Noz et tenebrae, and Lux ecce surgit aurea; for the Nativity, Corde natus ex Parentis; for the Holy Innocents, Salvete flores Martyrum; for the Epiphany, O sola magnarum urbium; and for Lent there are also his "Hymnus jejunantium"; O Nazarene lux Bethleem, and Cultor Dei memento. That for Holy Saturday, at the lighting of the Paschal candle, Inventor rutili dux bone luminis, is still retained in many foreign hymnaries, and in the Sarum for the procession after Vespers on that day; along with four or five others of less note. A hymnaometimes ascribed to Prudentius, but in error, and not found in his works, is:-

"Hymnum Mariae Virginis, Decantemus cum Angelis," &c.

This is in the Mozarabic Breviary, 1502. It may be observed, moreover, that in his sacred poetry Prudentius has made use of the Ismbio trimeter and dimeter, the hendecasyllabic, Alcaic, and Sapphic metres, the Trochaic tetrameter, Glyconean, and others.

To omit mention of Paulinus of Nola, Coelius Sedulius comes in as a Christian lyrist in the first half of the 5th century, under Honorius and Theodosius II. Whether he was a layman or ecclesiastic is unknown: probably he was a Presbyter. He is said to have been a Greek, and again an Italian; and then again (confounding him with another Sedulius) an Irishman. He composed a hymn in acrostics (i.e. each verse beginning with consecutive letters of the alphabet), which is the beginning of his poem in Iambic dimeters on the Life of Christ: A solis ortus cardine, a part of which is the Epiphany hymn, Hostis Herodes impie. These were universally adopted into all Hymnaries. St. Magnus Felix Ennodius (born in France 473, died 521), composed one or two excellent hymns; and Elpis [See Elpis, p. 329, i.], that beginning Aurea luce et decore rosco, for the Festival of St. Peter and St. Paul.

Next, in order of time, we arrive at one of the noblest and most pleasing of the Christian lyrists, Venantius Honorius Clementianus Fortunatus (See p. 383, ii.). The time of his birth is unknown, but he himself tells us that he was born at a village called Duplabilis between Treviso and Ceneda in Venetia. He was educated at Ravenna in grammar, rhetoric, and Roman law. He composed poetry as early as A.D. 555; he went to Tours to St. Martin's grave in 565, was at the wedding of Sigebert with Brunhilds; Rhadegunda, widow of Clothaire the First, was his friend. There he dwelt and became a priest, and was a friend of Gregory of Tours. In the year 597 he was made Bishop of Poictiers. date of his death is not known, but it was probably about 609. He composed prose works, but his fame rests on his poetry. In the second book of his sacred poems we find the glorious ode, Vexilla Regis prodeunt, Fulget Crucis mysterium, for Passiontide. It finds its place in most European Hymnaries, although sometimes (as in the present Roman) in a mutilated form; the penultimate stanza, for instance :-

is often omitted; but it has no worthy representative in our vernacular church hymn-books except perhaps in the Hymnary. Of equal sublimity and fervour is his well-known Passion monody, mostly in trochaics, Pange lingua gloriosi Praelium certaminis, which has been subjected to similar ignominious treatment in the Roman Breviary. Then we have the Paschal Processional, in hexameters and pentameters, from his poem on the Resurrection, very universally adopted; the first verse of which, Salve festa dies toto venerabilis aevo.

was in England generally prefixed to all the processional proses for the great Festivals.

To St. Gregory the Great we owe some few of the best hymns for Sundays from the Epiphany to Lent, for Passiontide, Palm Sunday, and for the Hours (in Sapphies). They were speedily adopted into most hymnaries, especially the early English. That for Sunday morning especially, Primo dierum omnium, is found in all; but neither that nor any of the Lenten or Passiontide hymns are represented in our vernacular church hymn-books to any appreciable extent. To all these are appended the ascription of praise to the Holy Trinity at the end, which (although it has been attributed to St. Ambrose) scems now first, in various forms, to have come into general use.

The Irish Hymnody must not be left unnoticed. A Liber Hymnorum exists in Trinity College, Dublin, in old Irish characters, with copious Scholia in the same writing; a second in the Royal Irish Academy; and a third at the Franciscan College of St. Isidore at Rome. Some hymns from these were published by Colgan (Trias thaumaturga, 1647), by Ware, 1656, and by Usher. The late Dr. Todd undertook to edit this Liber Hymnorum for the Irish Archeological and Celtic Society, but two parts only appeared, in 1855 and 1869, the undertaking having been cut short by his untimely death. In them we find a hymn in honour of St. Patrick, written by Sechnall, the son of his sister, circa A.D. 458 (a Lourica, or coat of mail to whomsoever repeated it)-

Audite, omnes amantes Deum, sancta merita Virl in Christo beati Patrici Episcopi. Quomodo bonum ab actum sinitatur angelis. Perfectamque propter vitam acquatur apostolis."

It is printed in Daniel, iv. 91, and by Dr. J. Laur, Villanueva, in his Opuscula S. Patritii, Dublin, 1835. Then follows the noble composition of St. Columba, containing the substance of the Creeds in 150 lines:—

Altus Prosator, vetustus dierum et ingenitus, Erat absque origine primordii et crepidine; Est et erit in saecula saeculorum infinita, Cui est unigenitus Christus et Sanctus Spiritus."

Also a hymn of St. Cummin Lange (A.D. 661), in rhyme in praise of the Apostles, who are named successively, four lines being devoted to each:

"Celebra Juda festa Christi gaudia, Apostolorum exaltans memoria."

Another to St. Mary, also rhymed, by St-Cuchumine (700 to 750, see Mone, ii. 383):-

Cantemus in omni die concinentes varie, Conclamentes Deo dignum hymnum Sanctae Mariae, Bis per chorum hinc et inde collaudemus Mariam."

Also (amongst others) there is a hymn in praise of St. Bridget (died 523), who was for many ages the St. Mary of the Irish. It begins-

"Christus, in nostra insula quae vocatur Hibernia."

The author, 600-650, is unknown.

To pass over the hymn to St. Agatha by Isidore of Seville; one by the Spanish lady Cyrilla, for St. Thyrsus and his companions; and that on the Day of Judgment, Apparebit repenting, both praised by Bede, and in trochaics; we notice a remarkable Sacramental one, from the Bangor Antiphonary, of noble simplicity, Sancti venite Corpus Christi sumite, which, as Daniel remarks (i. 194), doubtless shows that all Christians then received under both kinds.

At the end of the 8th century appears anonymously the hymn for many martyrs, Sanctorum meritis inclyta gaudia (in Choriambic Asclepiads, the fourth verse Glyconic). This is in the Anglo-Saxon hymnaries. (In the Harl. 2961 a portion is appropriated to the Holy Innocents.) This list may be closed with the Are Maris Stella, or Stilla, which appears in public worship in the 9th century, wherein this denomination is first applied to the Blessed Virgin. It has never been altered, but subsequently was in France and Germany frequently farced and paraphrased, and so turned into a Sequence (see Mone, vol. ii.

215, et eeq.). Bede contributed to the Anglo-Saxon Church, &c., a treatise, De Arte Metrica, and a number of hymns. Paulus Diaconus, one, Ut queant laxis, in Sapphics, for the Nativity of St. John Baptist. To Charlemagne is attributed the beautiful and touching Veni Creator Spiritus, which since his age has been sung with unexampled unanimity, solemnity, and fervour in all portions of the Western Church, not only at Pentecost but in all observances in which the aid of the Holy Ghost was specially necessary; in the coronation of kings, the consecration of patriarchs, archbishops and bishops, at the opening of councils, &c.; and at Pentecost, especially at Terce, it used to be, in all churches, with the celebrant fully vested, and all the altar lights kindled. To this period belong also the fine hymns for St. Michael and All Angels, one of which was composed by Alcuin for Charlemagne, Summi Regis Archangele Michael, and another (Mone, i. 447) Archangelum mirum magnum. In the following century Theodulphus composed Gloria laus et honor, for Palm Sunday; Rhabanus Maurus (the Liturgist, A.D. 815) two hymns for St. Michael's Day, Christe sanctorum decus angelorum; another in trochees, Tibi Christe splendor patrie; Odo of Cluny on St. Mary Magdalene, Landa mater ecclesia; Fulbert of Chartres, the Paschal song of joy, Chorus novae Jerusalem. Peter Damiani, although a poet, witness his Ad perennis vitae fontem—Of the joys of Paradise—did not add much to Church song. Flavius added Tellus et aethra jubilent, used in the Anglo-Saxon hymnals for the Coena Domini. And we may close this list with the loved name of St. Bernard and his jubilant rhythm, Jesu dulcie memoria, and his monody to Christ on the Cross, Salve mundi salutare, both composed at Clairvaux. Jesu dulcis memoria was speedily welcomed by the whole Western Church. Originally appropriate to the Circumcision, it was transferred to "The Name of Jesus" when that became a Church festival (on August 7). It was afterwards repeatedly imitated and paraphrased, especially in Tracts and Sequences; two beautiful rhymed examples of which are one in the Sarum and other English Missals. Three centos are in the pre-Reformation English daily Offices. (See Jasu dukis Kemoria, p. (See Jesu dulcis Memoria, p. 585, L)

Anonymous hymns not later than the 11th century include Jam Christe Sol justitiae, Auctor Salutis Unicus, in the early English and many French and German mss. and books. For the Festival of SS. Peter and Paul, Felix per omnes, &c., in the Roman, Spanish, Paris, Rouen, and pre-Reformation English Hymnaries: for Martyrs, Martyr Dei qui unicum; for Apostles, Exultet coclum laudibus; for Confessors, Iste confessor Domini, and Jesu Redemptor omnium; for Virgins, Virginis proles; for St. Stephen, Sancte Dei pretiose, in rhyme, and extensively used in England and Germany; but not in the Spanish, Ambresion of Rouse offices.

brosian, or Rosen offices This list may be closed with the triumphant Urbs beata Jerusalem, a splendid paraphrase of the Apocalypse xxi., 2, 19-21, appropriated to the Dedication of a Church and the Anniversary, and sung throughout Europe of old time, probably from the 8th century. Anglo-Saxons used also Christs cunctorum dominator alms of the 7th century, which is in many French hymnals. The Urbs beata has not escaped mutilation, as in the Roman Breviary, and by Guyet and the other Gallican so-called restorers of Latin hymnody, but its main features have always been conserved. Archbishop Trench writes (Sacred Latin Poetry): "This poem attests its own true inspiration in that it has proved the source of true inspiration in circles beyond its own," alluding to the numerous translations and imitations of it in English and German. The fine hymn for the restoration of a church, O beata Jerusalem, is apparently an early Spanish hymn.

ix. Hymns of the XI. and XII. Centuries.

The period of the 11th and 12th centuries constitutes a marked epoch in the history of Latin Hymnody. By that time the ordinary usage of hymns in the various formularies of the Western Church in different countries, dioceses, and religious communities, in their daily, weekly, festal, and penitential worship, had become fixed and settled, the Benedictines, as already intimated, setting the example; for, although Ambrose com-posed hymns, it is not certain that he ordained them to be sung in order in the Church Offices. Those we have been considering constituted the staple of the sacred songs of the Missals, Breviaries, and other Offices of this date; such being from time to time added in each Country, Church, Diocese or Conventual society as celebrated the saintly founders and patrons of each, with their peculiar solemnities; originally, perhaps, in versicles and responses in prose, converted after a time into poetry: of this, the Spanish hymns are notable examples. By this time, however, with a few striking exceptions, the Clergy and Monks had become the principal poets. The comparative seclusion of the former, and the separation of the latter from all worldly affairs, exercised a marked in-fluence on these compositions. They increased greatly in number; they became more spiritualized, subjective, devout, and mystical. They were no longer confined to the direct worship and praise of the Creator, of Christ, of the Holy Ghost; to the honour of the Blessed Virgin, and of the Apostles and certain principal Saints, and appropriated to the various solemnities of the Church relating to them; such as were those of Ambrose, Gregory, Prudentius, Fortunatus, and their successors. They became amplified and refined into eulogies, descriptions of, and meditations upon, the Passion and Wounds of Christ, on His Sacred Countenance, on His Cross, on His Sweet Name, on the Vanity of Life, on the Joys of Paradise, on the Terrors of Judgment; into penitential exercises, of the Holy Sacrament, of the lives and sufferings of numerous Saints -most especially into praises of the Blessed Virgin, on her Dignity, on her Joys and Dolours. Of this last particular species (often mere paraphrases of Ave Maris Stella, and laudations of a somewhat extravagant kind) vast numbers, but, it is to be observed, mainly belonging to the next succeeding centuries, are to be found in Mone, ii.; whilst previous to this period, as Daniel remarks, very few had been composed. Peter Damiani, Bonaventura, Bernard of Cluny, Thomas of Celano, and many others, including Adam of St. Victor, were the authors of the last previously mentioned sacred devotional poetry.

x. Adoption of Accent and Terminal Rhyme.

A further fact of importance must also be noticed: the universal adoption therein of accent instead of correct quantity, and of terminal rhyme or assonance. Neither of these, as we have already seen, is a necessary adjunct of Latin Hymnody, and may be thought to detract from its dignity; but the terminations and prosody of the Latin of that age lent themselves so easily thereto, that sacred poetry in general, instead of being founded on the metre and quantity of syllables, assumed rather, as being more facile, syllabism and rhyme. These rhymes were at first merely of vowels or assonances, to be adhered to when convenient, disregarded when therwise. They might be confined to a single letter or fall on an unaccented syllable, or be found in the last verse only. Hilary himself, porhaps, almost unconsciously set the first example in the 4th century:—

"Quem stella natum fulgida Monstrat micans in aethera, Magosque duxit praevia, Ipsius ad cunabula."

Pope Damasus, St. Gregory, and others wrote rhymed or assonant hymns. Ave Maris Stella; Veni Creator Spiritus are such. Odo of Cluny has alternate rhymes

"Lauda Mater ecclesia, Lauda Christi clementiam, Qui septem purgat vitia Per septiformem gratiam."

Nor is the Church, nor are individuals to be blamed, for thus following the universal promptings of human nature peculiar to no age, which in sacred compositions, as in others, looks for smoothness and ease, for the music of language, for an assistance to memory, and to rivet the attention; to which the music may form an barmonious accompaniment. "It is not," says Dr. Guest (Hist. of English Rhythm, 118), "a mere ornament, it marks and defines the accent, and thereby strengthens and supports the rhythm. Its advantages have been felt so strongly that no people have ever adopted an accentual rhythm without also adopting rhyme." To the 12th century belong trochaic tetrameter acatalectic (or perfect) and catalectic (or incomplete) lines. An example of this last is that of Peter Damiani (Dan. i. 116),

"Ad perennis vitae fontem mens sitivit arida." The composers of Sequences, as will be found, made much use of these rhymes and assonances. Among the most remarkable instances of elaborate rhyming is the Hora novissima of Bernard of Cluny, a poem, evidently intended for private use only. It is in a dactylic hexameter catalectic, with a trochaic rhymed ending, divided into three parts, between which a caesura is inadmissible, and it has a feminine leonine intermediate rhyme between the two first clauses:—

"Hora novissima | tempora pessima | sunt vigi | lemus" Dr. Neale translated it into English verse of fourteen syllables each, three short of the original, without attempting the complicated rhyme. Mr. Moultrie (Lyra Mystica, 113) also rendered a considerable portion with much success into a similar measure to the original. [See p. 533.] St. Thomas of Aquino (13th cent.) rhymed his sacramental lyrics; but in most cases the quantitative mode still prevailed. Daniel prints several hymns of a much later date (vol. i. pp. 298-306) of St. Nicholas. St. Agnes, St. Joseph, the Visitation, of Mary Magdalene, of Augustine, of the Name of Jesus, each stanza of three lines, in trochaic catalectics of fifteen syllables and triple rhymes. Rhymed hexameters and rhymed hexameters and pontameters are sometimes

xi. Metre.

With rhyme is intimately connected the subject of metre. The principal feet of which the Greeks and Latins made use in their verse were eight in number: 1. The Spondee, of two long syllables; 2. The Pyrrhic, of two short; 3. The Iambic, of a short and long; 4. The Trochee, of a long and short: 5. The Daetyl, of a long and two short; 6. The Anapaest, of two short and a long; 7. The Moloculus of three long; 8. The Troches 7. The Molossian, of three long; 8. The Tribrach, of three short. Of these the 1st, 2nd, 5th and 6th measure two in time more or less rapid, the remainder three. Four others are sometimes found in classical poetry: 1. The Amphibrach, a long between two short; 2. The Amphimacer, a short between two long; 3. The Bacchic, a short followed by two long: 4. And the Antibacchie, two long followed by a short. The first is a measure of two, with a syncope in the middle, the remainder of five. Of all these feet, with their compounds, the mediaeval hymnists, as well as the classical poets, made use in composing their verses. At the School of Adrian at Canterbury, we are told "centena genera metrorum" studied, among which was the Adonic of one long and two short, and two long syllables. Before this time, however, these classical measures, Hexameters, Hexameters and Pentameters, Anacreontic, and the various measures found in Horace, although still partially retained, were in process of change or abandon-ment. Church Song was composed mostly in alliterative and rhythmical measure, judging of the melody by the ear, and attending to the artificial distribution of the accent, and not to the quantity of the syllable. Bede in a treatise, De Arte Metrica, says, "Rhythm is a modulated composition of words, not in metrical arrangement (compositione), but arranged in a number of syllables according to the judgment of the ears;" or, as Ethel-wold says (Bonifacii Epist. lxv., Mayence Edit. 77), "not elaborated by the measuring of feet, but composed of eight syllables in each particular verse, fitted under one and the same letter in equal paths of lines." Ethelwold had before written that he had sent three hymns for singing of two kinds; the first in heroic measure of a dactylic hexameter and pentameter rule, and adjusted into seventy formulæ of coequal verses; the other being in the lambic dimeter and an Acrostic as just before mentioned. Bede himself speaks of the Dactylic or Hexameter (which he prefers); of the Pentameter; of the Dactylic Phalecian pentameter; consisting of a Spondee, a Dactyl, and three Trochees ("Cantemus Domino Decque Nostro";) of the Sapphie; of the Tetrameter catalectic,

"Squalent arva sole pulvere muito;"

Of the Iambic hexameter:

"Senex fidelis prima credendi via,"

Of the Iambio tetrameter or dimeter:
"Deus Creator omnium,"

The Anacreontic:

" Age jam precor mearum,"

And the Trochaic:

"Hymnum dicat turbe frotrum," and what he calls a rhythm without measure;

" Rex Eterne Domine, Rerum (freator omnium,"

as all being in use in his time for sacred poetry. It will be found on examination that after Bede's time those hymns in the English hymnbooks up to the 11th and 12th centuries [see Hymnarium, p. 548] are mainly in Iambic or Trochaic metres, and composed with little regard to prosody. Classical versification founded on measure and quantity was gradually transformed into the more modern, based on the number of syllables, accentuation, alliteration, assonance, and rhyme. At the opening of the 12th century this syllabism and rhyme ruled lyrical verse. The Asclepiad of four feet (a Spondee, a Choriamb, a Trochee, and Iambics, ending with two Dactyle), or of four feet and a Caesura (a Spondee, a Dactyl, then the Caesura followed by two Daciyls); the Iambie director, the septenarian Trochaic, are all reducible to a uniform number of syllables. The quantity of the penultimates was, however, retained. The Trochaic Tetrameter catalectic and acatalectic, was called also Septenarius because of the complete number of its feet, catalectic when one syllable short, Desinit citius quam debuit (κατα-λήγω), acatalectic when having the feet complete. Assonances or rhymes were introduced at the end of the verse as well as of its first hemistich. Thus Peter Damiani :

Dum pressuris ac acrumnis se gemit obnoxiam, Quam amisit dum deliquit contemplatur gloriam."

In the next century we find correct rhymes:

"Ad honorem tuum Christe recolet ecclesia Praecursoris et Raptietae tui natalitia."

Lingard, in his Anglo-Saxon Church (ii. 64), gives to the same effect a summary of English sacred poems, and notices that from these metres were borrowed the measures of our present modern poetry. Further, the first verse of the hemistich of the Septemarius was doubled, and correspondently the second. Thus was initiated the celebrated strophe of four, then of six, verses which were ample, harmonious, and easy, and admitted of a thousand varieties. The eight syllable verses might be tripled and quadrupled; and as many syllables added to each line as might please the ear. To this measure the music was intimately adapted. The tradition for the Proses or Sequences was that, differently from hymns, the melody should be varied from one end to the other, but that in them there should be the same musical phrase for lines having the same number of syllables. The melody was varied throughout, but each neumatic period was chanted twice, or oftener, as need be. So far might be the case with the Proses of Notker. There was, however, one thing more wanted, and that was a verse by way of pause, having an invariable number of syllables, for a clausula or period, both to the verses and for the music. Yet this versicle had to be developed so that the musical phrase might be developed also when required, as these phrases might be, and always were, of unequal length. Another verse of 15 syllables would not be sufficient for this; hence the first hemistich being doubled, the Christi natalitia was interposed, which thus admitted the enlargement of the melody required; and, as the two last verses of each clausula rhymed, Regem cum lastitia, the unity of the strophe was preserved. And thus, at last, sung Adam of St. Victor, on St. Stephen :-

> "Heri mundus exultavit, Et exultans celebravit Christi netalitia; Heri chorus angelorum, Prosecutus est celorum Regem cum laetitiä."

Practical necessity, then, as much as taste created these brilliant and popular sacred lyrics of the 12th and following century. By the end of the 13th the mechanism and style were already becoming debased.

xii. Sequences.

In the 10th and 11th centuries a new description of Hymns denominated Proces, and by the Germans Tropes or Sequences, were introduced into the celebration of the Mass, Hymns having been previously usually confined to the daily public Offices of prayer and praise; and Trope being a general name for any versicle or strophe introduced into, or supplementary to, other ecclesiastical chants (Gerbert, de Cantu, i. 340). According, how-ever, to St. Cyprian's life of Casarius of Arles, 542 (Gerbert, ibid.), that Bishop ordered the laity and clergy to sing, some in Greek, some in Latin, Proses and Anthems in the Church. Later on, however, Prose came to mean the kind of style of that composition; Sequence, its place in the Service. In consequence of the destruction of Jumièges by the Normans in 851, some of its monks took refuge at St. Gall, bringing with them their Gregorian Antiphonary. Therein the Gradual (the anthem pre-ceding the Gospel) in all Festal days and Seasons ended with a long Alleluia, being a musical jubilation on a certain number of notes, called Neumes, without words, on the final A; also called the Sequentia as following thereon. These Neumes (which were very difficult to remember) owed their origin to two chanters sent by Pope Adrian to Charlemagne; Peter, who opened a school at Metz, and Romanus, who, having been detained by illness at St. Gall, commenced a school of music there also. In this monastery of St. Gall was domiciled a young religious named Notker (called Bal-bulus from his stammer), of refined musical He was delighted to find that the Jumièges book had affixed to these Neumes certain words corresponding to their number, a contrivance which enabled him to remember the cadences of these Neumes much more easily; especially as new ones were constantly being introduced. Under the advice of his master Yson, he forthwith set himself to compose some new words for these musical Sequences at the different Festivals of the year, and began with that for Eastertide-

" Laudes Deo concinat orbis ubique totus"

(see Daniel, v. 62), wherein every note of the melody should have an accompanying word. After other lessons as to the melody and words from his master, he composed another in like form for the Dedication of a Church—

" Peallut Ecclesia mater illibata"

(see Daniel, ii. 23; Mone, i. 323; Neale's Sequentiae, 247); and others followed.

In general these early Notkerian Proces

In general these early Notherian Proses (with a few conspicuous exceptions), were not rhymed or with assonances, except accidentally; hence the peculiar appellation. That for the Nativity, Eja recolamus (for the Circumcision in the Sarum Missal); for the Holy Innocents, Laus tibi Christe; that for the same day in the Sarum Missal, Celsa pueri concrepent; the Veni Sancte Spiritus Etemitte, attributed to Robert King of France; a grand anonymous prose on the Holy Trinity—"Benedicta sit beata Trinitas."

retained in the Sarum Missal for Trinity Sunday; the well-known Alleluiatic Prose for Septuagesima, Cantemus cuncti; another for Christmas, Nato canunt omnia; and St. Bernard's Lætabundus, are amongst the exceptions and are all either rhymed or assonant. This non-rhyming gave rise to the idea (partly adopted even by Mone, iii., 49) that they were vague, incoherent compositions, without determinate metre or melodies. Such was not the case. Dr. Neale (Daniel, v., 1) and the Abbé Gautier (Preface CXXXVII.) have given a series of canons by which the recitation of them was regulated, the main principle of which was that each of the clauses or lines of the Prose should be nearly of similar length, and each syllable be closely accommodated to the musical notes of the jubilant Neumes to which they were set. If, then, the individual clause was double or treble, or more, the same musical phrase would be repeated, twice or thrice, &c. If somewhat longer, it would be lengthened out; if shorter contracted, till another phrase was arrived at. The Prose at last often consisted of a series of clauses, two and two of the same plan, although the introductory and concluding versicles had a special modulation. The Abbe Gautier gives this example:

Preface—" Johannes Jesu Christo multum dilecte Virgo.

1. Tu Ejus amore carnalem
In nave parentem liquisti,
2. Tu lene conjugis | pectus respnisti | Messiam secutus.
Ut Ejus pectoris | sacra meruisses | Fluenta potare."

Into other phases of this ancient prosody it is not necessary to enter.

We are now arrived at the middle period of the 12th century, and to Adam of St. Victor; to the second period of these noble rhymed metrical Sequences, changed in metre, which, increasing in beauty and popularity, kept hold on the mind of the Church in Northern Europe for centuries. Northern Europe, be it observed, for it must be mentioned that neither Spain nor Italy nor France south of the Loire, seem ever to have welcomed them. About the year 1158 may be said to have begun a new epoch in the history of Proces (hereafter to be called Sequences) in the Abbey of St. Victor at Paris, founded 40 years before by Louis VI. Therein resided a distinguished sacred poet and musician named Adam, whose compositions were destined to effect a vast improvement (even a revolution) in Church song. The learned Jose Clichtove, who died 1554, in the fourth and last part of his Elucidatorium Ecclesiasticum (who, however, is not particularly happy in the explanation of Proses), writes thus of him and of the rhymed Proses of this second epoch :-

"This form of Prose in the Church Offices is most criebrated and of all that which is most in use. Its illustrious author, renowned no less for virtue than for learning, Adam of St. Victor, was in a surprising degree copious and ready in the rhythmical modulation of Proses, as very many of those composed by him for certain occasions very plainly declare."

By this time, in the North of France at least, a considerable proportion of the Notkerian Proses and those of inferior merit had gone out of use in choirs; and Church musicians had set themselves to compose others of a more melodious and popular character. These did not confine themselves to the ancient Neumes of Alleluia, repeated on many clauses or versicles of an equal number of syllables, but adopted an entirely novel and original system both of versification and music, derived from popular airs and much more grateful to the ear. We find verses of great regularity constructed according to the system explained above, and enriched with rhymes of great number, variety, and beauty, having penultimates sometimes long, sometimes short. Of these Adam of St. Victor was the principal author (although he had many imitators), and the Abbé Gautier has done signal service to Church hymnody by publishing 103 of them, with a few others which may perhaps be his, and also some of his hymns, together with an exhaustive introduction and notes exhibiting much research (Œuvres Poetiques d'Adam de S. Victor. Paris, 1858; 2nd ed. 1881). M. Félix Clément has also done much for the cause by publishing, with the original music (4th edition, Paris, 1876, Poussielgue frères) in modern notation, the chants of the Sainte Chapelle, with a selection of the principal Sequences of the Middle Ages from ancient manuscript

The Sequences of Adam are most of them very beautiful. Out of 45 which Gautier prints in his 2nd ed., 1881, as undoubtedly genuine, six are for the Feast days which are connected with the Blessed Virgin, the remainder for the other Church Festivals and Seasons. Like those of Notker, they became extremely popular all over the North of Europe. Two of them for Pentecost, the admirable Luz jucunda, lux insignis, and Qui procedis ab utroque are singularly fine and impressive. It is not too much to say that these compositions, and, indeed, those of this date in general, are charged and saturated with the great facts, the very inmost, the most recondite and spiritual meanings of Scripture, with its mystical and symbolical meanings and interpretations; and are in musical and flowing verse, clothed with the magnificent imagery and descriptions of the Prophets and of the Book of the Revelation. A goodly selection is made from them in the English Missals, among them the splendid for Easter; for the Dedication of the Church—"Hierusalem et Sion fillae"

in the Octave-

"Quam dilecta tabernacula;"

for the Feasts of the Virgin-

"Ave mundi spes Maria,"
"Hodiernae lux diei;"

and that which Dr. Neale has denominated "the masterpiece of Adam," for the Exaltation of the Cross, and sung throughout France, England, and Rhineland,

" Laudes Crucie attollamus."

We may well join in the pathetic lamentation of the Abbe Gautier (Preface CLXXII.) over the abolition in the Gallican Church, where they had been sung by choir and people down to the 17th cent., "without pity, without shame, and without taste, of these poems which had been chanted in the vaulted roofs of a thousand churches for four centuries," not being out of place nor interfering with the Divine Offices, but their most natural ornament, for the sake of adopting others of a more classical style; and sympathise in his earnest desire to readopt, as "national reminiscences," not all the Proses of Adam, but the more beautiful, of which, he says, "there are at least twenty which would embellish any Liturgy." An excellent edition of Adam's Liturgical poetry, with a translation into corresponding metres and rhymes, was published by the Rev. Digby S. Wrangham, M.A., in 1881.

The English Missals also contain many of Notker's Proses, as that for the Circuncision, Eja recolamus; for Easter, Laudes Salvator; for Pentecost, Sancti Spiritus adeit nobis gratia; for St. Martin, Sacerdotem Christi; for Apostles, Clare sanctorum senatus; for St. John Evangelist, Joannes Jesu Christo, &c. Many of the Sequences in the English Missals are anonymous: for Easter, Fulgens pracedara rutifat, and the dramatic and interrogative Victimae Paschali; those for Advent, which were not customary elsewhere; and one for the Visitation, probably composed at Salisbury (Daniel,

v. 258), beginning Celebromus in hac die, and which has this strophe—

which seems to have been written after the removal of the cathedral to its present site, A MS. Troparium, formerly belonging to Christ Church, Dublin, of the latter half of the 13th century, is in the University Library, Cambridge. It contains a series of these Sarum Sequences with the musical notation of that period attached to each.

The number of these compositions, especially of the Adamic type, increased almost indefinitely during the 13th and 14th centuries in every country, diocese, and church. Of great elegance and significance, is that of the Four Evangelists, Jucundare plebs fidelis. Also that of St. Thomas of Aquino, who died 1274, Lauda Sion Salvatorem, composed after the best manner of Adam, and fully exemplifying his style; to which may be added the imitation, Recolamus Sacram Coenam. The "Praise of the Cross," by St. Bonaventura, his contemporary, Recordare Sanctae Crucie, is excellent also. Especially is to be noted the Sequence Dies irae, dies illa, for All Souls' Day. This last is almost the only Sequence which Italy has produced, and, says Daniel (ii. 112) "Omnium consensu sacrae poeseos summum decus, et ecclesiae latinae κειμήλιον est pre-tiosissimum." The inimitable Stabat Mater dolorosa, Monody of Jacobus de Benedictis (as it seems), on the Seven Dolours or Of the Compassion of the Blessed Virgin, in the style of Adam, and probably composed after 1225, has been accepted by the whole Latin Church. In the unreformed noted Rouen Antiphonary this is placed as a Prose for Sunday in the Passion, with the original simple and mournful melody which Rossini adopted and enlarged. A noble Sequence for the Epiphany, Prompto gentes animo, not found in the books, is in that Antiphonary.

By the beginning of the 14th century the composition of Proses and Sequences, and that of Latin sacred poems in general, may be said to have culminated. These increased indefinitely in number, but not in excellence, and sometimes became, in the North, almost incumbrances to the Divine Offices. Many on various subjects were even composed in, or translated into, the vulgar tongue, and sung by the people, often to secular tunes, on every possible occasion. There was almost a sense of relief in the Western Church when, in the 16th century, Pius V. and the Council of Trent reduced those to be used as part of the Mass to four; the Victimae Paschali; Veni Sancte Spiritus; Lauda Sion Salvatoren; and the Dies Irae; to which was added the Stabat Mater in 1727. Fuller details concerning Sequences, together with the first lines of more than seven hundred, and an account of over thirty was, and printed service books in which they are found, are given in the special article on Sequences.

At the beginning of the 14th century the golden age of Latin hymnody may be said to have expired, and its sun to have gone down in glory. Among the latest gems were the Hymns and Sequences of St. Thomas of Aquino, the Dominican, renowned as one of the few Italian sacred poets. His hymns include the Adoro te devote; Pange lingua gloriosi Corporis; Lauda Sion; Sacris Solemniis, and the Verbum supernum, all of which have been in extensive use either in their original or their translated forms from his day to the present time. Other fine hymns before the end of the 14th century are: Surrexit Christus hodie, and Ecce tempus est vernale, both for Easter; and the O beata beatorum, for Martyrs. The grand and pathetic Stabat Mater dolorosa, Juxta crucem, although often associated with this period, is of a later date. It is found in the Paris Missal, 1481, and the Belgian Missal, 1483. [See Sequences.]

The sacred lyrical Latin poetry subsequent to the 13th century, of which there is an extraordinary quantity in every possible variety of metre, may be divided into four classes:—

- 1. Hymns to God and the several Persons of the Holy Trinity.

 2. For Festivals and Seasons, and to the Cross.
- Of Saints and Angels.
 Of the Blessed Virgin.

Of all these the authors are for the most part unknown. As to the first head, it would seem as if former Christian poets had exhausted these great subjects, and the praises become feebler and less original. The old Hymns and Sequences keep their places, and to them are subjoined many variations and additions peculiar to each Country, Diocese, Church, and Conventual Order; but the new hymnody attains not to the grandeur and excellence of the more ancient. This may easily be verified in the volumes of Mone. The former spirit of Christian poetry, however, still partially survived, although the style is inferior and different. There are several hymns to the Holy Trinity of the 14th and 15th centuries, especially in Germany - Dulcis amor, pax, veritas; Summe Pater sancte Deus; Trinitatie altissimae, &c., most of them condensations or expansions of the Nicene and Athanasian Creeds. We find too "Hours of the Holy Trinity." The three Hymns and Sequences for the Transfiguration in the Euglish Office-books are fine. They begin Coclestis formam gloriae; O sator rerum, reparator aevi; and Onata luz de lumine. There are rhymed sum-maries of the Life of Christ, besides such as were in use in the 11th and 12th centuries. There is an excellent rhymed hymn for Advent, with a melody, Veni, Veni, Rex Gloriae! a number of rhymed and assonaut or acrostic Songs and Hymns for the Nativity: Dies est lactitae; Apparuit benignitas, &c., precursors of Christ-mas and Epiphany Carols. We find many for the Passion, as Plange Sion Filia; Dulcis Jesu spes pauperum; Patris Sapientia; Ad matutinum gemide, and several versions of the Hours of the Passion, mostly in rhyme, a method of devotion which began and spread widely in this age. There is also a devotion of the Holy Cross, Crux tua, Christe, salus hominum; one for the Exaltation or Invention of the Cross, Salve Crux sancia, Salve mundi gloria, in Lambic hexameters Mono-culum; and a Lament for Jesus, for private recitation, in eighty verses, each verse beginning with His Name. There are also hymns "of the Face of Jesus," and salutations to His several members; Salve mea O patrona Crux, a double-rhymed hymn of the Passion; and several Graces after Meals. Some fine additional Hymns and Sequences there are for Pentecost and the Holy Ghost. St. Thomas of Aquino had many imitators in honour of the Sacrament, in proses, in versified accompaniments to the actions of the Mass, generally acrostics or rhymed, such as Christus Lux indeficiens; O Panis dulcissime; Ave caro Christia cara, Tu es certe quem habeo; Quod in dra cornitur; Salve saluberrima; Saturatus ferculis; all of which are new features of hymnody, were sometimes sung in the churches, and also used privately. There are also "Salutations of Jesus," each line hearing with functions of Jesus," each line hearing with functions of Jesus," line beginning with Ave or Salve, the Rosary of Christ, the Psalter of Jesus (576 verses); Jesu dulce Medicamen, with prayers to Him; of the Goodness and spiritual benefits of God, Angelorum si haberem, &c.; hymns for funerals, penitential hymns; many on the miseries of this life; in time of tribulation; on Contempt of the World, &c. Many of these betray the mind of the cloister, and are sacred songs, and rather meant for private meditation than for worship. Several are of the glories of the Heavenly Jerusalem, In urbs mea Jerusalem summa, rhymed, and with music; In domo Patris; Jerusalem luminosa, after the manner of the Ad perennis vitae fontem, and the Urbs beata. Some are to the Holy Angela and to St. Michael in particular, the Mysteriorum Signifer, those to the Nine Angelic Orders, Summo Deo agmina, and "To Thy proper Angel," Sulve mi Angelice (see Mone, vol. i.).

Liv. Hymns to the B. V. M.

The greatest change, however, which took place at this period in Church Song had relation to the Blessed Virgin. Before the 14th century several hymns respecting her, some of them in the subjective sense, had been used in the Latin Church, such as Ave Maris Stella; Cantemus in omni die; Quem terra, pontus, aethera; O quam glorifica; O Sancta mundi Domina (Nativity and Conception); Salve Regina; Alma Redemptoris Mater; Ave Regina Coelorum, &c. The Festivals in her honour were the Conception, Nativity, Pre-sentation, Annunciation, the Visitation (instituted 1389), the Purification, and Assumption. For each of these a vast variety of lyrical poems were composed, which may have been sung (but concerning this we have no information) at those Festivals by congregations in France and Germany, and some in North Italy, for most of them, as described by Daniel and Mone, have Neumes, or musical notes, attached thereto. There are glosses innumerable on the Angelic Salutation, more than 100 beginning with Ave and Salve, and on the Canticle Magnificat. The Dolours of Mary have a large number thereon, none, however, equalling in pathos the Stabat Mater: and there are as many of the "Joys of Mary after the Resurrection" and her Assumption. They are all mainly subjective, and, with a few exceptions, such as O Dei Sapientia (Daniel, iv. 283) for the Presentation, are poor, fanciful, and trivial, without | real poetical merit. We have arrived at the decadence of Latin Hymnody when the enervating and over-sentimental influence of conventual life becomes so manifest. Rhyme and acrostics, and varieties of metre, are carried to an excess. On examination it will be found that whereas the more ancient of these hymns had always a direct reference to our Lord Himself, the greater part of the later regard the Blessed Virgin almost as an independent personage, with powers and attributes of her own. This is the more evident when we look at the hundreds which must have been used for private as well as public devotion. We find a Te Deum Marianum; the Victimae Paschali transferred to Mary only; the "Psalter of Mary;" the "Marian Litany;" the "Garland and Salutations;" the "Rosaries of Mary;" the Prayers to and Praises of Mary, &c. An English form of this kind of Proce is given by Daniel (ii. 240) with the musical notes, beginning-

" Rore piena Septiformis Spiritus, Virtutibus Ornantibus, Ac moribus Vernantibus."

All these, be it remarked, are but a small portion of those which, as Mone remarks, he might have produced. This last editor has added a number from Greek, Italian, and German sources of the like nature. We may be thankful that our English Uses were in a great measure saved from this deterior ation.

xv. Apostles, Saints, Martyrs, &c.

A similar change and revolution took place in and after the 14th century in the Western Church with the hymnody which related to the Apostles, Saints, Martyrs, Confessors, and Virgins. The number of Hymns and Sequences became excessive, particularly in Germany and France, and also in Spain. Every Church had its peculiar hymn-book. Those of Ail Saints are mostly metrical Litanies. Fine Sequences are Cujus laus secundum nomen, in rhyme; and Alleluia nunc decantet, all the lines of which end in "a." Another is Coeli Solem imitantes, in Adamic metre. Several are of St. Peter and the other Apostles singly. most of which are narratives of their lives and martyrdom; among these may be noticed a Sequence of St. Peter of 36 verses all rhymed, and of which every word begins with "P" (as "Plebs parentis pictatis). Several are of Peter and Paul jointly, two or three of which are in our early English books. There are many of St. John Evangelist, SS. Andrew, Mark, and Luke; of Martyrs generally, one of which is the beautiful Prose, O Beata beatorum. So also of Confessors and Virgins. Among the last St. Agnes holds, as previously, a distinguished place.

Of the Irish saints, SS. Colman, Columba, and Columbanus, whose fame had travelled to St. Gall and the banks of the Rhine in the 7th and 8th centuries, there are other hymns. Several are of St. Benedict. Many, amongst others a Prose and a Rossry, of St. Barbara, with every possible rhyme and alliteration. St. Nicholas, St. Vincent, and the Magdalene, were favourite subjects both in the Spanish, German, and French books. Besides these, hymns to above 160 single Saints of as many Churches are given in Mone's third volume, and in the fourth and fifth of Daniel, of which many are for private devotion only. We soon perceive how inferior these, with few exceptions, are in dignity, beauty, comprehensiveness, and devout feeling to their predecessors. Sense and poetry were often sacrificed to catching multitudinous rhymes or assonances, or an a b c d Sequence.

xvi. The Roman Breviary.

Yet another change, and for the worse, appears in the hymns of the Western Church in the 16th, 17th, and following centuries. It must here be noted that the Latin Church did not undertake in any way the care of its Hymnody until late in the middle ages. This was never, like the daily Offices and prayers in the Mass, regarded as a necessary part of Divine worship. These last-named devotions were carefully restored and corrected in and after the 8th century, but Hymns were used, and others newly composed without restraint, and adopted as suited the will of the respective Churches and Dioceses. Their authors and composers were and are for the most part not known, yet they had a wide and great influence over the faith of the masses and of the religious communities. With Leo X. (Pope 1513) came into fashion what is called the classical revival. He, who strongly favoured this movement, became desirous that the Church hymns should be coerced within the laws of regular metre and Latinity. He entrusted this task to Zaccharia Ferrerio Vi-centino, who completed this new Hymnology. Lee, however, died shortly afterwards, as well as Adrian VI., and it was Clement VII. who, in 1523, on the 11th of December, by his official letters, recognised and approved the revised Hymnary. In this 16th century Fabricius, Ellinger and others corrected the texts of the Church lyrical poetry generally. In the 17th century Pope Urban VIII. (who ruled from 1623 to 1644) commissioned three accomplished Jesuits (Famianus Strada, Tarquinius Galluccius, and Hieronymus Petruccius) again to revise and correct these Breviary hymns, after the approved classical pattern. We are witnesses of the result, as seen in the Roman Breviary of to-day, and of how, after this proceeding, the simple, noble, and forcible style of Ambrose, Hilary, and their successors, has for the most part vanished, baving been supplanted by the cold and often capricious alterations of these reformers. | See Breviaries. p. 170, ii,] xvii. French, Spanish, and other Breviaries.

The example was contagious. Before the year 1737 a large proportion of the ancient Hymns and Sequences were removed from the French Antiphonaries and Breviaries, particularly from those of Paris and Roven, and thus the compositions of the brothers Santeüil, Le Tournesux, Habert, Besnault, Muret, De la Brunctière, Coffin, Guyet, and a few others, were substituted or interpolated. Arevali, who did his best to accomplish the same task with the Spanish Hymnody (Hymnodia Hispanica, 1786) in his Dissertation on Ecclesiastical Hymns in the same volume, gives a history of all these proceedings, and warmly approves of them; as does Guyet, a Jesuit, in his Heortologia, Paris, 1657 (Venice, 1729). The outcome was a parti-coloured mixture of doubtful character, in parts of which the old classical metres are again revived. It must, however, be admitted that among these later compositions are many of great beauty, power and devotional fervour, especially those of the brothers Santeiil. Those in the Paris Breviary of 1736 for ordinary Sundays at Matins and Vespers, and in Advent, for Matins at Christmas, and St. Stephen's Day, for the Epiphany, Quae Stella sole pulchrior at First Vespers, and Linquant tecta Magi at Lauds; those for the Five Wounds, Prome vocem, Quae te pro populi; those for Easter, and the Ascension, for Virgin Martyrs, for the Annunciation, are excellent. It is much to be lamented that Isaac Williams (Hymns tr. from the Parisian Breviary, 1839), who fully appreciated their beauty, has rendered them for the most part into such crabbed and incongruous measures. The Rouen hymnody is known to but few, yet the Proses for Christmas, Verbum lumen de lumine; for the Epiphany, Prompto gentes animo (already mentioned); that for the Ascension, Solemnis haec festivitas (Narbonne Breviary, 1709, and Daniel, ii. 367) are worthy of notice. Besides these there are some fifteen original hymns of much merit.

All these and many more in Germany and elsewhere are now, in fact, swept away, to the infinite regret of the Churches to which they were appropriated, and the Latin Hymnody of the Western Church has thus been narrowed to the few, and in great part curtailed and formalized, compositions included in the modernized Roman Breviary, and the five Sequences in the Roman Missal. This is a conclusion much to be deplored to so glorious a career; and our grief is increased when the same has undergone a similar transforma-

Kviii. Expositions.

Notice must here be taken of the numerous Expositiones Hymnorum et Sequentiarum, which, commencing even before this epoch, continued to be produced till late in the 16th century. In the Liber Hymnorum of the ancient Irish Church, edited by Dr. Todd, in the old Irish characters, for the Archæological and Celtic Society, Dublin, 1855 and 1869, there are elaborate scholia and explanations of all the hymns, some of them in the original Irish language. In the British Museum are two English hymn-books of the 11th century (Jul. A. vl. and Vesp. D. xii.), which are examples of expositions. Both are apparently Benedictine, and the latter is headed:—

"Incipinnt hymm quod noctibus atque diebus Decantant monachi landibus assiduis ; His animus monachi coelestia quaerera diecit Acternumque melos cogitat hisce modis."

It contains an interlinear paraphrase in ordinary Latin prose of each verse of the hymn, thus:—

"Splendor et immortalis Divinitas!
O, Luz besta Trinitas!
Et O auctoritalis potentia!
Et principalis Unitas!" &c.

And there is also an interlinear version of this paraphrase in Anglo-Saxon. In Julius A. vi., the hymns themselves are not at length, but only the first few words, but there follows, as in Vesparian D. xii., a version of the hymn in ordinary Latin prose, and between the lines of this version runs a literal Anglo-Saxon translation of the same. This prose version reads thus:—

"O Lux et O beata Trinitas Et O principalis Unitas Infunde lumen in nostris cordibus Quia jam recedit Igneus Soi"— with the translation into Anglo-Saxon between the lines. In the Bodleian Library (Laud Misc., 384) is a Liber Hymnalis, with the exposition of Hilarius written in a hand of the end of the 13th cent. The comment on Jam lucis orto sidere begins thus:—

"Materia hujus hymni est deprecatio ad Deum ut orio sidere, id est Christo, Christos dignetur segregare nos a vicile et induendo nos virtutibus repellat a nobis superbiam; id est faciat nos bumilse; et quoniam umbra mortis, id est pecatum, recessit, ideo Lux, id est Christos, jam habitat in cordibus nostris. Vel sic," &c.

These Expositiones became from the 14th century forward, plentiful on the Continent, and as soon as printing was invented they multiplied everywhere. According to Mr. Dickinson's catalogue, no fewer than twenty-seven editions were printed in England between 1494 and the middle of the 16th century, besides others in Belgium, Germany, and France. Copies of these are in the British Museum, Bodleian, and Lambeth Libraries, and elsewhere. The Aurea Expositio Hymnorum, by Hilarius, was edited at Paris in 1485. It has already been observed that the more ancient hymns, and especially the Sequences of Adam of St. Victor, exhibit a profound and various knowledge of Holy Scripture, of its minutest facts, of its mystical and typical interpretations, of the lives and martyrdoms of the Apostles and the Saints; so that it is not wonderful, in an age when copies of the Holy Scriptures and other books were rare and chiefly to be found in monasteries, where few could consult them, that interpretations of the full meaning of these sacred songs should eagerly be looked for. The commentaries of Wimpheling, 1513; Bebelius, 1492-1501; of Hermannus Torrentinus, 1513, 1538; the copious dissertations of the Elucidatorium Ecclesiasticum of Clichtoveus (Paris, 1516; Basle, 1517-19), and of others noted in the Preface to Daniel's Thesaurus Hymnologicus, show the continued need of these comments. That the moderns require them also is easily proved by the Lateinische Anthologie of Kehrein (Frankfurt, 1840); the copious notes of Daniel, especially in his fourth and fifth volumes; the lengthy observations of Mone in his three volumes; and those of the Abbé Gautier in his 1st edition of Adam of St. Victor, 1858.

The earlier of these Expositiones are generally in what may be called the vernacular Latiu of the time. They were intended no doubt for the instruction of choirs and schools of the Clergy, and for the more educated laity, that they might "sing with the understanding"; "that the meaning might be known by all scholars and ecclesiastics," "by a notable comment which sets forth the accounts and most remarkable places of Holy Scripture, and of those saints whose histories are sung.

xix. Music.

With regard to the melodies to which these Hymns and Sequences were sung up to and beyond the beginning of the 14th cen-tury, and to the musical notation thereof, these are separate matters of so great an importance and extent, involving as they do a consideration of the whole system of the Plain Song of the Church, which, although Gregorian, was originally derived from the complicated modes of the Greeks, that they cannot be satisfactorily treated of in this short memoir. Both are exhaustively discussed by Gerbert, Abbot of the Congregation of St. Blaise in the Black Forest, in his two quarto volumes, De Cantu et Musica Sacra; in the Dictionnaire de Plain - Chant, the twenty-ninth volume of the Nouvelle Encyclopédie Theologique of the Abbé Migne's Series; by Couseemaker, Sur l'Harmonie au Moyen Age (Paris, Didron, 1852); in the lately published work of the Abbe Raillard, Explication des Neumes (Paris, E. Repos); and in Les Mélodies Grégoriennes of Dom Joseph Pothier, of the Abbey of Solesmes (Tournay, Desolés Lefeure & Cie., 1880). It must suffice to state that these tunes were all simple, yet majestic and popular, and that most of them probably were appropriated to and sung with the Hymns of the Church (they also remaining unaltered) without variation ever since the 6th century throughout the West. When Proses and Sequences were introduced into the Divine Office in the North of Europe in the manner above stated, melodies were either newly composed or adapted from others for them. Pothier (p. 211, qua supra) has published a noble one for Lactabundus exultet of the 12th cent. in the Guidonian irregular clef of C with B flat.

It is necessary, however, to give an account of the Notation of this Music; for from the 7th and 8th centuries musical notes of some kind are appended to all hymns. The first system, usual in the 5th century, was alphabetical; that of Boethius (De Musica, Lib. iv., c. 14), which marked the notes by the fifteen first letters of the alphabet. Sometimes the first Octave was represented by the seven first capitals, the second by the seven smaller letters. Others, again, used Greek Capitals for this purpose. All these methods were, however, found to be unsatisfactory, and by the 8th century Neumes were universally employed. Examples are at hand in the Hymnals, Harleian, 2961, Vespasian D. xii., wherein the Hymns are carefully throughout surmounted by Neumes; and reference may tinguish each vocal sound; and since the chant is variable, sometimes equal, sometimes unequal, sometimes mounting, sometimes descending, they had peculiar names corresponding to their various shapes, and were conjoined with accents to mark the different tones, and often compounded and piled over one another. Now these Neumes and accents could indicate the ascent or descent of the scale, the piane or forte of the notes, but not their relative height or value, nor the key, nor the mode, nor the accidentals, if any. Hence, in order to read and interpret a chant thus noted, it was necessary (say in the 9th century) first to translate the signs without distinction of modes, and afterwards to decide from the character of the melody the key and the mode to which it belonged, as well as the doubtful intervals. For instance, the sign called Podatus represented an ascending interval, embracing one, two, or more tones; but only a profound acquaintance with the modes of the Plain Chant could show which of these intervals the singer was to choose. The whole, in fact, depended on the skill and intelligence of the Cantor. This awkward contrivance continued to the end of the 12th century at least. Guido d'Arezzo in the 11th century thought to remedy this imperfection by drawing two lines through the mass of Neumes in order to mark their relative height. One of these was red, to mark the note F: the other green, to mark the note middle C. He afterwards added two other lines, begun by two other letters of the scale. Soon, however, the colours and additional letters were abandoned, and the clefs were reduced to two, with an irregular third; the Do clef, where the fork that grasps the line indicates the position of middle O; and the Fa clef, where this fork has a breve either before or behind it, indicating the place of the note F. The irregular B flat was marked in its proper space; whether any F sharp was ever introduced is doubtful. The notes were the long or minim , requiring emphasis, the breve . usually of uniform length, but variable if the phrase required it, and the semibreve . always short, except in cadences. It is to be observed, however, that, as a general rule, the notes were all of equal length, even up to the 16th century, without change of time and without bars. Reference should be made to Nos. 3, 4, 5, and 6 in the accompanying plate.

Attempts have frequently been made, by Gerbert formerly, and later by the Père Lambillotte, commenting on the Antiphonary of St. Gall (L'Unité dans les chants liturgiques, Paris, 1851), to identify the ancient melodies represented by Neumes with those noted in the 18th century, and subsequently after the method of Guido. The Notkerian Sequences were thought convenient for this inquiry, wherein each syllable had only one tone or two short together; but the comparison be made to the accompanying Plates, Nos.

These Neumes were certain points, lines, contorted marks, and curves (resembling modern shorthand), placed under or over each syllable to be chanted, in order to disthem in the four large tables appended to his work, Explication des Neumes.

Simultaneously the Benedictine Pere Dom Joseph Pothier, of the Abbey of Solesmes, instituted similar inquiries elsewhere, and in 1830 published at Tourney Les Mélodies Grégoriennes d'après la tradition. Both of them havegiven plentiful examples of Neumes, and in tables and engravings have shown how they gradually became transformed into the more modern notation. It is not too much to say that they have established the true identity of the Hymnal melodies of the later age with those of the earliest period known.

singing one verse and the general congregation responding with the same or with the next verse, all of them joining in the last ascription of praise. The mode of executing Proses or Sequences differed, varying in different places. According to Gerbert (Lib. i., Pt. i., p. 340) and the Dictionnaire de Plain-Chant (p. 270, Tit. Proses) the Cantors with their assistant Deacons advanced and seated themselves or stood at a desk (Lectricum) whereon the Sequence was placed, or in front of the pulpit, whence the Gospel was to be sung, the choir remaining in their places. Having sung through their strophe, the strain was repeated by choir and people, with organ accompaniment, and so on with each strophe till the whole was finished.

We would add that beside the above-named books on early Church Hymnal Music, that of Bernon de Reichenau on the Gregorian Chant (Toulouse, 1867); and that of the Abbé Tardife on the Plain Chant (Angers, 1883) should be consulted. A considerable number of facaimiles are in Léon Gautier's Histoire de la Poésie Liturgique au Moyen Âge, Paris, 1886, vol. i. [J. D. C.]

Latin, Translations from the. large proportion of the translations of Latin hymns into English are found at the present time in the various hymnals in use in Public Worship. Those hymns are annotated in this work under their respective Latin first lines. A great number of recent trs., however, remain, of which no use has been made, although many are of great merit, and no insignificant number are of higher excellence, and are better adapted for congrega-tional use, than many of those now in the hymn-books. The object of this article is to gather these translations together in such a manner as will enable the student to find what he needs with comparative ease.

We have also to note that—

(1) The three trs. from St. Augustine (Aug.) in the foregoing list are metrical paraphrases of portions of his prose works.

ns prose works.

(2) Those lines which are given thus: "De ascensione Dominit," are not the first lines of Latin hymns, but are Latin titles which preface English hymns in a few works. These titles are retained in this list that the origin of the hymns so prefaced may be clearly defined.

(3) Those hymns marked A. V. (?) are noted by M. Leon Gautier in his And ed. of the Energer Poetiques of Adden & St. Victor. 1881, as followed attributed.

d'Adam de St. Victor, 1881, as falsely attributed to

In addition to searching this list for translations, the Index to Latin first lines should also be consulted, as numerous hymns (as known to the general render) are either taken from longer hymns, or are altered forms of the authors' texts. The following list of recent collections of Latin Hymns and Sequences, which are not indexed on p. 656, is added here for the convenience of students :-

St. Odo of Lauda mater ecclesia. Cluny. [St. Mary Magdalene.] This is the companion to "Aeterni Patris Unice" (q.v.), and, like it, is found in an 11th cent, as. in the British Museum (Vesp. D. xii, f. 153b), these two hymns being written in a hand of the 12th cent. It is also in a 13th cent. as, in the Bodleian (Ashmole, 1525, f. 168b). In the York Brev. of 1493 it is the hymn at Vespers on the festival of St. Mary Magdalenc. The text is also in Mone, No. 1063; Daniel, i., No. 190, with further notes at iv. p. 244; Neale's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1851, p. 193; Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865; and others. Tr. as:—

 Exalt, O Mother Church, to-day. By J. M. Neale, in his Mediaeval Hys., 1851, p. 27; in the Appendix to the Hymnal N., 1862, the Day Hours of the Church of England, and others.

2. O Church, our Mother, speak His praise. J. D. Chambers, in his Lauda Syon, pt. ii., 1866, p. 90, and repeated in the People's H., 1887.

Another tr. is:-Praise, dearest Church and Mother, praise. W. J. Blew. 1852-55. [J. M.]

Lauda Sion Salvatorem. St. Thomas of Aquino. [Holy Communion.] This is one of the four Sequences which are alone retained in the revised Roman Missal, 1570, and later editions. It seems to have been written about 1260 for the Mass of the festival of Corpus Christi. For this festival St. Thomas, at the request of Pope Urban IV., drew up in 1263 the offic in the Roman Breviary; and pro-bably also that in the Roman Missal. In form this Sequence is an imitation of the "Laudes crucis attoliamus" (q. v.), and consists of 9 stanzas of 6 lines, followed by 2 of 8 and then 1 of 10 lines. Among early Missals it is found in a French missal of the end of the 13th cent. (Add. 23985 f. 11b), and a 14th cent. Sens (Add. 30058 f. 83b) in the British Museum: in a Sarum, c. 1370 (Barlow 5, p. 256); a Hereford, c. 1370; a York, c. 1390, and a Roman of the end of the 13th cent. (Liturg. Misc. 354 f. 58 b), all new in the Bodleian: in the St. Andrew's Missal (printed ed. 1864, p. 213); in the Magdeburg of 1480, and many other German Missals, &c. Its use was primarily for Corpus Christi; but in the Sarum use st. xi., xii. ("Ecce panis augelorum") might be used during the octave. In the York use the complete form was used on Corpus Christi, and during the octave it was divided into three parts said on succeeding days, viz. (1) st. i-iv.; (2) v.-viii. ("Quod in corna Christus gessit"), and (3) ix.-xii. ("Sumunt honi, sumunt mali"). It has often been used as a Processional; at the Benediction of the Blessed Sacrement (especially st. xi. xi.), and other occasions. The printed text is also in Mone, No. 210; Wackernagel, i., No. 230; Daniel, ii. 97. and v. 73; Kehrein, No. 150; Bässler, No. 100; March's Lat. Hys., 1875, p. 165, &c. The text, with a full commentary, is given in Dr. J. Kayser's Beiträge zur Geschichte und Erklärung der älteslen Kirchenhymnen, vol. ii., 1886, pp. 77-109.

As a historical document, and an example of harmonious and easy rhythmic flow of verse combined with the most definite doctrinal teaching, this sequence is of great interest. Considered however as a hymn for present day use (especially if for use in the Reformed Churches) the case is entirely different. Mose characterises it as "a dogmatic didactic poem on the Holy Communion;" and Kehrein as a "severely dogmatic sequence." It is in fact a doctrinal treatise in rivened verse, setting forth the theory of Transubstantiation at length and in precise detail. In stanza vit the refusal of the cup to the laity is implied in the assertion that the whole Christ is given in either species:—
"Sub diversis succiebus

"Sub diversis speciebus, Signis tamen et non rebus Latent res eximiae: Caro cibus, sanguis potus, Manet tamen Caristus totus Sub utraque specie."

This, in Canon Oakeley's tr., 1950, reads:—

"Beneath two differing species
(Signs only, not their substances)
Lie mysteries deep and rure;
His Flesh the meat, the drink his Blood,
Yet Christ entire, our beavenly food,
Beneath each kind is there."

Again in st. x. St. Thomas is very definite and emphatic in his warning:—

"Fracto demum sacramento No vacilles, sed memento, Tantum esse sub fragmento, Quantum toto tegitur. Nulla rei fit scissura, Signi tantum fit fractura Qua nec status nec statura Signati mituitur."

This is tr. by Canon Oakeley as :-

"Nor be thy faith confounded, though The Sacrament be broke; for know, The life which in the whole doth glow, In every part remains; The Spirit which those portions hide No force can cleave; we but divide The sign, the while the Signified Nor change nor loss sustains."

The modern use which is made of the hymn in its English forms will be gathered from the translations noted below.

[J. M.]

In translating this Sequence no difficulty has been found where the translator has held the distinct doctrine of Transubstantiation in common with St. Thomas. The difficulty has arisen when his hard and clear cut sentences have had to be modified, and his dogmatism to be toned down to fit in with convictions of a less pronounced character. The result is that the trs. for private devotion are usually very literal; whilst those for public worship are, either the former modified and arranged in centos, or else paraphrases which have little of the "Lauda Sion" in them but the name. The trs. are:—

- 1. Break forth, O Sion, thy sweet Saviour sing. By F. C. Husenbeth, in his Missal for the Laity, 1840. This paraphrase is extended to 24 st. of unequal length, and is very literal in its doctrinal teaching.
- 2. Praise thy Saviour, Sion, praise Him. By E. B. Pusey in his tr. of the Paradise of the Christian Soul, 1847, p. 133. This is a modified translation.

3. Praise high the Saviour, Sion, praise. By Canon Oakeley, in his tr. of the Paradise of the Christian Soul. London, Burns, 1850, p. 414. A literal translation.

4. Sion, lift thy voice, and sing. By E. Caswall, in his Lyru Catholica, 1849, p. 236; and his Hys. and Poems, 1873, p. 124. A literal tr.

5. Praise, Oh Sion, praise thy Pastor. By J. R. Beste, in his Church Hymns, 1849, p. 17. A literal tr.

6. Zion, thy Redeemer praising. By A. D. Wackerbarth, in his Lyra Ecclesiastica, Pt. ii., 1843, p. 7. A literal tr. Also in O. Shipley's Annus Sanctus, 1884.

 Praise, O Sion, praise thy Paster. In the 1863 Appendix to the Hymnul Noted, No. 218.
 It is based upon Wackerbarth, but indebted more especially to Caswall and Beste.

8. Sion, praise thy Prince and Pastor. By W. J. Blew, in his Church Hy. & Tune Bk., 1852-55. An abbreviated and modified form.

Laud, O Syon, thy Salvation. By J. D. Chambers, in his Lauda Syon, 1857, p. 222. Slightly modified.

10. Laud, O Sion, thy Salvation. A cento in O. Shipley's Divine Liturgy, 1863; again, in a different form, in the Altar Manual, by Littledale and Vanx, 1863, and again in the People's H., 1867. This cento is mainly from Dr., Pusey's, Wackerbarth's, and Chambers's trs. mostly rewritten. This, slightly altered, is in the Hymner, 1882.

11. Praise, O Sion, thy Salvation. A cento in the Hymnary, rewritten mainly from Wackerbarth, Chambers, and the People's H. trs. It is given in two parts, Part ii. being "Lo, the bread which angels feedeth." Another tr. of st. xi., xiii. in 7's metre, is given as Pt. iii., "Earthly pilgrim, joyful see."

12. Laud thy Saviour, Sion praise Him. A cento in 6 st. based chiefly on J. D. Chambers, Dr. Pusey, and others in the 1870 Appendix to the Hyl. for the Use of St. John the Evangelist, Aberdeen.

13. Sion, to Thy Saviour singing. By A. R. Thompson. This is merely a paraphrase of st. i.-iv., xi., xii. The essential part of the hymn is omitted, and as a rendering of St. Thomas's Sequence it has no claim. The 6 sts. appeared in the American Sunday School Times, 1883; and again, in two parts, in Laudes Domini, 1884, Pt. ii. beginning, "Here the King hath spread His table."

14. Sing forth, O Sion, sweetly sing. By J. D. Aylward in O. Shipley's Annus Scattus, 1884.

15. Sion, praise Thy Saviour King. By J. Wallace, in his Hys. of the Church, 1874. A literal translation.

Three versions from the older translators must be mentioned here:—

16. Praise, O Syon! praise thy Saviour. By R. Southwell, in his Maconia, or Certaine excellent Poems and Spiritual Hymnes, &c., 1595.

17. A special theme of praise is read. A cento in 3 st. of 6 l., by Bp. Cosin, in his Coll. of Private Decetions, &c., 1627 (11th ed., 1838, p. 285).

18. Rise, royal Sion, rise and sing. By R. Crawshaw, in the 2nd ed. of his Steps to the Temple, &c., 1648, and again in an altered form into the Dorrington and Hicks editions of John Austin's Devotions (see p. 97, it.).

From the foregoing trs. and center, st. xi.

and xii., beginning, Ecce, panis Angelorum, are often used as a separate hymn. The following are the opening lines:—

1. See for food to pilgrims given. E. B. Pusey. (No. 2.)

3. The Bread of angels, le, is sent. Canon Oakeley. (No. 3.)

3. Lo, upon the Altar Has. E. Caswall. (No. 4.) This is in use as tr. by Caswall, and also altered to "Lo, before our longing eyes," in the Dutch Reformed Hys. of the Church, N. Y., 1869.

4. See the bread of angels lying. J. R. Beste. (No. 5.)

5. Bread that angels eat in heaven. A. D. Wackerbarth. (No. 6.)

 Lo, the Bread which angels feedeth. Hymnal N. (No.-7), and the Hymnary, 1872.

7. Lo, the angels' Food is given. In the Introits prefixed to some eds. of H. A. & M., N. D., and again in the People's H., 1867. This was repeated in the Appendix to H. A. & M., 1868; the Hymnary (with slight alterations), 1872; the Altar Hymnai, 1884. In H. A. & M., 1875, it is claimed on behalf of "The Compilers."

3. Le, the Bread which angels feedeth. J. D. Chambers. (No. 9.)

9. Le the angels' food descending. A.R. Thompson. (No. 13.)

10. Behold, the Brend of angels, sent. J. D. Aylward. (No. 14.)

Although the renderings in part and in whole of the "Lauda Sion" are thus numerous, the use of any of these trs. in public worship is very limited.

Laudes Christo redempti voce modulemur supplici. St. Notker. [Easter.] This is found in an Einsiedeln ms. of the 10th cent., 121, p. 566. It is also in the Prüm Gradual, written c. 1000 (Bibl. Nat. Paris Lat. 9448), and the Echternach Gradual of the 11th cent. (B. N. No. 10510); in the St. Gall mss., Nos. 376, 381, of the 11th cent.; in a ms. c. 1200, in the Bodleian (Litung. Misc. 340 f. 140 b); in a Gradual of the 11th or 12th cent. In the British Museum (Reg. 8 C xiii, f. 13), and others. The printed text is in the Magdeburg Missal, 1480, and other later German Missals; in Daniel, ii. p. 178, and Kehrein, No. 92. Tr. as:—

Praise to Christ with supplient volces. By R. F. Littledale, in Lyra Messianica, 1864, p. 331; and again in the People's H., 1867, No. 116.

Laudes crucis attollamus. Adam of St. Victor. [Passiontide. Holy Cross.] This Sequence has been generally ascribed to Adam of St. Victor, and is given by L. Gautier in his edition of Adam's General pascribed to Adam of St. Victor, and is given by L. Gautier in his edition of Adam's General poetiques, 1881, p. 224, as probably by him, and is there quoted from a Limoges Sequentiary of the 12th or 13th cent. (Bibl. Nat. Paris, No. 1139), and other sources. It is found in a Gradual apparently written in England during the 12th cent., and now in the British Museum (Reg. 2 B. iv. f. 173b); in a ms. of the end of the 12th cent. now in the Bodleian (Liturg. Misc. 341 f. 51b); while Morel, p. 36, cites it as in a Fischingen ms. of the 1th cent., an Einsiedeln ms. of the 12th cent., &c. In a 14th cent. Paris Missal, and a 14th cent. Sens Missal in the British Museum; as also in the Sarum, York, Hereford, St. Andrews, and pany other Missals (e.g. the Magdeburg Missal, 1480); it is the Sequence for the Festival of the Invention or the Exaltation of the Cross. The printed text is also in Daniel, it. p. 78; Kehrein, No. 60; D. S. Wrangham, ii. 46, and others. Dr. Neale, in his Medizval Hymns, speaks of it as "perhaps the masterpiece of Adam of St. Victor"; but this is greatly to overrate it, save for its technical qualities. It is a panegyric of the cross, in which the types in the Old Testament are drawn out at length. It is quite impossible to give an adequate version of it in good English. Tr. as:—

So the Cross our theme and story. By J. M. Neale, in his Mediaval Hymas, 1851, p. 95, in 12 st. of unequal lines. In 1864, 4 st. were given in Skinner's Daily Service Hyl., No. 236; and in 1882, 9 st. in the Hymner, as No. 134.

1. To the Cross its due landstion. D. S. Wrungham, il. 1881.
2. Come, let us with glad music.
O. Shipley's Annus Sunctus. 1884.

[J. M.]

Other tra. are :-

Laudes Salvatori voce modulemur supplici. St. Notker. [Easter.] Among the St. Gall MSS. this Sequence is found in No. 340 of the 10th cent.; Nos. 376, 378, 380, 381 of the 11th cent., &c. It is contained in a Bodleian MS. written c. 1000 (Bodl. 775, f. 188), as a "Sequence on the miracles of Christ and His Resurrection"; in three MSS. of the 12th cent. in the British Museum (Add. 11669, f. 50; Calig. A. xiv. f. 56; Reg. 8, C. xiii. f. 14b), &c. Also in the Sarum, York, Hereford and St. Andrews Missals, the Magdeburg Missal of 1480, and many others. The printed text is also in Dantel, ii, p. 12; Mone, No. 148, Kehrein, No. 181, &c. [J. M.]

The poem is entitled Frigdora, because set to a melody made up of the modes which the Greeks called Phrygian and Dorian, i.e. the first tone mixed with the third (see Du Cange under "Frigdorae," and Dr. Neale's Essays on Liturgiology, p. 379). It sets forth the verity, so essential to be maintained in these days, and so tersely expressed by Dr. Liddon (Bampton Lectures, p. 248), "The miraculous is inextricably interwoven with the whole life of Christ." No wonder then that it was adopted in all the three English Missals—on the Sunday after Easter in the Sarum and the Hereford, and on the Monday in Easter Week in the York. Bishop Andrews, commenting on the words of Isaiah, "Unto us a child is born; unto us a Son is given," and expounding them according to a decree of the Fathers of the Council of Seville, that "the Child imparts His human, the Son His divine power," adds words accurately illustrative of this hymn:—

"All along His life you shall see these two. At His birth, a cratch for the Child, a star for the Son; a company of shephards viewing the Child, a choir of angels celebrating the Son. In His life; hungry Himself, to show the nature of the Child; yet feeding five thousands to show the power of the Son. At His death; dying on the cross, as the Child of Adam; at the same time disposing of Paradise, as the Son of God "(2nd Sermon on the Nativity). The Sequence is tr. as:—

Praise to our Lord and Saviour dear. By Dean Plumptre, made for and first pub. in the Hymnary, 1872, No. 272, in two parts, Pt. ii. beginning, "So wrought He all His Father's will."

Another tr. is:— Let us with lowly voice. C. B. Pearson, in the Sarum Missal in English, 1868, and his Sequences from the Sarum Missal, 1871. [WM. C.]

Laudibus cives resonent canoris. [St. Benedict.] In the Psalmista Monasticum, Venice, 1583, f. 232 b, this is the hymn for the First Vespers of St. Benedict. It is also referred to in a Benedictine Breviary pub. at Venice in 1524; and is in a 15th cent. m.s. at St. Gall (No. 440). Daniel, iv. 329, gives the text from a Cistercian Brev. without mentioning the date of the ed. he used. Tr. as :-

Through the long nave and full resounding states, by E. Caswall, in his Masque of Mary, 1858, p. 333, and again in his Hys. & Poems, 1873, p. 199. It is given in a few Roman Catholic hymn-books for Missions and Schools. [J. M.]

Laurenti, Laurentius, s. of Herr Lorenz, or Laurenti, a burgess of Husum, in Schleswig, was b. at Husum, June 8, 1660. He entered the University of Rostock in 1681, and after a year and a half spent there, went to Kiel to study music. In 1684 he was appointed cantor and director of the music at the cathedrol church at Bremen. He d. at Bremen, May 29, 1722 (Koch, iv. 281; Rotermund's continuation of Jöcher's Gelehrten-Lexicon, iii. 1405, &c.). Laurenti was one of the best hymn-writers of the Pietistic school. His hymns are founded on the Gospels for Sundays and Festivals, and they draw out the bearing on the Christian life of the leading thoughts therein contained. They are of noble simplicity; are Scriptural, fervent, and often of genuine poetical worth. In Frey-linghausen's G. B., 1704 and 1714, no less than 34 are included, and many of these, with others by him, are still in extensive German use. They appeared in his :-- Roangelia Melodica, das ist: Geistliche Lieder, und Lobgesänge, nach dem Sinn der ordentlichen Sons Fest-tages Evangetien, &c. Bremen, 1700 [Royal Library, Berlin], with 148 hymns on the Gospels, and two others.

Of his hymns those which have passed into English are:-

i. Du wesentliches Wort. Christmas. Founded on St. John i. 1-12. In his Evangelia Melodica, 1700, p. 30, in 8 st. of 8 l., entitled, "For the Third Day of Christmas." Included in Freylinghausen's G. B., 1704, No. 20; and, recently, as No. 83, in the Berlin G. L. S., 1863. The trs. in C. U. are:-

1. 0 Thou essential Word, Who from. good tr., omitting st. iii., v., by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger., 1st Ser., 1855, p. 15 (2nd ed., 1856, considerably altered); and repeated, abridged, in Flett's Coll., Paisley, 1871. Varying centos, beginning with st. i., l. 5, altered to "O Saviour of our race," are found in America, as in Boardman's Sel., Philadelphia, 1861; the Pennsylvania Luth. Ch. Bk., 1868; and the Dutch Ref. Hys. of the Church, 1869.

3. 0 Thou essential Word, Who wast. By Miss Winkworth, in her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 54. This is her 1856 version (as above) rewritten to the original metre. Repeated, in full, in Dr. Thomas's Augustine H. Bk., 1866, and the Ohio Luth. Hyl., 1880; and, abridged, in the Eng. Presb. Ps. & Hys., 1867, and Laudes Domini, N. Y., 1884.

ii. Ermuntert euch, ihr Frommen. Second Advent. This is his finest hymn. In his Evangelia Melodica, 1700, p. 353, in 10 st. of 8 l., entitled, "For and St. Andrews Missals. In the Sarum and the 27th S. after Trinity." It is founded on St. Hereford it is the Sequence in the Mass of the

Matt. xxv. 1-13; and unites the imagery of the parable of the Ten Virgins with that of Rev. xx., xxi. Included, as No. 578, in Freylinghausen's G. B., 1704; and, recently, as No. 1519, in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863. The tr. in C. U. is:

Rejoice, all ye believers. By Mrs. Findlater, in H. L. L., 1st Ser., 1854, p. 61 (1884, p. 62), a good tr. of st. i.-iii., viii., viii., x. In full, but altered to the original metre, in Schaff's Christ in Song, 1869 and 1870. This version is found in a large number of English and American hymnals, under the following forms:-

(1) Rejoice, all ye believers (ct. i.). Varying centos are found in Mercer, 1804. Hyl. Comp., 1876, &c.; and in America in Hatfield's Charch H. Bk., 1872, Feang. Hymnol, N. Y., 1880, and others.

Hymnol, N. Y., 1880, and others.

(2) Rejaico, rejoice, believers (st. l. alt.). Varying centos are given in Alford's Fear of Fraise, 1887, Ragliah Presb. Fs. & Hys., 1887, and in America in the Episc. Hymnol., 1871; Hys. & Songs of Fraise, 1874; Ragliah Presb. Fs. & Hys., 1887, and in America in the Episc. Hymnol., 1871; Hys. & Songs of Fraise, 1874; Ragl. H. Bk., 1871; Laudes Domini, 1894; and others.

(3) Rise up, all ye believers (st. l. alt.). In J. A. Johnston's English Hys., 1885, and Kennedy, 1862.

(4) Awakes' rise up, ye faithful (st. l. alt.). In the New Zealand Hymnol., 1872.

(5) Ye saints, who here in patience (st. vil.). In W. Stone's Suppl. Hymnol., 1873, and H. L. Hastings's Songs of Fligriance, 1888.

Other tris. are: (1) "Prepare your lamps, stand ready," by P. H. Molther of st. ii., as No. 887 in the Mordian H. Bk., 1789 (1886, No. 1822). (2) "Awaken, O chosen and faithful," by Mrs. Bevon, 1858, p. 80.

iii. Fliesst ihr Angen, fliesst you Thriknen. Pas-

iii. Fliesst ihr Augen, fliesst von Thränen. Passiontide. In his Evangelia Melodica, 1700, p. 94, in 12 st. of 8 l., entitled, "For Sunday Esto mihi" [Quinquagesima], and founded on St. Luke xviii. 31-43. Included in Freylinghausen's G. B., 1704, No. 82, the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 228, &c. The tr. in C. U. is:-

Flow my tears, flow still feater. By Mrs. Findlater, in H. L. L., 2nd Ser., 1855, p. 48 (1884, p. 107), of st. i., iv., vi., viii.-xii. Repeated, omitting st. viii., iz., xii., altered, and beginning, "Flow my contrite tears, flow faster," in the Amer, Epis. Hys. for Ch. and Home, 1860.

Another tr. is: "Weep, mine eyes, with tears o'er-flowing," by Miss Manington, 1863, p. 55.

The following hymns are not so well known in their translated forms:

iv. Jesu, was hat dish getzieben. Advent. Christ's journey to Jerusalem. 1700, p. 1, in 8 st., entitled, "For the let S. in Advent," and founded on St. Matt. xxi. 1-10. In the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 244. Tr. as: "Jesue! what was that which drew Thee," by Mrs. Findlater in H. L. L., 1866, p. 31. v. Wach auf, mein Hers, die Nacht ist him. Easter;

w. Wach auf, mein Herz, die Racht ist hin. Easter; or, Sunday Moraing. 1700, p. 138, in 10 st., entitled, "On the tat day of Easter." Founded on St. Mark xul. 1-8, and Eph. v. 14. In the User. L. S., 1861, No. 484. The tra. are: (1) "Rouse up, my heart; the Night is o'er." by H. J. Buckoll, 1842, p. 3. (2) "Wake up, my heart, the night has flown," by Mics Manington, 1863, p. 68.
wi. Wer im Harsan will erfahren. Epiphany. 1700, p. 48, in 12 st. of 6 l., entitled, "For the day of the Epiphany of Christ, or Festival of the Three Holy Kings," and founded on St. Matt. ii. 1-12. Repeated in Freylinghausen's G. B., 1704, No. 71 in full. In Bunsen's Versuch, 1832, No. 655 (1881, No. 62), st. 1-3ii., xi., xii. are given. Tr. as: "Is thy heart athirst to know." A good tr. from Bunsen by Misa Winkworth in her Lyra Ger., 2nd Ser., 1858, p. 22, and her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 39.

Laus devota mente. [Common of Evangelists.] This Sequence is found in a Sarum Missal, c. 1370, in the Bodleian (Barlow, 5, page 418); in a late 13th cent. Gradual in the British Museum (Add. 12194, f. 139); and is in the reprints of the Sarum, Hereford Common of an Evangelist. In a Ms. of the beginning of the 14th cent. in the Bodieian (Junius 121), it is ascribed to Gervasius of Chichester, who fl. 1160. Tr. as:-

1. Wake hearts devout whom love inspires. A tr. of st. i.-iii., viii., ix., by Mrs. H. M. Chester, made for and first pub. in the Hymnary, 1872, No. 394, and signed "H. M. C."

2. Praise the true heart's offer. By J. M. Neale, in the St. Margaret's Hymnal, 1875, the Antiphoner and Grail, 1880, and the Hymner,

To Christ your voices raise. C. B. Pearson, in the Sarum Missal in English, 1868, and his Sequences from the Sarum Missal, 1871. [WM. C.]

Lavater, Johann Caspar, s. of Johann Heinrich Layster, physician in Zürich, was b. at Zürich, Nov. 15, 1741. He entered the Academic Gymnasium at Zürich in 1758, and in the end of 1759 began his studies in its theological department. After completing his course he was ordained in the spring of 1762, but did not undertake any regular clerical work till April 1769, when he was appointed discours of the Orphanage church at Zürich, where he became pastor in 1775. In July 1778 he was appointed diaconus of St. Peter's church, and in Dec. 1786 pastor there. When, during the Revolutionary period, the French laid the Swiss Cantons under contribution, and then in April 1799 deported ten of the principal citizens of Zürich, Lavater felt compelled to protest in the pulpit and in print. Consequently while on a visit to Baden, near Zürich, he was seized by French dragoons, May 14, 1799, and taken to Basel, but was allowed to return to Zürich, Aug. 16, 1799. When on Sept. 25, 1799, the French under Massena entered Zürich, Lavater was treacherously shot through the body by a French grenadier, who had just before thanked him for his charity, and from this wound he never entirely recovered. He resigned his charge in January 1800, and d. at Zürich, Jan. 2, 1801. (Koch, vi. 499; Allg. Deutsche Biog., xvii, 783, &c.)

Lavater was one of the most celebrated and influential literary characters of his time; a most popular and striking preacher; and a luvable, genuine, frank-hearted man, who was the object of an almost incredible veneration. His devotional writings (Aussichten in die Ewigkeit, 4 vols., Zürich, 1768-78, &c.), and his works on Physiognomy (Yon der Physiognomist, Leipzig, 1772; Physiognomische Framente, 4 vols., Leipzig and Winsteiner, 1755-78), were easerly read and admired attention. terthur, 1775-78), were eagerly read and admired all over Europe, but were very soon forgotten. He was no theologian, and his warm heart and fertile imagination led him into many untenable positions. His works on Physiognomy are without order or philosophical on Physiognomy are without order or philosophical principles of connection, and their permanent interest is mainly in the very numerous and often well-executed engravings. Of his poems the Schweizerlieder (Hern, 1767, 4th enlarged ed., 1775), are the utterances of a true patriot, and are the most natural and popular of his productions. His Epic poems (1) Jesus Messias, oder die Zakunyft des Herrm, N.D., Zürich, 1780, a poetical version of the Apocalypse; (2) Jesus Messias, oder die Econgolien und Apostelgeschichte in Gesängen, 4 vols., Winterthur, 1783-86. (3) Joseph von Arinathea, Hamburg, 1794) have little abiding value.

As a hymn-writer Lavater was in his day most popular. His hymns are well adapted for private or familly use.

His hymns are well adapted for private or family use. Many of them are simple, fresh, and popular in style, and evangelical, earnest and devout in substance. But for church use he is too verbose, prolix, and rhetorical. Of his hymns (some 700) a considerable number survive in German collections compiled before 1850, e.g. the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1840, has 13; the Witttemberg G. E., 1842, has 15; the Hamburg G. B., 1842, has 23, &c. Slightly altered in Lyra Messianica, 1864, p. 386,

But in the more recent collections almost all have disappeared, e.g., the new hymn-book for the Kingdom of Saxony, 1883, has not a single one. The most important Saxony, 1883, has not a single one. The most important appeared principally in the following works:—(1) Funfing Christicher Lieder, Zürich, 1711. (2) Lieder zum Gebrauche des Waysenhaues zu Zürich, Zürich, Zürich, 1712. (3) Christiche Lieder der Vaterländischen Jugend, besonders auf der Landschaft, gewiedmet, Zürich, 1714. (4) Zweytes Punfaig Christicher Lieder, Zürich, 1716. (5) Christliche Lieder ... Zweytes Hundert, Zurich, 1780. (6) Sechzig Lieder nach dem Zürcherischen Catechismus, Zürich, 1780. [Nos. 1-6 in the Royal Library, Berlin, and 3-6 in the Brit. Mus.]

Those of his hymns which have passed into English include:-

i. 0 du, der einst im Grabe lag. Sunday. In his Lieder, &c., 1772, No. 7, in 9 st. of 4 l., entitled "Sunday Hymn." Included in the Zürich G. B., 1787 and 1853; Bunsen's Versuch, 1833, No. 6, &c. The tr. in C. U. is:-

0 Thou, once laid within the grave. A good tr., omitting st. iii., vii., viii., by H. J. Buckoll, in his Hys. from the German, 1842, p. 9. Repeated, abridged, in the Dalston Hospital H. Bk., 1848, and the Rugby School H. Bk., 1850 and 1876.

Another tr. is: "O Thou who in the grave once lay," by R. Massie, in the British Herald, June, 1865.

ii. O Jesus Christus, wachs in mir. Sanctification. His finest hynn, Founded on St. John iii. 30. 1st pub. in his Christliche Lieder, 1780, No. 85, in 10 st. of 4 l., marked as "On New Year's Day, 1780," and with the motto "Christ must increase, but I must decrease." In Knapp's Ev. L. S., 1837, No. 1644. The tr. in C. U. is:-

O Jesus Christ, grow Thou in me. A good and full tr. in the British Messenger for Nov. 1, 1860. In Schaff's Christ in Song, 1870, p. 108, it is marked as tr. by Mrs. E. L. Smith, the statement that this was its first appearance being an error. If the tr. is really by her, it must have appeared in some American publication prior to Nov. 1860. It has passed, in varying centos, into the Baptist Hyl., 1879, Snepp's Songs of G. & G., 1872, Suppl. of 1874 to the N. Cong., and others: also in Hys. & Songs of Praise, N. Y., 1874, Christian Hyl., Adelaide, 1872, &c.

iii. O sussester der Namen all. Name of Jesus, or, New Year. 1st pub. in his Sechszig Lieder, 1780, No. 25, in 4 st. of 7 l., as the second hymn on "Jesus Christ, the only begotten Son of God, our Lord. Second article of the Christian Faith." It is appointed for the 16th Sunday, and for the 39th and 40th questions of the Zürich Calechism. In the Berg Mark G. B., 1835, No. 319; and included in a number of the German Roman Catholic H. Bks., as those for St. Gall, 1863, Rottenburg, 1865, and others. The tr. in C. U. is:-

O Name, than every name more dear. A good fr. of st. i., iii., iv., by A. T. Russell, in his Ps. & Hys., 1851, No. 68. Repeated in Maurice's Choral H. Bk., 1861, Meth. New Connexion H. Bk., 1863, New Zealand Hyl., 1872, &c.

Besides the above a considerable number of pieces by Lavater have been tr. by Miss Henrietta J. Fry, in her Pastor's Legacy, 1842 (which consists entirely of tre. from Lavater); in her Hys. of the Reformation, 1845; and in her Echoes of Eternity, 1859. [J. M.]

Lawson, John, was b. at Trowbridge, Wiltshire, July 24, 1787. He was articled to a wood-engraver in London; but believing that his knowledge of various manual arts might make him useful in the foreign mission field, he offered himself to the Baptist Missionary Society, and was sent to India. He arrived at Serampore in 1812, and soon rendered good service by showing how to reduce the types for printing used in the Eastern languages. He subsequently became pastor of a Baptist Church in Calcutta, devoting also much time to the work of education, He d. Oct. 22, 1825. Mr. Lawson was an accomplished naturalist and a good musician, but his favourite recreation was the composition of poetry. Orient Harping, Roland, and other poems were published by him between the years 1820 and 1825. Two of his hymns were printed in the Baptist New Selection, 1828 :-

1. Father of mercies, condescend. Prayer for a

2. Fountain of truth and grace and power. Prayer for the Jews.

Lead, kindly Light, amid the encircling gloom. Card. J. H. Newman. [Evening. Divine Guidance Desired.] This exquisite lyric has been the cause of much controversy, arising from the facts that, first, the statement has been made that it was the passionate outpouring of the author's soul when perplexed with doubt as to his duty with regard to entering the Roman Communion or no; and the second, that the closing lines-

" And with the morn those angel faces smile, Which I have loved long since and lost awhile," through their ambiguity, have led to several ingenious interpretations, some of which appeared in Notes and Queries in 1880. The answer to each of these statements must be given, as fur as possible, in Cardinal Newman's own words.

i. Cardinal Newman, in his Apologia Pro Vita Sua, 1864, pp. 94-100, sets forth his attitude at the time this lyric was written, both towards the Church of England and the Church of Rome, in a most careful and elaborate manner. His statements, in a condensed form, but in his own words, are :-

"While I was engaged in writing my work on the Arians (1832), great events were happening at home and abroad, which brought out into form and passionate exaproad, which rought out the form and passionate ex-pression the various beliefs which had so gradually been winning their way into my mind. Shortly before, there had been a Revolution in France; the Bourbons had been dismissed: and I believed that it was unchristian for nations to cust off their governors, and, muci more, sovereigns who had the divine right of inheritance. Again, the great Reform Agitation was going on around me as I wrote. The Whigs had come into power; Lord Grey had told the Bishops to set their house in order, and some of the Frelates had been insuited and threat-eped in the streets of London. The vital question was ened in the streets of London. The vital question was how were we to keep the Church from being liberalized? there was such apathy on the subject in some quarters, such imbedie alarm in others; the true principles of Churchmanship seemed so radically decayed, and there were such distractions in the Councils of the Clergy With the Establishment thus divided and threatened, thus ignorant of its true strength, I consend that freesh vigorous power of which I was reading pared that fresh vigorous power of which I was reading in the first centuries I said to myself, 'Look on this picture and on that'; I felt affection for my own Church, but not tenderness; I felt dismay at her prospects, anger and scorn at her do-nothing perplexity. I thought that if Liberalism once got a footing within her, it was sure of the victory in the event. I saw that Reit was sure of the victory in the event. I saw that Re-formation principles were powerless to rescue her. As to leaving her, the thought never crossed my imagina-tion; still I ever kept before me that there was some-thing greater than the Established Church, and that that was the Church Catholic and Apostolic, set up from the beginning, of which she was but the local presence and organ. She was nothing, unless she was this. She must be dealt with strongly, or she would be lost. There was need of a second Reformation.

"At this time I, was disampted from College duties."

was need of a second Reformation.

"At this time I was disengaged from College duties, and my health had suffered from the labours involved in the composition of my volume.... I was easily persuaded to join Hurrell Froude and his father, who were going to the south of Europe for the health of the former. We set out in December, 1832. It was during this expedition that my verses which are in the Lyra Apostolica were written; a few indeed before it; but not more than one or two of them after it.... The strangeness of foreign life threw me back into myself; I found pleasure in historical sites and beautiful scenes, not in men and manners. We kept clear of Catholics throughpleasure in historical sites and beautiful scenes, not in men and manners. We kept clear of Catholies through-out our tour.... I saw nothing but what was ex-ternal; of the hidden life of Catholies I knew nothing. I was still driven back into myself, and felt my isolation. England was in my thoughts solely, and the news from England came rarely and imperfectly. The Bill for the Suppression of the Irish Sees was in progress, and filled my mind. I had fierce thoughts against the Liberals. It was the success of the Liberal cause which feetied me invarially. I became force gradual is instrulaborate. It was our streets of was a security from the fretted me inwardly. I became ferce against its instruments and its manifestations... Especially when I was left to myself, the thought came upon me that deliverance is wrought, not by the many but by the few, not by bodies but by persons . . . I began to think I had a mission . . . When we took leave of Monsignore I had a mission When we took leave of Monsignore Wiseman, he had courteously expressed a wish that we might make a second visit to Rome: I said with great gravity, 'We have a work to do in England,' I went down at once to Sicily, and the presentiment grew stronger. I struck into the middle of the island, and fell ill of a fever at Leonforte. My servant thought that I was dying, and begged for my last directions. I gave them, as he wished; but I said 'I shall not die.' I repeated, 'I shall not die, for I have not sinned against light,' I have not sinned against light,' I never have been able to make out at all what I meant. I got to been able to make out at all what I meant. I got to Castro-Giovanni, and was laid up there for nearly three weeks. Towards the end of May I set off for Palermo. taking three days for the journey. Before starting from my inn in the morning of May 28th or 27th, I sat down in my bed, and began to sob bitterly. My servant, who acted as my nurse, asked what alled me. I could only answer, 'I have a work to do in England.' I was aching to get home; yet for want of a 'essel I was kept at Palermo for three weeks. I began to visit the Churches, and they calmed my impatience, though I did not attend any services. I knew nothing of the Presence of the Biessed Sacrament then. At last I got off in an orange boat bound for Marseilles. We were becalmed a whole week in the Straits of Bonifaclo. Then it was that I wrote the lines 'I lead, kindly light' [June 16, 1833], which have since become well known. I was writing verses the whole time of my passage. At length I got to Marseilles, and set off for England. The futigue of travelling was too much for me, and I was laid up for several days at Lyons. At last I got off sgain and did not stop night or day till I reached England, and my mother's house. My brother had arrived from Persia only a few bours before. This was Tuesday. The following Sunday, July 14th, Mr. Keble preached the Assive Sermon in the University Pulpit. It was published under the title of 'National Apostasy.' I have ever considered and kept the day as the start of the religious movement of 1833."

"Now to trace the succession of thoughts, and the conclusions, and the consequent innovations on my pre-vious belief, and the general conduct, to which I was led, upon this sudden visitation [stated on the previous page]. and first, I will say, whatever comes of saying it, for I leave inferences to others, that for years I must have had something of an habitual notion, though it was latent, and had never led me to distrust my own conlatent, and had never led me to distrust my own convictions, that my mind had not found its ultimate rest, and that in some sense or other I was on journey. During the same passage across the Mediterranean in which I wrote 'Lead, kindly light,' I also wrote verses, which ure found in the Lyra under the head of 'Providences,' beginning,' When I look back.' This was in 1833; and, since I have begun this narrative, I have found a memorandum under the date of September 7, 1829, in which I speak of myself, as 'now in my room in Oriel College, slowly advancing, &c., and led on by God's hand blindly, not knowing whither He is taking me.'"

This, then, is the author's account of the state of his personal feeling, and the circum-stances which surrounded him at the time that he wrote what must be regarded as one of the finest lyrics of the nineteenth century, Angry at the state of disunion and supineness in the Church he still loved and in which he still believed; confident that he had "a mission," "a work to do in England;" passionately longing for home and the converse of friends; sick in body to prostration, and, as some around him feared, even unto death; feeling that he should not die but live, and that he must work, but knowing not what that work was to be, how it was to be done, or to what it might tend, he breathed forth the impassioned and pathetic prayer, one of the birth-pange, it might be called, of the Oxford movement of 1833 :-

" Lead, Kindly Light, amid the encircling gloom,

Lead Thou me on;
The night is dark, and I am far from home,
Lead Thou me on.

Keep Thou my feet; I do not ask to see The distant scene; one step enough for me. I was not ever thus, nor prayed that Thou Shouldst lead me on;

I loved to choose and see my path; but now
Lead Thou me on.
I loved the garish day, and, spite of fears,
Pride ruled my will: remember not past years.

So long Thy power hath blest me, sure it still Will lead me on
O'er moor and fen, o'er crag and torrent, till
The night is gone,
And with the morn those angel faces smile,
Which I have loved long since, and lost awhile."

ii. The ambiguity of the two closing lines has caused much speculation and controversy. Summarised, the principal interpretations

1. The troubled and besitating spirit finds itself "amid encircling gloom"; "the night is dark"; and the soul has lost awhile the "angel faces," not only of Fancy and Hope and Youthful Confidence, but of those divine forms of faith and assurance, which it had "loved long since," which had accompanied the believer during the early ferrour of his belief.—Notes and Queries, April 3, 1880.

2. A second interpretation is that "those angel faces are the faces of the ministering spirits, "eent forth to minister to them who shall be heirs of salvation."

minister to them who shall be helrs of salvation."

3. A third interpretation is that these lines are expressive of the Christian's hope of being re-united on the resurrection morn with those loved and lost by death on earth. (N. & Q., April 3, 1880.) This application of the lines is set forth in a window of one of the churches of Clevedon. An angel is represented as coaring upwards, bearing away from earth two infants in his arms, and these two lines are quoted underneath.

—N. & Q., &th S. II., Aug. 7, 1880, p. 118.

4. A fourth interpretation is, "When all the absorbing business, and care and pleasures of life are beginning to weary us, when the world is losing something of its hold on us, and we once more catch glimpses as it were of that other life which most of us here at some time dreamed, and perhaps, though all too feebly, striven for, that other life which most of us here at some time dreamed, and perhaps, though all too feebly, striven for, then the better soul wakes from its alumbers; the night is gone, "And with the morn those angel faces smile," &c..—N. & Q., 8th. S. I., May 8, 1880, p. 385.

5. Another explanation is suggested in the question, "Do these lines refer to the more intimate communion of infants with the unseen world of spirits which was lost in later years?"—N. & Q., 8th S. I., June 12, 1880, p. 480.

To all which, and to all other interpretations that have been made or may be made. Cardinal Newman gives answer in a letter to Dr. Greenhill, printed in the Guardian, Feb. 25, 1880, p. 257, and repeated in N. & Q., 6th S. I., March 20, 1880, p. 232.

"The Oratory, January 18, 1879. "The Oratory, January 18, 1879.

"My dear Dr. Greenhill,—You flatter me by your questions; but I think it was Keble who, when asked it in his own case, answered that poets were not bound to be critice, or to give a sense to what they had written, and though I am not like him, a poet, at least I may plead that I am not bound to remember my own meaning, whatever it was, at the end of almost fifty years. Anyhow there must be a statute of limitation for writers of verse, or it would be quite tyramy if in an art, which is the expression, not of truth, but of imagination and sentiment, one were obliged to be ready for nation and sentiment, one were obliged to be ready for examination on the transient states of mind which came upon one when home sick, or sea sick, or in any other way sensitive, or excited.

"Yours most truly, John H. Newman."

We may add that in thus forgetting the meaning of a passage written so long before, the author is not alone. Coleridge, Goethe, and other poets have confessed to the same infirmity.

iii. The history of the publication of this lyric is very simple, the only noticeable feature being the changes in the motto which may be taken as setting forth the meaning Cardinal Newman attached to it at various Cardinal Newman attached to it at various periods in his history. It was first pub. in the British Magazine, March, 1834, with the motto "Faith-Heavenly Leadings," again in Lyra Apostolica, 1836, p. 28, the motto reading, "Unto the godly there ariseth up light in the darkness": and again in the author's Occasional Verses, 1868, the motto being "The Pillar of the Cloud."

iv. Alterations in, and additions to, the text are not numerous. Bishop Bickersteth's additional stanza reads in the Hy. Comp.: ---

" Meantime along the narrow rugged path, Thyself hast trod, Lead, Saviour, lead me home in Child-like faith Home to my God,
To rest for ever after earthly strife
In the calm light of everlasting life."

To this stanza Bishop Bickersteth has added this explanation in his Notes of 1876:-

"The last verse, which is founded on the Collect for St. John the Evangelist's day, and which it is hoped will be found in unison with those that precede it, was added by the Editor from a sense of need and from a deep conviction that the heart of the belated pilgrim can only find rest in the Light of Light."

Alterations of the text are few. In Dr. Bonar's Bible H. Bk., 1845, No. 116, it begins, "Lead, Saviour, lead, amid the encircling gloom"; and "the garish day," is changed to "the glare of day." Two or three books have also adopted this reading. In the Hys. for Church and Home, Compiled by Members of the Protestant Episcopal Church, Philadelphia, 1860, it begins, "Sond, Lord, Thy light amid th' encircling gloom." "I loved the garish day," reads, "I loved day's dazzling light"; and st. iii. 11. 1-4:—

"So long Thy power hath bless'd me, surely still "Twill lead me on Through dream hours, through pain and serrow, till The night is gone."

In the Unitarian Hys. of the Spirit, Boston, U. S. A., 1864, the original first line is restored; "day's dazzling light" is retained; and the lines above are repeated with "dreary hours" changed to dreary doubts." Another alteration is "Send kindly light," &c. (H. W. Beecher's Plymouth Coll., 1855). The weakness of all these amendments is the surest safeguard against their general adoption.

The hymn has been rendered into several languages. The Latin versions are :-- "O Lux benigna duce," by the Rev. H.M. Macgill, 1876; and "O Lux alma, bono protitus suspice," by the Rev. Jackson Mason, and "Alma Lux, inter media tenebras," by "C. G. G.," both in the Guardian of Jan. 3, 1883.

Lead us, Heavenly Father, lead us. J. Edmeston. [Holy Trinity—Invocation of.] Appeared in his Sacred Lyrics, set two, 1821, in 3 st. of 7 l., and entitled "Hymn, Written for the Children of the London Orphan Asylum (Air Lewes)." In 1858 it was included in the Bap. Ps. & Hys., No. 564, and from that date it has grown gradually into favour until it has attained to a foremost place amongst modern hymns in all English-speaking countries. It is generally given in a correct and complete form as in Thring's Coll., 1882. It has been rendered into several languages, including Latin. The Rev. R. Bingham, in his Hymno. Christ. Lat., 1871, has tr. it as "Duc nos, Genitor Coelestis."

Leader of faithful souls, and Guide. C. Wesley. [The Christian Race.] Appeared in Hyn. for those that Seek, and those that Have Bedemption, 1747, No. 41, in 8 st. of 6 l., and entitled "The Traveller" (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. iv. p. 262). In 1776, Toplady included 7 st. in his Psalms & Hys. 28 No. 269, and from thence it passed into various collections of the Church of England, including Bickersteth's Christian Psalmody, 1833, and others. As found in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, No. 69, other Methodist bodies, st. v. and vii. are omitted. Its American use is great. [J. J.]

Leaton-Blenkinsopp, Edwin Clennell, M.A., s. of G. Leaton-Blenkinsopp, was b. Jan. 1, 1819, and educated at University College, Durham (B.A. 1839, M.A. 1842). Taking Holy Orders, he was, in 1844, Curate of Ormskirk; in 1851 Incumbent of St. James's, Lathom; in 1855 Chaplain to the English Army in Turkey, at Algiers in 1859, and at the Fortifications of Portsmouth in 1862. In 1863 he became Rector of Springthorpe, Liucolnshire. Mr Leaton-Blenkiusopp has pub. The Doctrine of Development in the Bible and in the Church, 1869, and has contributed numerous papers to periodical literature. His original hymns, together with tre. from the Latin, appeared in Lyra Messianica, 1864; Lyra Mystica, 1865; and The People's H., 1867. The tra. are annotated under their respective first Latin lines. His original hymna include:-

1. 0 noble martyr, thee we sing. St. George. In the People's H., 1867.

8. The Tree of Life in Eden stood. The Tree of Life.

Lees, Jonathan, sprung from an old Nonconformist family in Lancashire, was b. at Manchester, Aug. 7, 1835. He was educated at Owens College and the Lancashire In-dependent College, and in 1861 went as Congregationalist Missionary to Tientsin, in North China, where he has since laboured.

Mr. Lees was one of a band of young men who, about the year 1852, began the first Sunday Evening Ragged School in England, in Sharp Street, Angel Meadow, Manchester. For use in this school he made a collection of hymns, which after a time was published as Sacred Snap for Home & School (Bremaer, Manchester.) Nine or ten of these hymns were composed by Mr. Lees, Dwide his particles of China be her park several collection. Nine or ten of these hymns were composed by Mr. Lees. During his residence in China he has pub several collections of Temperance Melodies, the largest and most recent being entitled Original & Selected Temperance Songs, together with Select Mymns, intended mainly for the use of Sailors in the Fur East. Shanghai, 1881. Fifteen of these, composed chiefly to popular secular tunes, are by Mr. Lees himself. Besides the hymns and songs contained in these books, about 20 other pieces have appeared on leaflets or in magazines. One, a missionary hymn commencing "They are coming I they are coming I is in W. R. Stevenson's School Hymnol, where by mistake it is attributed to another author.

One of the most widely used of Christian Hymnals in the Chinese language was edited by Mr. Lees in 1872 (London Mission, Tientain); and more recently he has prepared a smaller volume, consisting chiefly of transletions of the more popular hymns in I. D. Sankey's collection. For particulars concerning these books see Article on Missions, Foreign. [W. R. S.]

Leeson, Jane E. The earliest work by and later editions, and in the collections of Miss Leeson with which we are acquainted is her Infant Hymnings. Then followed Humus and Scenes of Childhood, or A Sponsor's Gift (London, James Burns; Nottingham, Dearden), 1842, in which the Infant Hymnings were incorporated. Concerning Pt. ii. of the Hys. and Scenes, &c., Miss Leeson says, "For the best of the Poems in the second part, the Writer is indebted to a friend." In the Rev. Henry Formby's Catholic Hymns arranged in order for the principal Festivals, Feasts of Saints, and other occasions of Devotion throughout the Year, Lond., Burns and Lambert, N.D. [1851], "Imprimatur, N. Cardinalis Wiseman, May 3rd, 1853," her tr. of Victimae Paschali ("Christ the Lord is risen to-day"), and her "Loving Shepherd of Thy Sheep" (also in Hys. & Science, 1842), were given under the signature "M. L." Her Paraphrases and Hymne for Congregational Singing (most of which were re-written from the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases (q.v.), 1781) were pub. by Wertheimer & Co., Lond., in 1853. In the Irvingite Hys. for the Use of the Churches, 1864, there are five of her original hymns and four of her trs. from the Latin under the signature of "J. E. L.;" and most of these were repeated in the 2nd ed., 1871. In addition Miss Leeson is the author of several other works, including The Christian Child's Book, 1848, The Child's Book of Ballads, 1849, Songs of Christian Chivalry, 1848, Margaret, a Poem, 1850, The Seven Spiritual Works of Mercy, and others. Her hymns in C. U. include :-

Miss Leeson's most popular hymn, "Loving

Miss Leeson's most popular hymn, "Loving Shepherd of Thy Sheep," and her trs. from the Latin are noted elsewhere in this work. Of Miss Leeson's personal history we can gather nothing. B. 1807; d. 1882. [J. J.]

Lehr, Leopold Franz Friedrich, s. of Johann Jakob Lehr, Hofrath at Cronenburg

(Cronberg, Kronberg), near Frankfurt-am-Main, was b. at Cronenburg, Sept. 3, 1709, and entered the University of Jena in 1729. In 1730 he went to Halle to study under J. J. Rambach and G. A. Francke; and here he also acted as tutor to the children of J. A. Freylinghausen, and conducted devotional meetings at the Orphanage. In July 1731 he became a tutor at Cöthen (Köthen) to the princesses of Anhalt-Cöthen, and held this post till 1740, when he was appointed diaconus of the Lutheran church at Cöthen. While on a visit to his father-in-law at Magdeburg he was seized with fever, and d. there, Jan. 26, 1744. (Koch, vi. 446, &c.)

1744. (Koch, vi. 446, &c.)

Lehr's hymns are full of love to Christ and of the wonders of the redeeming grace of God. They are allied to those of Allendorf (q.v.), and were also mostly contributed to the Countries Lieder (p. 50, fi.), of which he was joint editor. In 1757 they were edited along with his other poetical works as his Himisches Vergnügen in Gott und Christo, Halle, 1757. (Wernigerode Library) by Samuel Helmich, then court preacher the Glickstadt, Holstein, who had married Lehr's widow. Those which have passed into English are:

1. Mein Helland niemt die Sünder an. Lent, or The Friend of Sinners. Written in 1731 or 1732 as a companion to the hymn "Jesus minumt die Sünder an lese Remmeister]. 1st pub. in the Einige gestreiche Lieder, Cüthen, 1733, No. 9, in 11 st. of 10 1., entitled "Luke xv. 2. Leland, John, an American Baptist minister, was b. at Grafton, Massachusetts, on May 15th, 1754, and began to preach at the age of 20. From 1776 to 1790 he was in Virginia, and thereafter in Massachusetts, mostly at Cheshire. He d. Jan. 14, 1841. His Sermons, Addresses, Essays and Auto-biography were pub. by his niece, Miss L. F. Greene, at Lauesboro, Massachusetts, in 1845. His influence seems to have been equalled by his peculiarities. We hear of his "restless devotion to politics," wherein he had much local and temporary weight; his "ready wit and endless eccentricities;" as also of his high character. Of the hymns which have been ascribed to him, some on doubtful authority, the following are the most important:-

1. The day is past and gone, The evening, &c. Erening. This is in universal American use, and Leland's claim to the authorship has never been disputed, although it is supported by no known particulars. It was first made widely known by the invaluable Hartford Selection (Congregational) of 1799. Its first appearance, so far as known, was in Philomela, or, A Selection of Spiritual Songs, by George Roberts, Petersburg, 1792, No. 82.

2. O when shall I see Jesus ! The Christian Race. This vigorous lyric is ascribed by Dr. Hitchcock, in Hymns and Songs of Praise, 1874, to Leland. It has generally been regarded as anonymous, and is of uncertain date, cir. 1807, or probably earlier.

8. Christians, if your hearts are warm. Holy Baptism. Adult. The only hymn by Leland which can be authenticated by date and circumstances is this familiar doggerel :-

"Christians, if your hearts are warm, Ice and snow can do no harm."

Dr. Belcher says, in his Historical Shetches of Hymns, &c., 1859, that it was written for one of Leland's large baptisms in Virginia, 1779.

[F. M. B.]

Leon, Johannes, was a native of Ohrdruf, near Goths. He was for some time an army chaptain, then in 1557 pastor at Königsee (Schwarzburg - Rudolstadt), in 1560 at Gross-Mühlhausen, and in 1575 at Wölfis, near Ohrdruf. He d. at Wölfs, about Easter, 1597 (Allg. Deutsche Biog., xviii. 298; Wackernagel, i. pp. 466, 654; iv. p. 490, &c.). Leon's hymns appeared principally in his (1) Handbüchlen; Frankfurt-am-Main, 1566, and (2) Trostbüchlcia. The ed. printed at Nürnberg, 1611, has a preface of Dec. 9, 1588, so that the first ed. was probably 1589. His hymns are reprinted in Wackernagel, iv., Nos. 671-715. The only hymn ascribed to him which has passed into English is:--- Ich hab mein Sach Gott heimgestellt. For the Dying. Wackernagel, iv. p. 519, gives this, in 18 st. of 5 l., from the Psalmen, geistliche Lieder und Kirchengesäng, Nürnberg, 1589; with a long note, in which he traces all the st. save xi., xiv., xv., xvii., to Leon's Trostbüchlein, and to his Leich-Predigten [i.e. "Funeral Sermons"], 1581-82. Mützell, No. 347, cites it as in the Psalmon, geistliche Lieder und Lobgesänge, Strassburg, n.D., but apparently before 1587. In the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 1460.

Gr. L. S., ed. 1803, No. 1480.

This bymn has been frequently ascribed to Dr. Johann Pappus [b. Jan. 16, 1549, at Lindau on the Lake of Constanz; 1871, professor of Hebrew at the University of Strassburg; d. at Strassburg, July 13, 1610]; but this ascription has not been traced earlier than about 1840, e.g. in the Cantionale sucrum, Gotha, p. iii., 1848, No. 18, and the Königsberg G. B., 1850, p. 530. Lauxmann, in Kock, viii, 609, thinks that Pappus may have arranged the hymn in its present form. It was probably suggested by a song beginning, "Ich hab meine Sach zu Gott gestellt," which Wackersagel, iii., Nos. 1242, 1243, quotes from a Leipzig broadsheet of 1855, and other sources.

This hymn has been tr. as:-

1. My Life I now to God resign. By J. C. Jacobi, in his Psal. Ger., pt. ii., 1725, p. 56 (1732, p. 199), omitting st. vii., xv., xvi. Repeated in the Moravian H. Bk., 1754, pt. i., No. 313 (1886, No. 1242, beginning with the tr. of st. viii., "Teach us to number so our days"), and in J. A. Latrobe's Coll., 1841 and 1852. In the Bible H. Bh., 1845, it begins with st. iii., "What is this life? a constant scene."

repeated, abridged, in Dr. Pagenstecher's Coll., 1864, and Kennedy, 1863, No. 156. Dr. Kennedy, also gives a cento, beginning with the tr. of st. x., "Few are our days and sad below."

3. My cause is God's, and I am still. A good tr. of st. i., xi.-xiv., xvi.-xviii., by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Gor., 2nd Ser., 1858, p. 210; repeated, omitting the trs. of st. xii., xvii., in her C. E. for England, 1863, No. 127. [J. M.]

Leslie, Emma. [Toke, Emma.]

Leslie, Mary Eliza, is daughter of Andrew Leslie, for many years Baptist missionary in Calcutta, was b. at Monghyr, Jan. 13, 1834, became a member of her father's church, and having received a superior education, was for eight years Superintendent of an Institution for the education of Hindoo young ladies. Since 1877 Miss Leslie has been engaged in various kinds of philanthropic work in Calcutta. Her publications include :-

(1) Ina and Other Poems, 1852. (2) Sorrows and Aspirations, 1858. (3) Heart Echoes from the East; or, Sacred Lyrics and Sonnets (London, Nisbet, 1861). (4) The Daven of Light; a Story for Hindoo Women, 1887. (5) Eastern Blossoms; a Story for native Christian Women, 1875. (6) A Child of the Day, 1882.

In the Heart Echoes from the East is a lyric beginning "They are gathering homeword from every land (Death contemplated), which has been exceedingly popular, and has been reprinted in many forms. It is in W. 11. Stevenson's School Hymnal, 1880. Several of Miss Leslie's lyrics and sonnets are very good, and worthy of the attention of hymn-book compilers. [W. B. S.]

Let all the world in every corner sing. G. Herbert. [Praise to God, the King.] First pub. posthumously in his Temple, in 1633, p. 45, in the following form :-

" ANTUPHONE. "Cho. Let all the world in ev'ry corner sing, My God and King.

" fors. The beavens are not too high, His praise may thither file: The earth is not too low, His praises there may grow.

"Cho. Let all the world in ev'ry corner sing, My God and King.

" Fers. The church with psalms must shout, No doors can keep them out: But above all, the heart Must bear the longest part.

"Cho. Let all the world in ev'ry corner sing, My God and King." Although admirably adapted for musical treatment, the original form of the text is not popular with modern editors. We have the original in Thring's Coll., 1882; and in the Hymnary, 1872, the same, with the addition of a doxology. Usually the text is rearranged, sometimes, as in the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871; Horder's Cong. Hys., 1884, &c.; and again, in other collections in a dif-ferent manner. This hymn is also in C. U. in America.

Let earth and heaven agree, Angels ad men, &c. C. Wesley. [Praise of and men, &c. Jesus as the Redeemer.] Appeared in the Hys. on God's Everlasting Love, London, 1741, No. 11, in 10 st. of 6 l. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. iii. p. 71). In whole or in part, it soon 2. My all I to my God commend. A very good came into general use not only by the followers tr. of st. i., iii., vi., viii., x., xi., xiv., xvii., by of the Wesleys, but also by many who, on A. T. Russell, as No. 246, in his Ps. & Hys., 1851; Calvinistic grounds, opposed them, and against whom the Hys. on God's Everlasting Love were written, M. Madan included st. i.—iv. in his Ps. & Hys., 1760, No. 90, and this form of the hymn was repeated by A. M. Toplady in his Ps. & Hys., 1776; and again by others to modern hymn-books in the Church of England. Nonconformists also copied this form of the hymn. In the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, st. i.—v., vii. and ix. were given as No. 33. This is the form of the hymn most popular in G. Britain and America. The following centos are also in C. U:—

1. Jesus, harmonious Name. Composed of st. iii. iv., vii. and ix., is in the American Andover Subbath H. Bk., 1858, and others.

Bk., 1858, and others.

2. Jesus, transporting sound. In the Hymnary, 1872, this is composed of st. ii.-iv., vi.-ix., x., considerably altered.

In G. J. Stevenson's Methodist II. Bk. Notes, 1883, p. 42, several interesting reminiscences of this hymn are recorded, mainly from Wesleyan sources.

[J. J.]

Let Jacob to his Maker sing. P. Doddridge. [God the Guide of Israel.] 1st pub. in Job Orton's edition of Doddridge's (posthumous) Hymns, &c., 1755, No. 102, in 5st. of 4 l., and again in J. D. Humphreys's edition of the same, 1839, No. 118. It is in C. U. in its full form in America, and also, beginning with st. ii. as "God knews our souls in all their fears," in the Boston Church Pastorals, 1864. [J. J.]

Let me alone [another] this only year. C. Wesley. [Death Anticipated.] Pub. in Preparation for Death in Several Hymns, 1772, No. 43, in 4 st. of 8 l. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. vii. p. 396). In 1830 it was given in the supplement to the Wes. H. Bh. as "Let me alone another year"; and this has been repeated in a few collections. The hymn "Because for me the Saviour prays," in the American Meth. Episco. Hymns, 1849, No. 381, is from this hymn, and begins with the second half of st. i. with the lines transposed. [J. J.]

Let me be with Thee where Thou art. Charlotte Elliott. [Heaven Anticipated and Desired.] This hymn, which is usually attributed to the 1st ed. of Miss Elliott's Hours of Sorrow, &c., 1836, really appeared in her brother's Brighton Ps. & Hys., 3rd thousand, 1839, No. 412, in 4 st. of 4 l., and signed "O. E." It was repeated, with slight alterations, in her Hys. for a Week, 1842; and again, slightly altered, in late editions of the Invalid's H. Bk. The text usually followed by modern editors is that of 1842, as in Lord Selborne's Bk. of Praise, 1862, where it is given with the change in st. iv., 1. 3, of "life nor death" to "death nor life." The S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871, is an exception in favour of several changes in the text, and Kennedy's, 1863, is the greatest departure from the original. The American books vary in their texts in common with those of G. Britain.

Let not your hearts with anxious thoughts. William Robertson. [Ascension.] First appeared as No. 14 in the Draft Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, 1745, as a version of John xiv. 1-5, in 6 st. of 41. In the Draft of 1781, No. 42, st. iii. was omitted; st. iv. rewritten: and st. i. slightly altered.

Thence, unaltered, in the public-worship ed. issued in that year by the Church of Scotland and still in use. In the markings by the eldest daughter of W. Cameron (p. 200, ii.) the original is ascribed to Robertson, and the alterations in the 1781 text to Cameron. The revised text of 1781 is included in the Eng. Presb. & Hymns, 1867, and a few other collections. In Porter's Selection, Glasgow, 1853, it is altered to "Let not your hearts—'tis Jeaus speaks," and in the Twickenham Chapel Coll., 1845, p. 60, to "Let not your hearts be troubled now."

troubled now." [J. M.]

Let party names no more. B. Beddome.

[For Unity.] 1st pub. in the Bristol Bap.

Coll. of Ash and Evans, 1769, No. 360, in 4 st. of 4 i., entitled "Christian Love," and signed "B. B." It was also given in Beddome's (posthumous) Hymns, &c., 1817, No.

638, but with the title changed to "Communion of Saints." In some hymn-books it begins with st. ii., "Among the saints on earth"; and in others the opening line is changed to "Let names of strife no more."

In its various forms it is in extensive use amongst Nonconformists, and especially in America. [J. J.]

Let saints on earth their anthems [voices] raise. J. Evans. [Praise to Jesus as the Prince of Peace.] Pub in the 2nd ed. of Burder's Coll. of Hymns, 1784, No. 191, in 4 st. of 4 l., and headed "Prince of Peace." It is found in several modern hymn-books, as Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bk., 1866; Snepp's Songe of G. & G., 1872, and others. [J. J.]

Let songs of praises fill the sky. T. Cotterill. [Whitsuntide.] Pub. anonymously in his Selection, 8th ed., 1819, No. 229, in 4 st. of 6 l.; and again, with his name, in Montgomery's Christian Psalmist, 1825, No. 291. It is in C. U. in most English-speaking countries, and sometimes reduced to o.m. as in the New Cong., 1859 and 1874. [J. J.]

Let such as would with wisdom dwell. William Cameron. [Godly Sorrow.] First appeared as No. 14 in the Draft Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, 1781, as a version of Eccles. vii. 2-6, in 5 st. of 4 l. In the public worship ed. issued in that year by the Church of Scotland and still in use, st. i. was reversed, ll. 1, 2, being given as ll. 3, 4; and ll. 3, 4 rewritten, so that it began "While others crowd the house of mirth;" ll. 1, 2 of st. ii. being also rewritten, and ll. 1, 3 of st. iii. altered. In the markings of the Trs. & Paraphs. by the eldest daughter of W. Cameron (p. 200, ii.) it is ascribed to Cameron. The revised text of 1781 is included in the United Presb. H. Bk., 1852, Porter's Selection, Glasgow, 1853, and a few other collections.

Let the world lament their dead. C. Wesley. [Burial.] Appeared in Hys. & Sac. Poems, 1742, in 6 st. of 8 l. (P. Works, vol. ii. p. 186). In the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, st. iv.-vi. were given as No. 57: "Jesus, faithful to His word," and this abbreviated form of the hymn has been repeated in several collections, and is still in C. U. [J. J.]

the Draft of 1781, No. 42, st. iii. was omitted; st. iv. rewritten; and st. i. slightly altered. Word. J. Montgomery. [Missions.] This hymn was printed in the Evangelical Magazine. June, 1818, in 8 st. of 4 L, and headed "Hymn composed for the Anniversary of the Missionary Society by J. Montgomery, Esq., and sung at Spa Fields Chapel, May 14th, 1818." It was included in Cotterill's Sel., 8th ed., 1819, No. 236, in 4 st. of 8 l. In Montgomery's Christian Psalmist, 1825, No. 554, st. iv. is omitted, and the rest are divided into 6 st. of 4 1. This form is repeated in his Original Hymns, 1853, No. 260, is the revised text, and is in several collections in G. Britain and America. The hymn "From day to day, before our eyes," in Beecher's Plymouth Coll., 1855, the N. Y. Songs for the Sanctuary, 1865, and other American hymn-books, is composed of st. iv .- viii. of the Evangelical Magazine text of 1818. (Cotterill's st. iii., iv.). [J. J.]

Let us ask the important question. J. Hart. [Passiontide.] Pub. in his Hymns, &c., 1759, No. 56, in two parts, the second being "Great High Priest, we view Thee stooping," and headed "Faith and Repent-ance." Pt. i., in 5 st. of 8 I., asks and answers the important question, "What is it to be a Christian?" and Pt. ii., in 3 st. of 8 l., is a Prayer based upon the answer given in Pt. i. Both parts are in C. U., but the second ("Great High Priest, &c."), which is by far the finer of the two, is also by far the more popular. It is in several collections in G. Britain and America. [J. J.]

Let us love, and sing, and wonder. J. Newton. [Praise for Redeeming Love.]
Appeared in his Twenty Six Letters on Religious Subjects, by Omicron, 1774, in 6 st. of 6 l., and headed, "Praise for Redeeming Love." It was also given in the Gospel Magatine, May, 1774, and in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. iii., No. 82. It is in C. U. in G. Britain and America, and sometimes in an abbreviated form. [J. J.]

Let us praise God this day. [The Annunciation.] Included anonymously in Hys. for the Festivals and Saints Days of the Church of England, Oxford, 1846. It was repeated, with the addition of a dexology, in Stretton's Church Hys., 1850, in Johnston's English Hyl., 1852, and other collections. The text of H. A. & M., 1875, is from Fallows's Sel., 1847. In addition to the original, two altered forms of the text are in C. U.:—

1. Praise we the Lord this day. This slightly altered text was given in Murray's Hymnal, 1852; the Salisbury H. Bk., 1867; Kennedy (with new daxology), 1863; the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871, &c. The last-named has Murray's text with the omission of st. iii.

2. O praise the Lord this day. This text in the Hymnary, 1872, is somewhat freely altered, and is in limited [J. J.]

Let us sing the King Messiah. J. Ryland. [Praise to Christ as King.] This fine paraphrase of Ps. xlv., in 7 st. of 6 l., is dated by Dr. Ryland's son "July 31st 1790" [s. mss.]. It appeared in Hymns Included for the Use of the United Congregations of Bristol at their Monthly Prayer Meetings for the Success of the Gospel at Home and Abroad, begun in 1797, Bristol, 1798. The Preface is dated

New Selection, 1828; and subsequently in numerous collections in G. Britain and America. The original text is given in Ryland's Pastoral Memorials, 1825, and in D. Sedgwick's reprint of Ryland's Hymns, 1862. FW. T. B.1

Let us the sheep in Jesus named. J. Cennick. [Praise to Jesus, the Good Shepherd.] Pub. as a "Hymn of Praise in a Dialogue," in his Sacred Hys. for the Use of Religious Societies, Bristol, 1743, Pt. i., No. iv., in 5 st. of 4 l.; and again, in the same year, in his Sacred Hys. for the Children of God in the Days of their Pilgrimage, Lond., 1743. This, in common with all Dialogue hymns with the Moravians, was sung antiphonally, the men taking the first half of each verse, and the women the second. The opening stanzas of this hymn are thus printed for antiphonal singing:-

"Let us the Sheep in Jesus nam'd, Our Shepherd's Mercy bless: Let us, whom Jesus hath redeem'd, Sheep forth our Thankfulness.

2. "Not unto us! to Thee slone, Bless'd Lamb, be Glory giv'n; Here shall Thy Praises be begun, But carried on in Heaven."

In its original form this hymn is unknown to the modern collections, but, beginning with st. ii., as:-

"Not unto us! but Thee alone, Bless'd Lamb, be glory given," it appeared in Rippon's Bap. Sel., 1787, No. 384, and is found in several modern hymnals in G. Britain and America, including the Bap. Ps. & Hys., 1858 and 1880, Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bk., 1866, and others. The first stanza of the hymn, "Not unto us but to Thy name" (q.v.), is also from this hymn. [W. T. B.]

Let us with a gladsome mind. J. Milton. [Ps. czzzwi.] This paraphrase of Ps. 136 was written according to his biographers, Warton and Mitford, in 1623, when Milton was fifteen, and attending St. Paul's School, London. It appeared in his Poems in English and Latin, 1645 (2nd ed. 1673), in 24 st. of 2 l., with the refrain-

" For His mercies aye endure, Ever faithful, ever sure."

In its full form it is not in C. U., but numerous abbreviations, all beginning with the opening stauza, are in use in all English-speaking countries. Another arrangement in L. M., and countries. Another arrangement in L. m., and without the refrain, is given in Martineau's Hymns, 1840. No. 100, as "O let us, with a joyful mind." Sir H. W. Baker's version of Ps. exxxvi., "Praise, O praise our God and King."; H. Trend's "Praise, O praise our heavenly King." in Skinner's Daily Service Hymnol, 1864, the People's H., 1867, and others; and T. Darling's "Come, and let us praises sing." in his Hymns, 1887, are all based upon Milton's text. [J. J.]

Let worldly minds the world pursue. J. Newton. [Dedication of self to God.] Pub. in B. Conyers's Ps. & Hys., 1774, No. 180, and again in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. iii., No. 59, in 6 st. of 4 l., and headed "Old things are passed away." It is in C. U. in its full form, Feb. 26, 1798, and is signed by eight ministers and also abbreviated, beginning with st. iii., of whom Dr. Ryland is first on the list. This "As by the light of opening day." This hymn was given, with omissions, in the Bap. | abridged text is more popular than the full form of the hymn. It was given in Bickersteth's Christian Psalmody, 1833, and is found in several modern hymn-books. [J. J.]

Let Zion's watchmen all awake. P. Doddridge. [Ordination—Ember Days.] Written at "Floor, Oct. 21, 1736" [D. MSS.], in 5 st. of 4 l. This is Floore in Northamptonshire, and the hymn was written for the ordination of a Minister, probably for that place. It was pub. in Job Orton's ed. of Doddridge's (posthumous) Hymns, &c., 1755, No. 324; and again in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the same, 1839, No. 350. Its use is extensive, especially in America. [J. J.]

Lewers, Jane. [Gray, Jane.]

Lewis, George, p.p., of Llanuwchllyn, was b. at Trelech, Caermarthenshire, in 1762. His parents were members of the Established Church, but he became a minister of the Independents. He was a learned man, and highly respected by all who knew him. He is the author of several works of great value, and the hymn "Rhyfedd na buaswn nawr" was composed by him. He d. in 1822.

[W. G. T.]

Lie down, frail body, here. H. Bonar. [Burial.] Appeared in his Hys. of Faith and Hope, 1st series, 1857, in 13 st. of 4 l., and entitled, "The Flesh resting in Hope." It is given in an abridged form in a few collections, including Dale's English H. Bk., 1874. From it also is taken the cento "Rest for the toiling hand." [J. J.]

Liebe die du mich zum Bilde. J. Schefter. [The Love of Christ.] No. 107, in Bk. iii., 1657, of his Heilige Seclentust (Werke, 1862, i. p. 180), in 6 st. of 6 lines, entitled, "She [the Soul] surrenders herself to the Everlasting Love." Included as No. 35 in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, with an additional st. as iv., "Liebe die du Kraft und Leben," added when the hymn was given in the Geistreiches G. B., Halle, 1697, p. 184.

"It is one of the most beautiful and profound hymns of the spiritual love of the soul to her Saviour," says Lauxmann in Koch, vill. 290. Wetzel, in his A. H., ii. 771-776, relates that one evening in 1722 Benjamin Schultze, a German missionary at Madras, eans it from Freyltinghousen, and was so delighted with it that he determined that his Malabar scholars should share his pleasure. That evening he translated verse after verse, not resting till he had finished it two hours after midnight. The success he attained led him to translate 103 hymns from the German which are still sung in South India.

Translations in C. U.:-

1. Lord, Thine image Thou hast lent me. By J. C. Jacobi, in his Psal. Germanica, 1720, p. 1, in 7 st. It is one of his best trs. It was slightly altered in his ed. 1722, p. 33, and again in his ed. 1732, p. 56; and thence in the Moravian H. Bk., 1754, Lady Huntingdon's Selection, 1780, and Dr. Pagenstecher's Coll., 1864. St. i., iii., iv., vii., were included in the Pennsylvanian Luth. Ch. Bk., 1868, and the Ohio Luth. Hyl., 1880. In the Moravian H. Bk., 1789 (1849, No. 21), it was considerably altered, and began, "In Thine image, Lord, Thou mad'st me." A cento in 5 st. of 4 l., beginning, "Love divine! I would adore Thee," is in the Roxburgh Place Coll., Edinburgh, 1824; and sts. i.-iv., slightly altered from the 1826 Moravian, are in the Dalston Hospital H. Bk., 1848.

No. 54 in the Cooke-Denton Hymnal, 1853, in 3 st. of 6 l., and a doxology. It is based on Jacobi, but is entirely rewritten by Canon Cooke. This was repeated, unaltered, in the Salishary H. Bh., 1857, New Zealand Hyl., 1870 Parish H. Bh., 1875, and, slightly altered, in the Sarum Hyl., 1868.

3. 0 Love, Who formedst me to wear. An exceedingly good tr. 'n 7 st. by Miss Winkworth in her Lyra Ger., 2tu Ser., 1858, p. 96, and as No. 47 in her C. B. for England, 1863. This has come into extensive use, and is included in full in the New Zeuland Hyl., 1870, and in Schail's Christ in Song, 1869, p. 414. In 1861 it was included, slightly altered and with the omission of st. iv., v., in H. A. $f$ M., and repeated in the revised ed. of 1875, and other hymnals. Other centos are in the People's H., 1867; Horder's Cong. Hyl., 1884, &c.

Other trs. are:—(1) "Love divine! 'neath human feature," in the Christian Treasury, 1888, p. 165. (2) "Loved One! who by grace hast wrought me," by Mrs. Findlater, in H. L. L., 1882, p. 40 (1884, p. 207). (3) "Love, Who in the first beginning," by Miss Caze, 1884, p. 201; repeated in the Moravian H. Bk., 1886. (4) "Love, which in Thine image made me," by R. Massie, in the British Herald, Nov. 1865, p. 168, and Reid's Praise Bk., 1872.

Liebich, Ehrenfried, was b. July 15, 1713, at Probsthain, near Goldberg, Silesia, where his father was a miller. He assisted his father in the mill up to his sixteenth year, and was thereafter allowed to study at the Latin school at Schweidnitz, and the St. Elisabeth school at Breslau. At Easter, 1738, he entered the University of Leipzig as a student of Theology, and on concluding his course in 1740, was for some time engaged in private tuition. In April, 1742, he became pastor at Lounitz and Erdmannsdorf, near Hirschberg, Silesia, and remained there till his death on June 23, 1780 (Koch, vi. 391; Ang. Deutsche Biog., xviii, 584, &c.).

Lieblch is one of the best German hymn-writers of the middle of the 18th century; Scriptural, heartfelt, and good in style, always edifying, if sometimes too didactic. He had begun hymn-writing about 1749, and contributed 8 hymns to the Hirschberg G. B., 1752. A copy of this book fell into the hands of C. F. Gellett during a visit to Carlebed in 1763, and through his encouragement Liebleh began again to compose bymns. He public compositions as: (1) Getsticke Lieder und Oden, &c., Hirschberg and Leipzig, 1788, with 142 hymns, (2) New ed., Liegnitz, 1773; with a second part, entitled, Geittliche Lieder zur Erbauung, Liegnitz, 1774, with 94 hymns.

A considerable number of his hymns passed into German C. U., and still hold their place. Those which have been tr. into English are:—

- i. Dir, dir, du Geber aller Gaben. Harvest Thanksgiving. 1768, p. 128, in 16 st. of 6 l., entitled, "The Goodness of God in the Harvest." This has passed into English through the following forms.
- 1. 0 dass doeb bei der reichen Ernte. This is st. xi.-xvi., as altered by J. S. Diterich, in the Berlin G. B., 1780, No. 172; repeated in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863. From this form the recasts of st. xii.-xvi., beginning, "Kommt, Christen, Gottes Huld zu feiern," were included, as No. 250, in Bunsen's Versuch, 1833, and tr. as:

Come, Christians, praise your Maker's goodness. A good tr. from Bunen, by Miss Winkworth, as No. 181, in her C. B. for England; repeated in the Ohio Evang. Luth. Hyl. 1880.

2. Wir kommer, deine Huld zu falern. This is a very greatly altered form of st. xii. ff., as No. 850, in the Berlin G. B., 1829; retaining little either from Liebich or Diterick. It is repeated in Bunsen's Versuch, 1833, No. 666, and the Württemberg G. B., 1842, No. 543. The tr. in C. U. from this form is:-

We come, our hearts with gladness glowing. A good tr. from the text of 1829, by Miss Cox, in her Sacred Hys. from the German, 1841, p. 199; repeated, abridged, in the American Unitarian Hys. for the Ch. of Christ, Boston, 1853, and in Archdeacon Pott's Coll., 1861.

Another tr. is: "O Lord, Thy goodness we adore," by Lady E. Fortesone, 1843, p. 29.

ii. Gott ist getreu! Sein Herz, sein Vaterhers. Trust in God. 1768, p. 181, in 9 st. of 9 l., entitled, "The faithful God, 1 Cor. x. 13." It is a beautiful hymn, and has been specially appreciated in Württemberg, where it is found in the Württemberg G. B., 1791, No. 24 (1842, No. 45). Lauxmann, in Koch, viii. 416, says it was the favourite hymn of J. C. F. Steudel, Professor of Theology at Tübingen, who d. 1837; was sung by the Württemberg contingent at a field service near Toul, in August, 1870, during the Franco-German War, &c. The trs. are:

1. Our God is true! Them He will ne'er foreake. In full, by Dr. H. Mills, in his Horae Ger., 1845 (1856, p. 182); repeated, abridged, in the Amer. Luth. Gen. Synod's Coll., 1852, and the Ohio

Evang. Luth. Hyl., 1880.

2. My God is true! His heart, a Father's heart. A good and full tr. by R. Massie, in his Lyra Domestica, 2nd Ser., 1864, p. 119; repeated, in full, in Reid's Proise Bk., 1872; and abridged in the Ibrox Hyl., 1871.

iil. Rier ist mein Hers! Mein Gott, ich geb' es dir. Self-surrender to God. 1768, p. 79, in 9 st. of 9 L (II. 1, 9 of each st. being "Hier ist mein Herz"), entitled, "Surrender of the heart to God," and suggested by Proverbs xxiii. 26. Included, as No. 763, in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1868. Tr. as:—

Here is my heart! my God I give it Thee. A good fr., omitting st. iv., by Mrs. Findlater, in H. L. L., 1st Ser., 1854, p. 16 (1884, p. 21). Included, in full, in Boardman's Sel., Philadelphia, U.S., 1861; Lyra Eucharistica, 1863 and 1864, &c. The trs. of st. i.-iii., v., reduced to 6 8's, and beginning, "Here is my heart, I give it Thee," were included in the American Sabbath H. Bk., 1858; and, repeated, omitting st. ii., in the Christian H. Bk., Cincinnati, 1865.

iv. So bringen wir den Leib zur Ruh. Burial. 1774, p. 204, in 12 st., entitled, "At the burial of a corpse." In the Bavarian G. B., 1854, No. 229, beginning "Nun bringen wir." Tr. as, "This body, weary and distressed," by Dr. H. Harbaugh, in the German Reformed Guardian, June, 1863, p. 187. [J. M.]

Liebster Immanuel, Herzog der Frommen. [Love to Christ.] Included in Dr. Ahasuerus Fritsch's Himmels-Lust, 2ud od., 1679 [Leipzig Town Library; not in 1st ed., 1670], No. 36, p. 343, in 5 st. of 6 l., entitled "The everwished for sweet Jesus." The hymn has been ascribed to Fritsch (b. Dec. 16, 1629, at Mücheln on the Geissel near Merseburg; became, 1657, tutor to Count Albert Anton of Schwarzburg-Rudolstadt; d. Aug. 24, 1701, as Chancellor and President of evidence. In the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 1342. In the Geistreiches G. B., Halle, 1697, p. 160, and many later books, it begins, "Schönster Immanuel." The tr. in C. U. is:

Dearest Immanuel, Prince of the lawly. A tr. of st. i .- iv., by M. W. Stryker, as No. 183 in his Christian Chorals, 1885. [J, M]

Liebster Jesu! du wirst kommen. [Advent.] Included in the Geistreiches G. B., Halle, 1697, p. 257, in 10 st. of 5 l. Repeated in Porst's G. B., 1713 (ed. 1855, No. 561, ascribed to Christoph Pfeiffer, who was only born in 1689). The tr. in C. U. is:-

Janus, Saviour, once again. A good but rather free tr. of st. i.-iii., v., vii., by Miss Dunn in her H. from the Ger., 1857, p. 47. Repeated in full in Dr. Pagenstecher's Coll., 1864; and, omitting st. iii., in Curwen's Subbath H. Bk., 1859.

Another tr. is:—"Precious Jesus! Thy returning," in the British Herald, Oct. 1866, p. 344, and Reid's Praise Ek., 1872, No. 238.

Liebster Jesu wir sind hier Deinem Worte nachzuleben. B. Schmolck. [Holy Baptism.] 1st pub. in his Heilige Flammen (ed. 1709, No. 115, p. 180, apparently first in the 3rd ed., 1706), in 7 st. of 6 l., enlitled "Seasonable Reflections of the spousors on their way with the child to Baptism." Included in many German collections, and recently as No. 462 in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863. Tr. as ;-

- 1. Jesus, Lord, Thy servants see. A good tr., omitting st. iv., by Miss Cox in her Sacred H. from the Ger., 1841, p. 63 (1864, p. 73). Repeated in full in Mercer's C. P. & H. Bk. 1857; and, abridged, in Mercer's Ox. ed., 1864, Rorison's H. & Anthems, 1851, and the Wes. H. Bk., 1875.
- Blessed Jesus, here we stand. A good tr., omitting st. iv., by Miss Winkworth in her Lyra Ger., 2nd Ser., 1858, p. 86 (in her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 90). Included in the Scottish Hyl., 1889, &c.; and, in America, in the Pennsylvanian Luth. Ch. Bk., 1868, Presb. Hyl., 1874, &c. According to Kübler (Hist. Notes to Lyra Ger., 1865, p. 220), this version was sung, April 27, 1863, at the baptism of the Princess Victoria of Hesse at Windsor Castle.

3. Blessed Jesus, we are here. A good ir., omitting st. v., by Dr. Kennedy, as No. 234 in his Hymn. Christiana, 1863.

4. Blessed Lord, Thy servants see. No. 166 in Dr. Allon's Suppl. Hys., 1868, and consists of trs. of st. i., vi., altered from Miss Cox, and of st. vii., altered from Miss Winkworth. Repeated in Dr. Dale's Eng. H. Bh., 1874, Horder's Cong. Hys., 1884, &c.

5, Dearest Jesus! we are here, On Thy tender grace relying. In full, by Dr. M. Loy, as No. 222 in the Ohio Lutheran Hyl., 1880.

Other trs. are:—(1) "O blessed Saviour! here we meet," by Lady E. Fortescue, 1843, p. 20. (2) "According to Thy Gospel, we," by Dr. G. Walker, 1869, p. 34. (3) "Following Thy words of grace," as No. 845 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1886.

Life is the time to serve the Lord. I. Watts. [Life for God.] 1st pub. in his Hys. & S. Songs, in the 2nd ed., 1709, Bk. i., No. 88, in 6 st. of 4 l., and headed "Life the Day of Grace and headed "Life the Day of Grace and Hope," It is found in a few modern collecthe Consistory at Rudolstadt), but on no clear | tions. In the authorized issue of the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, 1781, No. xv., on Eccl. ix. 4, &c., it is recest as:

'As long as life its term extends, Hope's blest dominion never ends."

In the markings of the Trans. & Paraphs., by the eldest daughter of W. Cameron (q.v.), this recast is attributed to Cameron. Its use is very extensive. [J. J.]

Life nor death shall us dissever. Bp. R. Heber. [Easter.] Pub. in his posthumous Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 79, in 3 st. of 4 l. It is based on the Gospel for the 5th S. after Easter, and is found in several modern hymnboks, including Dale's English H. Bk., 1874, and others. [J. J.]

Lift it gently to the steeple. J. M. Neals. [Dedication of Bells.] Written in 1865 for an Office for the Benediction of a Bell, compiled by Dr. Neale, for the Benediction of one at Bampton-Aston, Oxon, by the late Bishop of Oxford [Wilberforce]. In 1866 it was included in Dr. Neale's Original Sequences, Hymns, and other Ecclesiastical Verses, p. 81, in 10 st. of 4 l., and supplemented by the following note:—

"The above hymn is taken from an Office for the Benediction of a Hell, compiled by the writer for that of one, by the Bishop of Oxford, at Aston-Bampton, Oxon [No, it was Bampton-Aston]; the first example, it is believed, of such a service, if not since the Reformation, at all events since Caroline times. It was again used by the Bishop of Salisbury, at the Benediction of the newly recast Wolsey bell, at Sherborne Minster.

This hymn has also been rearranged as, "Now at length our bells are mounted" (st. ix. slightly altered being placed as st. i.), so so to make it suitable for singing after the bells are fixed and ready to be rung. [J. J.]

Lift the strain of high thanksgiving. J. Ellerton. [Church Restoration.] Written for the reopening of St. Helen's Church, Tarporley, Cheshire, 1869, and pub. in the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871. From Church Hys. it has passed into numerous collections in G. Britain and America. From this hymn, and "In the Name which earth and heaven" (q. v.), Mr. Eilerton compiled a cento for the reopening of the nave of Chester Cathedral, January 25, 1872.

Lift up your heads, ye gates of brass. J. Monigomery. [Missions.] This hymn is amongst the "m. mss.," but is undated. It was printed in the Evangelical Magazine, 1843; and again in Montgomery's Original Hymns, 1853, No. 265, in 19 st. of 4 l., and entitled "Chins Evangelized"; Pt. ii. beginning "Ye armies of the living God"; and Pt. iii. "No carnal weapons those ye bear." In the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871, No. 291, is composed of st. i.-iii., xviii., xix somewhat altered.

Light of life, seraphic Fire. C. Wesley. [Holiness desired.] Appeared in Hysand Sac. Poems, 1749, vol. ii., in 3 st. of 8. l., as No. 18 of "Hys. for those that wait for full Redemption" (P. Works, 1863-72, vol. v. p. 909). In 1780 it was given in the Wes. H. Bk., No. 387, with the omission of st. iii. This form of the hymn has come into extensive use in G. Britain and America. It also sometimes appears as "Light of life, celestial Fire," as in Kennedy, 1863. [J. J.]

Light of life so softly shining. H. Bonar. [The Light of Life desired.] Pub. in his work The Song of the New Creation and Other Pieces, 1872, p. 113, in 6. st. of 4 l., and repeated, with the omission of a stanza in the Scottish Presb. Hymnal for the Young, 1882. [J. J.]

Light of the lonely pilgrim's heart. Sir E. Denny. [Missions.] Appeared in Ps. & Hys. and Spiritual Songs, Lond., D. Walther, 1842, Pt. i., No. 69, in 6 st. of 41. From this collection (J. G. Deck's) it passed in a full or an abbreviated form into numerous hymnals in all English-speaking countries, and has become one of the most widely used of the author's hymns. In addition to appearing in the hymnals, it was also pub. by the author in his Hymns & Poems, 1848, p. 44 (3rd ed. 1870, p. 14), and headed "The Heart Watching for the Morning," with the quotation from Cowper's Task:—

"Thy saints proclaim Thee King: and in their hearts
Thy title is engraven with a pen
Dipp'd in the fountain of eternal love," by which it was apparently suggested. A cento from this hymn, beginning with st. ii., "Come, blessed Lord 1 bid every shore," is in a few collections.

[J. J.]

Light of the world that shines to bless. Cecil F. Alexander, nee Humphreys. [The Light of the World.] From her Hymns, Descriptive and Devotional, 1858, No. 17, in 9 st. of 4 l., and based on the words "I am the Light of the world," into the People's Hyl., 1867, No. 361, and others. [J. J.]

Light of those whose dreary dwelling. C. Wesley. [Christmas.] 1st pub. in his Hymns for the Nativity of Our Lord, 1746, No. xi., in 8 st. of 8 l. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. iv. p. 116). It was adopted by M. Madan in 1760, R. Conyers in 1774, A. M. Toplady in 1776, and most evangelical bymnal compilers of that period. At the first it was retained in an unaltered form, but the changes made by Toplady in 1776 were followed by others, until at the present time, although found in numerous collections in all English-speaking countries, it is difficult to find any two texts alike. The secret lay in its being a purely Arminian hymn, but so constructed that it could be easily turned to account by Calvinists. For the alterations in use, Toplady, 1776, Cotterill, 1810, Bickersteth, 1833, and Elliott, 1835, are mainly answerable. In 1830 it was given in the Supplement to the Wes. H. Bk. in an unaltered form.

Like the first disciples, In their strange, glad hour. G. Rawson. [Holy Communion.] A Post-Communion hymn, printed for the first time at the close of an article in the Evangelical Magazine, June, 1881, by the Editor, the Rev. H. R. Reynolds, D.D., on "Hymns," with special reference to those by Mr. Rawson. It is in 6 st. of 4 L, and headed "We have seen the Lord." In 1884 it was included in Horder's Cong. Hymns.

Lindemann, Johann, s. of Nicolaus Lindemann, burgess at Gotha, was b. at Gotha c. 1550. He attended the Gymnasium at Gotha, and apparently thereafter studied and graduated M.A. at Jehn. He appears to have become cantor at Gotha in 1571 or 1572, and retired from this post, on a pension, in 1631. In 1634 he was a member of the new Council at Gotha. The date of his death is unknown. (Monatchefte für Musikgeschichte, 1878, p. 73; ms. from Superintendent Dr. Otto Dreyer, of Gotha, &c. The extant register of births at Gotha only goes back to 1566, that of deaths only to 1659.)

Lindemann's Decades Amorum Filis Des seem to have been pub. at Erfurt, 1894 and 1896. The ed. of 1898 [Royal Library, Berlin] is entitled Amorum Filis Des Decades Duca: Das ist Zucanterig Hebitiche und gants cumultige lateinische und deutsche neue Tharts oder Weykenschlem Gesenglein. He is there described a Cantor and musician to the churches and schools at Cathe. Whether he is the relief of the Cathe. Cantor and musician to the churches and schools at Gotha. Whether he is the author of the words of any of these pleces is not certain. Nor is it even clear that he was the composer of the melodies; but it is evident that he was the composer of the melodies; but it is evident that he must have arranged and harmonised them. The two best known of these pieces are "Jeau wollst uns weisen" (No. 3, in 3 st.), and, "In dir ist Frende" (Love to Christ). The latter is No. 7 in 2 st. of 12 l. It is set to a tune adapted from a madrigal by Giovanni Giacomo Gastoldi da Caravaggio (his Balletti appeared at Venice 1591, 1592, 1695, 1697, &c.), and is marked as "Balletti: L'immanorato: A Lieta Vita: à 5." The tr. in C. U. is: "In Thee is gladness." A full and good tr. by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger., 2nd Ser. 1859, p. 155, and her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 156.

Lintrup, Severin Falk, was b. Nov. 17, 1700, at Tarmun, in Jutland, Denmark. In 1723 he entered the University of Copenhagen as a student of theology. In 1725 he became curate in charge in the island of Lyo, near Funen: in 1727 chaplain at Wartau, near Copenhagen; and in 1727 preacher at the Wallo-Spital, near Copenhagen. During his tenure of this last post he became acquainted with some of the Moravian missionaries, and resigning his appointment in 1734, he joined the Brethren at Herrnhut. Subsequently he preached in several of their communities (e.g. at Gnadenberg, in Silesia, on its foundation in 1743), and was also sent on various missions to Denmark and Sweden. He d. at Herrnhut, Feb. 15, 1758 (G. F. Otto's Lexicon ... Oberlausisischen Schriftsteller, vol. ii., 1802, p. 490, &c.). In the Historische Nachricht to the Brüder G. B., 1778, two hymns are ascribed to him, viz., Nos. 1048, st. ii., iii., and 1073. One of these is in English C. U., viz.:—

Mein Heiland! wirf dook einen Bliek. Christian Church. Appeared as No. 1172 In Appendix.vl., cir. 1737, to the Herrnhut G. B. 1785, in 12 st. of 4 l. In the Bruder G. B., 1778, No. 1073, tis reduced to 6 st., vlz., l., iil., viii., ix., xl., xii. Tr. as: (1) "O Lord, lift up Thy countenance." In full, from the Brüder G. B., by F. W. Foster, as No. 613 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1789 (1886, No. 788). St. i., iii., iv. of this version are in Dr. Martineau's Hymns, 1840 and 1873. Another tr. is,

"My dearest Saviour! cast an eye." As No. 80 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1742 (1754, pt. ii. No. 142). [J. M.]

Liscovius, Salomo, s. of Johann Liscovius, or Lischkow, pastor at Niemitsch, near Guben, was b. at Niemitsch, Oct. 25, 1640. He entered the University of Leipzig in 1660, and then went to Wittenberg, where he graduated M.A., and was crowned as a poet. Shortly thereafter he was appointed pastor at Otterwisch with Stockheim, near Lausigk, and or-dained to this post April 21, 1664. He was then, on March 29, 1685, appointed second pastor of St. Wenceslaus's church, at Wurzen. He d. at Wurzen, Dec. 5, 1689. (Koch, iii. 385; Rotermund's continuation of Jöcher's Gelehrten-Lexikon, iii. 1950, &c.)

Gelehrten-Lexikon, iii. 1950, &c.)
Liscovius was one of the best German hymn-writers of the second rank in the 17th cent. That is, though his hymns are not lacking in intensity, in depth, or in beauty of form, yet neither by their intrinsic value nor by their scoption into German C. U. are they worthy to be ranked with the hymns of Gerhardt, Franck, Scheffler and others of this period. They appeared mostly in his Christlicher Frauennimmers Geistlicher Tugend-Spiegel. The preface to this book is dated April 14, 1872, and it was probably pub. at Leipzig, 1703. Dr. J. L. Pasig pub. 81 of his Gettliche Lieder, with a short blographical notice, at Halle, 1885. One of this hymns is tr:—

Behats über alle Schätze. Love to Christ. His finest hymn. 1872 as above, and Pasig, 1865, p. 53. In the Nürnberg G. B., 1876, No. 508, and the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1883, No. 828. It is in 7 st. of 8 l., the initial letters of the stanzes forming his Christian name Salomon. The tr. are:—

The tra. are :-

The tr. are:—
(1) "Treasure above all treasure," as No. 441 in pt. 1. of the Moravian H. Bk., 1784. In the 1733 and later eds. (1838, No. 449), it begins "Jesus, my highest treasure." (2) "Treasure beyond all treasure," by Miss Dunn, 1857, p. 60. (3) "Thou treasure of all treasures," by Miss Manington, 1863, p. 27. [J. M.]

Litanies, Metrical. 1. The form in which Metrical Litanies are given in the hymn-books now in use, is of modern growth. A few hymns with refrains are found in some of the older collections, as "In the hour of my distress," by Herrick; "Lord of mercy and of might," by Bp. Heber; "Saviour, when in dust to Thee," by Sir R. Grant; "By Thy birth, O Lord of all," by Mrs. Harriet Mozley; "Jesus, Lord of life and glory," by J. J. Cummins, and a few others. These, however, were usually classed not as Metrical Litanies, but as hymns, and as such were embodied in the collections.

2. The Metrical Litanies of the modern hymn-books began in 1854 with one or two in rhythmical prose on the Childhood and Passion of Jeaus, one of the first, if not the first, being No. 63 below. By slow degrees these have been increased, written mainly in rhymed metre, the first being No. 21 below, until provision has been made for most of the Fasts and Festivals of the Church. In a few instances, as noted hereafter, they are published as separate works from the hymn-books. The usual practice, however, is to give them as a separate division or section of the hymnal.

3. Amongst the earliest writers of Metrical Litanics were Dr. F. G. Lee, Dr. Littledale, and G. Moultrie; and amongst the later Bp. H. E. Bickersteth, Sir H. W. Baker, and T. B. Pollock.

4. In arranging the Metrical Litanies for reference great difficulty is presented in their sameness, and the habit which some authors and compilers have of beginning several Litanies with the same stanza. Another difficulty is created by compilers of hymnals breaking the Litanies into parts which differ from those adopted by the authors. In the following list of Metrical Litanies these difficulties have been kept in view :-

1. All our sinful words and ways. Lent. By L. F. in Mrs. Brock's Children's H. Bk., 1881.
2. Bread of Life, the angels' Food. Holy Communion. By Dr. Littledale in the People's H., 1867, No. 598.

65. When my feet have wandered. Passiontide. J. S. B. Monsell.

66. Jesus, hear us, Lord of all. Night Litany. By G. Moultrie in his Primer, 1870.

5. In many instances the opening lines given in this list are those of the second stanzas of the Litanies. This was necessitated by the great majority of the Litanies opening in the hymn-books with the Invocation to the Holy Trinity, "God the Father, God the Son," or "God the Father, God the Word." The first lines of the parts of Litanies also are not included, nor are the first lines of parts 2-7, of the "Seven Words on the Cross" (see No. 35), nor of parts 2-4 of the "Four Last Things (see No. 37).

6. The Litanies attributed to Sir H. Wi Baker appeared in H. A. & M., 1875; A. W Hutton, in a Supplement to H. A. & M. (old ed.), pub. by him in 1875; W. J. Irons, in his Ps. & Hys. for the Church, 1875; Dr. Littledale, first on broadsheets, from 1861-66, and then in the People's H., 1867; Dr. Monsell, in Litany Hymns, 1870, and his Parish Hymnal, 1873; and T. B. Pollock, in his Metrical Litanies for Special Services and General Use, 1870; and his Litany Appendix, 1871. These works, together with the hymnals named in the foregoing notes; Thring's Coll., 1882, the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871; and A Book of Metrical Litanies, Lond., Rivingtons, 1874, contain most of the Litanies available for use. Hymns which are also suitable as Litanies are indicated in the Index of Subjects and Beasons.

Little children, dwell in love. H. Alford. [St. John the Evangelist.] First appeared in his Hys. for the Sundays and Festivals throughout the Year, 1836 (see his Life), in 4 st. of 4 l. In 1844 it was included in his Ps. & Hys., No. 13, and marked, in error, as published therein for the first time. It is found in his Year of Praise, 1867; and in his Poetical Works, in the 8th ed. of which, 1868, it is dated 1835. It has passed into a few hymnals only.

Little drops of water. [Importance of Little Things.] The original of this hymn, by Dr. E. C. Brewer, was 1st pub. in Reading and Spelling, 1848, in 5 st. of 41. Subsequently it reappeared in a very much altered and improved form in the American Juvenile Missionary Magazine, also in 5 st. From that magazine it was copied into Hymns and Sacred Songs, pub. at Manchester by Fletcher and Tubbs, 1855, and from that collection it has passed into numerous children's hymnels in the United Kingdom. When the version found in the greatest number of collections is compared with the original it is found that the leading thought of the hymn and the first stanza are all that remain of that first published by Dr. Brewer, thus:—

- Dr. Brewer, 1848.

 1. Little drops of water,
 Little grains of sand,
 Make the mighty ocean,
 Make the beauteous
 land.
- 2. Straw by sirnw the sparrow
 Builds its coay nest;
 Leaf by leaf the forest
 Stands in verdure drest.
- Letter after letter Words and books are roade;
 Little and by little Mountains level laid.
- 4. Drop by drop is fron
 Worn in time away;
 Perseverance, patience,
 Ever win their way.
- 5. Every finished labour Once did but begin; Try, and go on trying, That's the way to win.

- American Version.

 1. Little drops of water,
 Little grains of sand,
 Make the mighty ocean,
 And the beauteous
 land.
- 2. And the little moments, Humble though they be Make the mighty ages Of eternity.
- Little deeds of kindness, Little words of love, Make our earth an Eden, Like the heaven above.
- 4. So our little errors
 Lead the soul away,
 From the paths of virtue
 Into sin to stray.
- 5. Little seeds of mercy, Sown by youthful hands, Grow to bless the nations Far in heathen lands.

The somewhat unfinished American text was extensively adopted to 1876, when Bp. Bickersteth, in the revised edition of the Hy. Comp., made it more complete by adding:—

6. Little ones in glory
Swell the angels' song:
Make us meet, dear Saviour,
For their holy throng.

This last thought was taken up by Prebendary Thring, and in his Collection, 1880-82, was thus elaborated:—

Little children's angels, Happy in the sky, See their Heavenly Father On His throne on high. Little children's voices, .
Heavenly choirs among,
Swell the angel-chorus
With their simple song.

Glory then for ever Be to Father, Son, With the Holy Spirit, Blessed Three in Onc.

In this manner has been built up a very pleasing and popular children's hymn out of a short poem of no interest or merit save its one idea of the power of little things. [J. J.]

Littledale, Richard Frederick, Ll.D., D.C.L., s. of John Richard Littledale, merchant, was b. at Dublin on the 14th of Sept, 1833, and was educated at Beetive House Seminary, and Trinity College, Dublin. His University course was distinguished. In 1852 he became an University Scholar; in 1854 he was first class in Classics and gold medallist; in 1856 he won the Berkeley gold medal (for Greek), and other honours. He graduated B.A., 1855, M.A., 1855, Ll.D., 1862, and D.C.L. at Oxford, 1862. Taking Hely Orders in 1856, he was Curate of St. Matthew's, in Thorpe Hamlet, Norwich, from 1856 to 1857, and of St. Mary the Virgin, Soho, London, from 1857 to 1861. Through ill-health he retired from parochial work in 1861, and devoted himself to literature. Dr. Littledale's publications amount to about fifty in all, and embrace Theological, Historical, Liturgical, and Hymnological subjects chiefly. His prose works include:—

Works include:—

(1) Application of Colour to the Decoration of Churches, 1887; (2) Religious Communities of Women in the Early Church, 1882; (3) Catholic Ritual in the Church of England, 1881; (4) Continuation of Dr. Neole's Commentary on the Padms, vols. ii., iii., 1888-14; (5) Commentary on the Song of Songs, 1869; (6) The Petrine Chaims, 1878-84; (1) Plain Reatons against faining the Church of Rome, 1880, &c.; (8) Short History of the Council of Trent; and several articles in the Encyclopadia Brit., 1882-88. His contributions to periodical literature have been also extensive and valuable.

Dr. Littledeld of Lituarical Devotical and

Dr. Littledale's Liturgical, Devotional, and Hymnological works include:—

Hymnological works include:—

(1) Offices of the Holy Eastern Church, in the Original Greek, with translation into English, Notes, &c., 1863;
(2) Carols for Christmas and Other Seasons, 1863;
(3) The Prieat's Prayer Rook, with hymns, 1864, and with Brief Pontifical in 1870 and later eds.; (4) The People's Hymnal, 1867; (5) The Children's Bread, A Communion Office for the Young, with hymns, 1888; (6) Primitive Liturgies and Translations, 1888-69; (7) Children at Calvary: being The Stations of the Gross in Metro for Singing, 1872; (8) the Christian Passover, 1873; (8) The Alfar Manual, 1882-77. He was joint Editor of Nos. 3, 4, 8 and 9 with the Rev. J. E., Vaux; and of No. 6 with Dr. Neale.

In addition to a large number of hymns, original and translated, in the above works, Dr. Littledale has also directly contributed original and translated hymns to:—

(1) Lyra Eucharistica, 1863; (2) Lyra Messianica, 1864; (3) Lyra Mystica, 1866; (4) The Eucharistica Hymnal, 1817; (6) The Roman Breviory in English by the Marquess of Rute, 1879; (6) The Altar Hymnal, 1884; (7) Suppl. to H. A. & M., 1889; (8) to the Night Hours of the Church; (8) to the St. Margaret's Hymnal [East Grinstead], 1875; and (10) to the Church Times, The Guardian, &c., &c.

Dr. Littledale's Hymnological works in verse consist of translations of Danish, Swedish, Greek, Latin, Syriac, German, and Italian hymns, together with original Carols, Hymns, and Metrical Litanies. His translations are annotated elsewhere in this Dictionary (see Index to Authors and Translators); his Carols under

- sional. 33. When the day hath come at lost. The Judgment.

In addition to these, a few of the more widely used of Dr. Littledale's original hymns, as "From hidden source arising," and others, are annotated under their respective first lines. In the People's H., 1867, Dr. Littledale and a supple 8 H., 1867, Dr. L adopted the following signatures:—
A. L. P., I.e., A London Priest.
B., I.e., An initial of a former address.
B. T., I.e., The initials of a former address.
D. L., I.e. Dr. Littledale.
E. i.a. Evadentic

- B. L., 1.e. Dr. Laurenaue.
 F., i.e., Frederick.
 F. R., 1.e., Frederick Richard.
 L., i.e., Listledale.
 P. C. E., i.e., Friest of the Church of England.
 P. P. Bk., i.e., Priest's Prayer Book.

Taken as a whole, Dr. Littledale's tre. from the seven languages named above are characterised by general faithfulness to the originals, great simplicity of diction, good metre, smooth rhythm, and deep earnestness. His original compositions are usually on special subjects, for which, at the time they were written, there were few hymns, and are marked by the same excellent features of a good hymn as his translations. His main object throughout is to teach through Praise and Prayer, [J. J.]

Live, our Eternal Priest. C. Wesley. [Holy Communion.] 1st pub. in Hymns on the Lord's Supper by J. & C. Wesley, 1745, in 5 st. of 6 l. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. iii. p. 303). In its original form it is not in common use, but as altered to "Hail, Thou Eternal Priest" it was given in the Hymnary, in 1870-2, in 4 st., st. ii. being omitted, and the rest so changed as to constitute almost a new hymn. [J. J.]

Livermore, Abiel Abbot, D.D., was b. at Wilton, New Hampshire, Oct. 30, 1811, and graduated at Harvard in Arts in 1893; and Divinity, 1836. The latter year he was ordained as a Unitarian Minister, and became Pastor at Keene, New Hampshire, 1836; Cincinnati, 1850; Yonkers, New York, 1857. In 1863 he removed to Mendville, Pennsylvania, as the President of the Theological School, Dr. Livermore is the author of various works, and was the chief editor of the Cheshire Postoral Association's Christian Hymns, 1844, one of the most widely circulated and estimable of American Unitarian collections. that collection he contributed "A holy air is breathing round" (Holy Communion), which has passed into several collections, including Martineau's Hymns, &c., 1873. [F. M. B.]

Livermore, Sarah White, aunt of A. A. Livermore (q. v.), was b. at Wilton, New Hampshire, July 20, 1789; and d. there July 3, 1874, having spent most of her life as a Teacher. Two hymns were contributed by her to the Cheshire P. A.'s Christian Hymns, 1844 :- (1) Glory to God, and peace on earth, Christmas. (2) Our pilgrim brethren, dwelling far. Missions. She wrote many others, of which two are given in Putnam's Singers and Songs of the Liberal Faith, 1875. [J. J.]

Lloyd, William Freeman, was b. at Uley, Gloucestershire, Dcc. 22, 1791. As he grew up he took great interest in Sunday school work, and was engaged in teaching both at Oxford and at London. In 1810 he was appointed one of the Secretaries of the Sunday School Union. He also became connected with the Religious Tract Society in 1816. Miller (to whom we are indebted for these details) says in his Singers and Songs of the Church, 1869, p. 418 :-

"He commenced the Sunday School Teacher's Maga-sine, conducted for years the Child's Companion and the Weekly Visitor, and suggested the preparation of a large number of books for children and adults. His own literary productions were various, including several useful books for Sunday School teachers and scholars, and numerous tracts. He was also much engaged in compilation and revision."

Mr. Lloyd d. at the residence of his brother, the Rev. Samuel Lloyd, at Stanley Hall, Gloucestershire, April 22, 1853. Several of this hymns and poetical pieces were given in the R. T. S. Child's Book of Poetry (N. D.), and the R. T. S. My Poetry Book (N. D.). In 1858 he collected his pieces and published them as, Thoughts in Rhyme, By W. F. Lloyd, Lond., Hamilton & Co., and Nisbet & Co. Of his hymns the following are in C. U.:-

- I. Come, poor sinners, come to Jesus. Invitation.
- (1835.)
 2. Give thy young heart to Christ. A Child's Dedication to Christ.

8. My [our] times are in Thine hand. My God, I wish them there. Resignation. (1836.)

4. Sweet is the time of spring. Spring

5. Wait, my soul, upon the Lord.

In Affiction. (1835.)

The date given above, 1835, is from Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bk., 1866, and was supplied to the editor by D. Sedgwick. We have no other authority for that date. The carliest we can find is No. 3, which is in Hys. for the Poor of the Flock, 1838. That hymn is very popular.

Lo, at noon 'tis sudden night. Lio, at noon the sudden night. Ann Gilbert, née Taylor. [Good Friday.] From Hymns for Infant Minds, 1810, No. 25, in 6 st. of 6 l., and entitled "Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners" (ed. 1886, p. 63). This is a kindred hymn to her "Jesus, Who lived above the sky," and is quoted in her Memorials, 1874, as an example of beautiful simplicity and accuracy (vol. 1. of beautiful simplicity and accuracy (vol. i. p. 224). It has attained to a good position amongst hymns of established worth, is in extensive use, and is one of the most popular of Mrs. Gilbert's compositions. [J. J.] of Mrs. Gilbert's compositions.

Lo! He comes with clouds descending, Once for favoured sinners slain. [The Second Advent.] The hymn in modern collections which opens with these lines is a cento of a somewhat complicated character, and will need, for clearness and accuracy, the reproduction of the original text of several liymns.

1. The first form of the hymn is by John Cennick. There is evidence to show that it was sung by the congregation of the Mora-vian Chapel, in Dublin, on April 20, 1750; but the earliest printed text known appeared in the fifth (1752) ed. of Cennick's Collection of Sacred Hymns, &c., Dublin, S[amuel] Powell, and is as follows:—

Lo! He cometh, countless trumpets Blow before his bloody sign! Midst ten thousand saints and angels, See the Crucified shine.

Allelujah! Welcome, welcome bleeding Lamb!

[3] "Now His merits by the barpers,
Thro' the eternal deeps resounds!
Now resplendent shine His nail-prints,
Every eye shall see His wounds!
They who pierced Him,
Shall at His appearing wall.

[3] "Every island, sea, and mountain, Heaven and earth shall flee away! All who hate Him must, shanned, Hear the trump proclaim His day: Come to Judgment! Stand before the Son of Man!

[4] "All who love Him view His glory,
Shining in His bruised Face:
His dear Ferson on the rainbow,
Now His people's heads shall raise:
Happy mourners!
Now on clouds He comes! He comea!

[5] "Now redemption, long expected, See, in solemn pomp appear: All His people, once despised, Now shall need Him in the sir: Aliciush! Now the promised kingdom's come!

[8] "View Him smiling, now determined Every evil to destroy! All the nations now shall sing Him Songs of everlasting Joy! O come quickly! Allelujah! come Lord, come!"

Mankind, a tract of 40 hymns. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. vi. 143.) Of these there were three in the same metre, viz.:-

xxxviii. "Rise, ye dearly purchased sinners." xxxix. "Lo! He comes with clouds descending." xl. "Lift your heads, ye friends of Jesus."

The original text of the second of these hymns is as follows :-

"1. Lot He comes with clouds descending, Once for favour'd sinners slain! Thousand, thousand saints attending, Swell the triumph of his train: Haileinjah, God appears, on earth to reign ! "2. Every eye shall now behold Him Rob'd in dreadful majesty, Those who set at nought and sold Him, Pierc'd, and uall'd Him to the tree, Deeply walling Shall the true Messiah see.

"3. The dear tokens of his passion
Still His dazling body hears,
Cause of endless exultation
To his ransom'd worshippers;
With what rapture
Gaze we on those giorious scars!

 4. Yea, amen! let all adore Thee High on thine eternal throne! Saviour, take the power and glory, Claim the kingdom for thine own: JAN, JEHOVAH, Everlasting God, come down."

3. The third form of the text is really the first form of the modern cento. It was given by M. Madan in his Coll. of Ps. & Hys., &c., 1760, No. 42. The text, with Madan's alterations in stalice, is as follows :-

" Lo! He comes with Clouds descending, Once for favour'd Suners slain!
Thousand thousand Saints attending,
Swell the Triumph of his Train;
Hallelujah! Wesley. Hallelujak! Amen!

" Every Eye shall now behold Him, Rob'd in dreadful Majesty; Those who set at nought and sold Him, Wesley. Pierc'd, and nail'd Him to the Tree, Deeply wailing, Shall the True Messiah see "Ev'ry Island, Sea, and Mountain, Heav'n and Earth shall flee away; Prom Cennick. All who hate Him, must, confounded, Hear the Trump proclaim the Day: Come to Judgment! Come to Judgment! come away!

"Now Redemption long expected, See! in solemn Pomp appear! All his Saints, by Man rejected, Now shall meet Him in the Air! Hallelujah! See the Day of God appear! Cennick.

Answer thins own Bride and Spirit, Wesley, Hymn No. 222viii. Hasten, Lord, the gen'ral Doom! The New Heav'n and Earth t' inherit, Take Thy pining Exiles Home : All Creation ne ahowe

Travalls | grouns | and bids Thee come |

" Yes! Amen! Let all adore Thee, High on Thine eternal Throne! Savious take the Pow'r and Glory; Claim the Kingdom for thine own! O come quickly! Wesley. From Cennick. Hallelujah! Come, Lord, come!

4. This cento, with the omission of st. v. came into general use, and was rarely altered until after 1830, when Hall, in his Mitre H. Bk., 1836, and others, began to tamper with 2. The next form is by Charles Wesley. In the text. Several editors were assisted in 1758 was pub. the Hys. of Intercession for All making their alterations and changes in the text through T. Olivers's hymn, "Come, Im- ! mortal King of Glory" (q.v.), first pub. in 20 sts. without date; and then in 36 sts. in 1763. The fourth st. of the 1763 text reads:—

"Lo! He comes with clouds descending;

Hark! the trump of God is blown;

And th' archangel's voice attending,

Make the high procession known,

Sons of Adam Rise and stand before your God."

A cento from this hymn, and beginning with this stanza, is given in Lord Selborne's Book of Praise, 1862. Either from the original, or from Lord Selborne's cento, several lines by Olivers are interwoven in some modern collections with Madan's cento of 1760, as in Thring's Coll., 1882, where in st. iv. lines 5, 6 are from Olivers's st. xxxv.

5. The alterations which are found in the Madan cento in modern hymn-books are very numerous, and range from a single word to several lines. Of these altered versions more than twenty exist in the hymn-books now in C. U. in English-speaking countries. These alterations have not been made to suit any special school of thought, and in most cases they weaken, instead of strengthen the hymn. They can easily be detected by comparing any text with those given above.

6. Amongst the imitations of this hymn that are in C. U. we have "Lo! He comes with clouds descending," with st. ii. beginning "See the universe in motion." This imitation embodies a great many lines from Wesley's text. It is by M. Bridges, and was pub. in his Hys. of the Heart, 1848, in 9 st. In 1855 it was given in H. W. Beecher's Plymouth Coll., with the omission of st. Iv., and attributed to Brydges in error. A second imitation is: "Lo! He comes with pemp victorious." is given anonymously in the 1876 ed. of E. Harland's Church Psalter and Hymnal.

7. The Cennick-Wesley cento (Madan's) is one of the most popular hymus in the English language, and is in extensive use in all English-speaking countries. It has also been translated into many languages. The tr. into Latin, "Nube vectus en descendit," by the Rev. C. B. Pearson in his Latin Trs. of Engtish Hymns, 1862, p. 19, is from Wesley's text, with the addition of Cennick's st. v.

8. The history of the tune" Olivers" in its original form, and also in its recast form as "Helmsley," both of which are insepar-ably associated with this hymn, is given by Major Crawford in Grove's Dictionary of Music, vol. ii. p. 161. It appears from this article that Thomas Olivers (who is named above, and is the author of the popular hymn "The God of Abraham praise") constructed a tune partly out of a concert-room song, beginning "Guardian angels, now protect me," and the same was published in Wesley's Select Hymns and Tunes Annexed, 1765, under the title Olivers. In 1769 it was recast by M. Madan, and published under the name of Helmsley, in his Collection of Hymn and Psalm Tunes. Four years afterwards a buriesque called The Golden Pippin (1769) was produced in London, and failed. In 1776 it was revived in a shortened form, and one of the actresses, Miss Catley, introduced into it the no indication of this in the book of words, she no doubt concluded the song, on which Olivers had based his tune eleven years before, by dancing "Miss Catley's Hornpipe," constructed for the purpose out of the then popular Helmsley. It seems, therefore, that instead of the hymn tune being liable to the obloquy, so continually cast upon it, of being made out of "Miss Catley's Hornpipe," the hornpipe was made out of the tune. (See Major Crawford's article in the Dict. of Music, for fuller details, together with the music in its various forms.)

Lo! I come with joy to do. C. Wesley. [For Men in Business.] Pub. in Hys. for those that Seek, and those that Have Redemption, 1747, in 6 st. of 8 l, and headed "For a Believer, in Worldly Business" (P. Works, 1868-72, voi. iv. p. 214). It is in C. U. in the following forms:-

1. Lo! I come with joy to do. This was given in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, No. 316, and has been repeated in several collections in G. Britain and America. From this st. iv. is usually omitted.

this st. iv. is usually omitted.

2. Behold I come with joy to do. In the American Meth. Episco. Hymns, 1846, and other American collections. This is st. i., it., and vi., shiptly altered.

3. Bince I've known a Saviour's Rame. This altered form of st. ii., iv., and vi. was given in the American Fruyer Bk. Coll., 1828, and is repeated in the Hymnai of the Prot. Episco. Church, 1871. In the first line of st. iii. an unfortunate change was made in 1826, and is retained in 1871. The original reads:—

"O that all the art might know Of living thus to Thee."

Of living thus to Thee.

This is changed to :-- "O that all the world might know

Of living, Lord to Thee." [J. J.]

Ito in the [latter] last of days behold.

J. Ogilvie. [Advent.] First appeared as No.
62 in the Draft Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, 1781, in 14 st. of 4 l., as a version of 2 Peter iii. 8-14, and again, with 5 lines altered, in the public worship edition of the same issued in that year by the Church of Scotland and still in use. In a copy of the Trs. and Paraphs. marked by the eldest daughter of W. Cameron (q.v.) this version is ascribed to J. Ogilvie. In addition to its use as one of the Scottish Trs. & Paraphs. it is found in the following forms:-

1. Lo in the latter days behold. In the 1876 ed. of Harland's Ch. Psalter & Hymnal, in 5 st.

2. Lo in the last of days behold. In the Ewing-Payne Coll., Glasgow, 1814, in 7 st.

3. Though new, ye just, the time appears (st. viii.). In Porter's Selection, Glasgow, 1863, in 7 st.

4. When crut the sons of men began (st. v.). In the Twickenham Chapel Coll., 1845, in 4 st.

In the Paraphrases and Hymns, &c., 1853, by Miss J. E. Leeson, Ogilvie's text is conaiderably altered, reduced to 8 st., and divided into two parts:-

 Lo in the last of days foretold.
 With Thee, creating Lord, one day [J. M.]

Lo the Feast is spread to-day. H. Alford. [Holy Communion.] 1st pub. in his Ps. & Hymns, 1844, No. 92, in 4 st. of 6 l., and again in his Year of Praise, 1867, No. 152. It has passed into several hymn-books, both in G. Britain and America.

Lo, the storms of life are breaking. melody of "Guardian angels" adapted to the H. Alford. [Epiphany.] Appeared in his words of the burlesque. Although there is Ps. & Hys., 1844, No. 23, in 4 st. of 4 l. It is appointed for the 4th Sun. after the Epiphany, and is based upon the Gospel of that day. It was repeated in his Year of Praise, 1867, No. 48, and in various editions of his Postical Works. It is in extensive use. [J. J.]

Lo, what a glorious sight appears. I. Watts. [The Kingdom of Christ.] Ist pub. in his Hys. & S. Songs, 1707, as a paraphrase of Rev. xxi. 1-4, in 6 st. of 4 l. (2nd ed. 1709, Bk. i., No. 21). It is in C. U. in G. Britain and America. The most popular hymn with his appearage a centre counsiled this opening line is, however, a cento compiled from it and Watts's "See where the great Incarnate God" (Hys. & S. Songs, 1709, Bk. i., No. 45), which is No. 67 of the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases of 1781. In the Draft Trs. & Paraphs., 1745, No. 38, the cento was thus given :--

St. 1 .- v., from Watts, No. 21, as above.

St. vi., new. St. vii.-xii., from Watts, No. 45, as above. St. xiii., from Watts, No. 21, as above.

In the authorized Trs. and Paraphs. of 1781, this text was repeated with slight alterations, and has been in C. U. in Scotland and elsewhere to the present time. From the markings by the eldest daughter of W. Cameron (q.v.) we gather that the authorized Scottish text of 1781 was arranged and altered by Cameron. It should be designated I. Watts, 1707-9, Scottish Trs. & Paraphs., 1745, and W. Cameron, 1781. In Miss Jane E. Leeson's Paraphs. & Hys., 1853, the Scottish cento is re-arranged as a hymn in 7 st., beginning "From heaven, the glorious city comes." [J. J.]

Lobe den Herren den mächtigen König der Ehren. J. Neander. [Thanksgiving.] A magnificent hymn of praise to God, perhaps the finest production of its author, and of the first rank in its class. It is founded on Ps. ciii., 1-6, and Ps. cl. 1st pub. in his Glaub- und Liebesübung: auffgemuntert durch einfältige Bundes Lieder und Danck-Psalmen, Bremen, 1680, p. 47, in 5 st. of 5 l. Repeated in Freylinghausen's G. B., 1704, and in most subsequent collections, as recently in the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 687.

It was the favourite hymn of Friedrich Wilhelm III. It was the favourite hymn of Friedrich Wilhelm III. of Prussia, and Lauxmann, in Koch, viii. 340, relates how he was affected by hearing it sung while in a boat in the mines at Waldenburg in 1800. With this hymn the Prussian War Minister, Albrecht von Roon, celebrated his Jubiles of service, near Paris, January 9, 1871. The splendid chorale, given in the C. B. for England, appeared in the Stratsund G. B., 1865 (set to the hymn "Hast du denn Liebster dein Angesicht gintilch verborgen," see Dr. J. Zahn's Praiter und Harfe. 1886, No. 336), was adapted by Neunder, and repeated in Freylinghausen's G. B., 1704, and most later books.

Translations in C. U.:-

1. To God Almighty be praises and thanks from all living. A free tr. of st. i., ii., v., as No. 58 in the Dalston Hospital H. Bk., 1848.

2. Praise ye Jehovah! with anthems of praise come before Him. In 4 st. (marked as tr. from Neander, but really taking very little either from his language or his ideas), as No. 17 in the Amer. Luth. Gen. Synod's H. Bk., 1850-52.

3. Oh praise the King supreme in might, who reigneth in glory. Omitting st. iv., by A. T. Russell, as No. 214 in his Ps. & Hys., 1851.

4. Praise to Jehovah! the Almighty King of Creation. A good tr., omitting st. ii., by Miss Borthwick in the 2nd Ser., 1855, of the H. L. L., p. 66 (1884, p. 124). Repeated in Dr. Pagen-stecher's Coll., 1864, and Wilson's Service of Praise, 1865.

5, Praise to the Lord! He is King over all the Greation. A good tr., by T. C. Porter, in Cantate Domino, Boston, U.S., 1859, No. 315; repeated in the Hys. for the [German] Reformed Ch., Philadelphia, 1874, No. 462.

6. Praise to the Lord! the Almighty, the King of Creation! A good tr., omitting st. iv., by Miss Winkworth, as No. 9 in her C. B. for England, 1863; and thence in Dr. W. F. Stevenson's H. for Ch. & Home, 1873, Evang. Hyl., N. Y., 1880, &c.

Bods, p. 180, cites this as in the Jungfraw Schulordnung zu Torgaw, printed at Leipzig, 1565, where it has 9 st. of 4 l., and is printed after the instruction on the First Commandment. Wackernagel, iv. p. 168, quotes it from a Nürnberg broadsheet n.D., circa 1560 (Zwey Schöne Geistliche Lieder), and from the Leipzig G. B. 1582, in 7 st.; and this form is in the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 499. The only tr. in C. U. is noted under "Lobet den Herren alle die ihn fürchten" (see p. 411, ii.). ſJ. M.7

Lobwasser, Ambrosius, s. of Fabian Lobwasser, inspector of mines at Schneeberg, Saxony, was b. at Schneeberg, April 4, 1515. After studying law at Leipzig (M.A. 1535) he remained there as University tutor until 1550. After acting as travelling tutor, he was appointed in 1557 Rath and Chancellor at Meissen, and in 1562 made a tour in Italy, and received the degree of LL.D. from the University of Bologna. He was finally ap-pointed in 1563 by Duke Albrecht of Prussia as professor of law and assessor at the High Court of Justice at Königsberg. He d. at Königsberg Nov. 27, 1585 (Koch, ii. 394-401, &c.).

His principal poetical work was his version of the Psatter, which is noted under Psatters, German, pt. i. § ii. One has passed into English in recent times, viz.:

The Knecht des Herren all sugleich. [Ps. czzwis.]
The original is Beza's version of the Pssim, "Or sus, serviteurs de Seigneur," which first appeared in his Trente-quatre peaumes de Dauid, Geneva, 1551. Lobwasser's version is in his Psalter dess Königlichen Propheten Dauids, Leipzig, 1673 (not paged), in 3 st. of 4 l., entitled "He encourages the people to fulfil their calling diligently, and assures them that God will grant them His grace." Tr. as:—

Ye servants of the Lord, who stand. In full, by Miss Winkworth, as No. 38 in her C. B. for England, 1863, and set to the original melody of 1551 (see "All people that on earth do dwell").

Lodenstein, Jodocus van, s. of Joset Corneliss van Lodenstein, burgomaster of Delft, was b. at Delft Feb. 6, 1620. After studying at the Universities of Utrecht and Francker he was appointed in 1644 pastor at Zoetermeer and Zegwaard, near Delft; in 1650 at Sluys (Sluis, near the boundary of Flanders); and in 1653 at Utrecht. He d. at Utrecht Aug. 6, 1677 (Allg. Deutsche Biog. xix. 78-75).

A pastor of the Reformed Church, he was spiritually allied to the Mystics. After 1865, not being able to exclude the worldly, he ceased to dispense the Holy Communion and altered the Baptismal formula; but never separated from the Church.

His hymns appeared in his Uyt-Spanningen, Behelfende eenige stigtelyke Liederen en andere Gedigten, &c., Utrecht, 1676 [Berlin], which passed through many eds. Two are tr., viz.:—

Bernstein (p. 135, ii.), certainly not by G. Atnold or G. Tersteegen. Tr. as (1) "Quite alone and yet not lanely," in full, from the 1705, as No. 580 in pt. i. of the Moravian H. Bk., 1784. In the Moravian H. Bk., 1784. [1865, No. 702], the trz. of st. i., ii., were reduced to 8.7.8.7, and this form is also in the Bible H. Bk., 1845.

Arnold's Gött-Mcke Sopkia, 1700, pt. ii. p. 327, where it is No. 17 of Some hitherto unknown poems, mostly composed by others." As it is found in this section it is perhaps more probably by B. Crasselius (q. v.). Kock, vi. 6, and viii. 437, characterises it as "a pearl in the Evangelical Tressury of Song and a genuine Christian moral hymn, of more importance than a hundred of the so-called of more importance than a hundred of the so-called moral hymns in the second helf of the eighteenth cenmoral hymns in the second half of the eighteenth century." In the Berlin G. L. S. ed., 1863, No. 631.

The tra. are: (1) "As Thy will, O my Savlour," of st. ii., by C. G. Clemens, as No. 1065 in the Suppl. of 1808, to the Moraviors H. Bt., 1801 (1896, No. 622).

(2) "Most holy Jesus! Fount unfailing," by Dr. H. Mills, 1845 (1856, p. 227). (3) "Thou holiest Savlour, secred spring," by Miss Dunn, 1857, p. 28. (4) "Most holy Jesus, Fount of light," in Schaff's Christ in Song, 1869, p. 133.

Logan, John. [Bruce, Michael.]

Logau, Friedrich von, was b. in June, 1604, at Brockut, near Nimptsch, in Silesia, and became in 1644 Kanzleirath in the service of the Dukes of Brieg. In 1654 he removed with Duke Ludwig to Liegnitz as his Regierungsrath, and d. at Liegnitz, July 24, 1655.

rungarath, and d. at Lieguitz, July 24, 1500.

He was one of the best German poets of his time (admitted a member of the Falm Order in 1648), and specially distinguished as a writer of epigrams and aphorisms. These were first pub. in 1633. The complete ed., Breelau, 1664, was entitled Salomons con Colaw deutscher Sinn-Getichte drey Tausend. A complete reprint was issued by the Stuttgart Literary Society in 1872 (vol. 113 of their publications), and selections by G. Eitner (Leipzig, 1870), and modernised by K. Simrock (Stuttgart, 1874), and L. H. Fischer (Leipzig, 1875). A few have been tr. by H. W. Longfellow, and of these the two best known, with one or two more tr. by herself, are included in Miss Winkworth's Christian Singers, 1869, pp. 230–233. 1869, pp. 230-233. [J. M.]

Long did I toil and know no earthly rest. H. F. Lyte. [Peace in Jesus.] Appeared in his Poems chiefly Religious, 1833, p. 76, in 6 st. of 6 l. It combines unwavering confidence with plaintive sweetness, and is extensive; but usually two or more stanzas are omitted. Orig. text in Lyra Brit., 1867, p. 377.

Long have I laboured in the fire. C. Wesley. [Repentance.] 1st pub. in Hys. & Sac. Poems, 1742, in 10 st. of 4 l., as the second of two hymns, "After a relapse into Sin" (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. ii. p. 202). In the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, st. vi., viii.—x. were given as No. 208, "Jesus, to Thee I now can fly." This has been repeated in several collections, sometimes as "Jesus, to Thee we now can fly," and again as "Jesus, to Thee, to Thee, I fly," as in Dr. Alexander's Augustine H. Bk., 1849 and 1865. [J. J.]

Long have I [we] sat beneath the sound. I. Watts. [Unfruitfulness.] 1st pub. in the 2nd ed. of his Hys. and S. Songs, 1709, Bk. ii., No. 165, in 6 st. of 4 l., and headed "Unfruitfulness, Ignorance, and unsanctified Affections." It was repeated in J. Wesley's Ps. & Hys., pub. at Charlestown, 1736-7, in Whitefield's Ps. & Hys., 1753; Madan's Ps. & Hys., 1760, and others of the older collections, and also in a large number of modern hymnbooks both in G. Britain and America, but usually in a slightly altered form, and sometimes as, "Long have we sat beneath the sound." Another and somewhat popular arrangement of the text is "Long have we heard the joyful sound." This is in Snepp's Songs of G. & G., 1872, Common Praise, 1879, and [J. J.] many others.

Long have I seemed to serve Thee, Lord. C. Wesley. [Formal Religion.] Written during the disputes between the Wesleys and the Moravians concerning Antinomianism and Perfectionism. Dr. Jackson sums up the controversy in his Memoirs of C. Wesley (abridged ed., 1848, p. 98) thus :-

"Molther was the most active and strenuous in propagating the errors by which many were misled. He contended that there are no degrees in faith; so that those who have not the full and unclouded assurance of the divine favour, whatever they may possess besides, have no faith at all. Another tenet which he avowed and defended was, that till men have faith, they are not to use any of the means of grace, such as the reading of the Scriptures, attending the ministry of the Gospel, and receiving the Holy Communion; these ordinances being rather injurious than beneficial, till men have a true and vital faith. . . . The fine hymn on Christian Ordinances, n being and beginning, was written by Mr. C. Wealey at this period [1739-40], as an antidote to the mischievous errors which were prevalent."

The hymn was included in the Wesley Hys. & Sac. Poems, 1740, in 23 st. of 4 L, and headed. "The Means of Grace" (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. i. p. 233). In 1780 J. Wesley compiled two hymns therefrom, and gave them in the Wen. H. Bk. ов :-

1. Long have I seemed to serve Thee, Lord, No. 88. 2. Still for Thy loving-kindness, Lord, No. 88.

These hymns have been repeated in numerous hymn-books in G. Britain and America. In the American Unitarian Hys. for the Ch. of Christ, 1853, the first of these is reduced to 4 st

Long have I sought for happiness. W. Hammond, [Death and the Resurrection.] 1st pub. in his Ps., Hys. and Spiritual Songs, one of his most touching efforts. Its use is 1745, p. 97, in 13 st. of 4 l. and headed, "And so shall we ever be with the Lord." In this full form it is not in common use. A cento therefrom, "Lord, if on earth the thought of Thee," is given in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871, No. 417. It is composed of sts. iii., iv., ix. and xiii., all more or less altered. [J. J.]

Longfellow, Henry Wadsworth, D.C.L., was b. at Portland, Msine, Feb. 27. Wadsworth, 1807, and graduated at Bowdoin College, 1825. After residing in Europe for four years to qualify for the Chair of Modern Languages in that College, be entered upon the duties of the same. In 1835 he removed to Harvard, on his election as Professor of Modern Lan-guages and Belles-Lettres. He retained that Professorship to 1854. His literary reputation is great, and his writings are numerous and well known. His poems, many of which are as household words in all English-speaking countries, display much learning and great poetic power. A few of these poems and portions of others have come into C. U. as hymns, but a hymn-writer in the strict sense of that term he was not and never claimed to be. His pieces in C. U. as hymns include:-

- 1. Alas, how poor and little worth. Life a Race. Tr. from the Spanish of Don Jorge Manrique (d. 1479), in Longfellow's Poetry of Spain, 1833.
- 2. All is of God; if He but wave His hand. God All and in All. From his poem "The Two Angels," pub. in his Birds of Passage, 1858. It is in the Boston Hys. of the Spirit, 1864, &c.
- 3. Blind Bartimeus at the gate. Bartimous. From his Miscellaneous Poems, 1841, into G. W. Conder's 1874 Appendix to the Leeds H. Bk.
- 4. Christ to the young man said, "Yet one thing more." Ordination. Written for his brother's (S. Longfellow) ordination in 1848, and pub. in Seaside and Fireside, 1851. It was given in an altered form as "The Saviour said, yet one thing more," in H. W. Beecher's Plymouth Coll., 1855.
- 5. Down the dark future through long generations. Peace. This, the closing part of his poem on "The Arsenal at Springfield," pub. in his Beifrey of Bruges, &c., 1845, was given in A Book of Hys., 1848, and repeated in several collections.
- 6. Into the alient land. The Hereafter. A tr. from the German (see Salis).
- 7. Tell me not in mournful numbers. Pealm of Life. Pub. in his Voices of the Night, 1839, as "A Psalm of Life: What the heart of the Young Man said to the Psalmist." It is given in several hymnals in G. Britain and America. In some collections it begins with st. ii., "Life is real! Life is earnest.'

The universal esteem in which Longfellow was held as a poet and a man was marked in a special manner by his bust being placed in that temple of honour, Westminster Abbey. (F. M. B.)

Longfellow, Samuel, N.A., brother of the Poet, was b. at Portland, Maine, June 18, 1819, and educated at Harvard, where he graduated in Arts in 1839, and in Theology in 1846. On receiving ordination as an Unitarian Minister, he became Pastor at Fall River, Massachusetts, 1848; at Brooklyn, 1853; and at Germantown, Pennsylvania, 1860. In 1846 he edited, with the Rev. S. Johnson (q. v.), A Book of Hymns for Public and Private Devotion. This collection was enlarged and revised in 1848. In 1859 his Vespers was pub., and in 1864 the Unitarian Hymns of the Spirit, under the joint editorship of the Rev. S. Johnson and himself. His Life of his brother, the Poet Longfellow, was pub. in 1886. To the works named he contributed the following hymns:-

i. To A Book of Hymns, revised ed., 1848.

Beneath the shadow of the Cross. Love.
 O God, thy children gathered here. Ordination.

ii. To the Vespers, 1859.

 Again as evening's shadow falls. Evening.
 Now on land and sea descending. Evening. iii. To the Hymns of the Spirit, 1864.

111. 10 tile hymne of the Spirit, 1802.

6. A voice by Jordan's abore. Advent,
6. Father, give Thy benediction. Ordination.
7. Go forth to life, O child of carth. Life's Mission.
8. God of ages and of nations. Holy Spirit desired.
9. Holy Spirit, Truth divine. The Holy Spirit desired.
10. I look to Thee in every need. Trust is God.
11. In the beginning was the Word. The Word.
12. Love for all, and can it be? Lent. The Prodigal

13. O God, in Whom we live and move. God's Law and Lov

na Love.

14. O God, Thou Giver of all good. Prayer for Food.

15. O still in accents sweet and strong. Missions.

16. O Thou, Whose liberal sun and rain. Anniversary

Church dedication.

17. One holy Church of God appears. The Church Universal.

18. Out of the dark, the circling sphere. The Outlook, 19. Peace, peace on earth! the heart of man for ever. Peace on Earth.

20. The loving Friend to all who bowed. Jesus of Nagareth

21. 'Tis winter now, the fallen enow. Winter.

Of these, hymn No. 2 was written for the Ordination of E. E. Hale (q. v.), at Worcester, 1846. Several are included in Martineau's Hymns, 1873. D. Oct. 3, 1892. [F. M. B.]

Look down, O Lord, and on our youth. T. Cotterill. [Confirmation.] Appeared in the 9th ed. of his Sel., 1820, No. 120, in 6 st. of 4 l., and headed, "Intercession for Children about to be Confirmed," It has passed into a large number of hymn-books, and is popular as a Confirmation bymn. [J. J.]

Look down, O Lord, with pitying eye. P. Doddridge. [Missions.] This hymn is No. 66 in the D. MSS. but is undated. It was pub. by J. Orton in his ed. of Doddridge's (posthumous) Hymns, &c., 1755. No. 146, in 5 st. of 4 l., and again in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the same, 1839, No. 164. It is based on Ezekiel's Vision of the Dry Boncs, and is in C. U. in G. Britain and America.

Look in pity, Lord of Glory. E. Casrall. [Confirmation.] This hymn is compiled from a "Hymn for the Renewal of Baptismal Vows," first pub. in his May Pageant and other Poems, 1865. It is written to be sung in parts, divided into a "Solo," "Chorus," and a portion to be sung by "All." In the People's H., each of these parts has been lain under contribution to furnish hymn 846. Caswall's revised text is in his Hymns & Poems [W. T. B.] 1873, p. 296.

Look, ye saints, the sight is glorious. T. Kelly. [The Second Advent.] 1st pub. in his Hymns, &c., 3rd ed., 1809, No. 27, in 4 st. of 6 l., and headed, "And He shall reign for ever, and ever" (1853 ed., No. 49). In popular and extensive use both in G. Britain and America. It ranks with many of the best hymns by Watts and C. Wesley. [J. J.]

Lord and God of heavenly powers. C. Wesley. [Praise.] Appeared in Hys. and Sac. Paems, 1739, pt. ii., as a metrical paraphrase of "Therefore with Angels and Archangels," &c. (See Ter Sanctus, in Greek Hymnedy, p. 459, i.), from the Office for Holy Communion in the Book of Common Prayer. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. i. p. 114.) It is in 3 st. of ±1. In its original form it is not in frequent use; but st. iii.—

" 'Holy, holy, holy, Lord,
Live by heaven and earth adored!'
Full of Thee they ever cry,
'Glory be to God most high,'"

is sometimes used in centos, as in Morcer's version of "Sons of God, triumphant rise" (q.v.). [J. J.]

Lord, and what shall this man do? J. Keble. [St. John the Evangelist.] Written Dec. 27, 1819, and 1st pub. in his Christian Yeor, 1827, in 6 st. of 6 L., and based upon St. John xxi. 21, 22. It is given in several hymn-books, but usually in an abbreviated form. In the American Plymouth Coll., 1855, No. 858, st. iv.-vi. are given as "Gales from heaven, if so He will."

Lord, as to Thy dear Cross we flee. J. H. Gurney. [Resignation, or The Daily Cross.] 1st pub. in his Lutterworth Coll. of Hys., 1838, No. 127, in 6 st. of 4 l., and again in the Mary-le-bone Ps. & Hys., 1851, No. 112. It is given in numerous collections in G. Britain and America, and sometimes as, "As to Thy Cross, dear Lord, we flee." Another altered form is "Lord, as we put our trust in Thee," in Common Praise, 1879. [J. J.]

Lord, at Thy feet a sinner lies. S. Browne. [Lent.] Appeared in the 1st ed. of his Hys. and Spiritual Songs, &c., 1720, No. 15, in 6 st. of 4 l., and entitled "Sinners suing for mercy." In Rippon's Sel., 1787, No. 235, it was altered to "Lord, at Thy feet we sinners lie," and this form has been continued to modern hymnals, as in Bap. Ps. & Hys., 1858 and 1880, No. 384. Its use is somewhat extensive. [J. J.]

Lord, at Thy Table I behold. S. Stennett. [Holy Communion.] Appeared in Hys. for All Denominations, Lon. 1782, No. 42, and in Rippon's Bap. Sel., 1787, No. 482, in 7 st. of 4 l., and entitled "A Sacramental Hymn." It was given as by "Dr. J. Stennett"; but the "J." is a misprint for "S." This error is repeated in most collections. The use of this hymn, usually in an abridged form, is somewhat extensive in G. Britain and America, and especially amongst the Baptists. [J. J.]

Lord, at Thy temple we appear. I. Watts. [Nunc Dimittis.] This is given as "The Song of Simeon; or, Death made desirable," in his Hys. & Spiritual S., 1707, Bk. i., No. 19, in 6 st. of 4 l. It is in use in G. Britain and America. In the Leeds H. Bk., 1853, No. 647, st. v., vi. are given as, "Jesus, the vision of Thy Face." The use of this abbreviated form is limited. [J. J.]

Lord, at Thy word the constant sun. J. H. Gurney. [Harvest.] 1st pub. in his Lutterworth Coll. of Hymns, &c., 1838, No. 128, in 4 st. of 7 l., with st. iv. bracketed for omission if desired. In 1851, st. i.-iii. were rewritten, and a now st. iv. added by the author for his Mary-le-bone Ps. & Hys., No. 124, and included therein as "Lord of the Harvest! Thee we hail." Since 1851 it has passed into most of the leading collections, and is the most popular of the author's compositions. In the Hymnary, 1872, and Thring's Coll., 1882, Dryden's doxology, "Immortal honour, endless fame," from his "Creator Spirit," &c., is added thereto. This gives to the hymn a completeness not usually found in the collections. Orig. text as above: authorized text of 1851 in the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., with st. ii., ll. 1, 2, "When" for "If" in both lines.

Lord, by Thee in safety borne. J. Anstice. [Sunday Morning.] 1st pub. in his posthumous Hymns, &c., 1836, No. v., in 4 st. of 8 l. In 1841 it was given in the Child's Christian Year as the opening hymn of that collection. It is in a few hymnals, including Kennedy, 1863, in which st. ii., 1l. 1-4, and various alterations are by Dr. Kennedy.

Lord, cause Thy face on us to shine. T. Cotterill. [For a Blessing on Ministers and People.] Contributed to the 8th ed. of his Sel., 1819, No. 28, in 3 st. of 81, and headed, "For God's blessing on His Ministers and People." Although not repeated in the 9th ed., 1820, it was included in other hymnbooks, and is still in C. U. The hymn, "O King of Salem, Prince of Peace," in W. F. Stevenson's Hys. for Church and Home, 1873, and other collections, begins with st. ii. of this hymn.

Lord, come away; why dost Thou stay. Bp. Jeremy Taylor. [The Second Advent.] This hymn, entitled "The Second Mymn for Advent; or, Christ's Coming to Jerosalem in Triumph," appeared in his Festival and Penitential Hymns, appended to his Golden Grove, 1655, in 21 irregular lines. In this form it was included in Bp. Heber's (posthumous) Hymns, &c., 1827, and in Bp. Taylor's Collected Works, vol. vii., 1854. In this form, however, it was not suitable for congregational use. In a rewritten form it appeared in the Leeds H. Bk, 1853, No. 286, as, "Descend to Thy Jerusalem, O Lord." This, with slight variations, was included in the Sarum Hymnal, 1868, as "Draw nigh to Thy Jerusalem, O Lord," and from thence has passed into the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871, and others. [English Hymnody, Early, §1x.]

Lord, dismiss us with Thy blessing. [Close of Service.] This is the opening line of four hymns, each of which must be noted in detail.

i. The first hymn reads :-

"Lord, dismiss us with thy Blessing;
Fill our Hearts with joy and peace;
Let us each, thy Love possessing,
Triumph in redeeming Grace
O refresh us
In this dry and barren place,

Thanks we give and Adoration For thy Gospel's joyful sound: May the Fruits of thy Salvation In our Hearts and Lives abound! Ever faithful To the Truth may we be found!

" So whene'er the Signal's given Us from Earth to call away, Borne on Angela' wings to Heaven, Glad the Summons to obey, May we ever Reign with Christ in endless Day."

The authorship of this hymn has long been a matter of doubt. From 1773 to 1780 it appeared in many collections, but always without signature, in common with all the hymns in the same collections; and from 1786 to 1800, when it was given in collectious wherein hymns were assigned to their respective authors, as the composition of "F." and "Fawcett." The details taking the leading collections are :-

i. In A Supplement to the Shawbury Hymn Book, Shrewsbury, Printed by J. Eddones, near the Market House, 1713. And sold by Mr. T. Maddoz in Shawbury. The title of the Shawbury H. Bk. to which this is a Suppl. is A Collection of Psalms and Hymns. Ex-Suppl. is A Collection of Psalms and Hymns. Extracted from Dr. Watts, and other Authors. The 2nd ed, before us is dated Shrewsbury, 1773. It has written in it "Sir Richd, Hill," showing that it was the property of Sir Richard Hill, brother of the Rev. Rowland Hill. The text given above is from this Suppl., No. 46. These facts suggest the question, "Is Rowland Hill the anthor?" We think not, because the hymn does not appear in any of his hymn-books, all published at a later date. If it were his, we cannot conceive why it should have been unjitted. The omission from his hymn-books is fatal to his claim. is fatal to his claim.

ii. 1774. In Dr. Conyers's Collection of Psalms and Hymns, &c., London, J. & W. Oliver, 3rd ed., No. 374. In this st. 1., l. 6, is altered to Travilling thro' this wilderness.

iii. 1776. In A.M. Toplady's Pealms and Hymns, 1st ed., No. 168, with alterations thus:

St. ii., ll. 5, 6. May thy presence

St. ii., il. 5, 6.

With us evermore be found!

St. iii., 1. 5,

We shall surely.

iv. 1778. In A Collection of Hymns, pub. at Edin-

v. 1780. In the 4th ed. of Dr. Conyers's Coll., pub. at York.

at York.
vi. 1780. In David Simpson's Collection of Pealms and Hymns, pub. at Macclessield, Appendix, No. 482.
vil. 1780. In A Collection of Hymns, &c. (4th ed.), pub. at York by A. Ward, for the compiler, the Rev. J.
Harris, a Nonconformist Minister of Hull. vill. 1780. In the Lady Huntingdon Collection, under the editorship of the Hon. and Rev. Walter Shirley. In this case we have the altered text of Toplady repeated for the first time.

To this date no indication of authorship can be found either in the above collections, or in contemporary literature. Thirteen years after its first appearance in Suppl. to the Shawbury H. Bk. the history is again taken up, but in a more definite form, thus :-

ix. 1786. In a Selection of Fralms for Social Worship, &c., York, A. Ward. This Unitarian collection contains the first four lines only of st. i. and ii., and these are signed "F." This initial we find from the list of authors given in the collection represents J. Presecti (q. v.), a Nonconformist Minister formerly of Wainsgate, Yorkshire; and then of Hebden Bridge, in the same county. A shade of doubtfulness, however, is thrown over the ascriptions of authorship in this collection by the editor prefacing his list with these words, "In the appropriation for names] as it depended much on the compiler's memory, he wishes it to be observed, that there may probably be some mistakes, but he hopes there are not many." Preface, p. 26.

x. 1781. In the 7th ed. of Harris's Collection, No. 212 (see vi.), pub. at York, and edited by John Beatson, xi. 1800. In A Collection of Hymns for Christian Worship, pub. in Dublin, and again signed Fawcett.

From this date the signature falls out of use for many years, probably from the fact that, the York and Dublin Collections being little known, the editors of new hymn-books took their texts from Conyers, Toplady, the Lady Huntingdon, Burder, or similar widely-known collections in which all hymns were given without signatures, and appended thereto such notes as, "from Burder's Coll.," "Taylor and Jones's Coll.," and so on. During the past few years, however, the question of authorship has been revived, some claiming it for Dr. Fawcett, and others for the Hon, and Rev. W. Shirley. Their respective claims, with their drawbacks, stand thus:—

For Dr. John Fawcett. To him it is ascribed by the York Collections of 1786 and 1791, the editors of which, in common with Fawcett, were resident in Yorksbire, and ministers of Nonconformist congregations. Also by and ministers of Nonconformist congregations. Also by the Dublin Collection, 1900.

Against Dr. Puncett. The before-named weakness in the testimony of the Fork Coll., 1736, must be noted, and the fact that the hymn is not in Fawcett's works, nor is it claimed for him either by his editor or his family. It must be added, however, that several of his hymness found is the Court Meanware which have the Court Meanware which have the control of the Court Meanware which have the court of hymns are found in the Gospel Magazine which are not given in his works.

For Hon. and Rev. W. Shirley. A tradition in his family, set forth by his son to Mr. A. C. H. Seymour, and recorded by Dr. Rogers in Lyra Brit., p. 498, and Miller, Singers & Songs of the Church, 1869, p. 246, that miller, singers a songs of the Univers, 1009, p. 220, since it was his composition.

Against Mr. Shirley. (1) There is no documentary evidence. (2) That it was in the Shawbury Suppl, seven years before admitted by Shirley as editor into the Lady Huntingdon Coll. in 1780, and (3) when admitted the text was taken from Toplady, and not from the

These statements are by no means satisfactory. Taking them, however, as they stand, we must conclude that the author is very probably Dr. Fawcett, and certainly not Walter Shirley.

The use of this Dismissal hymn has been and still is most extensive. Nearly every hymn-book of an Evangelical type published during the past hundred years has adopted it in a form more or less perfect. In some cases it has a doxology added thereto or substituted for the last stanza. Mercer's doxology, Oxford ed., 1864, No. 54, is the most suitable. hymns:-

" Lord, refresk us with Tby blessing," found in various collections : and-

" Lord, enrich us with Thy blessing," as in the Rugby School Hymn-Book, 1850, and later editions, are altered from the above.

ii. The second hymn is:-

"Lord, dismiss us with Thy blessing, Rid us all depart in peace; Still on gospel manua feed us, Pure seraphic love increase Fill each breast with consolation, Up to Thee our voices we raise, When we reach the blissful station Then we'll give Thee nobler praise.

And sing hallelujah to God and the Lamb,
For ever and ever, for ever and ever, Hallelujah, Hallelujah, Hallelujah!

This hymn is found in Dr. Hawker's Pealms and Hymns for the Sunday School in the Parish Church of Charles, Plymouth, 9th ed. no date, 13th ed. 1807. In the Crawford and Eberle Index to the Irish Church Hymnal, 1876, p. 53, the editors say :-

"It is found also, but with considerable alterations, in the Rev. Edward Smyth's Collection, Manchester, 1793.

Of these two versions that of Hawker seems to be the older, and is possibly by Hawker himself. It is ascribed to him in Baring-Gould's Life of the Rev. R. S. Hawker, where, however, Mr. Baring-Gould has inadvertently quoted the hymn with Fawcett's text which is found indeed in the latest edition of the Charles Colis round indeed in the latest roution of the Charles Observed (1867), but was then introduced in it for the first time by the editor, the Rev. H. A. Greaves. If the eight-line stanza is by Dr. Hawker, it must have appeared in his Collection before 1793. He became Vicar of Charles in 1784, and the Sunday School was established ln 1787.

From the time of its appearance in the Charles and the Manchester Collections to the present, it has been republished in numerous hymnals, including D. Simpson's Macclesfield Coll. 1795; the Wes. H. Bk., 1800; Williams & Boden, 1801; Bailey's Sion's Melodies, 1813-1866, and others. In the last case it is given in two stanzas from "Smyth's Manchester Col-lection" as noted above.

iii. The third hymn is:-

" Lord, dismiss us with Thy blessing, Thanks for mercies past receive;
Pardon all their faults confessing;
Time that's lost, may all retrieve!
May Thy children
Ne'er again Thy Spirit grieve!

" Bless Thou, all our days of leisure;
Help us selfish lures to fice:—
Sanctify our every pleasure,
Pure and spotless may it be:
May our gladness
Days us greatered to These! Draw us evermore to Thee!

"By Thy kindly influence cherish
All the good we here have gained;
May all taint of evil perish,
By Thy mightier power restrained; Seck we ever

Knowledge pure and love unfeigued! " Let Thy Father-hand be shielding All who here shall meet no more; May their seed-time past be yielding Year by year a richer store! Those returning Make more faithful than before!"

This hymn is by the Rev. H. J. Buckell, sometime Assistant Master in Rugby School; and it appeared in the Ps. & Hys. for the Use of Rugby School Chapel, 1850, No. 56, and appointed "For the last Sunday of the Half-Year." It had a companion hymn by Buckoll "For the first Sunday of the Half-Year" (No. 55), the opening stanza of which reads:-

"Lord, behold us with Thy blessing, Once again assembled here; Onward be our footsteps pressing, In Thy love, and faith, and fear! Still protect us By Thy presence ever near!"

These hymns have been repeated in most of the modern Public School hymn-books. iv. The fourth hymn is the following:-

"Lord, dismiss us with Thy blessing,
Guide us in Thy boly ways,
That Thy love and joy possessing,
May we ever sing Thy praise.
Halieiujah! Amen.
That Thy love and joy possessing,
We may ever sing Thy praise. "Low in supplication bending,
We adore Thy power divine;
Hallelujaha never ending
Through eternity be Thine!
Hallelujah; Amen.
Hallelujahs never ending

Through eternity be Thine!" This hymn is given in A Sel. of Ps. & Hys. pub. at Rugeley, by J. T. Walters, in 1850. The Preface is signed "F. E. P."; but the hymns are given anonymously. The first of these hymns has been translated into various languages, and in one form or another it is in most extensive use throughout G. Britain, America, the Colonies, and on mission stations. A tr. into Latin of a slightly altered form of st. i.: "Dimitte nos, Deus, Tuis," by the Rev. R. Bingham, is given in his Hymno, Christ. Lat. 1871, p. 163. It may be added that T. Cotterill's altered form of the oldest text as above, No. i., given in his Set., 1819, as "Lord, prevent us with Thy blessing," failed to attract attention; that "Dismiss us with Thy blessing, Lord," which is sometimes taken as also an altered form of this hymn, is by J. Hart (q.v.); that "Lord, attend us with Thy blessing." No. 917, in Kennetty, 1863, is based on Nos. i. and ii. as above; and that "Lord, go with us, grant Thy blessing," in Windle's Ch. & Home M. Ps. & Hyl., 1862, No. 225, is the same slightly altered. [J. J.]

Lord, ere the heavenly seed is sown. J. Needham. [Before or after Sermon. Parable of the Sower.] Pub. in his Hys. Devo-tional and Moral, on Various Subjects, &c., 1768, No. 261, in 7 st. of 4 l., and an additional stanza thus introduced :-

The above may be sung after sermon by making the following alterations in stanza i.:—

"Now, Lord, the heavenly seed is sown,
Be it Thy servant's care,
Thy heavenly blessing to bring down
By humble fervent prayer."

This suggested adaptation for use "After Sermon" has been adopted in some collections, including the Bap. Sel. of Hys., 1838, No. 477; the Bap. Ps. & Hys., 1858 and 1880, and others. The original is headed "An Hymn before Sermon; or, the Parable of the Sower abridg'd."

Lord, for ever at Thy side. J. Montgomery. [Ps. exxxi.] Pub. in Cotterill's Sel., 8th ed., 1819, p. 73, in 4 st of 4 l, and headed, "For Humility." In 1822 it was repeated by Montgomery in his Songs of Zion, as a paraphrase of Ps. cxxxi.; in his Poetical Works, 1828; and his Original Hymns, 1853. No. 187. It is a most successful paraphrase, and is somewhat widely used. ſŻaalters, English, § XVII.] [J. J.]

Lord, from my bed again I rise. W. Bartholomew. [Morning.] Written in 1854 for Sir M. Costa's Oratorio Eti, and set as a song for the prophet Samuel. It was pub. in Eli, 1854, and was subsequently repeated in several hymn-books, including the N. Cong., 1859, and others, [J. J.]

Lord God of morning and of night, F. T. Palgrave. [Morning.] Written in 1862, and given in ms. to Sir R. Palmer (Lord Selborne), who included it in his Bk. of Praise, 1862, in 5 st of 4 l. In 1867 it was also given in the author's Hymns, and again in several collections in G. Britain and America. It has been specially set to music by Tilleard. London, Novello. [J. J.]

Lord God, the Holy Ghost. J. Montgomery. [Whitsuntide.] Pub. in Cotteril's Sel., 8th ed., 1819, No. 226, in 3 st. of 8 l., and headed "Whit-Sunday." In Montgomery's Christian Paslmist, 1825, No. 506, and in his Original Hymns, 1853, No. 136, the text is slightly altered. This amended text is that given in Lord Selborne's Bk. of Praise, 1862, and in most of the collections which give the hymn. Its use in G. Britain and America is [J. J.]

Lord, have mercy and remove us. H. H. Milman. [Heaven desired.] Pub. in Bp. Heber's posthumous Hymns, 1827, p. 122, in 4 st. of 4 l., and again in Milman's Sel. of Ps. & Hys., 1837 (ed. 1856, p. 90). It is found in several modern hymn-books. [J. J.]

Lord, have mercy when we [pray] strive. H. H. Milman. [Lent.] 1st pub. in Bp. Heber's posthumous Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 94, in 3 st. of 8 l., with the refrain "Oh then have mercy! Lord!" and repeated in the author's Ps. & Hys., 1837. In addition to its use in its original form, it is also given in several collections as "Lord, have mercy when we pray," as in the People's H., 1867; and, with st. ii. and iii. transposed, in the 1869 Appendix to the S. P. C. K. Ps. & Hys. Because of its refrain it is sometimes regarded as a Metrical Litany.

Lord, her watch Thy Church is keeping. H. Downton. [Foreign Missions.] Written for a meeting of the Church Missionary Society, and first pub. in Barry's Psalms & Hymns, 1867, No. 170, in 3 st. of 8 l., and again in the author's Hymns & Verses, 1873, p. 1. It is also found in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871; H. A. & M., 1875; Thring's Coll., 1882, and many others in G. Britain and America, and ranks with the best of the author's compositions. It is sometimes given as "Lord, Thy Church her watch is keeping," as in Common Praise, 1879, and others. [J. J.]

Lord, how shall wretched sinners dare. Anne Steele. [In Time of War.] Appeared in the 2nd ed. of her Poems on Subjects chiefly Devotional, 1780, vol. iii. p. 123, in 8 st. of 4 l., and headed, "On the day of Prayer for success in War." It is also in D. Sedgwick's reprint of Miss Steele's Hymns, 1863. In a few American hymn-books, including the Presbyterian Sel. of Hys., Philadelphia, 1861, a cento from this is given as "Lord, may our souls Thy grace edore." It begins with st. iii., somewhat altered.

Lord, I am Thine, but Thou wilt prove. I. Watts. [Ps. xvii.] 1st pub. in his Psalms of David, &c., 1719, in 6 st. of 4 l., and headed "The Sinner's Portion and the Saint's Hope; or, The Heaven of separate Souls and the Resurrection." It is given in its original form in the Hy. Comp. and a few other hymn-books. In addition there are also the following abbreviations in C. U.:—

1. All, all is vanity below. This is an altered form of st. iii.—vi. It appeared in the 1st ed. of Cotterill's Sci., 1810; and is found in several modern collections, including that for the Harrow School Chapel, and others.

2. What sinners value, I resign. This is the most popular form of the hymn, and is in extensive use in G. Britain and America. It appeared in A. M. Toplady's Ps. & Hys., 1776, No. 154.

Lord, I am vile, conceived in sin. I. Watts. [Ps. 16.] 1st pub. in his Ps. of David, &c., 1719, in 7 st. of 4 l. In the American Church Pustorals, Boston, 1864, st. i., ii., iv.-vi. are given as one hymn (No. 361), and st. iii. and vil., beginning "Great God, create my heart anew," as another (No. 860),

The hymn is also in use in its full form. Its original heading is, "Original and actual sin confess'd."

Lord, I believe a rest remains. C. Wesley. [Holiness desired.] Pub. in Hys. & Sac. Poems, 1740, in 27 st. of 4 L, and based upon Heb. iv. 9, "There remains the therefore a rest to the people of God" (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. i. p. 370). In its original form it is an expression of faith in the doctrine of "Entire Holiness," or "Perfection," as understood by the early Methodists, and a prayer for personal possession of the same. In the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, J. Wesley included a cento therefrom as No. 391, embodying the same doctrine and prayer, the second and third stanzas of which read :-

"A rest, where all our soul's desire
Is fixed on things above;
Where fear, and sin, and grief expire,
Cast out by perfect love! "O that I now the rest might know, Believe, and enter in ! Now, Saviour, now the power bestow, And let me cease from sin."

Wesley's theological opponents, however, had another cento from the same hymn in use for some years before, in which the rest was changed from a word which stood for the doc-trine of "Entire Holiness," into a term descriptive of the eternal peace of Heaven. This is one of those changes in the text of the Wesley hymns which J. Wesley denounced in the Preface of the Wes. H. Bk. It was made by A. M. Toplady, and appeared in his Ps. & Hys., 1776, No. 52. Stanzas ii., iii. read (with the changes in the text in italics) :-

"Then shall I sing and never tire, In that blest house above, Where doubt, and fear, and pain expire, Cast out by perfect love. " Celestial Spirit, make me know That I shall enter in.

Now, Saviour, now the pow'r bestow, And wash me from my sin."

These two centos are in C. U. in most English-speaking countries, and are distinguished by the stanzas quoted above. In addition, st. xv. and xvii. of the original are iven in the American Church Pastorals, Boston, 1864, as "Come, O my Saviour, come [J. J.]

Lord, I believe Thy work of grace. C. Wesley. [Holiness desired.] Appeared in Hys. & Sac. Poems, 1742, in 22 st. of 4 l., and headed, "The Spirit and the Bride say Come" P. Works, 1868-72, vol. ii. p. 363). In 1780 J. Wesley gave a cento therefrom in 9 st. in the Wes. H. Bk., No. 393, as "O joyful sound of gospel grace." This has been repeated in several collections.

Lord, I confess my sins to Thee. C. Wesley. [Redemption desired.] Pub. in Hys. and Sac. Poems, 1742, in 37 st. of 6 l., divided into four parts, as:--

Lord, I confess my sins to Thee,
 Forgive me, O long-suffering God,
 Omniscient, Omnipotent King.
 Behold, ye souls, that mourn for God.

The hymn in the Wes. H. Bk., 1875, No. 120, "Comfort, ye ministers of grace," is composed of st. vi. and vii. of Pt. 4.

Lord, I desire to live as one. Charitie L. Bancroft, [Haliness desired.] In Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bk., 1866, this hymn is given in 4 st. of 41., and dated 1861. This text is also in other collections. In her Within the Veil, 1867, Mrs. Bancroft gives it as the last hymn in the volume, in 6 st. of 4 l., with a note saying that the hymn was revised for that work. In this text the additional sts. are v., vii. [W. T. B.]

Lord, I have made Thy word my choice. I. Watts. [Ps. cxix. Pt. viii.] 1st pub. in his Psalms of David, &c., 1719, p. 319, in 4 st. of 4 l., and headed, "The Word of God is the Saint's Portion; or, The Excellency and Variety of Scripture." Its use has extended to almost all English-speaking countries, and it is found in a large number of hymn-books at home and abroad. [J. J.]

Lord, I hear of showers of blessing. Elizabeth Codner. [Divine Blessing desired.] Although we have the Ms. of this hymn in Mrs. Codner's bandwriting, sent to D. Sedgwick from Weston-super-Mare, June 18, 1866, wherein it is stated to have been "written in the summer of 1860" [s. mss.], we have no personal facts concerning Mrs. Codner and her work except that she published one or two small books, as The Missionary Ship; The Bible in the Kitchen, &c.; edited the periodicel, Woman's Work in the Great Harvest-Field; and was associated for some years with the Mildmay Protestant Mission (London). "Lord, I hear of showers of blessing " was suggested by the news of the religious revival in Ireland, 1860-61. It is in 7 st. of 4 l., with the refrain "Even me," and is headed "Bless me, even me also, O my Father." The original text is in Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bk., 1866, No. 607. That in I. D. Sankey's Sac. Songs & Solos, Pt. i., which is usually regarded as the originul, is altered in several instances, and st. v. is omitted. The hymn in full, or in part, is in extensive use, and is specially popular at Mission Services. In 1867 Mrs. Codner wrote a companion hymn of Praise, "Lord, to Thee my heart ascending," in 8 st. of 4 l., for the Rev. E. P. Hammond's Hys. specially adapted for Seasons of Deep Religious Interest, &c., [J. J.] 1867.

Lord, I magnify Thy power. C. Wesley. [For Daily Strength.] Given in his Hys. for Use of Families, 1767, No. 53, in 4 st. of 81. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. vii. p. 60). In the Wes. H. Ble., 1780, No. 327, st. iii. and iv. were given as "Father, in the Name I pray." It has passed into other collections. G. J. Stevenson's annotations of this hymn in his Meth. H. Bk. Notes, 1883, p. 240, are of more than usual interest. [J. J.]

Lord, if Thou Thy grace impart. C. Wesley. [Ps. cazaxi.] 1st pub. in the onlarged ed. of the Wesley Ps. & Hys., 1743, in 5 st. of 4 lines. It is one of C. Wesley's finest renderings of the Psalms; and although not admitted into the Wes. H. Bh. until the revised ed. of 1875, it has been in extensive use in the Church of England and amongst Nonconformists for more than a hundred years. During that time numerous variations have crept into the text. The first to mutilate it was M. Madan, in his Ps. & Hys., 1760. From his version Church of England and Nonconformist compilers have taken their texts, and have added thereto, in nearly every instance, something of their own until no two collections are found to agree. These changes cannot be given in detail without reprinting the full text from almost every hymnbook in which the hymn is found. The most peculiar cento of all is that in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871, No. 418, in 4 st. of 4 l. Of the 16 lines 5 only are by C. Wesley: st. i. Il. 1, 2; st. ii. l. 1; st. iv. ll. 1, 4; the rest being from Madan, 1760: Bickersteth's Christian Psalmody, 1833; Hall's Mitre H. Bk., 1836; and several others. These pieces are so interlaced that no one except an expert in hymnology can unravel the complication. In Common Praise, 1879, the hymn is given with alterations and the omission of st. ii. as "Lord, do Thou Thy grace impart." [J. J.]

Lord, in the day Thou art about. J. Mason. [Security in God.] This cento from Mason's Spiritual Songs; or, Songs of Praise, &c., 1683, appeared in the Mary-le-bone Ps. & Hys. (by J. H. Gurney and others), 1851, No. 118. It is thus composed:—

St. i. from No. vl. "Song of Praise for Protection," st. II., II. 1-4. St. ii. from No. vii. "Song of Praise for Health," st. ii., II. 1-4. St. iiI. from No. ix. "Song of Praise for Success," st. iv., II. 1-4. St. iv. from No. viii., "Song of Praise for Family Prosperity," st. v., II. 5-8.

These extracts are well pieced together, the result being a simple and practical hymn. It passed from the Mary-le-bone Ps. & Hys. into Lord Selborne's Book of Praise, 1862, and others. The originals of the Songare in D. Sedgwick's reprint of the same, 1859.

[J. J.]

Lord, in this Thy mercy's day. I. Williams. [Lent—A Metrical Litany.] This hymn is taken from "Image the Twentieth," a poem on "The Day of Days; or, the Great Manifestation," in 105 st. of 3 I., which forms a part of his work, The Baptistery; or, The Way of Eternal Life, 1844. It was given with slight changes in the Cooke & Denton Hymnal, 1853, in 6 st. It has been repeated in full or in part in numerous collections in Great Britain and America, and is a most suitable metrical Litany for Lent. [J. J.]

Lord, in Thy kingdom there shall be. J. Anstice. [Unity.] Privately printed in his posthumous Hymns, 1836, in 5 st. of 41. It is based on the Epistle for the 17th S. after Trinity, Eph. iv. In 1841 it was included in The Child's Christian Year, from whence it passed into a few collections, including Kennedy, 1863, where it is expanded into 3 st. of 81. by the addition of a doxology. [J. J.]

Lord, in Thy Name Thy servants plead. J. Keble. [Rogation Days.] Written at Malvern, Aug. 4, 1856, and 1st pub. in the Salisbury H. Bk., 1857, No. 105, in 6 st. of 4 l., including a doxology. This was repeated with slight changes in the Rev. F. Pott's Hymns, &c., 1861; the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871, and others, sometimes with the Salisbury H. Bk. doxology, changed to another, and at other times without any, as in the Sarum Hyl., 1868, and the author's (post-humous) Miccellaneous Poems, 1869, p. 114. Its use is extensive.

Lord Jesus, God and Man. Sir H. W.

Baker. [For a School Feast.] This hymn is dated 1852 in Bigge's Annotated ed. of Hys. A. & M., but its first publication is traced only to H. A. & M., 1861. It has a slight resemblance to Faber's "O Jesu, God and Man," which was pub. in his Jesus and Mary, in 1849. Sir H. W. Baker's hymn is in extensive use in G. Britain and America. It is sometimes given as "Lord Jesu, God and Man." [J. J.]

Lord Jesus, with what sweetness and delights. H. Vaughan. [Ascension.] This poem of 62 lines on Ascension-day appeared in the second part of his Silex Scintillans; or Sac. Poems, &c., 1655, and again in the Rev. H. F. Lyte's reprint, 1846 (1858 ed., p. 133). Upon the first four lines of the poem the Rev. T. Darling based his Ascension hymn, "Lord Jesus, taken from Thy servants' sight," and pub. the same in the 1856 ed. of his Hys. for the Church of England. It is continued in later editions.

Lord, look on all assembled here. J. Hart. [Public Fast.] Pub. in his Hys. Composed on Various Subjects, &c., 1759, No. 96, in 8 st. of 4 l., and headed, "For a Public Fast." Two arrangements from the text are in the hymn-books. The first appeared in the 1st ed. of Cotterill's Sel., 1810, in 6 stanzas. This was reduced to 4 stanzas in Bickersteth's Christian Psalmody, 1833, and was repeated in this form in later collections of the Church of England. The second arrangement is in the Nonconformists hymnals. It was given in the Leeds H. Bk., 1863, the N. Cong., 1859, &c. [J. J.]

Lord, not unto me (The whole I disclaim). C. Wesley. [Lent.] Ist pub in the Hys. on God's Everlasting Love, 1741, No. 2, in 6 st. of 4 l. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. iii, p. 6). In 1780 it was given in the Wes. H. Bk., with the omission of st. i., as "Thy faithfulness, Lord, Each moment we find," and in this form it has been repeated in several collections in G. Britain and America. [J. J.]

Lord, now the time returns. J. Austin. [Evening.] Pub. in his Devotions in the Antient Way of Offices, &c., 1668, p. 370, hymn 32, in 8 st. of 4 l., including the doxology: again in the editions by Dorrington, and Hickes, and in the reprint by J. Masters, Lond., 1856. In its full form it is not in C. U.; but, abridged as "Blest be Thy love, dear [good] Lord," it is given in a large number of hymnals in G. Britain and America. Sometimes it is found as "Blessed be Thy love," &c. The original text of this abridged form is in Lord Selborne's Book of Praise, 1862.

[J. J.]

Lord of earth, Thy forming hand.

Sir R. Grant. [God the Creator and Preserver.]

Appeared in H. V. Elliott's Ps. & Hys., &c., 1835, in 3 st. of 12 l., and again in Lord Glenelg's edition of Grant's Sacred Poems, 1839, No. 3. It is based on Ps. lxxiii. 25. It is in C. U. in G. Britain and America. [J. J.]

Lord of heaven, and earth, and ocean. J. Crosse. [Holy Trinity.] Written for the Second Yorkshire Musical Festival, held at York on the 13th-16th of Sept., 1825, and first sung on that occasion by the Festival choir. On the 20th of Sept. it was printed in the Sheffield Iris newspaper, of which James Montgomery was the editor, together with an account of the Festival, and an estimate that £100,000 had been spent in one way and another in connection therewith; and of this £20,000 were expended in the purchase of Festival tickets. Crosse's hymn was included in Bickersteth's Christian Psalmody, 1833, No. 338, and subsequently in a great number of hymn-books. Orig. text in Hy. Comp.

Lord of hosts, how lovely fair [how bright, how fair]. D. Turner. [Public Worship.] 1st pub. in Rippon's Bap. Scl., 1st ed., 1787, No. 342, in 4 st. of 4 l. and entitled, "The Excellency of Public Worship." From Rippon's Scl. it has passed into several Nonconformist collections, sometimes in its original form, and also as, "Lord of hosts, how bright, how fair," as in the Bapt. Ps. & Hys., 1858 and 1880.

Lord of hosts, to Thee we raise. J. Montgomery. [Laying the Foundation Stons, or The Opening of a Place of Worship.] The foundation stone of St. George's Church, Sheffeld (of which the Rev. W. Mercer was subsequently Incumbent), was laid on the day of the coronation of George IV., July 19, 1821. On that day Montgomery published in his Iris newspaper a leading article on Bonaparte, who died on the 5th of the previous May. Montgomery's original ms. of that article and "a set of the coronation medals, and other usual memorials," were placed in a glass jar under the foundation stone (Memoirs, iii. p. 241). This hymn was composed for the occasion; was sung during the ceremony, and was printed in the Iris of Tuesday, July 24, 1821. It was included in Montgomery's Christian Psalmist, 1825, No. 475, and in his Original Hymns, 1853, No. 301, and in both instances headed "On Opening a Place of Worship."

Lord of life, prophetic Spirit. J. Keble. [For Theological Colleges.] A "Hymn for Eastertide, written for the Book of Prayers at Cuddesdon College," 1856, p. 109, in 10 st. of 41., and repeated in the author's (posthumous) Miscellaneous Poems, 1869, p. 287. In the Sarum Hyl. it is given in two parts, pt. ii. beginning "Now Thou speakest, hear we trembling"; and in other collections, as in the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871, it is abbreviated to 6 st., and sometimes less. It is suitable for Ember Days and Ordinations in addition to its Theological College use.

Lord of mercy and of might. Bp. R. Heber. [Quinquagesima.] Two forms of this hymn, and both by Heber, are found in his Hymns, &c., 1827. The first form, in 5 st. of 4 l., first appeared in the Christian Observer, Nov. 1811, p. 697, together with three additional hymns by Heber, and is set forth for the "Sunday after Christmas." In his Hymns, &c., 1827, it is given as No. i. for "Quinquagesima," and reads, as in the Christian Observer:—

"Lord of mercy, and of might, Of mankind the life and light, Maker, Teacher infinite, Jesus, hear and save!

 Who, when sin's primaeval doom Gave creation to the tomb, Didst not scorn a Virgin's womb, Jesus, hear and save!

"Strong Creator, Saviour mild, Humbled to a mortal child, Captive, beaten, bound, reviled, Jesus, hear and save!

"Throned above celestial things, Borne aloft on angels' wings, Lord of Lords, and King of Kings, Jesus, hear and save!

"Soon to come to earth again, Judge of angels and of men, Hear us now, and hear us then! Jesus, hear and save!"

The second form appeared in his Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 21, and appointed for the Sauday after Christmas, or Circumcision." It is also in 5 st., but differs from the first form in the following particulars, the 1827 reading being,

St. ii., i. 1. Who, when sin's fremendous doom,
St. iii., i. 1. Mighty Monarch! Saviour mild!
St. v. Who shall yet return from high,
Robed in might and majesty,
Hear us! help us when we cry!
Jesus, hear and save!

The use of this hymn is extensive. The first form is found in Kennedy, 1863: Hy. Comp., 1876; Church Hymns, 1871; Thring, 1882, and many others: the second in Alford's Year of Praise, 1867; the S. P. C. K. Ps. & Hys.; New Mitre Hymnal; Snepp's Songs of G. & G., 1872, and others: mixed texts, People's H., 1867, and Windle; and, rewritten, in Morrell and How, 1864. It is also found in many collections in slightly varying forms not here specified, the texts of which may be tested by the above readings. The original of 1811 has been rendered into Latin by the Rev. C. B. Pearson, as "Clemens hominum Regnator," and pub. in his Latin Trs. of English Hys., 1862, p. 82.

Lord of my heart, by Thy last cry. J. Keble. [Good Friday.] This is composed of the two closing stanzas of Keble's poem for Good Friday, which was pub in his Christian Year, 1827. This extract was given in Elliott's Ps. & Hys., 1835, and has been repeated in modern collections. The text is slightly altered.

[J. J.]

Lord of my life, O may Thy praise. Anne Steele. [Morning.] Appeared in her Poems on Subjects chiefly Devotional, 1760, vol. i. p. 20, in 6 st. of 4 l., headed, "A Morning Hymn"; and again in D. Sedgwick's reprint of her Hymns, 1863. In addition to its use in its original, and in an abbreviated form, it is also given in a few American collection, including the Presbyterian Ps. and Hys. for the Worship of God, Richmond, 1867, as, "God of my life, my morning song." [J. J.]

Lord of my [our] life, Whose tender care. [Evening.] This hymn appeared in the Church of England Magazine, February, 1838, and was signed "n Chelsea." It was included in the S. P. C. K. Hys. for Public Worship, 1852, No. 156; and since then it has passed into a large number of hymn-books in G. Britain and America, and sometimes as "Lord of our life," &c., as in Kennedy, 1863.

[W. T. B.]

Lord of the Church, we humbly pray. E. Osler. [Whitsuntide.] 1st pub. in Hall's Mitre H. Bk., 1836, No. 219, in 3 st. of 6 l., and again, with slight alterations, in the author's Church and King, April, 1837, p. 112. It is an altered version by Osler of Charles Wesley's "Thou, Jesu, Thou my breast inspire" (q.v.). Wesley's original text, however, is scarcely recognizable in the form given to it by Osler, save in the last six lines, which are almost entirely from Wesley. The Irish Church Hymnal follows the text of the Mitre. Its use is extensive. [J. J.]

Lord of the harvest, once again. J. Anstice. [Harvest.] 1st pub. in his (posthumus) Hymns, 1836, No. 34, in 4 st. of 6 l. In the Child's Christian Year, 1841, it was repeated without alteration; and from that date it came into general use, but usually with slight alterations. It is one of the most popular of Harvest hymns, and is in C. U. in all English-speaking countries. In the Anglican H. Bk., 1868, it begins, "O Lord of harvest, once again." Orig. text in Lord Selborne's Book of Praise, 1862. [J. J.]

Lord of the living harvest. J. S. B. Monsell. [Ordination, and Church Guilds.] This hymn appears in the hymn-books, first as a hymn for Ember Day and Ordinations; and second, for Church Guilds and Associations.

1. It originally appeared in Dr. Monsell's Hys. of Love and Praise, 2nd ed., 1866, in 4 st. of 8 l., for Ember Days and Ordinations. This was repeated in his Partial Hymnat, 1873, and the People's ed. of his Spiritual Songs, 1875, the last being the authorized text. From this text Thring's Coll., 1882, differs somewhat, and especially in st. iii. In Monsell the hymn is a prayer for the Ordained, in Thring the prayer is supposed to be offered by the Ordained themselves. For use at Ordinations Dr. Monsell's authorized form is the better of the two.

2. In the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871, the hymn is given in an altered form for Church Guilds and Associations. With two slight changes in the text, and the omission of st. iii., this was given in W. F. Sevenson's Hys. for the Ch. and Hone, 1873, with a note in which he says that his text was "printed from manuscript in the form finally adopted by the author."

The authorized text of this hymn therefore is (1) for Ordination—that in Dr. Monsell's Parish Hymnol, and (2) for Church Guids and Associations, that in Dr. Stevenson's Hymns.

[J. J.]

Lord of the lofty and the low. T. W. B. Aveling. [For Ragged School Anniversary.] "This [hymn] was written for a Ragged School anniversary, held in Kingsland Congregational Church, under the presidency of the Earl of Shaftesbury, in the year 1856 or 1857" (Miller's Singers & Songs, 1869, p. 531). In 1859 it was included in the New Cong., and is also found in other collections. [J. J.]

Lord of the ocean, hear our cry. Bp. E. H. Bickersteth. [For Use at Sea.] Written in 1869 and 1st pub. in his Hymnal Companion, 1870; No. 392, as a hymn to be used at sea, with the note in the Annotated edition, "This hymn, by the Editor, was written for this work. It is to be sung by those at sea: the one which follows ['Eternal Father, strong to save'] is for those at sea." In the Hy. Comp., 1870, and the revised ed., 1876, Bp. Bickersteth's hymn begins, "Almighty Father, hear our cry." Its original form as "Lord of the ocean, hear our cry," is in Bp. Bickersteth's Two Brothers, 1871, p. 249.

[J. J.]

Lord of the Sabbath, hear our vows. P. Doddridge. [Sunday, or Divine Worship.] This lymn, beginning "O God of Sabbath, hear our vows," is No. 30 in the D. Mss., is dated "Jan. 2, 1736-7," and headed "The Eternal Sabbath. From Heb. iv. 9." In Job Orton's ed. of Doddridge's (posthumous) Hymns, &c., 1755, No. 310, it was given as "Lord of the Sabbath," &c., in 5 st. of 4 l., and with the same title, and repeated in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the same, 1839, No. 336. In Mr. Brooke's ms., 1739-40, it reads "O God of Sabbath," &c. The 1755 text is in use in most English-speaking countries, but the most popular form of the hymn is that beginning "Lord of the Sabbath, hear us pray," parti-"Lord of the Sabbath, hear us pray," parti-culars of which, and other arrangements of the hymn, we here append:

1. Thine earthly Sabbaths, Lord, we love. This cente, composed of et. ii.—iv. and ii., was given as No. 352 in Rippon's Bap. Sci., 1787, and is found in full or in part in several modern hymnals.

3. Lord of the Sabbath, hear us pray. This altered text appeared in Cotterill's Sci., 8th ed., 1819, No. 4 (the original as in Orton having been in former editions), and is by Cotterill, or James Montgomery, or possibly the joint work of the two. Of this text, in 6 st. of 41., st. i. iii. y. vi. are altered from Doddridge and at it.

8. O Lord of holy Rest, we pray. This form of the hymn appeared in R. C. Singleton's Anglican H. Sk., 1868. It is from the Doddridge-Cotterfill text, with alterations, and a slight return to the original.

When these forms of the hymn are taken together, it is found that its use is very extensive in all English-speaking countries, the Doddridge-Cotterill text being the most popular. [See English Hymnody, Barly, § x1v.]

Lord of the sinless world above. W. J. Irons. [Adult Baptism, or Confirmation.] On the pussing of the Act for the Registration of Births there was a panic amongst the poor, and a great rush to the churches for Holy Baptism. In one day 400 children were baptized in Dr. Irons's church, St. Mary's, Newington, and 28 adults on another. On other days there were also great gatherings of children and adults for the sacred rite. Under these circounstances and amid these surroundings Dr. Irons wrote this hymn. It was pub. in Lowe's Hys. for the Christian Seasons, Gainsburgh, 1854; in Dr. Irons's Appendix to the Brompton Metrical Psaller, 1861, his Hys. for Use in Church, 1866; and in his Ps. and Hys. for the Church, 1873-75, &c. It is in a few collections only, and its use is not equal to its merits.

Lord of the wide extended [extensive] main. C. Wesley. [For use at Sea.] 1st pub. in the Hys. and Sac. Poems, 1740, p. 31, in 10 st. of 4 i., and headed "A Hymn to be Sung at Sea." (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. i. p. 229). In the 1830 Suppl. to the Wes. H. Bk. it was given in two parts as :-

Lord of the wide, extensive main. No. 761.
 Infinite God, Thy greatness spanned. No. 762.

Both these parts have come into use in G. Britain and America as separate hymns.

Mr. G. J. Stevenson, in his Meth. H. Bk. Notes, 1883, p. 591, says of this hymn:-

"It was probably written in 1735, previously to the poet and his brother John sailing to America with General Oglethorpe and the Moratans. This seems to be plainly indicated by the language of the second

" For Thee we leave our native shore, In other climes Thy works explore."

This view, however, is not that of Dr. Osborn, the editor of the Wesley Poetical Works, 1863-72. In vol. i. pp. 228-231, there are given the following hymns:—" Servent of God, the summons hear"; "Lord of the wideextended main"; and "Glory to Thee, Whose powerful word"; and to the first of these ("Servant of God," &c.) Dr. Osborn adds the following note:

"The animating strains of this bymn and the two next are by no means in accordance with Charles Wes-ley's spiritual condition and mood of mind in December, iey's spiritual condition and mood of mind in December, 1737, when Mr. Whitefield first left England for America. They were more probably composed in preparation for his second voyage, which began in August, 1738. Nor can we imagine anything more suitable for the occasion; while in the hymns "To be Sung at Sca" ["Lord of the wide-extended main"] and " in a Storm" ["Glory to Thee, Whose powerful word"] the Christian and the poet appear to equal advantage. It may be doubted if the full assurance of faith was ever more finely expressed, or at the same time more rationally windicated. pressed, or at the same time more rationally vindicated, than in the second and the third of the three hymns which follow one another here."

This suggestion by Dr. Osborn that the date is 1739 is made almost certain with regard to "Servant of God," &c., and presumably of the other two, by the fact that "Servant of God, other two, by the fact that "Servant of God," &c., is found in Divine Hymns for the Use of the Societies, by Richard Wyan, 1739. This tract contains three hymns, two by Wyan (one addressed to Whitefield) and "Servant of God, the summons hear," by C. Wesley. The Wesleys, by printing the three hymns, "Servant of God," &c., "Lord of the wide," &c., and "Glory to Thee, &c.," as consecutive hymns in the Hym. & Suc. Poems, 1740, seem to fix the in the Hys. & Sac. Poems, 1740, seem to fix the date of these hymns as 1739, when Whitefield went on his second voyage to America.

The hymn "Servant of God, the summons hear," is rarely used, whilst "Glory to Thee, Whose powerful word," is given in several collections in America, and as "All praise to Thee, Whose powerful word," in a few in G. Britain.

Lord of the worlds above. I. Watts. [Ps. Lexiv.] 1st pub. in his Ps. of David, &c., 1719, in 7 st. of 8 l., as the third version of the 84th Psalm. In addition to its use in its full form, there are also several arrangements of the text, the more important being :

ments of the EEXt, the more important being:

1. That in the Wes. H. Bk., 1875, and many others derived from the same source. This appeared in the Wesley Ps. & Hys., 1738; the enlarged ed. of the same, 1743; and the Wes. H. Bk., 1780. It is very popular.

2. A cento composed of st. 1., iii., iv., and vii. This was given with alterations in Whitefield's Coll., 1763; Madan's Ps. & Hys., 1760; Toplady's Ps. & Hys., 1778, and thus into the hymn-books of the Church of England. In some modern collections, as Sarsan, 1868, and Thring's Coll., 1882, some of these alterations are still retained. Usually, however, the text is correct.

3. Other arrangements are given in many modern thymnals, the construction of which may be tested by reference to Watts's Psalvas. It will be found that in most cases the original text is retained.

As a nearantrase this ranks amongst the

As a paraphrase this ranks amongst the best by Watts. The metre is an imitation of that employed for the first time by John Pullain, in his Version of the 148th Psalm in the English Psalter, 1560. [See Old Version, iv. ix.] [J. J.]

Lord, shall Thy children come to Thee? Bp. S. Hinds. [Confirmation.] In Sonnets and other Short Poems, chiefly on Sacred Subjects. By Samuel Hinds, D.D., Lond., B. Fellowes, 1834, p. 65, is the following:—

"Confirmation Hymn.

"Lord, shall Thy children come to Thee?
A boon of love divins we seek:
Brought to Thy arms in infancy,
Ere hearts could feel or tongue could speak,
Thy children pray for grace, that they May come themselves to Thee this day.

"Lord, shall we come, and come sgain?
Oft as we see yon Table spread,
And, tokens of Thy dying pain,
The wine pour'd out, the broken bread;
Bless, bless, O Lord, Thy children's prayer,
That they may come and find Thee there.

"Lord, shall we come, come yet again?
Thy children ask one blessing more—
To come, (not now atone and then,)
When life and death and time are o'er,
Then, then to come, O Lord, and be Confirmed in heaven, confirmed by Thee!"

When this hymn was included in the Ps. &

When this hymn was included in the Ps. & Hys. for the Use of Rugby School Chapel, circa 1843 (1850 ed. No. 51), the following stanza by H. J. Buckoll, was added as st. iii., thus making a hymn of 4 st.:—

"Lord, shall we come? not thus alone
At holy time, or solemn rite?
But every hour till life be flown,
Through weal or wee, in gloom or light,—
Come to Thy drone of grace, that we
In faith, hope, love, confirmed may ba."

In addition to writing this stanza, Buckell made a few alterations in, and repunctuated Bp. Hinds's text. Two forms of the hymn have thus come into use, the first the original, and the second the Hinds-Buckell text. The latter is that usually given in the Public Schools hymn-books.

[J. J.]

Lord, solemnize our trifling minds. G. Burder. [Before Sermon.] Appeared in his Coll. of Hymns, &c., 1784, No. 200, in 3 st. of 4 l. us one of a number of hymns for use "Before Sermon," and again in later eds. of the same work. In modern hymnals, as the New Cong., 1859, No. 786, it is altered to "Great God, impress our trifling minds." [J. J.]

Lord, speak to me, that I may speak. Frances R. Havergal. [Lay Helpers.] Written, April 28, 1872, at Winterdyne, and first printed as one of Parlane's musical leaflets in the same year. In 1874 it was pub. in her Under the Surface, and in 1879 in Life Mosaic. In the original Ms. it is headed "A Worker's Prayer. 'None of us liveth to himself.' Rom. xiv. 7." This hymn has become very popular, and is highly esteemed by those engaged in Christian work.

Lord, teach a little child to pray. Thy grace betimes, &c. J. Ryland. [A Child's Prayer.] This simple prayer for a child's use is the most popular and widely used of Dr. Ryland's hymns. From his Memoirs of Andrew Fuller, 1831, pp. 442 and 453, we find that this hymn, and another, beginning "God is very good to me," were written by him at the request of Mrs. Fuller for the use of her child Sarah, who died May 30, 1786, aged 6 years and 6 months. In some of the numerous collections in which it is found it is erroneously attributed to "Jane Taylor." The Taylor hymn opens with the same line, but the second is "And then accept my prayer."

[J. J.]

Lord, teach us how to pray aright. J. Montgomery. [Prayer.] Written in 1818, and first printed on a broadsheet with Montgomery's "Prayer is the soul's sincere desire;" "What shall we ask of God in prayer?" and "Thou, God, art a consuming fire;" for use in the Nonconformist Sunday Schools in Sheffield. In Cotterill's Sel., 8th ed., 1819, No. 280, it was repeated in full in 4 st. of 8 l., and headed, "The preparations of the heart in man." During the same year it was given, with alterations and the omission of st. ii., in E. Bickersteth's Treatise on Prayer. In Montgomery's Christian Psalmist, 1825, No. 482, the text in Bickersteth was repeated, with the restoration of st. ii., and divided into 8 st. of 4 l. The text in his Original Hymns, 1853, No. 65, is that of the Christ. Psal., 1825, with the change of st. iv., Il. 1, 2, from:—

"God of all Grace, we come to Thee With broken, contrite hearts";

"God of all grace, we bring to Thee
A broken, contrite keart."

This change is set down in the margin of Montgomery's private copy of the Christ. Psol. in his own handwriting. This hymn, in full or abridged, is in numerous collections. The variations of text which are found have arisen in a great measure from some editors copying from Cotterill's Sel. of 1819, and others from the Christian Psalmist of 1825. The first is the original, and the second (with the above correction in Orig. Hys. 1853) is the authorized text. In some American Unitarian collections, including A Book of Hys., 1848; and the H. [and Tune] Bk. for the Ch. and the Home, &c., 1868, a hymn beginning, "God of all grace, we come to Thee," is given [Ĵ. Ĵ.] from this, and opens with st. iv.

Lord, that I may learn of Thee. C. Wesley. [Humility desired.] Pub. in his Short Hymns, &c., 1762, vol. i., No. 1005, in 4 st. of 4 l. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. ix. p. 392) On its introduction into the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, No. 293, st. ii., l. 1, was changed from "Let me cast myself asido" to "Let me cast my reeds aside." This reading is repeated in the revised cd. of 1875, and other hymn-books. A cento partly from this hymn and partly by J. Berridge appeared in Berridge's Sion's Songs, 1785, in 6 st. of 4 l., as "Jesus, cast a look on me." Of this text st. i, iii. and iv. are altored from Wesley's hymn as above, and st. ii., v. and vi. are by Berridge. This cento is given without alteration in Lord Schonue's Book of Praise, 1862, and in whole or in part in numerous collections throughout English-speaking countries. [J. J.]

Lord, Thou didst arise and say. H. Milman. [Christ Stilling the Tempest.] 1st pub. in Bp. Heber's posthumous Hymns, &o., 1827, p. 36, in 2 st. of 8 1., and appointed for the 4th S. after the Epiphany, being based on the Gospel for that day. It was repeated in Milman's Ps. & Hys., 1837, and subsequently in many hymn-books in G. Britain and America. [J. J.]

Lord, Thou hast been Thy people's rest. J. Montgomery. [Ps. zc.] Appeared in his Songs of Zion, 1822, in 7 st. of 7 l. In his Original Hymns, 1853, st. i., iv., v. and vi. are given as hymn No. xlvi. In Dr. Kennedy's Psalter, 1860, a cento was given as the version of Ps. xc., and is thus composed :--

St. i., ii., and v., J. Montgomery. St. iii., iv., and vi., Dr. Kennedy.

Dr. Kennedy's Hymno. Christ., No. 9, in two parts is this same text repeated with the addition of a doxology to Pt. i. In the Preface to this collection, the portion of this rendering of Ps. zc. taken from Montgomery is attributed to the Rev. A. T. Russell in error.

Lord, Thou hast won, at length I yield. J. Newton. [Surrender to Christ.] Appeared in the Gospel Magazine, Jan., 1775, in 7 st. of 6 l., headed "The Surrender," and signed "Vigil." After a slight revision it was given in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. i., No. 121, in 7 st. of 6 l., with the extended heading "The Rebel's Surrender to Grace. Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" It is based on the words of St. Paul uttered on his way to Damascus, and recorded in Acts ix. 6. Although there is nothing in the Memoirs of Newton (so far as we can see) to justify us in saying that this hymn is autobiographical, yet its intense individuality suggests that it is so, and that he found in the flerceness of Saul the persecutor, and the submissive peacefulness of Saul the disciple, the embodiment of his own history and experience. Thus regarded the hymu is interesting, but for prac-tical purposes it is far from being one of Newton's best productions. It is found in a few collections, but in an abbreviated form. [J. J.]

Lord, Thou in all things like wert [wast] made. J. Anstice. [Passiontide.] 1st pub. in his (posthumous) Hymns, 1836, No. 21, in 6 st. of 4 l., and again in the Child's Christian Year, 1841. From the Child's C. Year it passed as, "In all things like Thy brethren, Thou," into the Leeds H. Bk., 1853, No. 295. This form of the hymn has become popular, and especially with the Nonconformists. It is sometimes attributed to J. Keble. [J. J.]

Lord, Thy children guide and keep. Bp. W. W. How. [The Narrow Way.] 1st pub. in Morrell & How's Ps. & Hys., 1854, in 5 st. of 6 l., and based on the words "Narrow in the Narrow in th is the way that leadeth unto life." It has become very popular with hymnal compilers, and, in full or in an abridged form, it is found in numerous collections in G. Britain and America. Orig. text in the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871. [J, J,]

Lord, Thy glory fills the heaven. Bp. R. Mant. [Holy Trinity.] This hymn, extending from 1 st. of 8 l. in the Cooke and Denton Hymnal, 1853, to 3 st. of 81. in Laudes Domini, N. Y., 1881, is from Bp. Mant's "Bright the vision that delighted" (see p. 182, i.). It is in extensive use, especially in America. [J, J]

Lord, Thy word abideth. Sir H. W. Buker. [Holy Scripture.] Written for and | was included in Job Orion's ed. of Doddridge's

1st pub. in H. A. & M., 1861. It has attained a great circulation, and is in C. U. in all English-speaking countries. It has also been translated into several languages. There is a tr. in German by Miss Winkworth, in Biggs's Annotated H. A. & M., 1867, beginning "Herr, Dein Wort muss bleiben." [J. J.]

Lord, to me Thy minsters are. [The House of God.] This cente, which was given in W. J. Blew's Church Hy. & Tune Bk., 1852— 55, is composed thus: st. i., ii. are from the late Archdeacon Churton's tr. from the Anglo-Saxon pub. in his Poetics, and the remaining stanzas, iii.-v., are original by Mr. Blew. The cento has passed into several collections, including Kennedy, 1863; Rice's Sel. from Blew, 1870, and others. [J, J,]

Lord, we adore Thy wondrous Name. P. Doddridge. [Divine Compassion.] Written Oct. 29, 1735 (D. Ess. No. v.), and pub. in Job Orton's ed. of Doddridge's (posthumous) Hymns, &c., 1755, No. 55, in 6 st. of 4 l., and again in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the same, 1839, No. 68. The original heading is "The frailties of human nature, and God's gracious regard to it. Ps. ciii. 14." In modern hymnbooks it is usually abbreviated. [J. J.]

Lord, we are blind, we mortals blind. I. Watts. [God Invisible.] Pub. in his Hys. & Spiritual S., 1707, Bk. ii., No. 26, in 4 st. of 4 l., and headed "God Invisible." In the American Plymouth Coll., 1855, it begins with st. ii., "Infinite leagues beyond the šky." [J. J.]

Lord, we come before Thee now. W. Hammond. [Public Worship.] 1st pub. in his Ps. & Hys., 1745, p. 32, in 8 st. of 8 l. In 1760 M. Madan reduced it to 6 st. of 4 l., and as such it was given in his Ps. & Hys. of that year, No. 121. From this arrangement of the hymn most modern editors have taken their text. Orig. in Lyra Brit., 1867. [J. J.]

Lord, we confess our numerous faults. I. Watts. [Salvation by Grace.] 1st pub. in his Hys. & S. Songs, 2nd ed., 1709, Bk. i., No. 111, in 6 st. of 4 l., and headed "Salvation by Grace." It is in C. U. in its full form, and also abbreviated and altered

Tis not by works of righteousness. This arrangement begins with st. iii. Its use is limited.

1. The not by works at inguenesses.

ment begins with st. iii. Its use is limited.

2. How wretched was our former state. In the Praft of the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, 1745. Watte's hymn was given with alterations as No. 18, but in the authorized public worship issue of the Tra. and Paraphs, in 1781, it gave place to "How wretched was our former state." which was thus composed:—st. in ew; it. Watte; wil. In ow; iv. Watte sud 1745; v. from 1745; vl. Watte and 1745; vi. from 1745. This recast has been in use in Scotland and elsewhere for more than one hundred years. It is sometimes attributed to W. Cameron (q. v.), but is not assigned to him in the markings, by Cameron's eldest daughter, of the Tra. and Paraphs. Its authorship is therefore doubtful.

3. This from the mercy of our God. This is a rewritten form of the Scotlish Trs. and Paraphs. text, by Miss Jane E. Leeson, and was pub. in her Paraphs. and Hymns, 1853.

Lord, we have wandered from Thy way. P. Doddridge. [The Lost Sheep.] This hymn in the D. MSS., No. 62, is undated. but immediately precedes one written on April 10, 1735, and may be dated oirea 1735. It (posthumous) Hymns, &c., 1755, No. 65, in 3 st. of 3 l., and again in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the same, 1839, No. 79. In each case the original title, "The wandering Sheep recovered. Ps. cxix. 176," is retained. [J. J.]

Lord, we sit and cry to Thee. H. H. ilman. [Quinquagesima. Blind Man at [Quinquagesima. Jericko.] 1st pub. in Bp. Heber's (posthumous) Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 49, in 2 st. of 6 1., and again in his Ps. & Hys., 1837. It is based on the Gospel for Quinquagesima. In Hall and Lasar's American Evangelical Hyl., N. Y., 1880, it is altered to "Lord, we raise our cry to Thee.' [J. J.]

Lord, what a feeble piece. I. Watts. [Ps. zc.] His s. m. version of Ps. xc., which appeared in his Psalms of David, 1719, in 5 st. of 41, and headed "The Frailty and Shortness of Life." In Martineau's Hymns, &c., 1840 and 1873, it is given as "Lord, what a fleeting breath"; and in the Leeds H. Bk., 1853, as "Lord, make us know how frail." (J. J.)

Lord, what a wretched land is this. I. Watts. [Pilgrimage of the Saints.] Appeared in his Hys. & S. Songs, 1707. Bk. ii., No. 53, in 12 st. of 4 l., and entitled "The Pilgrimage of the Saints: or, Earth and Heaven." In Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bk., 1866, st. viii.-xii. were given as "Our journey is a thorny maze." This arrangement, together with abbreviations beginning with the first stanza, is in several collections. [J, J]

Lord, what is man? extremes how wide. J. Newton. [Man by Nature, Grace, and Glory.] Appeared in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. iii., No. 88, in 6 st. of 4 1., and headed, "Man by Nature, Grace, and Glory." It is the last of the longer hymns given in the Olney H., and would appear to have been designedly placed there as a fitting close to the work, a few "short hymns," and four doxologies only, following. The closing stanza is exceedingly appropriate:-

" Nearest the throne, and first in song, Man shall his ballelujahs raise; While wond'ring angels round him throng, And swell the chorus of his praise."

Although lacking the general interest and popularity of Newton's hymns, it is given in several collections. [J. J.]

Lord, when Thou didst Thyself undress. H. Vaughan. [Passiontide.] Pub. in his Silex Scintillans; or, Sac. Poems, &c., Pt. i., 1650, and again in the reprint by the Rev. H. F. Lyte, 1846 (1858 ed., p. 46), in 5 st. of 4 l., and entitled "The Incarnation and Passion." In its complete form it is not found in modern hymnals, but st. iv. and v., as "Ah, my dear Lord, what could'st Thou spy," are given in Thring's Coll., 1882.

Lord, when we bend before Thy throne. J. D. Carlyle. [Lent.] This hymn appeared in A Coll. of Ps. and Hys. by Various Authors, Chiefly designed for Public Worship, Carlisle, 1802. The editor was the Rev. John Fawcett, Vicar of St. Cuthbert's, Car-lisle, "an intimate personal friend of Pro-fessor Carlyle; and this hymn was written by the author for use before Divine Service in St. Cuthbert's Church, where he regularly Carlisle. It is the first hymn in the collection, and is headed 'Introductory to Public Worship.'" (S. P. C. K. Church Hys., Anno-tated ed., 1881.) In 1805, it was republished in Carlyle's Poems Suggested chiefly by Scenes in Asia Minor. Therein it is entitled "A Hymn before Public Worship." It is in 6 st. of 4 l. It is usually given in 4 st. by the omission of st. iii., iv. To the fourth stanza sometimes a doxology is added, as in the Hymnary, 1872, a practice as old as Murray's Hymnal of 1852, if not older. It is well to note that the office of each of the three Christian graces, Faith, Hope, and Charity, in Public Worship is set forth in the original text: and that by the omission of st. iii., iv. that of Charity is ignored in the modern form of the hymn. Its use during the last eighty years, either in its full or in an abbreviated form, has been most extensive in all English-speaking countries. Orig. text Lyra Brit., 1867, p. 126. It has also been translated into several languages. The H. A. & M. text without the doxology has been rendered into Latin, as: "Quum sup-plicamus ad thronum Tuum, Deus," by the Rev. R. Bingham, in his Hymnol. Christ. Latina, 1871. In Kennedy, 1863, an altered version in 3 st. of 8 l. is given as, "Lord, when before Thy righteous throne," but its [J. J.] use is confined to that work.

Lord, when we creation scan. J. D.Lord, when we creation scan. J. D. Carlyle. [Thursday.] Appeared in a Coll. of Ps. & Hys., &c. Edited by J. Fawcett, of Carlisle, in 1802. It was appointed for the "Fifth Day, First Morning," and is in 6 st. of 4 l. In 1803 it passed into A Sel. of Hys. and Anthems, &c., for Elmdon Church, Birmingham, No. 17; in 1807 into The Theological and Biblical Magazine; and subsequently into previous hymp. beckin (C. Britain and Amprice hymp. beckin) (C. Britain and Amprice) various hymn-books in G. Britain and America. Although a good hymn it is the least known of Carlyle's productions. [J. J.]

Lord, when we search the human heart. J. Montgomery. [The World in the Heart.] This bymn was written on the blank page of a juvenile missionary address pre-pared by Mr. George Cookman, of Hull. Montgomery mentions his having written it in a letter to Mr. Cookman's father, dated "Sheffield, June 24, 1819" (Montgomery's Memoirs, iii. p. 169). The hymn was included moirs, iii. p. 169). The hymn was included in Cotterill's Sci., 8th ed., 1819, No. 338, in 7 st. of 4 l. In Montgomery's Christian Psalmiet, 1825, No. 549, it was repeated with slight variations, and the addition of a new "Thy name and knowledge," changed to "Thy name, Thy knowledge," is in his Original Hymne, 1853, No. 170. [J. J.]

Lord, Who once from heaven descending. J. Latham. [The Good Shepherd.] 1st printed in his Poems, Original and Translated, Sandbach, 1836, in 5 st. of 6 l., as the fourth of four hymns for the children of the Sandbach Sunday School. In 1841, it was reprinted in his cousin's and namesake's Hys. Selected for Use of the Parish of Sandbach; and again in English and Latin Poems, dated July, 1827, and privately printed in 1853. The form of the hymn known to modern hymnale was given it in the 1850 ed. of the Hys. attended when in residence as Chancellor of for the Rugby School Chapel, when st. ii., iii.

were omitted. This form of the text is in ! Kennedy, 1863, and several other collections. [W. T. B.]

Lord! Whose love in [and] power excelling. Bp. R. Heber. [Epiphany.] Appeared in his posthumous Hymne, &c., 1827, p. 35, in 4 st. of 4 l. It is based on a part of the Gospel for the 3rd S. after the Epiphany (the healing of the Leper). It is in C. U. in Great Britain and America, and usually without alteration.

Lord's Prayer in Verse, The. Metrical paraphreses of the Lord's Prayer in English date from an early period, and are of varying length and merit. Several are annotated under their respective first lines, and may be found through the Index of Seasons and Subjects. Of those that remain we shall group in this article :--

- 1. In Churton's Early English Church, 1840, two examples are given, which date from the 12th and 13th centuries. These are:--(1) The Lord's Prayer, "in metre sent by Nicholas Breakspeare [Pope Adrian IV.] into England in the time of Henry II., A.D. 1160." It reads :-
 - " Ure Fadyr in heaven-rich Thy name be hallyed everlich Thy name be hallyed everlich Thou bring us Thy michel blisse. Als hit in heaven y-doe, Evar in yearth beene it also. That holy bread that lasteth ay, Thou send it ous this like day Forgive ous all that we have don, As we forgivet uch other mon. 'Ne let ous fall into no founding Ae shield ous fro the fowle thing."
- (2) The second is of Henry III.'s time, about ▲.D. 1250, and reads:-
 - "Fadir ur, that es in hevens
 Halud be Thy name to neven.
 Thou do us Thy rich rike
 Thy will on erd be wrought alike As it is wrought in heven sy; Ur lik-day brede give us to-day; Forgive Thou all us dettes urs, As we forgive till ur detturs; And ledde us in as fanding But shuld us fra ivel thing."
- 2. In Camden's Remains (J. R. Smith's reprint, 1870), in the chapter on "Languages," there is the first of the above, and another which Camden dates as of the period of Henry III. This reads :-
 - " Fader that art in heaven bliss Thin helge nam it wurth the bliss Cumen and met thy kingdom, Thin boly will be all don. In beaven and in erdh also, So it shall bin full well le tro. Gif us all bread on this day And forgif us ure sine As we do ure wider wins; Let us not in fonding fall One fro evil thu sykl us all. Amen."
- 3. The metrical versions of The Lord's Prayer which appeared in the Old Version Ware:
- (1) In the Anglo-Genevan Pealter, 1561 [014 Version, § III.] (St. Paul's Cathedral Library, London), there were two versions by W. Whit-
- tingham, viz.:—

 (a) "Our gracious Father, which on his Doet dwell, and hast all power and might." (b) "Our Father and most gracious Lord, Most rich in mercy grace and louie."

There is also a version by R. Cox, viz. :-"Our Father, which in beauen art.
And maket ve al one brotherhood."

(2) In the English Edition of the Pealter [014 |

Version, § IV., V.], 1560, the version of R. Cox is also found; and, again, in the ed. of 1560-1. In the Complete Psailer for use in the Church of England [Old Version, § VII.], the 1562 ed. contained the version, already noted, by R. Cor, and an anonymous rendering which begins :-

" Ovr father which in heaven art, Lord, hallowed be thy name.

- 4. Between the O. V. and the N. V. several versions appeared, including :-
- (1) Henry Lok, in his Ecclesiastes, otherwise the Preacher, &c., 1597 [Paalters, Versions]:-

Our Father which in beauen art, Lorde! hallowed be thy name."

This is given in full in Farr's Sel. Poetry, 1845.
(2) Robert Holland in his work, The holis Historie of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ's natiuitie, life, acts, &c., 1594 :--

"Pray thus, when ye do pray, therefore :--Our Father, which in heauen art."

This is given in full in Farr as above, p. 477.

- 5. The Supplement to the New Version (Tate & Brady [New Version, § ii.]), 2nd ed. 1702, contains two versions:—
 - (1) " Our Father, who in Heaven art, thy name be hallow'd in each heart:"

(2) "Our Father, who in Heaven art all hallow'd be thy name."

These versions were retained in the "Hymns" printed at the end of the New Version, until the modern hymn-book caused the reprinting of the New Version to cease.

- 6. During the eighteenth century several paraphrases, some in full and others of portions of The Lord's Prayer, were published. Of these we note:-
- (1) A. Pope's Universal Prayer, 1738:that year in his Works, and, separately, in folio.

(2) Charles Wesley's "Father of all, Whose powerful voice," 1742 (p. 868, il.).

(3) "Father of all, we bow to Thee" (p. 368, ii.). In the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases (Draft, 1745; authorized, 1781). As altered in Cotterill's Sel., 1819, it occurs as, "Father of all, to Thee we bow."

(4) James Merrich's "Father of all, Whose seat of rest," in his Poems on Sacred Subjects, Oxford, 1763.

(5) J. Straphan's "Our Father, whose eternal sway," in Rippon's Bap. Sel., 1787.

- 7. The nineteenth century has produced several versions of The Lord's Prayer, many of which have come into C. U., and may be found in this Dictionary through the Index of Seasons and Subjects (q.v.). In addition we find the following:-
- Two versions,-" Our (1) J. Montgomery. heavenly Father, hear our prayer" (q.v.); and "Our heavenly Father 1 hear," in his Christian Psalmist, 1825.

(2) A. Judson. "Our Father God, Who art in heaven." p. 809, i.

(3) B. Barton. "Father of all, Who dwell'st above," in his Devotional Verse, 1826.

(4) J. Conder. In his Choir and Oratory, 1837, the whole Prayer is paraphrased in the following hymns:--

1. Holy, holy, holy, Lord, In highest, &c. (p. 257, i.)
2. Thee, my God, in ceaseless lays.
3. Thou from whom all being sprang.
4. Day by day the manna fell. (p. 268, i.)

5. Father, to Thy sinful child. (p. 872, ii.)
8. Heavenly Father, to whose eye. (p. 505, i.)
7. Father of spirits, God of heaven.

Some of these appeared in former works by Conder, and are noted in detail at the pages indicated above.

(5) I. Williams. In his Cathedral, 1838, "The North Aisle" is devoted to The Lord's Prayer. The use of the Prayer in the various Offices of the Church is made the groundwork of the following paraphrases:-

1. H. Baptism. "Our Father, freed from error's chain."

2. Daily Service. "Our Father, who dost dwell above. 3. Litany. "Like as a Pather His own children Lives.

4. Ante-Com. "Out of a world of grier and "cong.
5. Post-Com. "Our Father, knit in Thy dear Son."

H. Matrimony. "O Thou of whom all families." H. Hatrimony. "O Thou of whom all familie Burial. "O Father of the fatherless, to Thee.

(6) Anon. "Our Father God, Who art in heaven. To Thee," &c. In Curwen's My Own H. Bk., 1848, and the Meth. S. S. H. Bk., 1879.

(7) G. Moultric. "Father of all, to Thee we pray," in his Hys. and Lyrics, 1867.

(8) W. R. Worthington. In Lyra Precatoria. Six Hymns on the Petitions in the Lord's Prayer, &c. By the Rev. W. R. Worthington, M.A.; Lond., Masters & Co., 1874.

8. To these notes must be added those which are scattered throughout this Dictionary, and can be found through the Index of Seasons and Subjects. The result, although not exhaustive, will yet present a fairly good résumé of the English metrical versions of The Lord's [J, J,] Prayer. (See Various.)

Loud hallelujahs to the Lord. I. Watts. [Ps. extriii.] This pealm version appeared with some 13 or 14 others in the 1st ed. of his Hys. & S. Songs, 1707, and was transferred in 1719 to his Psalms of David, &c., p. 392, as his L. M. paraphrase of Ps. 148, in 12 st. of 4 l. It is headed "Universal Praise to God." It is usually given in modern hymnals in an abbreviated form. [J. J.]

Loud to the Prince of heaven. P. Doddridge. [Christ Triumphant.] 1st pub in J. Orton's ed. of Doddridge's (posthumous) Hymns, &c., 1755, No. 41, in 5 st. of 8 l., and headed "The Triumph of Christ in the cause of Truth, Meekness, and Righteonsness. was also repeated in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the same, 1839, No. 52. In its original form it is found in a few collections, but its most popular form, and that which is in extensive use in G. Britain and America, begins with st. ii., "Gird on Thy conquering sword." [J. J.]

loud was the wind and wild the tide. H. F. Lyte. tide. H. F. Lyte. [Christ walking on the Sea.] Pub. in his Poems chiefly Religious, 1833, p. 135, in 2 st. of 8 l., and headed "It is I, be not afraid." In 1853 it was given in the Leeds H. Bk., No. 292, and subsequently repeated in other collections, as " Who walks the waves in wondrous guise?" This form of the text is in 5 st. of 4 l., the additional stanza being by another hand. [J. J.]

Louisa Henrietta. [Luise Henriette.]

Love Divine, all loves excelling. C. Wesley. [The Love of Christ.] 1st pub. in Hys. for those that Seek, and those that Have Redemption, 1747, No. 9, in 4 st. of 8 l. (P.

Works, 1868-72, vol. iv. p. 219). In 1780 it was included, with the omission of st. ii., in the Wes. H. Bk., No. 374, and in this form it has passed into a large number of hymn-books in all English-speaking countries. It had previously appeared in full in M. Madan's Ps. & Hys., 1760; A. M. Toplady's Ps. & Hys., 1776, and other hymn-books of the Church of England. The two forms, the full and the abridged, have thus come into C. U. Tested by its use it is found to rank with the best of its author's work. Mr. G. J. Stevenson has an interesting note thereon in his Meth. H. Bk. Notes, 1883, p. 266. [J. J.]

ove is the theme of Saints above. J. Montgomery, [Love.] Written for the Sunday School Jubilee, Sept. 14, 1831, and printed for use on that occasion. In 1853 it was included in his Original Hymns, No. 341, in 6 st. of 4 l. It is found in the Meth. S. S. H. Bk., 1879, and others. [J, J.]

Love, strong as death, nay stronger. H. Bonar. [Holy Communion.] Appeared in late editions of the Bible H. Bk. (1st ed. 1845), No. 215, in I st. of 15 L, and again in the 1st Series of his Hys. of Faith and Hope, 1857. In Kennedy, 1863, it is altered to "Love faltering not nor failing.

Loving Shepherd of Thy sheep. Jane E. Leeson. [The Good Shepherd.] Pub. in her Hys. and Scenes of Childhood, 1842, No. 17, in 3 st. of 8 l., and headed with the text "My sheep hear My voice, and I know them, and they follow Me," &c. In its original form it is not often found in modern hymn-books. In H. A. & M., 1875, and most other collections, lines 4-8 of st. i. are omitted, thus forming a hymn of 5 st. of 4 l. The omitted lines are:-

> " Bought with blood, and bought for Thee, Thine, and only Thine, I'd be, Holy, harmless, humble, mild, Jesus Christ's obedient child."

The H. A. & M. text is the popular form of the hymn.

Löwe, Johann Friedrich, was b. in 1729 at Clausthal, in the Harz, and studied law at the University of Göttingen. In 1757 he obtained a secretaryship at Schwerin, and was finally, in Sept., 1768, appointed registrar at Rostock. He d. at Rostock, Dec. 23, 1771.

His 16 original hymns appeared in his Geistliche Lieder, nebst cinigen veründerten Kirchen-Gesängen, Greifswald, 1770 [Hamburg]. One has been tr.:—
Gott, wann sequicht dein süsser Friede. [For the Sick.] 1770, p. 48, in 7 st., entitled "In cross and tribulation." Tr. as (1) "My restless heart, with angulsh meaning," by Miss Coz. 1841, p. 149; (2) "His God! when will Thy heavenly peace," by Lady 12. Forteene, 1843, p. 67. [J. M.]

Lowell, James Russell, LLD., was b. at Cambridge, Massachusetts, February 22, 1819; graduated at Harvard College, 1838, and was called to the Bar in 1840. Professor of Modern Languages and Literature (succeeding the Poet Longfellow) in Harvard, 1855; American Minister to Spain, also to England in 1881. He was editor of the Atlantic Monthly, from 1857 to 1862; and of the North American Review from 1863 to 1872. Professor Lowell is the most intellectual of American poets, and first of her art critics and humorists. He has written much admirable moral and sacred poetry, but no hymns. One piece, "Men, whose boast it is that ye" (Against Slavery), is part of an Auti-Slavery poem, and in its present form is found in Hys. of the Spirit, 1864. Part of this is given in Songs for the Sanctuary, N.Y., 1865, as "They are slaves who will not choose." [F. M. B.]

Löwenstern, Matthäus Apelles von, was b. April 20, 1594, at Neustadt, in the principality of Oppelu, Silesia, where his father was a saddler. He early distinguished himself by his musical abilities, was appointed in 1625, by Duke Heinrich Wenzel of Münsterberg, as his music director and treasurer at Bernstadt; in 1626, director of the princely school at Bernstadt; and in 1631 Rath and Secretary and also Director of finance. Thereafter he entered the service of the Emperors Ferdinand II. (d. 1637), and Ferdinand III. as Rath, and was ennobled by the latter. Finally he became Staatsrath at Oels to Duke Carl Friedrich of Münsterberg, and d. at Breslau, April 11, 1648 (Koch, ili. 57-60; Allg. Deutsche Biog. xix. 318, &c.).

Lowenstern's hymne, thirty in all, are of very varied worth, many being written in imitation of antique verse forms, and on the mottoes of the princes under whom he had served. In the original eds. they were accompanied with melodies by himself. When or where they were first pub. (cir. 1644) is not clear. They were bound up with the Breslan Kirchen and Haus-Kusic, 1644, and

Three of these hymns have been tr.:

- i. Ohriste, du Beistand deiner Kreuzgemeine. [In time of War.] 1644, No. xvii., in 4 st. of 4 l., entitled "Sapphic Ode. For spiritual and temporal peace." Included in many later collections. and as No. 215 in the Unv. L. S., 1851. It was a favourite hymn of Niebuhr, and also of Bunsen, who included it in his Versuch, 1833, and concluded with it the preface to his Bibelwork. The trs. in C. U. are:
- 1. Lord of our life, and God of our Balvation. Contributed by Philip Pusey to A. R. Reinagle's Psalm and Hymn Tunes, Oxford, 1840, p. 132, in 5 st. It is rather founded on the German than a fr., st. i., ii. on st. i.; iii.-v. on ii.-iv. The tune to which it was set was marked by Bunsen as an "old Latin melody," and so the Pusey hymn has sometimes been erroneously called a tr. from a Latin hymn of the 8th cent. From Reinagle it passed into the Salisbury H. Bk., 1857, and has been repeated in H. A. & M., Sarum Hyl., Hymnary, Church Hys.; and in America in the Evang. Hyl., N. Y., 1880, Laudes Domini, 1884, and others.

2. Blest aid of Thine afflicted congregation. In full, by A. T. Russell, as No. 99 in the Dalston Hospital H. Bk., 1848.

- 3. Christ, Thou the champion of the band who own. A good and full tr. by Miss Winkworth it her Lyra Ger., 1st Ser., 1855, p. 105; repeated in Schaff's Christ in Song, 1869, and the Ohio Lutheran Hyl., 1880. In the 2nd ed. of her Lyra Ger., 1856, it begins, " Christ, Thou the champion of that war-worn host,"
- 4. O Christ, the leader of that war-worn host. A good and full tr., based on Miss Winkworth, by W. Mercer in his C. P. & H. Bk., 1857, No. 279 (Oxford ed., No. 391), and repeated in draping many persons and dwellings in mounting. All the American Subbath H. Bk., 1858. From the version of 1858 Mr. Windle seems to have altered the form in his Coll., No. 268.

il. Nun preiset alle. [Missions.] 1644, No. xii.. in 5 st. of 6 l., entitled "Alcaic Ode." A fine hymn of Praise. In the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 717. The tr. in C. U. is:—

Now let us loudly. In full, by Miss Winkworth in her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 177, set to Löwenstern's original melody.

iii. Wenn ich in Anget und Noth. Cross and Consolation.] 1644, No. viii., in 7 st. of 7 l., entitled "The 121" Psalm." It is a fine version as a hymn of consolation in times of trouble. In the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 984. The trs. in C. U. are:-

1. When in distress and wee I lift. A good tr., omitting st. v., by H. J. Buckell, in his H. from German, 1842, p. 19, repeated in the Dalston Hospital H. Bk., 1848.

2. When anguish'd and perplexed. A good tr., omitting st. v., vi., by Miss Winkworth in her Lyra Gcr., 2nd Ser., 1858, p. 70. In her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 142, altered and set to the original melody by Löwenstern. [J. M.]

Lowry, Robert, D. D., s. of Crozier Lowry, was b. at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, March 12, 1826, and educated at Lewisburg University. Having received ordination as a Baptist Minister, his first charge was at West Chester, Ponnsylvania. From thence he passed to New York City, and then to Brooklyn, N. Y. In 1876 he was appointed Professor of Rhetoric in his University. On resigning his Professorship he undertook the charge of the 2nd Baptist Church, New Jersey. Dr. Lowry has been associated with some of the most popular Sunday School bymn-books published in the States, including Happy Voices, 1865; Chapel Melodies, 1868; Bright Jewels, 1869; Pure Gold, 1871; Royal Diadem, 1873; Tidal Wave, 1874; Fountain of Song, 1877; Welcome Tidings, 1877, &c. Of Dr. Lowry's hymns those which have attained the widest circulation are :-

- 1. Jerusalem, for ever bright. Heaven.peared in the American Tract Society's Happy Voices, 1865, with music by the author.
- 2. Low in the grave He lay. Resurrection of Christ. Written in 1874 and pub. in Brightest and Best, 1875.

6. One more day's work for Jesus. Work for Christ. Pub., with music by the author, in Bright Jewels, 1869.

7. Shall we gather at the river ! Mutual recognition in the Hereafter. The origin of this hymn is thus set forth in E. W. Long's Illustrated History of Hys. and their Authors, Philadelphia, 1876, p. 64:-

around friends and sequaintances were passing away to the splitt land in large numbers. The question began to arise in the heart, with unusual emphasis, 'Shall we meet again? We are parting at the river of death, shall we meet at the river of life?' 'Seating myself at the organ,' says he, 'simply to give vent to the pent up emotions of the heart, the words and music of the bynn began to flow out, as if by inspiration:

Where bright angel feet have trod?"

In 1055 the house and music or in the search of the search o

In 1865 the hymn and music were given in Happy Voices, No. 220, in 5 st. of 4 l. and a chorus. The hymn has since passed into a great number of hymnals in G. Britain and America.

- 8. Take the wings of the morning; speed quickly thy flight. Exhortation to Repentance. Written for, and pub. with music by the author in, the Royal Diadem, 1873.

Several of these hymns, together with some of his trs., previously appeared in the Ohio Synod's preceding Coll. of Bys. (3rd ed., 1858; 4th, 1863). [J. J.]

Lucas of Prag, B.A. (Lucas Pragencis), was b. at Prag about 1460. He studied at the University of Prag, graduating B.A. in 1481. About 1482 he joined the Bohemian Brethren's Unity, becoming in 1490 a member of their in H. A. & M., 1861, as a tr. based upon Select Council; and was, in 1500, consecrated Bishop of the Unity. He d. Dec. 11, 1528. He contributed II hymns to the Bohemian H. Bk., 1501, and 106 others by him appear in the ed. of 1561. See, further, under Behemian Hymnody, pp. 153-160; also note on Mun lasst (J. T. M.) uns den Leib begraben.

Lucis Creator optime. St. Gregory the Great (?) [Sunday Evening.] This is one of the eight hymns which the Benedictine editors assign to St. Gregory (Opera, Paris, 1705, iii. col. 879). Mone gives it as No. 62, from MSS. of the 8th cent at Darmstadt and Trier, &c. He thinks it was written in the first quarter of the 5th cent., but not in Italy; and consequently neither by St. Ambrose, to whom it has often been ascribed, nor by St. Gregory, who was only b. cir. 540. Daniel, i., No. 49, gives the text, and at iv. p. 49, cites it as in a 10th cent. Rheinau Ms. Among the British Museum Mss. it is found in three 11th cent. Hymnaries of the English Church (Vesp. D. xii. f. 9 b; Jul. A. vi. f. 22; Harl. 2961 f. 220), and in an 11th cent. Breviary of the Spanish Church (Add. 30848 f. 72). It is in a ms. of the 11th cent. at Corpus Christi, Cambridge (391, p. 231); and in the Lat. Hys. of the Anglo-Saxon Church (Surtees Society), 1851, is printed from an 11th cent. Ms. at Durliam, (B. iii. 32 f. 5). Among the St. Gall MSs. it is given in No. 20 of the 9th cent.; Nos. 387, 413, of the 11th cent., &c.

It is included in the Masarabic, 1502; Roman (Venice, 1478, and Rome, 1632); Sarum; Fork; Aberdeen and other Breviaries, generally assigned to Sunday at Vespers. Daniel entitles it "A hymn on the work of the First Day" [of the Creation]; and Mone as "1st S. after the Octave of the Epiphany. At Second Vespers." The text is also in Wackersagel, i. No. 59; Hymnarium Sariab., 1851, p. 36; Königafeld, il. p. 8; J. Chandler's Hym. of the Frimitive Church, 1837, No. 11; and Card. Newmont Munni Keckeriae. 1838 and 1885. Ludămilia Elisabeth, second dau. of Count Ludwig Günther I. of Schwarzburg-Rudolstadt, was b. April 7, 1640, at the castle of Heidecksburg, near Rudolstadt, and was educated there along with her cousin Emilie Juliane (q.v.). In 1665 she went with her mother to the dowager castle of Friedensburg near Leutenberg; but after her mother's death, in 1670, she returned to Rudolstadt, where, on Dec. 20, 1671, she was formally betrothed to Count Christian Wilhelm of Schwarzburg-Sondershausen. At this time measles was raging in the district, and her eldest sister, Sophie Juliane, was seized, and d. Feb. 14 1672. By attending on her, Ludamilia and the youngest sister, Christiane Magdalene, caught the infection, and both died at Rudolstadt on March 12, 1672. (Koch, iv. 50-56; Allg. Deutsche Biog. xix. 865-367, &c.)

Ally. Deutsche Hog. IX. 363-367, &c.)

She received a careful and plous training, was a good Latin scholar, and well read in divinity and other branches of learning. Her hymns show her to have been of a deeply plous nature, and of intense love to Jesus. They were composed rather for her own edification than for use in public worship. Ten of them were included in the Budolstath G. B., 1882. They were collected, to the number of 206, and edited by her consin Emille (probably assisted by A. Fritsch) as Die Stimme der Freundiss, das itt: Geistliche Lieder welche, aus brünstiger und biss ons Ende beharter Jesus Liebe verfartiget und gebraucht, &c. Rudolstath, 1887. This was reprinted, with an introduction by W. Thilo, at Stuttgart, 1886. was reprinted, Stuttgart, 1856.

Three of those hymns have been tr., viz.:i. Jesus, Jesus, nichts als Jesus. [Love to Christ.] 1687, No. 104, p. 312, in 5 st. of 6 l., entitled "Resignation to the Will of God." The initials of the stanzas form the word Jesus, and each stanza ends, "Herr, wie du willt." It seems to have appeared in the 2nd ed. of A. Fritsch's Jesus Lieder (not in the 1st ed. of 1668. No copy of the 2nd ed. is now known),

Rambach, iii. 188, gives it from the Vermehrtes Gesang-Büchlein, Halberstadt, 1673. In the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863. The tr. in C. U. is :-

Jesus, Jesus cally. In full, by A. Crull, as No. 282 in the Ohio Lutheran Hyl., 1880.

Other trs. are:—(1) "Jesus, Jesus, nought but Jesus, Shali my wish and," in the Suppl. to Ger. Psal., ed. 1765, p. 11. (2) "Jesus, 'tis my aim divine," by Hiss Dunn, 1857, p. 107. (3) "Tis Jesus that's my sole deelre," by Dr. G. Walker, 1860, p. 92. (4) "Jesus, Jesus, naught but Jesus, Can my," by R. Massie, in the British Herdd, July, 1865, p. 103, and in Reid's Praise Bk., 1872, No. 393. (5) "Jesus, Jesus, Donght but Jesus, Shall my wish be," in Cantica Sanctorum, 1880. No. 97.

il. Jesu Blut komm über mich. [Holy Communion.] A Passiontide Hymn on the Blood of Jesus. 1687, p. 45, No. 14, in 8 st. In the Blätter für Hymnologie, 1886, p. 180, it is cited as in the 2nd ed., 1679, of A. Fritsch's Himmels-Lust (1st ed., 1670, does not contain it); and as there marked "S. J. G. Z. S. V. H.," the initials of the elder sister, Sophie Juliane.

Tr. as:—"Jesus' Blood come over me," as No. 448, in pt. i, of the Moravian H. Bk., 1754.

iii. Sorge, Vater! sorge du. [Morning.] 1687, No. 168, in 7 st., entitled "On Resignation to the Care of God," and founded on 1 Peter v. 7. Previously in the Rudolstadt G. B., 1682, p. 692. Tr. as: -"Care, O Father, care for me," in the Monthly Packet, ziv., 1872, p. 211.

The hymn "Zeuch uns nach dir," sometimes erroneously ascribed to her, is noted under Funcks, F., p. 401, ii. [J. M.]

Lugete dura marmora. [Passiontide.] This is found in the Sirenes Symphoniacae, Cologne, 1678, p. 154; the Psatteriolum Cantio-num Catholicarum, Cologne, 1722, p. 83; the Hymnodia Sacra, Münster, 1753, p. 80; and also in Daniel, ii. 351. It is probably the production of some German Jesuit, and was most likely written in the second half of the 17th cent. It has been tr. by the Rev. R. C. Singleton, 1870, and pub in the 2nd ed. of his Anglican H. Bk., 1871, as "O mourn, thou rigid stone"; and by H. M. Macgill in his Songs of the Christian Creed & Life, 1876, No. 71, as "Ye rocks of marble, melt and weep."

Lugete, pacis Angell. C. Coffin. [Friday-Lent.] Appeared in the Parts Breviary, 1736, for Fridays at Vespers, and also "Ad Officium Noct. In Festo quinque plagarum Christi." It was repeated in Coffin's Hymni Sacri, the same year, p. 28, and is found in several modern French Breviaries. The text is also in J. Chandler's Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1837, No. 31, and Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. Tr. as:—

1. Lament, ye saints, behold your God. By J. Chandler, in his Hys. of the Prim. Church, 1887, p. 28, and Dr. Oldknow's Hymns, &c., 1850. In 1861 it was given, with alterations, as "Angels, lament, behold your God," in H. A. # M., but omitted in the revised ed., 1875.

3. Angels of peace, look down from heaven and mourn. By I. Williams in his Hys. tr. from the Parisian Breviary, 1839, p. 36. It was repeated in the Salisbury H. Bk., 1857; the Sarum, 1868; the Hymnary, 1872, and others, and usually with slight alterations.

2. Angels of peace, lament. By W. J. Blew. and in the 3rd ed., Jens, 1675, is No. 43. Written for use in his own church, 1850-2, and pub. in The Church Hy. & Tune Bk., 1852-5; and again in Rice's Hys. Selected from the Ch. H. & T. Bk., 1870.

Luise Henriette, Electress of Brandenburg, dau. of Friedrich Heinrich, Prince of Nassau-Orange and Stadtholder of the United Netherlands, was b. at 'S Graven-hage (The Hague), Nov. 27, 1627. She re-ceived a careful Christian training, not only in literature, but also in domestic economy and feminine handicrafts. On Dec. 7, 1646, she was married, at the Hague, to the Elector Friedrich Wilhelm of Brandenburg, who was then residing at Cleve, but remained at the Hague to nurse her father, who d. March 14, 1647. She then, in June, 1647, joined her husband at Cleve, where her first child, Wilhelm Heinrich, was b. in May 1648. In the Butumn of 1649 she set out with her husband and child on the way to Berlin, but in the inclement weather the child sickened and d. at Wesel, Oct. 24, 1649, and it was not till April 10, 1650, that she entered Berlin. On the birth of her second son, Carl Emil (who d. 1674), at Oranienburg, near Berlin, on Feb. 16, 1655, she founded an orphanage there as a thank-offering (now the Oranienburg Orphanage at Berlin). On July 11, 1657, her third son, afterwards King Friedrich I. of Prussia, was b. at Königsberg. After the birth of her youngest son, Ludwig, at Cleve, in 1666, she never entirely recovered. In the spring of 1667 she was conveyed to Berlin in a litter, and d. there June 18, 1667. (Koch, iv. 158; Allg. Deutsche Biog., xix. 623; Goedeke's Grundriss, vol. iii., 1887, p. 319, &c.)

Luise Henriette was a woman of noble character; a devoted wife who accompanied her husband in many of his expeditions, and was his right-hand counsellor his expeditions, and was his right-hand counsellor in matters of state; and a true mother of her people, introducing the culture of the potato, founding model farms, establishing elementary schools, and in many ways interesting herself in restoring their welfare after the ravages of the Thirty Years' War. She was, like the Elector, a member of the Reformed Church, but earnestly desired to promote peace between the Lutheran and Reformed communions, and exerted herself especially on behalf of P. Garhardt (see n. 495, ii.). Ancislly on behalf of P. Gerhardt (see p. 409, it.). Another of her efforts in this direction was by means of the other of her efforts in this direction was by means of the Venton Hymn Rook, which Christoph Runge edited at her direction, and pub. in 1653 (see p. 272, i.). To this book she herself contributed four hymns. In his dedi-cation to the Electress, Runge says she had "augmented and adorned it with your own hymns, viz.; Ein ander stelle sein. Vertrauen'; Gott der Reichthumb delner Glüter'; 'Jesus meine Zuversicht'; Ich wil von meiner Missethat.' Your Electoral Highness has not only in these your new mertioned hymns (litzt geneldten guistmissethat. Tour Electral righness has not only in those your now mentioned byinns (litz geneliden geistreichen Ihren eigenen Liedern) made known to all the world your Christian spirit; how your confidence is directed to God alone; how your ascribe to him with thankful heart all the benefits you enjoy; and how you rest the hope of your future everlasting life in Heaven. on Christ alone as on a steadfast rock, but have " &c. &c.

The question however remains. Did Runge here mean more than that she had sent for insertion certain hymns which were favourites of her own, perhaps written for her, but not necessarily written by her. Such cases were common enough at an earlier period (see note on Mag ich Unglück). It is certainly strange that her name should not be given in any of the many hymn-books in which the third of these ("Jesus meine Zuversicht") was included furing the next century. It was not till 1769 that Runge's dedication suggested to D. G. Schöber, and, after him, to other compliers, the idea of the Electress's authorship; but once suggested it was soon generally accepted. Fischer, i. 390-396, gives various additional reasons that make this theory unlikely; such as that while in Runge's dedication are mentioned as above, yet her name is not affixed to the individual bymns in the body of the book; that in the function by her private chaptain, no mention is made of her poetical gifts; that Criger gave them in his Iraxis pictatis melica without her name (In the 1664 and later eds. the first was omitted), and that in particular the third is too classic and correct in style to have been written by so poor a German scholar as the Electress. This lost objection would of course be met if we could suppose with Kock (iv. p. 169) that the hymn was originally written in Dutch, or with Dutch idioms, and was revised and corrected by her minister, Otto von Schwerin, or by Runge.

In view of the present evidence we can only say that if the Electress were not the author of these hymns if the Electress were not the author of these hymns there is at least no proof of any kind to show that they were composed by any of those whose names have sometimes been attached to them; such as Otto von Schwerin (b. 1816, d. 1679), Caspar Ziegler (b. 2621, d. 1890), Hans von Assig (b. 1650, d. 1634), and others. In this state of uncertainty the case must be left till defiate must be sent the state of t definite proof be forthcoming.

Two of these hymns have passed into English, viz. :-

i. Ich will von moiner Missethat. Lent. This beautiful hymn first appeared in the Crüger-Runge G. B., 1653, No. 45, in 16 st. of 7 l., entitled, "Hymn of Penitence," and without signature. Koch, iv. 160, conjectures that it may have been written at Cleve in 1648. In the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 380. The trs. are:-

(1) "With sorrow now for past misdeeds," by Miss Cox, 1864, p. 204. (2) "I will return unto the Lord," by Miss Winkworth, 1869, p. 221.

ii. Jesus meine Zuversicht. Easter. beautiful hymn, founded on Job xix. 25-27 and I Cor. xv. 35 ff., appeared in the Cruger-Runge G. B., 1653, No. 140, in 10 st. of 6 l., and without signature. Its origin is thus given by Lauxmann, in Koch, viii. 69:

"It dates from the early years of her married life. In the autumn of 1643 she lost her first child, the Crown Prince Wilhelm Heinrich, at Wesel, while on her journey (to Berlin), by which death for a long time the hope of succession in the Electoral House and in the Hohenzollern family line seemed to be lost. At Tangermunde, in the Altmark [on the Kibe], she had to spend some quiet winter months, and here probably the princess of twenty-two years poured out her heart before the Lord in this hymn.

This, however, is conjecture rather than history; for, as stated above, it is not yet clearly proved that the Electress wrote any hymns. The hymn itself is of the first rank; and A. J. Rambach calls it "an acknowledged masterpiece of Christian poetry;" while C. von Winterfeld says, "it will ever remain a treasure among the hallowed songs of the Evangelical Church. It bears a certain resemblance to the concluding section of the Apotheosis of A. C. Prudentius (lines 1063-1085, with the subtitle " De resurrectione carnis humanae," and beginning, "Nosco meum in Christo corpus consurgere. Quid me"); but can hardly be called a tr. of it. It was included in Crüger's Praxis, 1656, No. 182, passed into almost all later hymn-books, and is No. 866 in the Unv. L. S., 1851.

The beautiful chorale (as in the C. B. for and a tr. from Christian Gregor's "Nein, ach nein, er lässt mich nicht," was added as st. iii. (ed. 1886, No. 1241). Abridged forms are in J. A. Latrobe's Coll., 1841, and Dr. Hook's Church School H. Bh., 1850.

 Jesus, on Whose name I rest. A good tr. of st. i.-iv., vi., by A. T. Russell, as No. 264, in his Ps. & Hys., 1851.

3. Jesus, my Redeemer, lives. A good tr., omitting st. iv., v., by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger. 1st Ser., 1855, p. 93. Repeated, in full, in the Ohio Evang. Luth. Hyl., 1880; and, abridged, in the Bapt. Ps. & Hys., 1858, Meth. New Connexion H. Bk., 1863, J. B. Whiting's Hys. for the Church Catholic, 1882, and others.

4. Christ, the Rock on which I build. A good tr., omitting st. iv., v., contributed by R. Massie, as No. 106, to the 1857 ed. of Mercer's Ch. Psalter & H. Bk. (Ox. ed. 1864, No. 199, omitting trs. of st. ii., vi.) and repeated in his own Lyra Domestica, 2nd Ser., 1864, p. 127. Abridged in Dr. J. Paterson's Coll., Glasgow, 1867.

5. Jeans, my eternal trust. A full and good tr., by Mrs. Charles, in her Voice of Christian Life in Song, 1858, p. 237, repeated in Cantate Domino, Boston, U.S., 1859.

6. Jesus Christ, my sure defence. A good tr., by Miss Winkworth, in the original metre, omitting st. iv .- vi., and based on her Lyra Ger. version, in her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 59. In the Pennsylvania Luth. Ch. Bk., 1868, the trs. of st. viii., ix., are omitted.

7. Christ, my Lord, is all my hope. A tr. of st. i., ii., viii., x., by Miss Borthwick, in Dr. Pagenstecher's Coll., 1864, No. 285.

Other trs. are:—
(1) "Jesus is my faithful trust." In the Brilish Majazine, June 1838, p. 625. (2) "I with Jesus choose my part." by Dr. H. Mills, 1856, p. 248. (3) "Again my Saviour Jesus lives," by Dr. O. Walker, 1860, p. 100. (4) "Jesus Christ, my Saviour, lives!" In the Brilish Herald, Sept. 1866, p. 328, and Reid's Praise Bk., 1872. (6) "Jesus is my confidence," by N. L. Frolkingham, 1870, p. 175. (6) "Jesus Christ, my Strength, my Stay." In the Family Treasury, 1876, p. 76.

Luke, Jemima, nés Thompson, daughter of Thomas Thompson, sometime of Bath, was b. at Colebrooke Terrace, Islington, Aug. 19, 1813, and was married to the late Samuel Luke, a Congregational Minister, in 1843. She was an anonymous contributor to The Juvenile Magazine at the age of 13, and The Female Jesuit, 1851; A Memoir of Eliza Ann Harris, of Clifton, 1859, &c. Mrs. Luke Ann Harris, of Clifton, 1859, &c. is known to hymnody through her hymn:-

I think when I read that awest story of old. [The Love of Jerus.] It is recorded that this hymn was composed in a stage coach in 1841, and was designed for use in the village school, near her father's seat, Poundsford Park. It was pub anonymously in the Leeds H. Bk., 1853, No. 874, in 3 st. of 8 1, and has since come into use through children's hymn-books in most English-speaking countries. [J. J.]

Lundie, Mary. · [Duncan, Mary.]

Lunt, William Parsons, D.D., s. of Henry Lunt, was b. at Newburyport, Massachusetts, April 21, 1805. He entered Harvard College in 1819, and graduated in 1823. After acting as a tutor in a school for one year, and studying law a second, he joined the Cambridge Divinity School in 1825, and entered the Uniterian Ministry, June 19, 1828, his first charge being the Second Congregational Unitarian Society of New York City. In 1835 he became co-paster of the Unitarian congregation at Quincy, Massachusetts, with the Rev. P. Whitney, and in 1843 sole pastor of the same congregation. During a tour in the East he d. at Akabah (the ancient Ezion-Geber), March 21, 1857, and was buried a short distance from that village. Dr. Lunt was the author of several sermons, and contributed largely to the Christian Examiner and other periodicals. His hymns and poems, together with selections from his prose works, were pub. by his son as Gleanings. His most widely used hymn is "When driven by op-pression's rod." It was "written for the public schools of Quincy, and sung by them at their Fourth of July Celebration, 1837." It is in 5 at. of 4 l. This, together with several others, including one of more than ordinary merit for Sunday schools, "Hark, the gentle Shepherd's voice" (written in 1846), are given in full in Putnam's Singers and Songs of the Liberal Faith, 1875. To this work we are indebted for the above facts. [J. J.]

Luther, Martin, b. at Eisleben, Nov. 10. 1483; entered the University of Erfurt, 1501 (B.A. 1502, M.A. 1503); became an Augustinian monk, 1505; ordained priest, 1507; appointed Professor at the University of Wittenberg, 1508, and in 1512 D.D.; published his 95 Theses, 1517; and burnt the Papel Bull which had condemned them, 1520; attended the Diet of Worms, 1521; translated the Bible into German, 1521-34; and d. at Eisleben, Feb. 18, 1546. The details of his life and of his work as a reformer are accessible to English readers in a great variety of forms, and need not be repeated here. Of Luther's influence on German hymnody an adequate estimate will be found under German Hymnody, at p. 414. It only remains here to give a somewhat fuller account of the principal books which he edited, or in which his hymns first appeared; together with a classified list of his hymns.

4. Geistlicke Lieder auffs nene gebestert. Wittenberg.

J. Klug, 1529. No copy of this book is now known, but there was one in 1728 in the possession of G. E. Waldan, pastor at Nürnberg, and from his description it is evident that the first part of the Rostock G. B., 1531, is a reprint of it. The Rostock G. B., 1531, sax reprinted by G. M. Wiechmann-Kadow at Schwerin in 1858. The 1529 evidently contained 50 German hymns, of which 29 (including the Litany) were by Luther.

5. Geistliche Lieder auffs new gebestert. Erfurt. A. Rauscher, 1531 [Helmstadt, now Wolfenbüttel Library], a reprint of No. 4.

8. Geistliche Lieder. Wittenberg. J. Klug, 1543 [Hamburg Library], with 61 German hymns, of which 35 are by Luther. 9. Geystliche Lieder. Leipzig. V. Babst, 1545 [Göt-tingen Library]. This contains Luther's finally revised text, but adds no new hymns by himself. In pt. i. are 51 German hymns, in pt. ii. 40, of which 35 in all are by Luther.

For these books Luther wrote three pre-faces, first pub. respectively in Nos. 3, 4, 9. A fourth is found in his Christliche Geseng, Lateinisch und Deudsch, zum Begrebnie, Wit-tenberg, J. Klug, 1542. These four prefaces are reprinted in Wackernagel's Bibliographie, 1855, pp. 543-583, and in the various editions of Luther's Hymns. Among modern editions of Luther's Geistlicks Lieder may be mentioned the following:

carl von Winterfeld, 1840; Dr. C. E. P. Wackernagel, 1848; G. C. H. Stip, 1854; Wilhelm Schireks, 1854; Dr. Dannell, 1863; Dr. Karl Gerok, 1863; Dr. A. F. W. Flacher, 1863; A. Frommel, 1863; Karl Goedeke, 1863, &c. In The Hymns of Martin Luther. Set to their original melodics. With an English version. New York, 1863, ed. by Dr. Leonard Woolsey Bacon and Nathan H. Allen, there are the four prefaces, and English versions of all Luther's hymns, principally taken more or less altered, from the versions by A. T. Russell, R. Massie and Miss Winkworth (repub. in London, 1884). Complete trs. of Luther's hymns have been pub. by Dr. John Anderson, 1846 (2nd ed. 1847), Dr. John Hunt, 1853, Bichard Massie, 1864, and Dr. G. Macdonald in the Sunday Magasius, 1867, and his Exotics, 1876. The other versions are given in detail in the notes on the individual hymns. in the notes on the individual hymns.

ii. Classified List of Luther's Hymns.

Of Luther's hymns no classification can be quite perfect, e.g. No. 3 (see below) takes hardly anything from the Latin, and No. 18 hardly anything from the Psalm. No. 29 is partly based on earlier hymus (see p. 225, i.). No. 30 is partly based on St. Mark i. 9-11, and xvi., 15, 16 (see p. 226, ii.). No. 35 is partly based on St. Luke ii. 10-16. The following arrangement, however, will answer all practical purposes.

A. Translations from the Latin.

- i. From Latin Hymns:
- 1. Christum wir sollen loben schon, A solis ortus cardins (p. 4, ii.).

 2. Der du bist drei in Einigkeit.

 O Luz beata Trinitas.
- 3. Jesus Christus unser Heiland, Der von
- Jesus Christus mostra sains (p. 598, i.)
 4. Komm Gott Schöpfer, heiliger Geist, Veni Creator Spiritus, Mentes.
 5. Nun komm der Heldenheiland.
- Veni Redemptor gentium.

 6. Was fürchst du Feind Herodes sehr. A solis ortus cardine (p. 8, i.)
- il. From Latin Antiphone, &c. :
- 7. Herr Gott dich loben wir.
- Te Deum landamus.

 9. Verleih uns Frieden gnädiglich.
 Da pacem, Domine (p. 278, ii.).

 9. Wir glauben all an einen Gott.
- ili. Partly from the Latin, the translated stansas being adopted from Pre-Reformation Versions:
- 10. Komm, heiliger Geist, Herre tiott,
- 11. Mitten wir im Leben sind.

 Media vita in morte sumus. (p. 731. i.)

B. Hymns revised and enlarged from Pre-Reformation popular hymns,

- Gelobet seist dn Jeans Christ.
 Gott der Vater wohn uns bei.
 Gott sei gelobet und gebenedelst.
 Kun bitten wir den heiligen Geist.
- C. Psalm versions.
- 16. Ach Gott vom Himmel, sieh darein.

- 17. Aus tiefer Noth schrei ich zu dir.
 18. Ein' feste Burg ist unser Gott.
 19. Ex spricht der Unweisen Mund wohl.
 20. Ex wollt uns Gotte genädig sein.
 21. Wär Gott nicht mit uns diese Zeit.
 22. Wohl dem, der in Gottes Furcht sieht,

D. Paraphrases of other portions of Holy Scripture.

- 23. Diese sind die heilgen zehn Gebot.
 24. Jessla dem Propheten das geschah.
 25. Mensch willt du leben seitglich.
 26. Mit Fried und Freud ich fahr dahin.
 27. Sie ist mir lieb die werthe Magd.
- 28. Vater unser im Himmelreich.
- E. Hymns mainly Original.
- 29. Christ lag in Todesbanden.
- Christ unser Herr zum Jordan kam.
 Ein nenes Lied wir heben an.
- 32. Erhalt uns Herr bei deinem Wort. 33. Jesus Christus unser Helland, Der den.
- 34. Nun freut euch lieben Christengemein.
- Vom Himmel hoch da komm ich her.
 Vom Himmel kam der Engel Schaar.
- In addition to these see also notes on:-
- 37. Für allen Freuden auf Erden.
- 38. Kyrie eleison.

In the Blätter für Hymnologie, 1883, Dr. Danneil arranges Luther's hymns according to what he thinks their adaptation to modern German C. U., as follows:

i. Hymns which ought to be included in every good Evangetical hymn-book: Nos. 7-18, 20, 26, 28, 29, 30, 32, 34, 35, 36, 38, ii. Hymns the reception of which into a hymn-book might be contested: Nos. 2, 3, 4, 19, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, iii. Hymns not suited for a hymn-book : Nos. 1, 5, 6, 27, 31, 37.

The whole of these 38 pieces are annotated in the body of this Dictionary under their first lines, except Nos. 1-8, 11, which are noted under the first lines given in italics. [J. M.]

Lux alma Jesu mentium. nard. [The Transfiguration.] In the revised Roman Breviary, 1568, a cento from St. Bernard's "Jesu dulcis memoria" (q. v.), beginning "Amor Jesu dulcissime" [not the cento in H. A. & M., "Jesu, Thy mercies are untold," noted on p. 587, i. (iii.)], was appointed for Lauds on the Festival of the Transfiguration. The lines were taken from St. Bernard's poem without the least regard to their original connection, and were considerably altered to adapt them to their purpose. We give this altered text below from the Rom. Brev., pub. at Rome in 1570, p. 778. In the Rom. Brev. revised under Urban VIII., 1632, it was recast as "Lux alma Jesu mentium," and this recast has been repeated in all subsequent editions of that revision. The two forms of the cento are as follows:--

Roman Breviary, 1568. Amor Jesu dukciasime, Quando cor postrum visitas, Pellis mentis caliginem,

Et nos reples dulcedine. "Quam felix est, quem eaties, Consors Paternae dexterae i Tu verse lumen patrise, Ouod omnem sensum superst.

Splendor Paternae gloriae. Incomprehensa bonitas, Amoris tui copiam, Da nobie per praesen-tiam."

Roman Breviary, 1632, Lux alma Jesu mentium Dum corda nostra re-creas, Culpae fugas caliginem, Et nos reples dulcedine. Quam lactus est quem visitas!

Consors Paternae dexte-

Tu duice lumen patriae, Carnis negatum scusibus. Splendor Paternae glo-riae. Incomprehensa charitas, Nobie amorts copiam Lorgire per ртасвеп-

It will be noted that 1.9, "Splendor Paternac," is the first line of the well-known Ambrosian hymn, and is not from St. Bernard's poem. [J, M.]

The older of the above centor has not been

tr. into English. The trs. of the Lux alma Jesu mentium are :-

- 1. Light of the anxious heart, Jesu, Thou dost appear. By Card. Newman, in Tracts for the Times, 1836, No. 75, p. 115; and again in his Verses on Various Occasions, 1868, p. 261. It has been repeated in several collections, but must be distinguished from R. Campbell's tr. as given below.
- 2. Light of the soul, O Saviour blest. By E. Caswall, in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 168; and his Hys. & Poems, 1873, p. 91. This is in several modern hymn-books.
- 3. Light of the anxious heart, Jesu, Thy suppliants cheer. By R. Campbell, in his Hys. & Anthems, 1850, p. 56. In O. Shipley's Annus Sanctus, 1884, it is given from Campbell's MSS. as, " Light of the troubled heart."

Other tra. are :-

- 1. O Christ, when Thy chaste light inspires. Primer. 1706 and 1732.
- 2. Jesu, Light of souls indwelling. W. J. Copeland. 184A.
- 3. O Jesus, when Thy sweetest light. J. Wallace. [J. J.]

Lux illuxit triumphalis. [Common of Saints.] In a Paris Missal of the beginning of the 14th cent. now in the British Museum (Add. 16905, £. 254 b) this is given as a sequence on St. Germain, Bishop of Paris (commemorated on May 28; not St. Germain of Auxerne); and in another Missal of the same date, probably also of the Paris use (Harl. 2891, f. 359). The same text is in Chichtovaeus, ed. 1556, Bk. iv. f. 215. The form tr. into English is that in J. M. Horst's Paradisus animae Christianae, Cologne, 1644, p. 118 (not in the lat, ed. 1630), where it is a General Hymn for Saints' Days ("Hymnus Communis in festo cujuscunque Saucti"), and has 14 st. In the 1863 ed. of the Appendix to the Hymnal Noted it is tr. in 8 st. by T. I. Ball as, "Glad light illumes this day." This is repeated in 5 st. in the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871. Another tr. is, "Hail, the festal morn begun," in the tr. of The Paradise of the Christian Soul, pub. by Burns, Lond., 1850, p. 141.

Lux jucunda, lux insignis. Adam of St. Victor. [Whitsuntide.] The text of this fine sequence is given by Gautier in his Ocurres poetiques D'Adam (1858, i. p. 107; 1881, p. 50), from various MSS., including two in the National Library at Paris, No. 1139, a Limoges Sequentiary of the 12th cent; the 13th No. 15615, a Paris Gradual of the 13th cent. It is also in two early 14th cent. Paris Missals in the British Museum (Add. 16905, f. 175; Harl. 2891, f. 848); and in the Sarum, York, and St. Andrews Missals. It does not seem to have been used in Germany, though Daniel, ii. 71, in giving the text, justly styles it "inferior to none, superior to most; breathing nothing but the flowers and odours of Holy Scripture." Clichtovaeus, Abp. Trench. Holy Scripture." Clichtovaeus, Abp. Trench, and Wrangham explain the poet's allusions to the various Scripture types. The main uses were:—St. Victor appointed it for Monday in Whitsun Week; Paris for Tuesday; the Sarum for Wednesday; while the York gave part first (reading "Laus jucunda") for Friday, and part second ("Consolator alme") for Saturday. [WM. C.]

The tra. of this Sequence in C. U. are :-

- Luz juounde, luz însignis = Day all jubilant. all splendid. Pt. i.
- 2. O quam felix, quam festiva = 0 the joy, the exultation. Pt. ii.
- 3. Consolator alme, veni = Comforter, possess and cheer us. Pt. iii.

This tr. was made by C. S. Calverley for the Hymnary in which it was pub. in 1872.

1. Day of pleasure, day of wonder. H. Kynaston, in his Occasional Hys., 1862.

2. The illustrious Day when from the throne. C. B. Pearson, in The Sarum Hissal in English, 1868, and his Sequences from the Strum Hissal, 1871.

3. Day delightful, day most noted. By D. S. Wrangham, in his Liturgical Postry of Adam of St. Victor, 1881, together with the original Latin.

Lynch, Thomas Toke, was b. at Dunmow, Essex, July 5, 1818, and educated at a school at Islington, in which he was afterwards an usher. For a few months he was a student at the Highbury Independent College; but withdrew, partly on account of failing health, and partly because his spirit was too free to submit to the routine of College life. From 1847 to 1849 he was Minister of a small charge at Highgate, and from 1849 to 1852 of a congregation in Mortimer Street, which subsequently migrated to Grafton Street, Fitzroy Square. From 1856 to 1859 he was laid aside by illness. In 1860 he resumed his ministry with his old congregation, in a room in Gower Street, where he remained until the opening of his new place of worship, in 1862, (Mornington Church), in Hampstead Road, London. He ministered there till his death, on the 9th of May, 1871.

The influence of Lynch's ministry was great, and reached far beyond his own congregation (which was never large), since it included many students from the Theological Colleges of London, and thoughtful men from other churches, who were attracted to him by the freshness and spirituality of his preaching. His prose works were numerous, beginning with Theological colleges and spirituality of his preaching. His prose works were numerous, beginning with Theologic on Lecture, 1870. Several of his works were published after his death. His Memoir, by W. White, was pub. in 1874. Lynch's hymns were pub. in :-

The Rivalet: a Contribution to Sacred Song, Lond., Longman, 1855, 2nd ed., 1856. This was enlarged by an addition of 67 hymns in 1869.

From the 1st ed. of the Rivulet, 1855, the following hymns have come into C. U.:-

- 1. All faded is the glowing light. Second Advent.
 2. Be Thy word with power fraught. Refore Sermon.
 3. Christ in His word straws near. Holy Scripture.
 4. Dismiss me not Thy service, Lord. Work for Christ.

5. Gracious Spirit, dwell with me. Holy Spirit's presence desired.

6. How calmly the evening once more is descending.

- Eneming. Sometimes "How calmly once more the night is descending."
 7. I give myself to prayer. Prayer in Trouble.
 8. Lord, on Thy returning day. Public Worskip.
 9. Lord, when in silenthours I muse. Resignation.
 10. Love me, O Lord, forgivingly. Resignation.
 11. Mountains by the darkness hidden. Resignation.
 12. Now have we met that we may sek. P. Worskip.
 13. O, break my heart; but break it as a field. Penitence desired.
 14. O Lord, Thou art not fickle. Sympathy.
 15. O where is He that trod the sea. Christ Walking on the Sea.
- on the Sca.
- 16. Oft when of God we ask. Trust in Trial.

 17. Rise, He calleth thee, arise. Bönd Bartimacus.
 18. Say not, my soul, from whence. Resignation.
 19. Where is thy God, my soul? Resignation and

There are also from the 1856 and 1868 eds.] the following:-

20. A thousand years have come and gone. Christmas.

Lift up your heads, rejoice. (1858.) Advent.
 Praying by the river side. Höly Baptism.
 The Lord is rich and merciful. Have Krilla in God.
 There is purpose in this waste. Easter.

Lynch's hymns are marked by intense individuality, gracefulness and felicity of diction, picturesqueness, spiritual freshness, and the sadness of a powerful soul struggling with a weak and emaciated body. Although The Rivulet was pub. for uso by his own congregation as a supplement to Watts, more than one half of the hymns were designed for private use only, but were not so distinguished in the work. Its publication caused one of the most bitter hymnological controversies known in the annals of modern Congregationalism. Time, however, and a criticism, broader and more just, have declared emphatically in favour of his hymns as valuable contribu-[W. G. H.] tions to cultured sacred song.

Lyte, Henry Francis, M.A., s. of Cap-tain Thomas Lyte, was b. at Ednam, near Kelso, June 1, 1793, and educated at Portora (the Royal School of Enniskillen), and at Trinity College, Dublin, of which he was a Scholar, and where he graduated in 1814. During his University course he distinguished himself by gaining the English prize poem on three occasions. At one time he had intended studying Medicine; but this he abandoned for Theology, and took Holy Orders in 1815, his first curacy being in the neighbourhood of Wexford. In 1817, he removed to Marazion, in Cornwall. There, in 1818, he underwent a great spiritual change, which shaped and influenced the whole of his after life, the immediate cause being the illness and death of a brother clergyman. Lyte says of him:—

"He died happy under the belief that though he had deeply erred, there was One whose death and sufferings would atone for his delinquencies, and be accepted for all that he had incurred; and concerning himself he adds:--

"I was greatly affected by the whole matter, and brought to look at life and its issue with a different eye than before; and I began to study my Bible, and preach in another manner than I had previously done."

From Marazion he removed, in 1819, to Lymington, where he composed his Tales on the Lord's Prayer in verse (pub. in 1826); and in 1823 he was appointed Perpetual Curate of Lower Brixham, Devon. That appointment he held until his death, on Nov. 20, 1847. His Poems of Henry Vaughan, That with a Memoir, were pub. in 1846. His own Poetical works were:

(1) Poems chiefly Religious, 1833; 2nd ed. enlarged, 1845. (2) The Spirit of the Psalms, 1834, written in the first instance for use in his own Church at Lower Brixham, and enlarged in 1836; (3) Micellaneous Poems (posthumously) in 1868. This last is a reprint of the 1846 ed. of his Poems, with "Abide with me" added. (4) Remains, 1850.

Lyte's Poems have been somewhat freely drawn upon by hymnal compilers; but by far the larger portion of his hymns found in modern collections are from his Spirit of the Psalms. In America his hymns are very popular. In many instances, however, through mistaking Miss Auber's (q. v.) Spirit of the Psalms, 1829, for his, he is credited with more than is his due. The Andover Sabbath H. Bk.,

1858, is specially at fault in this respect. The best known and most widely used of his compositions are "Abide with me, fast falls the positions are "Acide with me, tast falls the eventide"; "Far from my heavenly home"; "God of mercy, God of grace"; "Pleasant are Thy courts above"; "Praise, my soul, the King of heaven"; and "There is a safe and secret place." These and several others are annotated under their respective first lines: the rest in C. U. are:-

Lyte's versions of the Psalms are criticised in the article Psalters, English, § XVII., where their sadness, tenderness and beauty are set forth. His hymns in the Poems are characterized by the same features, and rarely swell out into joy and gladness. [J. J.]

Lyth, John, D.D., was b. at York, March 13, 1821. In 1843 he entered the Wesleyan ministry, and was sent in 1859 to Winnenden, as the first Wesleyan minister to Germany. On his return from Germany in 1865, he entered upon regular circuit work in G. Britain, and laboured at Sheffield, Hull, and other large towns until 1883, when he retired from the active work of the ministry. He d. on March 13, 1886. His principal prose work was a History of Methodism in York. In 1843 he edited and published a small volume, entitled Wild Flowers; or, a Selection of Original Poetry, edited by J. L. This little work was made up of pieces by himself and members of his family, and the late Dr. Punshon. His hymn, "There is a better world, they say "(Heaven), appeared in the Meth. Scholars H. Bk., 1870; and his "We won't give up the Sabbath" (Sunday), in the Meth. S. S. H. Bk., 1879. Each of these is an imitation of an older hymn. Dr. Lyth informed the Rev. W. F. Stevenson, editor of Hys. for Ch. and Home, 1873, that the hymn "There is a better world, they say,

"Was written at Stroud, in Gloncestershire (30th April, 1845) for the anniversary of the neighbouring infant-school at Randwich, and to an air then very opular, called 'All is Well.' That it was written for infant children will explain the simplicity of some of the expressions. It was speedily caught up, and I believe first appeared in the Home and School Hymn Book." (Blog. McAll, Robert Stephens, LL.D., S. of the Rev. Robert McAll, was b. at Plymouth, Aug. 4, 1792, and educated at Axminster, Devon; Hoxton, London; and Edinburgh University. He graduated M.A. at Edinburgh in 1813, and gave himself for a time to the study of medicine. He was for some time Chaplain of the Macclesfield School, and from 1814 to 1826 minister of St. George's Chapel in the same town. In 1827 be became minister of Mosley Street Chapel, Manchester, and held the same to his death on July 27, 1838. In 1812 he contributed to Dr. Collyer's Coll. 8 hymns, which appeared as by "R. s. M." Through one of these, "Hark! how the choral song of heaven" (The Song of Heaven), he is somewhat widely known to hymnody. His Psalms and Hymns for Public Worship, Macclesfield, J. Swinnerton, N. D. [circa 1823], was pub. without Preface, or names of authors. one of the 8 hymns contributed by him to Collyer's Coll. is therein, and there is nothing to show which are his original compositions.

McCheyne, Robert Murray, Adam McCheyne, W. S., was b. at Edinburgh, May 21, 1813, and educated at Edinburgh University. In 1835 he became Assistant at Larbert, near Stirling, and was ordained in 1836 Minister of St. Peter's Established Church, In 1839 he went to Palestine Dundee. as one of the Mission of Enquiry to the Jews from the Church of Scotland. He d. at Dundee, March 25, 1843. His hymns, a few of which were written in Palestine, appeared Songe of Zion to cheer and guide Pilgrims on their way to the New Jerusalem, By the late Rev. R. M. McCheyne.... Dundee, W. Midaleton, 1843.

These hymns were reprinted in his Memoir and Remains, edited by Dr. Andrew A. Bonar, 1844. The Songs as reprinted in 1844 number 14, and date from 1831 to 1841. The best known are, "I once was a stranger to grace and to God," and, "When this passing world is done." In addition, "Beneath Moriah's rocky side," written at the "Foot of Carmel, June, 1839" (Sent from God); "Like mist on the mountains," written "Jan. 1st, 1831" on the mountains, (Children called to Christ), and "Ten Virgins, clothed in white" (The Ten Virgins), dated 1841, are in C. U. [J. M.]

Macdonald, George, LLD., was b. at Huntly, Aberdeenshire, Dec. 10, 1824, and educated at King's College, Aberdeen, where he graduated M.A., and from which he afterwards received the honorary degree of LL.D. For a brief time he studied for the Congregational ministry at Highbury College, London, and then became the Minister of the Congregational Church at Arundel, Sussex (1850–53). He afterwards preached for a short time to a small company at Manchester and Bolton. Relinquishing the ministry, he became Lecturer on English Literature at King's College, London, and ultimately gave himself up entirely to literary work. Dr. Macdonald has acquired a great reputation by means of his works of fiction, most of which were originally contributed to magazines, and the most notable of which are David Elginbrod; Robert Falconer; Alec Forbes of Houglen; and Annals of a Quiet Neighbourhood. He was some time Editor of Good Words for the Young, and wrote England's Antiphon for Macmillan's Sunday Library. His poetical works are:

(1) Within and Without, 1855; (2) The Direcple, and Other Foems, 1860; (3) The Diarry of an Old Soul (printed for private circulation), 1867; (4) Exotics, a volume of trs. from the German (most of which first appeared in the Sunday Magasine), 1876; and (5) A Threefold Cord, 1882, part of which previously appeared in his Works of Fancy and Imagination, 10 vols., 1871.

Most of his original hymns were contributed to Hys. and Sacred Songs for Sunday Schools and Social Worship, &c., pub. by Fletcher and Tubbs, Manchester, in 1855 (2nd. ed., 1856), and of which his brother, and the Rev. G. B. Bubier (p. 190, ii.) were the editors. The original hymns, which are signed "G. Macdonald," in this collection are :-

1. A quiet heart, submissive, mock. The Meek in-herit the Earth.

2. Daylight fades away. Second Advent.
3. Father, I well may praise Thy name. Sunday

4. Father, these souls of ours have been. Blessed are the Pure in Heart.

5. If we were longing for the food. Blessed are they that Hunger and Thirst after Righteourness.

6. It was an awful hour that gave. Blessed are the Merciful.

7. Let Thy own voice, O Father, say. Blessed are they that mourn

O Son of Man, Thy Name by choice. Blessed are

2. Our Father, hear our longing prayer. Blessed are the Poor in Spirit.

Some of these hymns were afterwards revised by their author. The next two are from The Disciple, and Other Poems, 1860 :-

 O God, Whose daylight leadeth down. Evening.
 O Lord [God] of life, Thy quickening voice. Morning.

Dr. Macdonald's bymns are rich in ideas, but are touched with a mysticism which renders them a little difficult of apprehension. They are however of great value in setting forth truths rarely expressed in hymns, and are likely to grow in favour. [W. G. H.]

Macduff, John Ross, p.p., second s. of Alexander Macduff, of Bonhard, near Perth, was b. at Bonhard, May 23, 1818. After studying at the University of Edinburgh, he became in 1842 parish minister of Kettins, Forfarshire, in 1849 of St. Madoes, Perthshire, and in 1855 of Sandyford, Glasgow. He received the degree of D.D. from the University of Glasgow in 1862, and about the same time also from the University of New York. He retired from pastoral work in 1871, and now [1887] lives at Chislehurst, Kent. He has published many practical and devotional works which have attained a wide circulation. In 1857 he was appointed by the General Assembly a member of their Hymnal Committee. His 31 hymns appeared in his Altar Stones, 1853, and were also included with his later poems in his The Gates of Praise, 1876. Of these hymns the following are in C. U.:-

- 1. Christ is coming! Let creation. Second Advent.
 2. Eternal Rock! To Thee I flee. (1863.) Christ the - Rock.
 3. Everlasting arms of love. (1853.) Support in
 - 4. From Thy habitation holy. Whitsuntide.

Hasten, Lord, that morn of glory. Second Advent.
 Jesus wept! Those tears are over. (1853.) The raising of Lasaruss.
 O do not, blessed Lord, depart. Christ's presence derired.

8. Where shall I look for holy calm. (1853.) Pas-9. Why should I murmur or repine? Resignation.

Of these hymns those dated 1853 are parts only of Dr. Macduff's originals.

Macgill, Hamilton Montgomerie, D.D., youngest s. of Thomas Macgill, was b. Mar. 10, 1807, at Catrine, Ayrshire. After studying at the University of Glasgow (which conferred upon him the degree of D.D. in 1870), he became in 1837 joint minister of Duke St. United Presb. Church, Glasgow. In 1840 he removed with a portion of his congregation to a new church in Montrose Street. He became, in 1858, Home Mission Secretary of the United Presbyterian Church, and in 1868 Foreign Mission Secretary. He d. June 3, 1880, at Paris, while on his way to recruit his health in the South of France. As a member of the Hymnal Committee of the U.P. Church in 1870-76, he contributed to their Presbyterian Hymnal, 1876, 5 trs. from the Latin (Nos. 29, 34, 95, 101, 299) and 1 from the Greek (No. 346). These he subsequently included in his Songs of the Christian Creed and Life, 1876, a volume containing 6 trs. from the Greek; 68 from the Latin; and 27 trs. from English into Latin verse, in all 101 (No. 101 being by himself). The introduction includes careful and interesting biographical and critical notices of the authors whose hymns are included; and the texts are given in Latin, Greek, and English.

Latin, Greek, and English.

Many of the translations are exceedingly good, and stand in the very first rank of modern English versions—their gracefulness and ease making them seem more like original English hymns than translations into Latin the high compliment of mistaking one of them for a medieval hymn. In the edition of 1879, Dr. Macgilli made a number of verbal alterations, added two renderings from the Latin ("Jam moceta quiesce querela" and "O line qui mortalibus"), one from the Bohemian, one from the Spanish, and a Latin version of "Art thou weary, art thou languid?" Twenty-two of his trs. from the Latin and Greek had appeared in the Javentle Missionary Magazine of the U. P. Church between 1868 and 1873. His trs. are gradually coming into somewhat prominent use.

Mackay, Margaret, was b in 1802, and the only daughter of Captain Robert Mackay, of Hedgefield, Inverness. She was married in 1820 to Major William Mackay, of the 68th Light Infantry (afterwards Lt. Colonel) a distinguished officer who d. in 1845. Mrs. Mackay d. at Cheltenham, Jan. 5, 1887. In addition to various prose works Mrs. Mackay pub. Thoughts Redeemed; or Lays of Leisure Hours, 1854, which contained 72 original hymns and poems. Of these, "Asleep in Jesus! blessed sleep," is noted at p. 86, ii. [J. M.]

Mackellar, Thomas, was b. in New York, Aug. 12, 1812. At the age of 14 he entered the printing establishment of Harper Brothers. In 1833 he removed to Philadelphia and joined the type-foundry firm of Johnson & Smith, as proof reader. He subsequently became a foreman, and then a partner in that firm, which has been known from 1860 as Mackellar, Smiths, and Jordan, type-founders of Philadelphia. His publications include

The American Printer, 1866, a prose work, and | the following in verse:-

(1) Droppings from the Heart, 1844; (2) Run's Fortnight Ramble, 1847; (3) Lines for the Gentle and Lowing, 1853; (4) Edymes Atwers Times, 1872. The last contains some of his byuns. (5) Hymns and a few Metrical Palms, Phila. 1883 (71 Hymns, 3 psalms), 2nd ed. 1887 (84 byuns, 3 psalms).

Those of his hymns in C. U. include:—

1. At the door of mercy sighing. Lent. Pub. in his Rhymes Atween Times, 1872, as, "Long of restful peace forsaken," and again in Dr. Hitchcock's Hys. & Songs of Praiss, 1874, as "At the door of mercy sighing."

2. Bear the burden of the present. Resignation. Written in 1852, and pub. in his Lines for the Gentle and Loving, 1853; and Lyra Sacra Americana, 1868. Part of this hymn, beginning "All unseen the Master walketh," is in C. U. in G. Britain.

3. Book of grace, and book of glory. Holy Scripture. Written in 1843. It was given in the S. School Union Coll., 1860, and his Hys. and a few M. Psalme, &c., 1883, and a few collections, including Allon's Children's Worship, 1878, &c.

4. Draw nigh to the Holy. Jesus, the soul's Refuge. In Sumner's Songs of Zion, 1851, and the Lyra Sacra Americana, 1868, in 5 st. of 8 l.

5. Father, in my life's young morning. A Child's Prayer. Written in 1841.

6. In the vineyard of our Father. Work for God. Written in 1845. It was given in the Hys. for Church & Home, Philadelphia, 1860, and other collections.

7. Jesus! when my soul is parting. Continued presence of Jesus desired. Written in 1848, and included in Lyra Sacra Americana, 1868, in 4 st. of 6 l., and entitled "Jesus first and last."

8. There is a land immortal. Heaven. Mr. Mackellar says that this hymn was written

"One evening as a fancy suddenly struck me of a religious nature, I laid askie the work in hand, and pursuing the new idea, I at once produced the hymn, 'There is a land immortal,' and sent it to the editor [of Neale's Gasette], who referred to it as a religious poem from 'Tam,' my assumed name, under which I had already acquired considerable notorlety. This was in 1845. It was widely copied, and afterwards inserted in a volume published by me." Duffield's English Hymns, &c., 1886, p. 551. ac., 1886, p. 551.

Mr. Mackellar is an Elder of the Presbyterian Church. FF. M. B.

Maclagan, William Dalrymple, D.D., a. of David Maclagan, M.D., was b. in Edinburgh, June 18, 1826. In early life he entered the army, and served for some time in India. Retiring with the rank of lieutenant, he entered St. Peter's College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. 1856 and M.A. in 1860. Taking Holy Orders, he was curate of St. Baviour's, Paddington, 1856-58, and St. Stephen's, Marylebone, 1858-60. He then became Secretary to the London Diocesan Church Building Society, from 1860 to 1865; curate of Enfield, 1865-69; Rector of Newington, 1869-75; and Vicar of Kensington, 1875-78. He was also Hon. Chaplain to the Queen, and Prebendary of Reculverland in St. Paul's Cathedral, London. In 1878 he was consecrated Bishop of Lichfield. Bp. Maclagan's work has been mainly of a practical character, and his publications are few. The few hymns which he has written have been received with great favour, and create a desire for more of the same kind and quality. following are in C. U.:--

1. Again the trumpet sounds. Missions. Written about 1870. Appeared in the H. A. & M. series of Hys. for Mission Services. 1871.

8. Be still, my soul, for God is near. Holy Communion. Part II. is "O Body, broken for my sake." Written about 1873 for St. Mary's, Newington. In Thring's Coll.,

3. Holy Spirit, Lord of love. Confirmation. Written about 1873, and pub. in Mrs. C. Brock's Children's H.

Bk., 1884. It is finished, blessed Jesus [Saviour]. Good ay. Written for H. A. & M., 1876. In several col-Priday. lections.

5. Lord, when Thy Kingdom comes, remember me, Good Priday. Written for the 1875 ed. of H. A. & M. Sometimes given in two parts: Pt. H. beginning "Lord, when with dying lips my prayer is said."

6. The Saints of God their conflict part. All Saints. First pub. in Charto Bells, 1870; and again in the S. P. C. K. Charto Bell.

C. K. Church Hys., 1871.
7. What thanks and praise to Thee we owe. St. Luke. Written for the 1875 ed. of H. A. & M.

These hymns are of more than usual merit, being characterized by great simplicity, tenderness, and fervour. The special season or purpose is clearly indicated, and its lessons earnestly enforced.

Macleod, Norman, p.p. s. of Dr. Norman Macleod, was b. at Campbelton, Argyleshire, June 3, 1812. He studied at the Universities of Glasgow and Edinburgh, then went to Germany, and subsequently completed his course at the University of Glasgow, from which, in 1858, he received the degree of D.D. In 1838 he was appointed parish minister of Loudoun; Ayrshire, in 1843 of Dalkeith, and in 1851 of the Barony, Glasgow. He became one of the Queen's Chap-lains in 1841, and in 1860 the editor of Good Words, which he continued to edit till his death. He was one of the most influential ministers in the Established Church of Scotland, and was Moderator of the General Assembly in 1869. He d. at Glasgow, June 16, and was buried at Campsie, June 20, 1872, His works are numerous and popular. He was appointed a member of the Assembly's Hymnal Committee in 1854 and 1855. His best known hymn, "Trust in God, and do the right" (Right Doing), appeared in January 1857, in The Edinburgh Christian Magazine, of which he was for some years the editor. [J. M.]

Madan, Judith, née Cowper, was the only daughter of the Hon. Spencer Cowper, the wife of Colonel Martin Madan (d. 1736), and the mother of Martin Madan, and of Dr. Spencer Madan, sometime Bishop of Peterborough. She had some repute as a writer of verse. Her Burial Hymn, "In this world of sin and sorrow," appeared in the 1763 Appendix to her son's Ps. & Hys. in 2 st. of 81. It has been repeated in several collections in G. Britain and America, and is given without alteration in Lyra Brit. 1867, p. 659. We have failed to ascertain the date of Mrs. Madan's birth or death. [J. J.]

Madan, Martin, s. of Colonel Martin Madan, and brother of Dr. Spencer Madan, sometime Bishop of Peterborough, was b. in 1726. He was to have qualified for the Bar, but through a sermon by J. Wesley on the words "Prepare to meet thy God," the whole current of his life was changed. After some difficulty he received Holy Orders, and subsequently founded and became chaplain of the Look Hospital, Hyde Park Corner. He was popular as a preacher, and had no inconsiderable reputation as a musical composer. He ceased preaching on the publication of his work Thelyphthora, in which he advocated the practice of polygany. He d. in 1790. He pub. A Commentary on the Articles of the Church of England; A Treatise on the Christian Faith, &c., and :—

A Collection of Psalms and Hymns Extracted from Various Authors, and published by the Reverend Mr. Madan. London, 1760.

This Coll. contained 170 hymns thrown together without order or system of any kind. In 1763 he added an Appendix of 24 hymns. This Coll., referred to in this Dictionary as Madan, and Madan's Ps. & Hys., had for many years a most powerful influence on the hymnody of the Church of England. Nearly the whole of its contents, together with its extensively altered texts, were reprinted in numerous hymn-books for nearly one hundred years. At the present time many of the great hymns of the last century are in use as altered by him in 1760 and 1763. Although several hymns have been attributed to him, we have no evidence that he ever wrote one. His hymnological labours were employed in altering, piccing, and expanding the work of others. And in this he was most successful.

Macrentes oculi spargite lachrymas. Passiontide. This hymn, which sometimes begins "Moerentes oculi," is the hymn at Vespers in the Office of the Passion of our Lord Jesus Christ, which has been added to the Roman Breviary since 1740 (see "Aspice infami Deus"). It is in the Roman Breviary, Bologna, 1827, Pars Hiemalis, Supplement, p. 270, in 7 st. Tr. as:—

Now let us sit and weep. By E. Caswall. 1st pub. in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 63, in 7 st. of 4 l.; and again in his Hys. & Poems, 1873, p. 35. In the Hymnary, 1872, it is altered to "Come let us sit and weep."

Another tr. is:—
Ye weeping eyes, ahed briny tears. J. Wallace, 1874.

[J. M.]

Mag ich Unglück nicht wiederstehn. [Gross and Consolation.] Wackernagel, iii. pp. 118-121, gives four versions from a Nürnberg broadsheet, circa 1526, the Erfurt G. B., 1531, &c. The text in the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 634, follows that in the 1531. It is in 3 st. of 11 1, the two initial letters of st. i, ii. and the initial letter of st. iii., giving the name Maxio.

In the Nürmberg broadsheet it is called "Queen Maria of Hungary's hymn," and so in the Magdeburg G. B., 1534, and many other later collections, it is ascribed to her. She was sister of the Emperor Charles V., and wife of King Ludwig H., of Hungary, who d. in 1526, ahe surviving till 1558. Both Wackernagel, and Lauxmann in Koch, vill. 528, think it was merely adopted by her as her hymn of consolation, and may have been written for her by Martin Luther. Had Luther written it, however, it is hardly likely that in the hymn-books edited by him or for him from Klug's G. B., 1528, to Babst's G. B., 1545, it would always have appeared without his name.

Babst's G. B., 1939, a without his name.

The tra. are:—(1) Can I my fate no more withstand, by Miss Winkworth, 1868, p. 178. (2) I cannot ill suppress, or quell, by Dr. G. Walker, 1860, p. 47.

Magdeburg, Joachim, was b. circa 1525 at Gardelegen in the Altmark. He matriculated at the University of Wittenberg, April, 1544, and in 1546 was appointed rector of the school at Schöningen, near Helmstädt, Brunswick. He became pastor of Dannenberg in Lüneburg in 1547, but being unable to exist on his slender income resigned in 1549, and in the same year became pastor of Salzwedel in the Altmark. But refusing to adopt the Roman ceremonies prescribed by the Act of Interim he was, in 1552 (Easter S., April 17) banished from the Electorate of Brandenburg. About May, 1552, by the influence of Johann Aepinus, Superintendent of Hamburg, he was appointed disconus of St. Peter's Church in Hamburg, and there became acquainted with Flacius Illyricus [Matthias Flach, Extreme Lutheran, church historian, &c., d. at Frankfurt-am-Main, Murch 11, 1575]. After the death of Aepinus, May 13, 1553, Paulus von Eitzen, his successor, was not so friendly, and when, during the controversy in 1558 regarding Holy Communion, Magdeburg pub. a tractate without submitting it to the revision of Eitzen, the latter obtained the removal of Magdeburg from his post, May 25, 1558. He then went to Magdeburg to help his friend Flacius as one of the compilers of the Church history known as the Magdeburg Centuries. Shortly thereafter he was appointed paster of Ossmanstedt in Thuringia; but, as a follower of Flacius, was dispossessed in 1562. He then stayed for longer or shorter periods with Count von Mansfeld, Baron von Schönburg and others, until, after the Emperor Maximilian II. had once more permitted Protestant prenchers in Austria, he was, at Count von Mansfeld's recommendation, appointed by the commandant of Raab in Hungary as regimental chaplain at Bash in 1564, and, after his house there was burnt, at the castle of Gräfenworth (east of Krems), to the German-speaking Austrian troops. There he had to contend with the machinations of the Roman clergy, and after joining with nineteen others of the Evangelical clergy in Austria in pre-senting a Confession of Faith to an Austrian Diet (Landtag), was compelled to leave; and in 1571 we find him living at Erfurt. In 1581 he was preacher at Efferding in Austria; but in 1583 was expelled as an adherent of Flacius. His later history is unknown (Koch, i. 446; Allg. Deutsche Biog. xx., 53, &c.). Wackernagel, iii. pp. 1035-1042, gives five pieces under his name. The only one tr. into English is:

Wer Gott vertraut, hat wohl gehaut. Trust in God. Founded on Ps. lxxiii. 25, 26. Wackernagel, iii. p. 1042, prints st. i. from Magdeburg's Christliche und tröstliche Tischgesenge, mit vier Stimmen, Erfurt, 1572 (where it is the hymn for Saturday evening); and thinks it probable, though not certain, that it is an original by Magdeburg. In S. Calvisius's Harmonia cantionum ecclesiasticarum, Leipzig, 1597, st. ii. and iii., are first found. Lauxmann in Koch, viii., 373, thus sums up the evidence:—

"From these circumstances it seems evident that the hymn originally consisted only of the first stanza, but that Magdeburg's authorship, in opposition to other claims [it has been ascribed to J. Kolross and to J. Mühlmann] is beyond doubt." The text of 1597 is repeated in Wackernagel, iii. p. 1043, and the Uno. L. S., 1851, No. 642, in 3 st. of 8 (or 12) lines. Tr. as:—

1. Who trusts in God, his work shides. By A. T. Russell, of st. i., ii., as No. 230, in his Ps. 4

- 2. Whe pats his trust in God most just. A good and full tr., by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Gov., 2nd Ser., 1858, p. 192, and her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 145. Repeated, slightly altered, in the Pennsylvania Lath. Church Bk., 1868.
- 2. Who trusts in God a strong abode. A good but free tr. by Dr. B. H. Kennedy, as No. 486, in his Hymn. Christ., 1863, repeated in J. L. Porter's Coll., 1876, and others. In Morrell and How's Ps. & Hys., 1864, No 208, it was considerably altered by Bp. How, and this form is repeated in the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871; Thring's Coll., 1882, and others; the Bapt. Hymnal, 1879, omitting the last four lines, and ascribing it, in error, to M. Luther.

Another tr. is: "Who lives in God has safe abode."
By Dr. H. Mills, 1856, p. 244.

Maglorianus, Santolius. [Santeiil, Claude de.]

Magnae Deus potentiae. [Thursday.] This hymn on the Fifth Day of the Creation has frequently been ascribed to St. Ambrose. It has many parallels in the 6th and 7th chapters of his Hexaemeron, but is not essigned to him by the Benedictine editors. In an 8th cent. Ms. at Trier cited by Mone, i. p. 372, it is given as the hymn at Vespers on Thursday, and this is the use of the Sarum, York, Roman, and other Breviaries. It is found in three Mss. of the 11th cent. in the British Museum (Vesp. D. xii. f. 21; Jul. A. vi. f. 28 b; Harl. 2961, f. 223 b); in three Mss. of the 11th cent. at St. Gall, Nos. 387, 413, 414; in the Lat. Hys. of the Anglo-Saxon Ch., 1851, p. 25, printed from an 11th cent. Ms. at Durham (B. iii. 32, f. 8). It is also in Daniel, i., No. 53; iv. p. 52, from a Rheinau Ms. of the 10th cent., and in Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865.

Translations in C. U.:-

- 1. O God, Who hast given. By Card. Newman, pub. in his Verses on Religious Subjects, 1853, p. 100 (ed. 1868, p. 247). It is included in the Marquess of Bute's Roman Breviary in English, 1879. In W. J. Biew's The Church Hy. and Tune Bk., 1852-5, it was given as "Thou God of all power," and in this form it was repeated in Rice's Sel. therefrom, 1870.
- 2. Lord of all power! at whose command. By E. Caswall, in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 26, and his Hys. and Poems, 1873, p. 17. In the People's H., 1867; and the Hymnary, 1872.
- 3. Almighty God, Who from the flood. By J. M. Neale, in the enlarged ed. of the H. Noted, 1854. It is repeated in the Hymner, 1882.

Translations not in C. U. :-

- O God, Whose watery stores supply. Primer,
 God of all nature, great and good. Bp. Mant,
- That God, Whose awful power can take. Hymnotum Anglicanum, 1844.
 O God of mighty power, Lord. J. A. B. Hope,
- 1844.
 5. God, Who in wondrous might. W. J. Copeland,

6. Almighty God, Whose sovereign will. J. D. Chambers, 1857.
7. Great God of power, at Thy command. J. Wallace, 1874.

Magnificat. Metrical paraphrases of the Magnificat are not numerous, and are very rarely used. In the 1560 edition of the Old Version (§ iv., v., q.v.), a version appeared in 10 st. of 4 l., st. i. of which reads:—

"My soul doth magnify the Lord, My spirit evermore Rejoiceth in the Lord, my God, Who is my Saviour."

This was repeated in subsequent editions of the Old Version, and was for some time the authorized metrical form of the Magnificat in use in the Church of England.

2. The New Version by Tate and Brady also contained a metrical paraphrase by Tate, which in time superseded that of the Old Version in public worship. In the Suppl. of 1702 it appeared in 20 lines, beginning:—

"My soul and spirit, fill'd with joy My God and Saviour praise, Whose goodness did from poor estate His humble handmaid raise."

This version continued in use until the New Version was swept away by the modern hymnbook.

3. The history of the paraphrase in the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, 1781, which is Tate's version rewritten by W. Cameron, is given under "My soul and spirit filled with joy."

4. Very few of the versifiers of the Psalms have added a paraphrase of this Canticle to their version of the Psalter. Dr. John Patrick is an exception. His rendering of the Magnificat in his Ps. of David in Metre, 1691, begins:—

"My soul doth magnify the Lord,
Transports of joy my spirits raise;
And God my Saviour shall be
The subject of my song of praise."

5. The version of the Magnificat by Dr. W. J. Irons, in his Ps. & Hys. for the Church, 1875-83, is a good rendering, and more in accordance with modern tastes than the above. It begins:—

"My soul doth magnify the Lord, And God my Saviour sing; His mighty power and grace hath wrought For me this wondrous thing."

6. Other versions of the Magnificat are annotated in full in this Dictionary, and may be found through the Index of Seasons and Subjects at the end. Its use, however, in any form except that in the Book of Common Prayer is very limited.

Major, Johann. [Ratilius, M.]

Maker, Upholder, Ruler! Thee. J. Montgomery. [Doxology.] Written for the Sheffield Sunday School Union, Whitsuntide gathering, April, 1830, and first printed on a fly-sheet for the occasion. [M. MS.] In 1836 it was included in the Cong. H. Bk., No. 104, and again in Montgomery's Original Hys., 1853, No. 353, in 4 st. of 4 l. [J. J.]

Malan, Henri Abraham César. The family of Malan traces its origin to the valleys of Piedmont. A branch of it settled at Mérindol, in Dauphiné, but was driven from France by the persecutions that followed the Revccation of the Edict of Nantes. Pierre Malan, after seeing his sister fall a victim to persecution, left Mérindol (1714), and arrived at Geneva (1722). Henri Abraham César Malan was b. at Geneva in 1787. After an education at the College, he went to Marseilles, with the intention of learning business: but, soon after, entered the Academy at Geneva, as a pre-paration for the ministry, to which he was ordained in 1810. He had been appointed one of the masters at the College in the previous year. The National Church of Geneva was at that time almost Unitarian, and Malan's convictions were in accord with it. But the great movement known as the Reveil, of which the first products were the dissident church of Bourg de Four and at a later date that founded by Malan himself, and which finally imbued the whole Swiss Church with its spirit, was silently preparing itself. The germ of the movement may be traced in the Societé des Amis (1810), of which Empeytaz and A. Bost were leaders; and in Malan's independent attainment to the doctrines of the Divinity of the Saviour and the free gifts of salvation through Him (1816). But the human agency, which gave it force, and determined its Calvinistic direction, was the visit of Robert Haldane (in the autumn of 1816), to whom not only these pioneers of the movement, but F. Monod, E. Rieu, Guers, Gonthier, Merle d'Aubigne, and others, always pointed as their spiritual father. Empeytaz and others sought to attain enfranchisement by the establishment of the "petite Eglise of Bourg de Four." Malan wished to reform the national Church from within : and a sermon at Geneva, which brought on him the obloquy of the professors and theologians that composed his audience, and which Haldane characterized as a republication of the Gosel, was his first overt act (Jan. 19, 1817). But the opposing forces were far too strong for him. The Venerable Company excluded him from the pulpits, and achieved his dismissal from his regentship at the College (1818). In 1820 he built a chapel (Chapelle du Temoignage) in his garden, and obtained the licence of the State for it, as a separatist place of worship. In 1823 he was formally deprived of his status as a minister of the national Church. The seven years that succeeded were the palmy days of the little chapel. Strangers, especially from England, mingled with the overflowing Swiss congregation. But (in 1830) a secession to Bourg de Four, and then the foundation of the Oratoire and the Société Evangélique, which in 1849 absorbed the congregation of Bourg de Four under the title of the Eglise Écangélique, thinned more and more the number of his adherents. His burning zeal for the conversion of souls found a larger outlet in long tours of evangelization, subsidized by religious friends, in his own land and Belgium and France, and also in Scotland and England, where he had friends among many religious bodies, and where he preached to large congregations. The distinguishing characteristic of these tours was his dealing with individuals. On the steamboat or the diligence, in the mountain walk, at the hotel, no opportunity was lost. On one occasion an old man whom he visited drew from under his pillow a copy of his great hymn-book, Chants de Sion, 1841, and told him how he had prayed to see the author of it before he died.

It is as the originator of the modern hymnmovement in the French Reformed Church that Malan's fame cannot perish. [See French Hymnody, § v.] The spirit of his hymns is perpetuated in the analysis of Christian experience, the never-wearied delineation of the hopes and fears, the joys and sorrows of the believer's soul, which are still the staple of French Protestant hymns. To this was added, in Malan himself, a marked didactic tone, necessitated by the great struggle of the Réveil for Evangelical doctrine; and an emphatic Calvinism, expressing itself with all the despondency of Newton and Cowper, but, in contrast with them, in bright assurance, peace and gladness. French criticism has pronounced his hymns unequal, and full of literary defects: but their unaffected freshness and fervent sincerity are universally allowed. In the Chants de Sion, hymns 20, " Hosanna! Béni soit"; 165, "Mon cœur joyeux, plein d'espérance"; 199, "Du Rocher de Jacob"; 200, "Agneau de Dieu"; 239, "Trois fois Je-hovah," are in every Protestant French hymnbook; and several others are very widely used.

Besides his hymns Malan produced numberless tracts and pamphlets on the questions in dispute between the National and Evangelical Churches and the Church of Rome, as well as articles in the Record and in American reviews. He was a man of varied acquirements. His hymns were set to his own melodies. He was an artist, a mechanic: his little workshop had its forge, its carpen-ter's bench, its printing press. To the end of his life his strong Calvinism, and his dread of mere external union in church government, kept him distinct from all movements of church comprehension, though freely joining in communion with all the sections of Evangelical thought in Geneva and Scotland. At one time there seemed a prospect of his even rejoining the national Church, which had driven him from her. One of his greatest joys was the meeting of the Evangelical Alliance at Geneva (1861). He left no sect: one of his latest orders was the demolition of his decayed chapel, in which he had preached for 43 years. He d. at Vandœuvres, near Geneva, in 1864, leaving a numerous family, one of whom, the Rev. S. C. Malan, D.D., sometime Vicar of Broadwindsor, is well known as a linguist and a theologian of the English Church. [For further details see La Vis et les Travaux de César Malan, D.D., par un de ses fils. To English readers Malan is chiefly known as a hymn-writer through trs. of his "Non, ce n'est pas mourir" (q.v.): "It is not death to die," &c. About a dozen of his hymns appear in a translated form in the Friendly Visitor for 1826, and two full selections are noted at p. 392, i. [French Hymnody, [H. L. B.] p. 389, i., § v.]

Man of Sorrows and acquainted. C. Gregor and C. I. Latrobe. [Passiontide.] This hymn is marked by the Rev. J. A. Eberle in his notes in the Moravian Messenger for June, 1868, as C. Gregor, 1759, and

C. I. Latrobe, 1802. Mr. Miller (Singers and Songs, p. 231) quotes Mr. Latrobe as saying:-

"The late venerable Bishop of the Brethren's Church, Christian Gregor, was the principal author and compiler of the following canatas, of which he kindly furnished ne with a copy. It has been my desire and study to preserve all the ideas contained in the original, and I hope, on comparison, it will be found that I have omitted few, if any, that are essential; but I did not always confine myself to words, or to the same number of

The original German has not been traced. In English the hymn was given as No. 1011 in the 1808 Suppl. to the Moravian H. Bk. of in the 1898 Suppl. to the Mordolan H. Bh. of 1801 (1886, No. 72), in 6 st. of 8 l. It was adopted by Montgomery in his Christian Psalmist, 1825, and has since appeared in the Cong. H. Bh., 1836; N. Cong., 1859; Bapt. Ps. & Hys., 1858; Allon's Cong. Psalmist Hyl., 1886, and others. [J. M.]

Mane prima Sabbati. [Easter.] This sequence has sometimes been ascribed to Adam of St. Victor, but Gautier in his 1881 ed. of Adam's Ocurres poétiques, p. 236, does not print the text, and says that this ascription is false, for the piece is earlier than Adam and not in his style. Among the British Museum Mss. it is found in one of the 12th cent. (Reg. 2 B. iv. f. 101 b); in another, c. 1199 (Calig. A. xiv. f. 69 b); in a third of the end of the 18th cent. (Add. 12194, f. 123 b), Ato. It is also in the Sarum (Bodleian Ma. Barlow, 5, c. 1370, pp. 216, 364); Hereford (Ms. in the Bodleian, c. 1370), York (Ms. in the Bodleian, c. 1390); Paris (early 14th cent. Ms. in the Brit. Mus. Add. 16905, f. 144 b), and other Missals. Morel, p. 45, cites it as in a 12th cent, us. at Einsiedeln. The text is also in Mone, No. 168; Daniel, ii. p. 255; Kehrein, No. 93, &c. The Sarum and some other Missals give it also for St. Mary Magdalene. Tr. as :-

None of these versions appear to be in English C.U. They are noted under the first lines of the German wherever possible.

Mant, Richard, D.D. s. of the Rev. Richard Mant, Master of the Grammar School, Southampton, was b. at Southampton, Feb. 12, 1776. He was educated at Winchester and Trinity, Oxford (B.A. 1797, M.A. 1799). At Oxford he won the Chancellor's prize for an English essay: was a Fellow of Oriel, and for some time College Tutor. On taking Holy Orders he was successively curate to his father, then of one or two other places, Vicar of Coggeshall, Essex, 1810; Domestic Chaplain to the Archbishop of Canterbury, 1813, Rector of St. Botolph, Bishopsgate, London, 1816, and East Horsley, 1818, Bishop of Killalce, 1820, of Down and Connor, 1823, and of Dromore, 1842. He was also Bampton Lecturer in 1811. He d. Nov. 2, 1848. His prose works were numerous, and although now somewhat obsolete, they were useful and popular in their day. His poetical works, and other works which contain poetical pieces.

Bp. Mant is known chiefly through his translations from the Latin. He was one of the earliest of the later translators, I. Williams and J. Chandler being his contemporaries. Concerning his translations, Mr. Ellerton, in his Notes on Church Hymns, 1881, p. xlviii. (folio ed.), says justly that :-

"Mant had little knowledge of hymns, and merely took "mant had nittle knowledge on hymnis, and morely kook those of the existing Roman Breviary as he found then: consequently he had to omit many, and so to alter others that they have in fact become different hymnis: nor was he always happy in his manipulation of them. But his book has much good taste and devout feeling, and has fallen into undeserved neglect."

His metrical version of the Psalms [See Psalters, English, § xvii] has yielded very few pieces to the hymnals, the larger portion of his original compositions being from his work of 1837. The most popular of these is "Come Holy Ghost, my soul inspire, Spirit of," &c., and its altered forms; "Bright the vision that delighted," and its altered form of "Round the Lord in glory seated;" and "For all Thy saints, O Lord." His hymns in C. U. which are not annotated under their respective first lines are :-

- i. From his Metrical Version of the Psalme. 1824.
- 1. God, my King, Thy might confessing. Ps. &viv.
 2. Lord, to Thee I make my vows. Ps. zzviii.

When all Bp. Mant's trs. original hymns, and versions of the Psalms in C. U. are taken into account, it is found that he is somewhat strongly represented in modern hymnody.

March, Henry, was b. at Barnstaple, Aug. 29, 1791, and educated for the Congregational ministry at Homerton College under Dr. J. Pye-Smith. He held pastorates at Bungay, Mill Hill, Colchester, and Newbury. He d. in London, July 28, 1869. His pub. works are:-

(1) Sabbaths at Home, or Help to their right Improve-ment, Founded on the 42nd and 43rd Pealms, London, 1820; 2nd ed. 1824. This work consists of Essays on 1820; 2nd ed. 1824. This work consists of Essays on religious subjects, followed by Reflections and Hymns. (2) Hymns for the Closet of the Christian Minister, Lond., 1823. (3) The Early Life of Christ an Example for the Young.

Of his hymns in C. U. the best ere :-

1. Eternal God, eternal King. Advaction of the Father. In Conder's Cong. H. Bk., 1836, and several modern collections, especially in America.

2. O send Thy light, Thy truth, my God. Public Worthip. Appeared in his Subbaths at Home, &c., 1820, p. 227, where it is given at the close of an Essay on Father Market Consecrated to God." It was repeated in the Leeds H. Bk., 1853, and later hymnals. [W. G. H.]

Marckant, John. [Old Version, §§ IX., X.] Mardley, John. [Old Version, §§ IX., X.]

Maria mater Domini. [The Assumption of the B. V. M.] In the Durham Hymnarium of the 11th cent. (f. 32b) this is given as a hymn "on the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary." It is also in two mss. of the 11th cent. in the British Museum (Vesp. D. xii. f. 88; Harl. 2961, f. 231 b). The printed text is in the Surtees Society's Lat. Hys. of the Anglo-Saxon Ch., 1851, p. 109. Daniel, i. No. 387, prints only the first stanza. Tr. as:—

Mary, Mother of thy [the] Lord. This tr. was given anonymously in the 1860 Appendix to the II. Noted, No. 172; and again in Skinner's Daily Service Hymnal, 1864. [J. M.]

Mark the soft-falling snow. P. Doddridge. [Natural things emblematical of things Spiritual. 1 st pub. in J. Orton's posthumous ed. of Doddridge's Hymns, 1755, No. 111, in 4 st. of 8 l., and headed "Fruitful Showers, Emblems of the salutary Effects of the Gospel." In that and subsequent editions to 1839, the opening lines read:—

" Mark the soft-falling Snow, And the diffusive Rain;
To Heav'n, from whence it fell,
It turns not back again."

In 1839 J. D. Humphreys, in reprinting the Hymns from the original mss., corrected from the MS. of this hymn the grammatical error of "it" for "they," in these lines, and drew special attention thereto in the Preface to the Hymns, as evidence of his charge against Job Orton as a careless editor. Amongst modern collections the text of 1755 is retained in the Scottish Evang. Union Hymnal, 1878, and that of the original as. in Martineau's Hymns, 1840.

Marot, Clement, was b. at Cahors about 1497. His education there and at Paris gave him a fair knowledge of Latin, Italian, and to some extent Greek. He possessed some knowledge of music, and played on the spinet and composed tunes for some of his chansons. Though destined at first for the law, he was placed at sixteen as a page in the service of Nicolas de Neufville. At twentyone he became valet de chambre to Marguerite de Valois. The passionate admiration he conceived for her turned his thoughts to the Huguenot doctrines, which were then first impressing themselves on her: and his biting ridicule of the vices of the monks, and the disorders of the Church, united with frequent confessions of simple faith, were the occasion of all the misfortunes that beset his after life. He was wounded and taken prisoner at Pavia with Francis I. After his return to France he married (1526?). About the same period he succeeded, at his father's death, to the post of valet de chambre to Francis. In 1535, an outbreak of persecution obliged him to fly from France to Ferrara, where for a few weeks he must have met Calvin. From Ferrara he went to Venice; and was thence, through the influence of Marguerite of Navarre, recalled to France by the king. The statement that he recanted his Huguenot errors at Lyong (1536) rests on no sufficient evidence. 1537-9 he completed the translation of 30 psalms, which were circulated at court in Ms. They became the fashion of the hour: and the king, Catherine de Medicis, the Dauphiu, Diane de Poitiers, and the court gentlemen and ladies sang them to ballad tunes. Charles V. rewarded Marot for a copy of them, with 200 golden doubloons. The publication of these psalms (1542) brought on him the wrath of the Sorbonne, and he fled again; first to Savoy, then to Geneva. There, encouraged by Francis and by Calvin, he completed his 50 Psalms, published with a Dedication to The Ladies of France (1543). The stern rigidity of Geneva must have been stifling to his gay mercurial nature. The only authentic incident of his story that has come down is the prosecution of Bonivard for playing "tric-trae" with him. His prosecution for adultery is one of the malicious inventions of his enemies. He left Geneva (1543) for Savoy, and then Turin, where he d. in August 1544

The poetry of Marot is composed of short pieces—ballads, rondcaux, epigrams, and rhymed episties—full of grace and delicacy, gaiety, wit, and sattre. He both enriched and simplified the lyrical style. The Psalms—his matured work—exhibit an access of cignity and stateliness. His many-sided character has suffered from the prejudices of Catholic and Huguenot. To his enemies he is a dissolute heretic, to Bayle a professional poet who gave his talents easily to either side, to Saint-Marc Girardin a man penetrated by the wide-spread disgust at the corruptions of the Church, but not of deep Huguenot conviction, to others a child of the classic learning and Free Thought of the Renaissance. To the last no doubt he never lost his courtier habit; but there is no proof of his licentiousness, except in his 'Jeunesse Abusée,' to which he often alludes; his coarseness is abundantly paralleled in the language of the time: and the close analysis of his life and his writings by M. Douen and Mr. Henry Morley attests the existence of a base of real religion of which the 'Trente Pseaumee' were a distinguished fruit.

Marot, Samuel, D.D., was b. at Magdeburg, Dec. 11, 1770, and studied at the University of Frankfurt a. Oder. On July 1, 1798, he was ordained as preacher to the Orphanage (Friedrichs-Waisenhaus) at Berlin. In 1808 he was appointed preacher at the Neue Kirche; in 1816 superintendent of the Re-formed Churches in Berlin; and also became Consistorial ath in 1830, and Oberconsistorialrath in 1846 (D.D. from University of Berlin, 1846). He d. at Berlin, Oct. 12, 1865 (Alig. Deutsche Biog., xx. 404, &c.). He was one of the Committee which compiled the Berlin G. B., 1829. The only hymn known by him is :-

. Von des Himmels Thron. Confirmation. Contributed to the Berlin $G.\,B.$, 1829, as No. 350, in 5 st. of 5 l. Its excellence and simplicity have gained it a place in many recent German collections, as the Berlin $G.\,L.\,S.$, ed.

Marriott, John, M.A., s. of R. Marriott, D.D., Rector of Cottesbach, near Lutterworth, was b. at Cottesbach, in 1780, and educated at Rugby, and Christ Church, Oxford. He was the second of two who obtained honours in the schools in 1802, the first year in which there was a public examination for honours at Oxford. He was also Student of Christ Church, and for about two years a private tutor in the family of the Duke of Buccleuch. The Duke presented him to the Rectory of Church Lawford, Warwickshire. This he retained to his death, although his wife's health compelled him to reside in Devonshire, where he was successively curate of St. Lawrence and other parishes in Exeter, and of Broadclyst, near Exeter, where he d. March 31, 1825. His published works include a vol. of Sermons which he issued in 1818, and a posthumous vol. of Sermons, pub. by his sons in 1838. His hymns were never pub. by himself, nor in book form by any one. A few appeared in print during his lifetime, but without his permission. These include:—

1. A saint! O would that I could claim. Holiness derived. "Written off almost at the moment, on hearing the name applied in a scornful way at a party, about 1813." It was printed in The Friendly Visitor, 1834.

1813." It was printed in The Friendly Visitor, 1834.

3. Thou, Whose Almighty word, Missions. Written, his son says, "about 1813." It was printed in The Friendly Visitor, July, 1825, in 4 st. of 7 l., with the Friendly Visitor, July, 1825, in 4 st. of 7 l., with this text differs only in two or three words from the original as supplied by the author's son to Dr. Rogers and pubby him in his Lyra Brit., 1867, p. 395. Two texts are known which are received as original, the first the undubted text in Lyra Brit., and the second that given by Lord Selborne from the Coll. of Dr. Raffles, Congregational Minister of Liverpool. The differences are (1) in st. iii. 1. 4, orig. is: "Move o'er," and Raffles "Move on," and (3) st. iv.:—

Dr. Bafles.

Original.

"Blessed, and boly, and Glorious Trinity, Wisdom, Love, Might: Boundless as ocean's tide Rolling in fullest pride Thro' the world, far and wide,
'Let there be light.'"

Dr. Raffles. " Holy and blessed Three, lorious Trinity, Wisdom, Love, Might I Boundless as ocean's tide Rolling in fullest pride, Through the carth, far and wide, Let there be light!"

The second text is that mostly in C. U. in all English speaking countries, and that which is usually translated. Tr. into Latin, by R. Bingham, in his Hymn. Christ. Lat., 1871, as "Tu, cujus Orbis principio novi." Another form appeared in The Casket, Oliphant, Edinburgh, 1826, but this is unknown to the collections.

8. When Christ our human form did bear. Christ's love of Children. "Written in 1816 for the Parochial Schools, Upottery, Devon."

The foregoing details are in great part from Ms. notes supplied by the author's son. [8. M98.]. [J. J.]

Martin, Samuel, D.D., s. of John Martin, schoolmaster at Anstruther-Easter, Fife, was b. at Anstruther, July 7, 1740. He studied at the University of Edinburgh, and, after being licensed to preach in 1762, became in 1768 parish minister of Balmaghie, Kirkcudbright, and in 1776 of Monimail, Fife. He received the degree of D.D. from the University of St. Andrews in 1798. He d. at Monimail, Sep. 12, 1829. As a member of the Committee appointed by the General Assembly of 1775, to revise the Trans. and Paraph. of 1745, he contributed No. 12 to the 1781 collection (see Cameron, William, and Boottish Translations and Paraphrases). Martineau, Harriet, was b. at Norwich, Jone 12, 1802, and d. at Ambleside, June 27, 1876. Best known as the writer of Illustrations of Political Economy, Retrospect of Western Travel; two novels, Deerbrook and The Hour and the Man; Eastern Life, Past and Present; a History of the Thirty Years' Peace, and various other works. Her first publication was a book of Devotional Exercises, with hymns appended to each Exercise, and her hymns also belong to what she speaks of in the Autobiography as her "Unitarian" period. Five of them appeared in A Collection of Hymns for Christian Worship, printed in 1831 for the congregation of Eustace Street, Dublin, and edited by her brother, the Rev. James Martineau.

1. All men are equal in their birth. Human Equality. Lord Jesus! come; for here. Jesus desired. Sometimes given as (1) "Come, Jesus, come, for here"; (2) and "Thy kingdom come, for here."

3. The floods of grief have spread around. In Affic-

Martineau, James, LLD., D.D., b. at Norwich, April 21, 1805, the son of a manufacturer and wine merchant of Huguenot descent. After four years at the Norwich grammar-school, and two as a pupil of Dr. Lant Carpenter, at Bristol, and a short experience in the shops of a mechanical engineer at Derby, he entered as a Divinity student in Manchester College, York. His first ministry was at Eustace St. Chapel, Dublin [1828-32], as assistant to his cousin, the Rev. Philip Taylor. From 1832 to 1857 he was in Liverpool, as minister of the congregation meeting in Paradise St. Chapel, and from 1849 in the new Hope St. Church. In 1840 he was appointed professor of Mental and Moral Philosophy and Political Economy in Manchester New College, and in 1857 followed the college to London, becoming its Principal in 1869 and resigning in 1885. On settling in London he became also minister of Little Portland St. Chapel, first in conjunction with the Rev. J. J. Tayler, and afterwards alone till his resig-He received the degree of nation in 1872. p.c.L. from Oxford in 1888. D. Jan. 11, 1900.

The chief of Dr. Martineau's works hitherto published The chief of Dr. Martineau's works hitherto published are four volumes of sermons, Endeavours after the Christian Life, 2 vols., 1843 and 1847; Hours of Thought on Sacred Things, 2 vols., 1876 and 1879; Studies of Christianity, 1868; Kraups Philosophical and Theological, 2 vols., 1866 and 1868, collected from various Reviews; A Study of Spinana, 1882; and Types of Ethical Theories, 2 vols., 1885, 2nd ed. 1886. These contain the substance of his teaching as a Christian minister and an expounder of a spiritual philosophy of religion. By early training and matured conviction a Unitarian of the Catholic and spiritual type, Dr. Martineau has served not only the little group of churches with which he is immediately connected, but the Church Universal by his gifts of sympathy and insight into the deepest quesimmediately connected, but the Universal by his gifts of sympathy and insight into the deepest questions of human life. He has strengthened the foundations of faith in the light of modern knowledge, and added treasures, the worth of which have yet to be fully measured, to the rich store of the devout literature of the Church.

The Catholic spirit and deeply Christian temper impressed upon all Dr. Martineau's literary work give their distinctive character to the three hymn-books which he has edited, viz.:-

(1) A Collection of Hymns for Christian Worship.

Dublin: Printed for the Congregation of Eustace Street,

1831. This collection of 273 byruns already clearly indicates the principles of selection afterwards to be more fully worked out. It was made for the use of a society, whose worship is paid solely to the God and Father of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ," and in adopting the hymne of Dr. Witte and others such changes exempted. our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ," and in adopting the hymns of Dr. Watts and others, such changes are made as are required by theological consistency; but the pre-face pleads for a wider latitude of choice than had been usual in older selections, "bringing all the resources of lyric poetry (the poetry of the affections) into the ser-vice of religion." There are 18 hymns by Bp. Heber introduced, and special mention is made of his merit in "first liberalizing the style of neetry designed for our "first liberalizing the style of poetry designed for our churches.

During his ministry in Liverpool Dr. Martineau published:

(2) Hymns for the Christian Church and Home. Col-lected and edited by James Martineau. London, 1840. This with his own congregation took the place of the old Paradise St. collection of 1815, and was quickly recognised as pre-eminent among the books in use among the non-subscribing churches.

Dr. Martineau's last collection was:-

(3) Hymns of Praise and Prayer, collected and edited by James Martineau, LL.D., D.D. "Vatum suspiria solatium Ecclesias." London, 1873.

The character of the last two books, and the place they hold in the religious connection for which they were in the first instance prepared, are more fully described in the article on Unitarian Hymnody. It remains only to mention Dr. Martineau's own hymns :--

A voice upon the mid-night air. Good Friday.
 Thy way is in [on] the deep, O Lord. Trust.
 "Where is your God?" they say. Inward witness

They have been hitherto published anonymously, but the authorship is now acknow-ledged. Nos. 1, 2, appeared first in his Hymns, &c., 1840, and 3 in his Hymns, &c., 1873. They are also found in other collections in G. Britain and America. [V. D. D.]

Martyr Del qui unicum. [Martyrs.] A hymn for the Common of Martyrs in the Sarum, York, Aberdeen, old Roman and other Breviaries. It is found in four Hymnaries of the 11th cent. in the British Museum; three of the English Church (Vesp. D. xii. f. 106b; Jul. A. vi. f. 65b; Harl. 2961, f. 248b) and one of the ancient Spanish Church (Add. 30,851, f. 153b). In the Lat. Hys. of the Anglo Saxon Ch., 1851, p. 133, it is printed from an 11th cent. us. at Durham (B. iii. 32 f. 39b). Daniel, i., No. 234, prints the original, and at iv. p. 138, the text of the revised Roman Breviary of 1632, where it begins, Inviete martyr uniour

The original and the Roman Breviary forms of this hymn have been translated as follows :--

i. Original Text. Martyr Dei qui unicum.

1. Martyr of God, 'twee thine to track. By W. J. Blew. Pub. in his Church Hy. & Tune Bh., 1852-5, in 5 st. of 4 l.; and again in Rice's Sel. from the same, 1870, No. 117.

2. Martyr of God! The Only Son. was given anonymously in the Antiphoner & Grail, 1880, p. 85, and in the Hymner, 1882. latter it is given for "St. Stephen," and for "One Martyr."

Another tr. is :---

Martyr of God! Who in the road. J. D. Chambers.

ii. Roman Brev. Text. Inviote martyr, unioum. 1. Great God, whose strength Thy martyrs steel'd. By Bp. Mant. 1st pub. in his Ancient Hys., 1837, p. 77, in 5 st. of 4 l. (ed. 1871, p. 135). It has been repeated in a few collections, including the People's H., 1867, &c.

2. Martyr of unconquer'd might. By E. Caswall. 1st pub. in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 209, and again in his Hys. & Poems, 1873, p. 111, in 4 st. of 4 l., together with a doxology for Eastertide, and a second of Ascensiontide. In its complete form it is not in C. U.; but st. i. is the opening stanza of the cento, No. 193, in the 2nd ed. 1863 of the Appendix to the H. Noted.

Other trs. are :-

1. Blest martyr, nobly hast thou trod. R. Campbell. 1850.

2. Great mortyr, who thyself didst show. J. Wallace. [J. J.]

Marvell, Andrew. [Addison, J.]

Mason, John. The known facts of his life are scanty. He was the s. of a Dissenting Minister, and the grandfather of John Mason, the author of A Treatise on Self-Knowledge. He was educated at Strixton School, Northants, and Clare Hall, Cambridge. After taking his M.A., he became Curate of Isham; and in 1668, Vicar of Stantonbury, Bucks. A little more than five years afterwards he was appointed Rector of Water-Stratford. Here he composed the volume containing The Songs of Praise, his paraphrase of The Song of Solomon, and the Poem on Dives and Lazarus, with which Shepherd's Penitential Cries was afterwards bound up. This volume passed through twenty editions. Besides the Songs of Praise, it contains six Penitential Cries by Mason, and it is this portion of his work which harmonizes with the compositions of Shepherd. Probably his hymns were used in public worship, and if so, they are among the earliest hymns so used in the Church of England. Some of his hymns are often found in the early Hymu Collections of the 18th century. The most notable work besides this volume is Select Remains of the Rev. John Mason, a collection of sententious and practical sayings and Christian letters, published by his grandson, and much eulogised by Dr. Watts. His friend, Shepherd, who was at Water-Stratford at the remarkable period to which reference is made below, published two of Mason's Sermons, with a preface of his own. Mason was a man of true piety and humility; known for eminent prayerfulness; faithful, experimental, effectual preaching; "a light in the pulpit, and a pattern out of it." His friendship with Baxter, and Shepherd, the Nonconformist Minister of Braintree, probably indicates his sympathies and theological position. Baxter calls him "the glory of the Church of England," and says:—

"The frame of his spirit was so heavenly, his deportment so humble and obliging, his discourse of spiritual things so weighty, with such apt words and delightful air, that it charmed all that had any spiritual relish.

The close of his life was sensational enough. One night, about a month before his death, he had a vision of the Lord Jesus, wearing on His head a glorious crown, and with a look of unutterable majesty in His face. Of this vision he spoke; and preached a Sermon called The Midnight Cry, in which he pro-claimed the near approach of Christ's Second Advent. A report spead, that this Advent would take place at Water-Stratford itself, and crowds gathered there from the surrounding villages. Furniture and provisions were brought in, and every corner of the house and village occupied. Most extraordinary scenes occurred, singing and leaping and dancing. The excitement had scarcely died out when the old man passed away (1694), still testifying that he had seen the Lord, and that it was time for the nation to tremble, and for Christians to trim their lamps. His last words Were, "I am full of the loving kindness of the Lord." [See English Hymnedy, Early, § XI.]

the additions thereto, are:—
(1) Spiritual Songs; or, Songs of Praise to Almighly God upon several occasions, 1683. (2) The Song of Songs which is Solomon's first Turned, then Paraphrased in English Verse. Pub. with the former. (3) Dives and Lawrus. incorporated with the former 1885. (4) Penvisential Uries, Eggun by the Author of the Songs of Praise, And carried on by another Hand. Licensed and Butered, Sept. 18, 1893. This forms the concluding part of all editions of the Songs of Praise after 1893. This reprint was accompanied by a short Memorix. In this reprint Mason's P. Cries and Ps. 85 are given under Songs of Praise, pp. 49-61, those under P. Cries being all by Shepherd (2, v.). Mason's Life, by John Dunton, was pub. in 1894, and included some miscellaneous poems; and another, by Henry Maurice, in 1895, in which are two hymns not found elsewhere. (See also an Article on him in the Sunday at Home, Feb. 1881.) We may add that Mason pub. a Catcohism, with some Verses for Children. Of this, however, no copy is known to exist.

Mason's Songs are commonly presented in modern hymn-books in the form of centos. which are sometimes compiled from a single Song, and in other instances from several Songs. Many of these are annotated under their respective first lines. The rest include :-

1. Blest be my God that I was born. Praise for the Gopel.

2. Lord, for the mercies of the night. Praise for Deliverance from Immediate danger of Death.

4. My God, a God of pardon is. Praise for Pardon of Sin.

5. My God, my only Help and Hope. Praise for 6. My God, my reconciled God. Praise for Peace of

7. My God was with me all this night. Morning. 8. Thou wast, O God; and Thou wast blest, Praise

9. Thousands of thousands stand around. Praise. A cento from Songs i. and ii.

In Griffith, Farran & Co.'s Ancient and Modern Library, No. 12, Giles Fletcher's Christ's Victory and Triumph, &c., 1888, p. 208 (edited by W. T. Brooke), a short hymn by Mason is given from Multum in Parvo: or the Jubilee of Jubilees, 1732, beginning "High praises meet and dwell within." It is an indifferent example of Mason's powers as a writer of sacred verse. [J, J]

Mason, William, M.A., was b. at Kingston-npon-Hull, 1725, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge. He was some time a Fellow of Pembroke Hall. On taking Holy Orders he became Rector of Aston, and Precentor of York Minster. He d. April 5, 1797. His poetical writings, including Poems, Tragedies, Odes, and Hymns, published at intervals, were collected and issued in 4 vols. in 1811 as The Works of William Mason, M.A., Precentor of York, and Rector of Aston. His hymns, few in number, include, "Again the day returns of holy rest" (p. 29, i.); "Soon shall the evening star with silver [silent] ray" (p. 29, i.), &c. These are in vol. i. of his

Massie, Edward, M.A., was educated at Wadham College, Oxford, where he was Dean Ireland Scholar in 1828; B.A. 1830; M.A. 1884. He took Holy Orders in 1830; was Fellow and Tutor of University College, Durham, from 1941 to 1845; and then for some time Curate of Gawsworth, Cheshire. He has pub., in 1862, A Few Hymns for Occasional use in the Services of the Church, and Sacred Odes, vol. i., Lond., 1866, vol. ii., 1867. The latter contain many translations from the German. Those which are from German hymns, and are within the range of this Dictionary, are annotated under the original German first lines or their author's names. See Index of Authors, &c. He d. Jan. 21, 1893. [J. J.]

Massie, Richard, eldest a of the Rev. R. Massie, of Coddington, Cheshire, and Rector of Eccleston, was born at Chester, June 18, 1800, and resides at Pulford Hall, Coddington. Mr. Massie pub. a tr. of Martin Luther's Spiritual Songs, Lond., 1854. His Lyra Domestica, 1st series, Lond., 1860, contains tra. of the 1st Series of Spitta's Psalter und Harfs. In 1864 he pub. vol. ii., containing trs. of Spitta's 2nd Series, together with an Appendix of tra. of German hymns by various authors. He also contributed many trs. of German hymns to Mercer's Church Psalter & H. Bh.; to Reid's British Herald; to the Day of Rest, &c. Most of these are annotated in this Dictionary. He d. Master, it is good to be. A. P. Stanley. [Transfiguration.] 1st pub. in an article by Dean Stanley on the Transfiguration and hymns relating thereto, in Macmillan's Magazine, April, 1870 (vol. xxi. p. 543). It is in 6 st. of 8 l. In a note which accompanies the hymu Dean Stanley says:-

"I have endeavoured (as in a hymn written some years ago on the Ascension) ['He is gone—Beyond the skies,' p. 500, ii.] to combine as far as possible, the various thoughts connected with the scene."

It is given in full in the Westminster Abbeu H. Bk., 1883, and other collections, and with the omission of 'et. i. as " O Master, it is good to be," in the Hymnary, 1872.

Master, where abidest Thon? Elizabeth Charles, née Rundle. [Jesus desired.] Appeared in her work, The Three Waltings and Other Poems, 1859, p. 182. It is found in a few collections only. [J. J.]

Masters, Mary. Biographical facts concerning Mrs. Masters are very few. In 1783 she published a volume of Poems; and again, in 1755, by Subscription, Familiar Letters and Poems on Several Occasions (Lon. D. H. Cave). These Poems include versified epistles on various subjects to her friends, Odes, and a few paraphrases of single Psalms, &c. From the Preface to her Poems, 1733, we find that Thomas Scott took an interest in her, and contributed some Poems to that volume. It is evident also from the following extract that she was in humble circumstances, and without a liberal education :-

"The author of the following poems never read a Treatise of Rhetorick, or an Art of Poetry, nor was ever taught her English Grammar. Her Education rose no higher than the Spelling Book, or the Writing Master: her Gentus to Poetry was always brow-beat and discountenanced by her Parents, and till her Merit got the better of her Fortune, she was shut out from all Commerce with the more knowing and polite part of the world." Poems, 1733: Preface.

In her Familiar Letters and Poems, 1755, pp. 228-29, there are three "Short Ejaculations," the first of which is the well known :--

"Tis Religion that can give, Sweetest Pleasures while we live; "Tis Religion must supply, Solid comforts when we die, After Death its Joys will be, Lasting as Eternity."

When these lines were included in Rippon's Selection, 1787, the following were added:-"Be the living God my Friend, Then my bliss shall never end:"

and the 8 lines were divided into two stanzas. In this form the hymn is known to modern collections.

An ejaculation for use "At the Altar" is sometimes met with. It is also in the Familiar Letters, &c., p. 229, and reads:-

"O my ador'd Redeemer! deign to be, Now present with the mystic Bread to me; May I the Blessings of Thy Blood partake, Who drink the Sacred Wine for Thy dear sake."

This volume also contains a few hymns which are worthy of attention. [J. J.]

Mathams, Walter John, was b.in London, Oct. 30, 1853. Early in life he went to sea; but on returning through Palestine to England he began to study for the Ministry. In 1874 he entered the Regent's Park Baptist College as a Student, and subsequently had a pastoral charge at Preston, Lancashire. In 1879, his health failing, he went for a time to Australia and other places. Returning to England, he became, in 1883, minister Falkirk, Scotland, and in 1888, at Birmingham. Whilst a student, he pub. a small volume of hymns and poems as At Jesus Feet (1876). He is also the author of several religious books of a popular character, as: Ftreside Parables, 1879; Sunday Parables, 1883, &c. His principal hymns are:

1. Bright falls the morning light.

2. Gentle Jesus, full of grace. Learning of Christ.
3. Go, work for God, and do not say. Christian Work.
4. God loves the little sparrows. Divine Providence.
5. Jesus, Friend of little children. Child's Prayer to Christ.

6. My heart, O God, be wholly Thins. Consecration.
7. No room for Thee, Lord Jesus. No room for Reign in my heart, Great God. Conse

 Sailing on the ocean. Life a Voyage. Consecration.

Nos. 1 and 6 of these hymns first appeared in his At Jesus' Feet, 1876. Mr. Mathams has written several other hymns which have appeared in magazines and elsewhere. One of these, "Good has come from Nazareth," has been set to music by Dr. E. J. Hopkins. 9 hymns named above are mainly in Baptist [W. R. S.] hymn-books.

Mathesius, Johannes, s. of Wolfgang Mathesius, town councillor at Rochlitz, was b. at Rochlitz, June 24, 1504. He studied for a short time at the University of Ingolstadt. Thereafter he acted as family tutor at Odelzhausen, near Munich, where, in 1526, he found Luther's Von den guten Werken Wittenberg, 1523); and then while living at Bruck (Fürstenfeld-bruck), near Munich, read two of Luther's tractates on the Holy Communion. Attracted thus to Wittenberg he matriculated there May 30, 1529, studied with great zeal and graduated M.A. in 1530. In the end of 1530 he joined the staff of the school at Altenburg, and in the spring of 1532 was appointed rector of the gymnasium at Joachimsthal in Bohemia. He resigned this post in 1540, and returned to Wittenberg to complete his studies in theology. Thereafter he was, in 1541, appointed diaconus, and, in 1545, pastor at Joschimsthal. While preaching on the Gospel for the 16th S. after Trinity, Oct. 7, 1565 (his subject being the "Son of the widow of Nain, and the hope of eternal life"), he was struck with paralysis, and, being carried to his house, d. there some three hours later (Koch i. 880, ii. 475; Herzog's Real-Encyklopädie, ix. 398, &c.).

Mathesius was of most lovable and charitable spirit, and a model pastor, who thoroughly adapted himself to his life among a mining population. He was a distinguished preacher, his sermons ranking among the best of the period, the most famous being those in his Sarepta oder Berypostill, Nümberg, 1862, founded on those passages of Scripture referring to metallurgy or mining, the title being suggested by Sarepta or Zarephath (1 Kings xvii. 8), the Hebrew name meaning amelting-place. Besides other volumes of sermons and amelting-place. Besides other volumes of sermons and devotional works he also pub. alife of Luther (Historica von . . . Doctoris Martini Luthers Anjang, Lehr, Lehen und Sterben, Nürnberg, 1588) completed just before his death, and with a preface dated Oct. 5, 1585. His hymns are few in number, and appeared scattered in his various publications. Wackeraagel, iii. pp. 1150-1161, gives 21 pieces, of which 15 may be called hymns; and 15 of these pieces with a memoir by K. F. Ledderhose appeared at Halle in 1835 see also under Harman, M., p. 513, ii.]. The finest of all his hymns, the beautiful cradle song, "Nun schlaft mein liebes Kindelein" [Wackernagel iii. p. 1152, from a Nürnberg broadsheet N.D. c. 1560, in 18 et. of A.; and in the Berlin G. Those of Mathesius's hymns which have passed into English are :-

- i. Aus melnes Hersens Grunde. Morning. This has generally, though apparently without ground, been ascribed to Mathesius, and is included in the 1855 ed. of his Geistliche Lieder, p. 149. But it is not found in any of his original works now extant, nor in the collected ed, of his Schöne geistliche Lieder, Nürnberg, 1580; and the ascription to him has not been traced earlier than in M. Pratorius's Musae Sioniae, 1610. Wackernagel, v. pp. 177-184, gives 8 forms varying from 6 to 15 st. (some beginning "Von meines Herzens Grunde"); the oldest, in 7 st. of 8 l., being from a Gesangbüchlein pub. at Hamburg in 1592. He ranks it as anonymous. The text of 1592 is No. 440 in the Uno. L. S., 1851. The hymn was a great favourite with Gustavus Adolphus, and was often sung by his army at morning prayer. The trs., from the text of 1592, are:
- 1. My heart its incense burning. In full, by Dr. H. Mills, in his Horae Ger., 1856, p. 220, repeated, abridged, in M. W. Stryker's Christian Chorals, 1885, reading "her incense."

2. My inmost heart new raises. A good ir. omitting st. iv., v., by Miss Winkworth, in her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 164.

S. My heart with deep emotion. Omitting st. iii., v. by E. Cronenwett as No. 294 in the Ohio Luth. Hymnal, 1880.

Il. 4-8). By F. W. Foster, as No. 749 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1789 (1886, No. 1167). (3) "0 God, my heart is full of praise." By Dr. G. Walker, 1860, p. 59.
ii. Gott Vater, Schn, heiliger Geist, Durchs Sprechen get Ers wachnen heisst. Miner's Song. 1st pub. as Ers getstlich Beroklied, 1856, and thence in Wackernagel, iii. p. 1161, in 9 st. Tr. as "0, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, Thou God, doet fix the miner's post." By Miss Winkworth, 1869, p. 144.

Matheson, Annie, eldest daughter of Rev. James Matheson, Congregational Minister, of Nottingham, was b. at Blackheath, March, 1853, and now (1888) resides at Notting Hill, London.

At an early age she shewed considerable literary ability, her first hymn, 'Jesus, the children are calling,' being composed when she was only 13 years old. This hymn, attracting the attention of Dr. George MacDon-ald, was introduced by him to the notice of the editor ald, was introduced by him to the notice of the editor of Good Words, who inserted it in that magazine, as a "Hymn by a Child." In 1869 appeared "I am weak and weary, Lord," and from that time Miss Matheson has been a frequent contributor to Good Words, Macmillen, The Spectator, St. Nicholas, and other magazines, both English and American. Her illustrated book for children, Margaret's Fear Book, containing twelve poems from her pea, was pub. in 1887.

The Allemin Advance of Margaret and American of Margaret and Margaret

The following are the best known of Miss Matheson's hymns :-

I. Dear Master, what can children do? Children as Workers for Christ,

2. How shall we worship Thee, O Lord? Divine Worskin

3. I am weak and weary, Lord. Divine Strength desired.

4. Jesus, the children are calling. Children's Prayer to Christ.

5. Lord, when we have not any light. Evening.
6. O little birds, that all day long. God's Love to all

7. The little snowdrops rise. Easter.
8. When through life's dewy fields we go. Comfort in God's Presence.

Of these hymns, Nos, 5, 6, and 7 were written for W. R. Stevenson's School Hymnol, 1880; and Nos. 1 and 2 for a Harvest Festival about 1882.

Miss Matheson's hymns are characterised by a pleasing combination of simplicity and refinement, both of thought and expression. ſw. R. S.]

Matson, William Tidd, was b. at West Hackney, Loudon, Oct. 17, 1833. He was educated first under the the Rev. J. M. Gould, and then at St. John's College, Cambridge. Subsequently he studied under Professor Nesbitt, at the Agricultural and Chemical College, Kennington. In 1853 he underwent a great spiritual change. Leaving the Church of England, he first joined the Methodist New Connexion body, and then the Congrega-tionalists. After the usual theological training, he entered the ministry, and held several pastorates, including Havant, Hants; Gosport; Highbury; Portsmouth, and others. His poetical works include :--

(1) A Summer Evening Reverie, and Other Poems, 1857; (2) Poems, 1858; (3) Pleasures of the Sanctuary, 1865; (4) The Muer Life, 1866; (5) Sacred Lyrics, 1870; (6) Three Supplemental Hymns, &c., 1872; (7) The World Redeemed, 1881, &c.

Several of Matson's hymns have been given in Allon's Suppl. Hys.; Horder's Cong. Hymns; The Baptist Hymnal; Dale's English H. Bk.; Barrett's Cong. Church Hymnal, 1887, and others. The best known are:—

Father of all, Whose wondrous power. Prayer to the Holy Trinity.

2. Glory, glory to God in the highest. Christmas.

3. God is in His temple. Divine Worship.

4. I'm but a little Child. A Child's Prayer.

5. In whom shall I find comfort? God, the Source of Comfort.

8. Lord, I was blind, I could not see. Christ, the Life 7. O blessed Life, the heart at rest. Christ the Life of Mon.

8. Teach me, O Lord, Thy holy way. Divine Guidance desired.

Mr Matson's hymns show a considerable mastery of the forms of hymnic expression, but are somewhat lacking in lyric energy. Those written for use with German chorales are excellent efforts, and rank with his best work. Taken as a whole his hymns are far above the average, and deserve wide [W. G. H.] acknowledgment.

Matthesius, Johannes. [Mathesius, J.]

Matthews, Rose, a nom de plume of Mrs. Van Alstyne.

Maude, Mary Fawler, née Hooper, daughter of George Henry Hooper, of Stanmore, Middlesex, was married in 1841 to the late Joseph Maude, some time Vicar of Chirk, near Ruabon, and Hon. Canon of St. Asaph, who d. in Feb. 1887. Mrs. Maude's hymns were pub. in her Twelve Letters on Confirmation, 1848, and in Memorials of Past Years, 1852 (privately printed). Her best known hymn, is "Thine for ever, God of love" (Confirmation). Concerning it Mrs. Maude Bays :--

"It was written in 1847 for my class in the Girls" La was written in 1847 for my class in the Girls' Sunday School of St. Thomas, Newport, Isle of Wight, and pub. in 1848 at the beginning of a little book called 'Twelve Letters on Confirmation,' by a Sunday School Teacher, and reprinted in the Memorials, 1852," [s. 288.]

The original is in 7 st. of 4 l. It is usually abbreviated, and st. ii., iii. transposed, as in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871; the Hy. Comp. ; H. A. & M., 1875, Thring's Coll., 1882, and most other hymn-books. As a hymn for Confirmation its use is extensive. The omitted etanzes are:--

> "Thine for ever in that day When the world shall pass away: When the trumpet note shall sound, And the nations underground

" Shall the awful summons hear Which proclaims the judgment near. Thine for ever. 'Neath Thy wlogs Hide and save us, King of Kings." [J. J.]

Maurice, Jane, sister of the Rev. P. Maurice (see below), contributed to her brother's Choral Hymn Book, 1861, 20 hymns together with one or two additions to others, and all under the signature of "J. M." The best known is "Glory to God, for the Day-spring is dawning" (Advent). Taken as a whole her hymne are limited to her brother's book. Miss Maurice was b. at Tyddyn Tudor, Denbighshire, Oct. 19, 1812.

Maurice, Peter, D.D., s. of Hugh Maurice, of Plas Gwyn, Llanrug, Carnarvonshire, and a descendent of one of the oldest families in Wales, was b. at Plas Gwyn, June 29, 1803, and educated at Jesus College, Oxford (B.A. 1826, D.D. 1840). He was Chaplain of New College, 1828-58, and of All Souls, 1837-1858, and Curate of Kennington, Berks, 1829-54. In 1858 he was preferred to the Vicarage of Yarnton. He d. March 30, 1878. He pub. several pamphlets against Popery (Popery in Oxford, 1832), and was author and editor of :-

(1) Choral Harmony, 1354; (2) Tunes in Four Parts for Congregational Worship, 1856; (3) Supple-ment to Choral Harmony, 1858; and (4) The Choral Hymn Book, Palins and Hymns for Public and Private Use, Compiled, Prepared, and Composed as a Companion to the Choral Harmony. N.D. [1861.]

To this Choral H. Bk. Dr. Maurice contributed 23 hymns under the initials "P. M." Of these only two or three are found outside of his work, as: "Come, my soul, cast off all sorrow" (Confidence in God); and "I lift mine eyes to Ziou's hill" (Ps. czzi.). To the Choral H. Bk. A. T. Russell and Dr. S. P. Tregelles contributed a large number of original hymns in Ms., which are practically unknown elsewhere. This book should be consulted by hymnal compilers.

Maxwell, James, was b. in Renfrewshire in 1720. In his youth he journeyed to England with a hardware pack, but eventually returning to Scotland, he followed the joint occupation of schoolmaster and poet. In 1783, during a famine in Scotland he was reduced to great destitution, and had to earn his bread by breaking stones on the highway. were produced after that period. The two works in which we are interested are :-

 Hymns and Spiritual Songs. In Three Books, 1759.
 A New Version of the whole of the Book of Praims in Metre; by James Mazwell, S. D. P. [Student of Divine Poetry.) Glasgow, 1773.

From the former of these the following hymns are in C. U.:-

All glory to the eternal Three. Holy Trinity.
 Didst Thou, dear Jesus [Saviour], suffer shame. Resignation and Courage.
 Go forth, ye heralds, in my Name. Missions.

The last of these is in somewhat extensive use in America, where it appeared as early as in the Prayer Book Coll., 1789. Maxwell d. at Paisley (where he was known as the Paisley Poet, or as he put it on the title-page of some of his books, Foet in Paisley) in 1800.

May not the sovereign Lord of all. L. Watts. [Election.] This cento is composed of st. iii., v., vii. of his "Behold the potter and the clay," which appeared in his Hys. and Spiritual S., 1709, in 8 st. of 4 l., with the heading "Election sovereign and free." The use of this cento is confined mainly to America. mainly to America. [J, J,]

May the grace of Christ our [the] Saviour; And the Father's, &c. J. Newton. [Close of Service.] This paraphrase of 2 Cor. xiii. 14, appeared in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. iii., No. 101, in 1 st. of 8 L. As a short hymn for the close of Divine Service it has become very popular, and is in usa in all English-speaking countries, and sometimes as "May the grace of Christ the Saviour."
It has also been tr. into several languages.
The Latin tr. "Gratia postri Salvatoria" is The Latin tr. "Gratia nostri Salvatoria, in Bingham's Hymno. Christ. Lat., 1871. [J. J.]

Mayfart, Johann Matthäus. Heyfart, J. M.

Media vita in morte sumus. [Burial of the Dead.] In the Paris ed., 1531, of the Breviarium ad usum insignis ecclesiae Sarum there is given "Ad Completorium," as the Antiphon to the Nunc Dimittie, for 15 days about the middle of Lent:-

Ant. Media vita in morte sumus: quem quaerimus adjutorem nisi te Domine, qui pro peccatis nostris juste irasceris. Sancte Deus: Sancte fortis: Sancte et misepraceris. Sancte Pens; sancte forus; sancte et imag-ricors Salvator; amarae morti ne tradas nos. V. Ne projicias nos in tempore senectutis cum defecerit virtus nostrs, ne derelinquas nos Domine. Sancte Deus; [Sancte, &c.] V. Noli claudere aures tuas ad preces nostras. Sancte fortis: [Sancte, &c.] V. Qui cognoscis occulta cordis parce peccatis nostris. Sancte et misericors Salvator amaras mortis to trade nos. (Cambridge Press Reprint, 1879, Fasc. i. col. dollit. and 1882, Fasc. ii. col. 229.) It also cours in the Fork Breviary of 1493 (Surtees Society's reprint, 1880, 1. 328).

A rendering of this form is given in the Church of England Order for the Burial of the Dead as to be said or sung at the grave: beginning, "In the midst of life we are in death." Dr. H. Bonar, in his Hys. of Faith and Hope, 2nd Series, 1861, gives a tr. of the antiphon in metre as "In the midst of this our life." The antiphon is found in an III. life." The antiphon is found in an 11th cent us in the British Museum (Harl. 2961, f. 59) for use during Lent; and in a 12th cent. Mozarabic Breviary (Add. 30849, f. 63). It is also given from later uss. by Mone, No. 289, his bread by breaking stones on the highway. and Morel, p. 68. As parallels from the Most of his publications (from 30 to 40 in all) | Fathers, Mone quotes the following:— Usque ad finem mundi jacemus in morte Gregor. M. Mor. 14,88. Uniculque mortalium sub quotidianis vitae hujus casibus innumerabiles mortes quodammode comminantur. Augustin. de civ. del 1, 9. Mala mors putanda non est, quam bons vita pracesserit. Neque enim, fact malam mortem, niai quod sequitur mortem. Non itaque multum curandum est els, qui necessario moritaris unit, quid accidat, ut moriantur, sed moriendo quo ire cogantur. Augustin. ibid. He adid that it was probably augusted by the antiphon Da pacem (p. 278, fi.).

According to tradition the antiphon was written by Notker (d. 912) after watching the workmen building a bridge at the Martinstobel, n gorne of the Goldach on its course from St. Gall to the Lake of Constanz (the present wooden bridge, 96 feet high, was built in 1468). This tradition, however, has not been traced earlier than the Chronicle of J. Metzler, written in 1613 (St. Gall MS. No. 1408), and no evidence can be found for either the story or the ascription. Moreover the antiphon is only given in three of the St. Gall Mss. and these comparatively recent, viz. No. 388 of the 14th cent., No. 418 of 1431, No. 546 of 1507, and none of these name Notker as the author. (See G. Scherrer's Verzeichniss der Handschriften der Stiftsbibliothek von St. Gallen. Halle, 1875, pp. 165-167.)

Rambach, in his Anthologic, i. p. 248, iii. pp. vii.—vili., says that by the middle of the xili. cent. it had come into universal use as a hymn of Frayer and Supplication in times of trouble, was sung regularly at Compline on the eve of Lastace Sunday, and was used by the people as an incantation. Bässler, in his Allehristiche Lieder, 1858, p. 80, adds that it was used as a war song by the priceis accompanying the bosts before and during battle, 1868, p. 80, adds that it was used as a war song by the priceis accompanying the bosts before and during battle, and that at a synod held at Cokogne in 1316 (1310), can account of the magical properties ascribed to it, its use was forbidden unless by permission of the Bishop. Gradually it felt into disne, and has now disappeared from the services of the Roman Catholle Church. The refrain "Sancte Deus," &c. (founded on Issain vi. 3) is add to date from the 5th cent. It is based on the Triangion, an invocation introduced into the Greek service books about a.n. 446. [See Greek Myannody, 9 x. 7.]

In the 15th cent. trs. into German had come into use. One of these is given by Wackernagel, ii, p. 749, from a 15th cent. Ms. at Munich, thus:—

"En mitten in des lebens seyt sey wir mit tod umbfangen:
Wen such wir, der uns hilfe gelt,
von dem wir huld erlangen,
Den dich, Herre, al syne?
der du umb unser missetat
rechtlichen surnen tuest.
Heyliger berre got,
heyliger starckar got,
heyliger parmcherusiger haller, ewiger got,
lass une nit gewalden des pittern todes pot."

He also gives (p. 750) nearly the same text from the Basel Plenarium of 1514. This stanza Martin Luther took with alterations, added in two stanzas the Gospel delineation of Life through Christ to the Mediaeval picture of Death, and pub. it as a hymn of 3 st. of 14 lines, beginning Mitten wir im Leben stad, in the Erfurt Enchiridion of 1524. Thence in Wachernagel, iii. p. 10, in Schircke's ed. of Luther's Geistliche Lieder, 1854, p. 89, and in the Unv. L. S. 1851, No. 566. Justly called "A hymn of triumph over the Grave, Death and Hell," it took and still holds a foremost place among German hymns for the dying, and has comforted many in their last conflict. The translations from the German in C. U. are:—

1. Most holy Lord and Ged! The German text from which this is is is at iii., ll. 8-13, altered by N. L. Zinzendorf, and included in the Brider

G. B., 1778, as part of No. 585, the Lituny on the Life, Sufferings and Death of Jesus Christ, and again, as part of No. 1464, the Church Litany thus:—

"Helliger Herr und Gott!
Helliger starker Gott!
Helliger barmherziger Hellaud,
Du ewiger Gott!
Lass uns nie entfallen
Unsern Trost aus deinen Tod.
Kyrie elelson!"

This stanza was tr. as part of the Church Litany in the Moravian H. Bk. 1789, p. 223, in 7 lines, and included as No. 129 in 1801. In the 1808 Supplement to the Morav. H. Bk. a single stanza identical save in 11. 5, 6, was included as No. 1175. In the 1826 ed. these stanzas were united as No. 156 (ed. 1886, No. 137), and repeated unaltered as No. 405 in the Irish Church Hymnal, 1873. No. 561 in the 1872 Appendix to Mercar's C. P. & H. Bk. is an adaptation by Edward Jackson, Il. 5, 6 being given in 3 varied forms, making 3 sts.

- 2. When we walk the paths of life. A paraphrase in 14 st. of 6 lines, by Miss Fry, in her Hy. of the Reformation, 1845, p. 147. Her st. v., i., x., ix., xiv. altered and beginning "God of mercy, unto Thee," were included in J. Whittemore's Supp. to All H. Bks., 1860, and her st. v., ii., xiv. altered and beginning "God of holiness! to Thee," in Maurice's Choral H. Bk., 1861.
- 3. Lo! the mid-day beam of life. A free tr. of st. i. iii., by A. T. Russell, as No. 255 in his Ps. & Hys. 1851, and repeated, slightly altered, in Kennedy, 1863.
- 4. Though in midst of life we be. Good and full, by R. Massie, in his M. Luther's Spir. Songs, 1854, p. 80. Thence, unaltered, save "Have mercy, Lord," for "Kyrie eleison," as No. 481 in the ed. 1857 of Mercer's C. P. & H. Bk. (Ox. ed., 1864, No. 468, omitting st. ii.).

5. The pange of death are near. A free tr., in 3 st. of 10 i., as No. 1203 in the Andover Sabbath H. Bk., 1858.

Other trs. are:—(1) "In the myddest of our lyvynge, by Bp. Coverdale, 1539 (Remains 1846, p. 554). (2) "Living, but in midst of death," by J. Anderson, 1846, p. 77 (ed. 1847, p. 90). (3) "What is our life?" a feeling breath," by Dr. J. Hunt, 1853, p. 151. (4) "In the midst of life, beheld," by Miss Winkworth, 1855, p. 235. (5) "In the midst of life is death," by Dr. H. Mills, 1858, p. 75. (6) "In the midst of life we are," by Dr. G. Macdonald, in the Sunday Magazine, 1867, p. 840, g. death, and thence altered in his Exotics, 1875, p. 107. Mediae noctis tempore. [Midnight.] This hymn is found in slightly varied forms in a Ms., c. 890, in the Bodleian (Junius 25 f. 122 b), where it is entitled "A Hymn at Nocturns on Sundays"; in the 8th cent. Bangor Antiphonary now at Milan (see Bymnarium); in a 9th cent. Rheinau Ms.; in an 8th cent. Ms. in the Vatican, &c. (See Daniel, i., No. 31, iv. p. 26, &c., where it reads "Mediae noctis tempus est.") In an 11th cent. Mozarabic Hymnarium in the British Museum (Add. 30,851, f. 168 b), it is given as the second part of a long hymn which begins "Jesu defensor omnium;" and with this text may be compared Neale's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1851, p. 6, where he professes to give the text of Arevalus's Hymnodia Hispanica, 1786.

Translations in C. U.:-

1. 'Tis the solemn midnight hour. By E. Caswall. 1st pub. in his Masque of Mary, 1858, p. 374, and again in his Hys. & Poems, 1873, p. 235, in 13 st. of 4 l. This is repeated in the 2nd ed. 1863 of the Appendix to the H. Noted, No. 117. In Nicholson's Appendix Hymnal, 1866, it is divided into two parts, part it. beginning "At the solemn midnight hour."

3. It is the midnight hour. By Elizabeth Charles, in her work The Voice of Christian Life in Song, 1858, p. 94, in 13 st. of 4 l. This, in a recast form by Canon W. Cooke, was given in the Hymnary, 1872, in 6 st. of 8 l., and opening with the same first line.

In W. J. Blow's Church Hy. and Tune Bk., 1852-55, st. i., ii., xv., xvi., xviii. of the "Jesu defensor omnium" form of the text are tr. as "Jesu, our Captain and our King." This is repeated in Rice's Sel. therefrom, 1870. [J. J.]

Medley, Samuel, b. June 23, 1738, at Cheshunt, Herts, where his father kept a school. He received a good education; but not liking the business to which he was apprenticed, he entered the Royal Navy. Having been severely wounded in a battle with the French fleet off Port Lagos, in 1759, he was obliged to retire from active service. A sermon by Dr. Watts, read to him about this time, led to his conversion. He joined the Baptist Church in Eagle Street, London, then under the care of Dr. Gifford, and shortly afterwards opened a school, which for several years he conducted with great success. Having begun to preach, he received, in 1767, a call to become pastor of the Baptist church at Watford. Thence, in 1772, he removed to Byrom Street, Liverpool, where he gathered a large congregation, and for 27 years was remarkably popular and useful. After a long and painful illuess he d. July 17, 1799. Most of Medley's hymns were first printed on leaflets or in magazines (the Gospel Magazine being one). They appeared in book form as:

In book form as:—

(1) Hymnt, &c. Bradford, 1785. This contains 42 bynns. (2) Hymns on Select Portions of Scripture, by the Rev. Mr. Medley. 2nd ed. Bristol. W. Pine. 1785. This contains 34 hymns, and differs much from the Bradford edition both in the text and in the order of the hymns. (3) An enlargement of the same in 1787. (4) A small collection of new Hymns. London, 1794. This contains 23 hymns. (5) Hymns. The Public Worthip and Private Devotion of True Christians Assisted in some thoughts in Verse; principally drawn from Select Passages of the Wort of God. By Samuel Medley. London. Privated for J. Johnson. 1800. A few of his hymns are also found in a Coll. for the use of few of his hymns are also found in a Coll. for the use of All Denominations, pub. in London in 1782.

Medley's hymns have been very popular in his own denomination, particularly among the more Calvinistic churches. In Denham's Scl. there are 48, and in J. Stevens's Scl. 30. Their charm consists less in their poetry than in the warmth and occasional pathos with which they give expression to Christian experience. In most of them also there is a refrain in the last line of each verse which is often effective. Those in C. U. include:

1. Come, join ye saints, with heart and voice. (1800.) Complete in Christ.

 Death is no more among our foes. Easter.
 Eternal Sovereign Lord of all. (1789.) Praise for Providential Care

. Far, far beyond these lower skies. (1789.) Jesus, the Forerunner.

Our Lord and King."

 See a poor sinner, dearest Lord. Lent.
 Sing the dear Saviour's glorious fame. (1789).

Jesus the Breaker of bonds.

In 1800 a Memoir of Medley was pub. by his son, which is regarded by members of the family now living as authoritative. But in 1833 appeared another Memoir by Medley's daughter Sarah, to which are appended 52 hymns for use on Sacramental occasions. These she gives as her father's. But 8 of them are undoubtedly by Thos. Kelly, pub. by him in 1815, and reprinted in subsequent editions of his Hymns. The remainder are by Medley. Nearly all of these 52 hymns (both Medley's and Kelly's) have been altered in order to adapt them to Sacramental use. In Sarah Medley's volume, Kelly's hymns all follow one another, and three of them are in a metre which Medley apparently never used. What could have been Sarah Medley's motive in all this it is hard to divine. She is said to have been a clever, though unamiable woman, and was herself the author of a small volume of Poems pub. in 1807. In the Memoir she does not conceal her batred of her brother. [W. R. S.]

Meet and right it is to sing, At every time and place. C. Wesley. [Watchnight. Chorat Festivals.] Pub. in Hys. and Sac. Poems, 1749, vol. ii., No. 97, in 4 st. of 8]. It is No. 14 of 19 "Hymns for the Watchnight"; and together with others from the same Watchnight. the same Watchnight hymns was frequently reprinted in a separate form (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. v. p. 279). It was included, with slight alterations, in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, No. 212, and has been repeated in several collections in G. Britain and America. Although originally written as a Watchnight hymn it can be easily adapted for Choral Festivals, and as such it would be a hymn of great morit.

[J. J.] great morit.

Meet and right it is to sing; Glory to our God and King. C. Wesley. [Holy Communion.] This paraphrase of the words of "The Order for the Administration of the Lord's Supper," &c., in the Book of Com. Prayer, "It is very meet, right, and our bounden duty," &c. was pub. in Hys. and Sac. Poems, 1740, in 7 st. of 4 l. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. i. p. 286). In 1753 C. White-street or the street form field gave st. i.-iii. and vi, in an altered form in his Coll. of Hys., as No. 61. This form was repeated by M. Madan in his Ps. & Hys., 1760, and again by several others, including Bickersteth, in his Christian Psalmody, 1833, (in 3 st.), and thus came into use in the Church of England.

Μέγα καὶ παράδοξον θαῦμα. St. Germanus. [Christmas.] Dr. Neale, in his Hys. of the Eastern Church, 1862, calls these stanzas "Stichera for Christmes-Tide. ascribes them to St. Anatolius. In the Greek office for Christmas Day in the Mensea, they are however ascribed to St. Germanus. In the 4th ed. of the Hys. of the Eastern Church, 1882, Mr. Hatherly explains the error thus:-

1882, Mr. Hatherly explains and crist array.

"The original Greek of this Hymn is in two stanzas, both of which in the Menaon, are ascribed to S. Germanus. Adjoining stanzas in the same series of Aposticha from which the first is taken are secribed to S. Anatolius, hence, probably, the mistake of Dr. Neale, in the previous editions, where this hymn occurs as the work of that eaint. The two stanzas in the Aposticha are in inverse order to that here given "(p. 26).

Dr. Neale's tr. in his Hys. of the Eastern Church, 1862, begins, "A great and mighty wonder," and is in 6 st. of 4 l. In 1863 it was repeated in the Parish H. Bk., in 1868 in the Appendix to H. A. & M., and again in other collections in G. Britain and America. Mr. Hatherly gives in his note a prose tr. of the original, whilst Dr. Littledale has a blank verse tr. in his Offices from the Service Books of the Holy Eastern Church, 1863, p. 181, and the original also, at p. 64.

Tr. as :-

My God, in Thee all fulness lies. A good tr. from Bunsen by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger., 2nd Ser., 1858, p. 191, and her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 133.

Mein Jesu, wie du willt. B. Schmolck. [Trust in God.] A fine hymn founded on St. Mark xiv. 36. 1st pub. in his Heilige Flammen (ed. 1709, No. 1, p. 3; probably in the 1st ed., 1704), in 11 st. of 8 l., entitled "As God will is my aim." In each st., ll. 1, 8 are "Mein Jesu, wie du willt." Included in many German collections, and recently in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863. Tr. as:

My Jesus, as Thou wilt. A good tr., omitting st. ii., vi., vi., ix., by Miss Borthwick, in geschehen. Christmas. This fine hymn is in the

H. L. L. 1st Ser., 1854, p. 56 (1884, p. 57). This was the favourite hymn of the Rev. Professor Skinner of New York (d. 1871), and many American Christians. It has been included in various recent English and American hymnals, but generally abridged, as e.g. in Dale's English H. Bk., 1874; Songs for the Sanctuary, N. Y., 1865; Laudes Domini, N. Y., 1884, and many others. In addition to these it has also appeared under the following first lines :-

1. My Saviour, as Thou wilt, in the Amer. Epis. Hys. for Ch. & Home, 1860; Scottish Presb. Hys., 1876; Canadian Presb. H. Bk., 1880, &c.
2. O Jesus, as Thou wilt, in the R. T. S. Hys. for Christian Worskip, 1866.
3. Lord Jesus, as Thou wilt, in Bp. Ryle's Coll., 1860, and the Baptist Hyl., 1879.

Meinhold, Johann Wilhelm, p.p., s. of Georg Wilhelm Meinhold, pastor at Netzelkow on the island of Usedom, was b. at Netzelkow, Feb. 27, 1797, and entered the University of Greifswald in 1813. He became rector of the Town School at Usedom in 1820. In 1821 he was appointed pastor of Coserow in Usedom, and, in 1828, of Crummin in Usedom (D.D. from Erlangen in 1840). finally became, at Easter, 1844, pastor at Rehwinkel, near Stargard. He was a stanneh Conservative, and after passing through the revolutionary period of 1848, this feeling, coupled with his leaning to Roman Catholicism, made him resign his living in the autumn of 1850. He retired to Charlottenburg, a suburb of Berlin, and d. there, Nov. 80, 1851 (Allg. Deutsche Biog., xxi. 235; from Pastor Schmock of Netzelkow, &c.).

Melihold is perhaps best known by his historical romance Maria Schweidler, die Bernsteinheze (1843), which professed to be taken from an old Ms. and was universally accepted as genuline. His poems appeared in his Gedichte, Leipzig. 1823; Vermehrte Gedichte, Coserow, 1824; Proben Geistlicher Lieder, Stralsund, 1834; Gedichte, Leipzig, 1835, &c.; and also in Knapp's Christoterpe and Ev. L. S.

Meinhold's hymns are of considerable interest. Those tr. into English are :-

i. Guter Hirt, du hast gestillt. Death of a Child. This beautiful little hymn is in his Gedichte, Leipzig, 1835, vol. i., p. 38, in 3 st. of 6 l., and headed, "Sung in four parts beside the body of my little fifteen months' old son Joannes Ladislaus." (In reply to inquiries addressed to Crummin in January, 1888, Provinzial-Vikar Bahr has kindly informed me that this child was b. at Crummin April 16, 1832, d. there, of teething, on July 2, and was buried there, July 5, 1833.) It is included in Knapp's Ev. L. S., 1837, No. 3411 (1865, No. 2983). Tr. as :-

Gentle Shepherd, Thou hast still'd. A full and very good tr. by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger., 2nd Ser., 1858, p. 122. This has passed, unaltered, into many recent hymnals, as the People's H., 1867, Hymnary, 1872, Hy. Comp., 1876, &c.; and in America, into the Press. Hyl., 1874, Evang. Hyl., N. Y., 1880, and others. In the Appx. of 1868 to H. A. & M., it was included as No. 358, with long in st. i., l. 2, altered to brief, and beginning, "Tender Shepherd, Thou hast stilled." This form has been followed in the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871, Bapt. Hyl., 1879, &c.; and in America, in the Episc. Hymnal, 1871, Hys. & Songs of Praise, N.Y., 1874, Landes Domini, N. Y., 1884, and many others.

Appendix to Knapp's Ev. L. S., 1837, p. 837, and in Knapp's Christoterpe, 1838, p. 152, in 7 st. of 7 L. Tr. as "O Bethlehem! O Bethlehem!" by Dr. H. Mills, 1845 (1856, p. 272). [J. M.]

Melanchthon, Philipp, s. of Georg Schwarzert, armourer to the Elector Philipp of the Palatinate, was b. at Bretten, near Carlsruhe, Feb. 16, 1497. From 1507 to 1509 he attended the Latin school at Pforzheim, and here he was already, by Johann Reuchlin, called Melanchthon (the Greek form of "Black Earth," his German surname). In October, 1509, he entered the University of Heidelberg (B.A. 1511), and on Sept. 17, 1512, matriculated at Tübingen, where he graduated M.A., Jan. 25, 1514, and where he remained till 1518 as private lecturer in the philosophical faculty. On Aug. 29, 1518, he was appointed professor of Greek at the University of Wittenberg, and in January, 1526, also Professor of theology. He d. at Wittenberg, April 19, 1560 (Allg. Deutsche Biog., xxi. 268, &c.). Melanchthon is best known as one of the leaders of the German Reformation; as a theologian (Loci communes, 1521, &c.); and as the framer of the famous Confession presented to the Diet of Augsburg in 1530, and still accepted as a standard by all the sections of Lutheranism in Germany, America, and elsewhere. His poems and hymns were written in Latin, and exercised no appreciable influence on the development of German hymnody. They were edited by Grathusen in 1560, Vincent 1563, Major 1575, &c. ; the most complete ed. being that by C. G. Bretschneider, at Halle, 1842 (Corpus Reformatorum, vol. x.). One of his hymns is noted at p. 293, i.; and a number of others are tr. by Miss Fry in her Echoes of Eternitu. 1859. [J. M.] Echoes of Eternity, 1859.

Men of God, go take your stations. T. Kelly. [Missions.] Appeared in his Hymns, &c., 1809, No. 156, in 4 st. of 6 L, and headed "Cry aloud, spare not. Isaial lviii. 1" (ed. 1853, No. 561). It also appeared in the August number of the Evangelical Magazine the same year, as a "Missionary Hymn," and signed "T. K." Its modern use is somewhat extensive, especially in America. [J. J.]

Menssa, The. [Greek Hymnody, § xiv.]

Mencken, Liider, IL.D., was b. at Oldenburg, Dec. 14, 1658, and became a student of law at the Universities of Leipzig and Jona; graduating at Leipzig m.A., 1680, IL.D., 1682. In 1682 he became tutor in the faculty of law at Leipzig, and was appointed ordinary professor of law in 1702. After a stroke of paralysis, on June 26, he d. at Leipzig, June 29, 1726. The only hymn ascribed to him is:—

Ach kaum, du siüsser Herzens-Gast. Hely Communion. Included in the Geintreiches G. B., Darmstodt, 1698, p. 273, in 17 st., and repeated in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 467. The fris. are (1) "Ah come, thou my heart's sweetest Guest," as No. 684 in pt. i, of the Moravian H. Bk., 1764. (2) "Ah! come, Thou most beloved guest," as No. 1186 in the Suppl. of 1808 to the Moravian H. Bk. 1801 (1886, No. 381). [J. M.]

Mensel, willt du leben seliglich. M. Luther. [The Ten Commandments.] Written as a concise version for Catechetical use; and lat pub. in the Geystliche gesangk Buchleyn, Wittenberg, 1524. Thence in Wackernagel, iii. p. 17, in 5 st. of 4 l., and Kyrioleis. In Schircks's ed. of Luther's Geistl. Lieder, 1854, p. 50, and the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 364. Bode, p. 279, cites the Allg. Litter. Zeitung, Jena, 1803, No. 283, as saying that st. i. is found in a practically identical form in a Quedlinburg Ms. of 1481. Tr. as:—

Wilt thou, 0 man, live happily. By R. Massie, in his M. L.'s Spir. Songs, 1854, p. 53, repeated in the Ohio Luth. Hyt., 1880, and by Dr. Bacon, 1884, p. 43.

Other fre. are:—(1) "Man, wylt thou lyve vertuously," by Bp. Coverdale, 1639 (Remains, 1846, p. 545); (2) "H thou a holy life wouldst see," by Br. J. Hunt, 1853, p. 82; (3) "Man, seekest thou to live in bliss," by Dr. G. Macdonald, in the Sunday Mag., 1867, p. 571. In his Exolics, 1876, p. 87, it begins, "Man, wouldst thou live all blissfully."

Mentzer, Johann, was b. July 27, 1658, at Jahmen, near Rothenburg, in Silesia, and became a student of theology at Wittenberg. In 1691 he was appointed pastor at Merzdorf; in 1693 at Hauswalde, near Bischofswerda; and in 1696 at Kemnitz, near Bernstadt, Saxony. He d. at Kemnitz, Feb. 24, 1734 (G. F. Otto's Lexicon . . . Oberlausizischer Schriftsteller, ii., 581; Ms. from Pastor Richter of Kemnitz, &c.).

He was a great friend of J. C. Schwedler, of Henriette Catherine von Gersdorf, and of N. L. von Zinzendorf, all hymn-writers, and all his near neighbours. He was himself greatly tried in the furnace of affliction. He wrote a large number of hymns, over 30 of which appeared in the various hymn-books of his time. Many of them, especially those of Praise and Thanksgiving, and those of Cross and Consolation, are of high merit, though sometimes exaggerated and not very refined in their imagery, and are full of ardent love to Christ, Scriptural, poetical, and also popular in style.

The only one in English C. U. is:-

O dass ich tausend Zungen hätte. Praise and Thanksgiving. His best hymn. 1st pub. as No. 496, in Freylinghausen's G. B., 1704, in 15 st. of 6 l., and repeated in many later colls., as the Uno. L. S., 1851, No. 719.

as the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 719.

Lauxmann, in Kock viii. 350, says this bymn was written in 1704 after his house was burned down. In reply to enquiries addressed to Kemuitz, pastor Richter informs me that the parsonage house there was built in the years 1898 and 1897, and has never been burned down. In 1897 a farmhouse near was destroyed by lightning, and possibly Mentzer may have been living there at the time; or at any rate this may have suggested the hymn and the story. Lauxmann speaks of the hymn as having been a great favourite of Caroline Perthes of Hamburg, and of J. C. Schlipalius of Dreaden, and relates various incidents regarding its blessed and comforting effects.

The trs. in C. U. are :—

1. Oh that I had a thousand voices! A mouth. A full tr. by Dr. H. Mills, in his Hore Gor., 1845 (1856, p. 189); repeated, abridged, in the American Luth. Gen. Synod's Coll., 1850-52, the Ohio Luth. Hyl., 1880, &c.

2. Oh be unceasing praise ascending. A good tr. of st. i., vii., viii., by A. T. Russell, as No. 203, in his Ps. & Hys., 1851.

3. Oh would I had a thousand tongues. A good tr., omitting st, ix., x., xiii., by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger., 1st Ser., 1855, p. 170; and repeated, abridged, in the Meth. N. Conn. H. Bk., 1863.

4. 0 would, my God, that I could praise Thee. A good tr., in the original metre, by Miss Winkworth, in her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 5, being of st. i., iii.-v, xiv., xv. This was repeated in the Erang. Hyl., N. Y., 1880. An altered form, beginning with st. iii., "O all ye] powers that God implanted," is in Dr. Knight's] Coll., Dundee, 1871 and 1874.

 I praise Thee, 0 my God and Father. By Miss Winkworth, in her G. B. for England, 1863, No. 6. This is of st. vi.-viii., xi., xii., and follows the text of Bunsen's Versuch, 1833, No. 846, this st. beginning there, "Lob sei dir, treuer Gott und Vater." Her tr. is repeated in Dr. Thomas's Augustine H. Bk., 1866.

Other trs. are :

(1) "O that a thousand tongues were granted," by N. L. Frothinghoun, 1870, p. 185. (2) "O that a thousand tongues were mine, And each," by Dr. Alexander Mair in the Family Treasury, 1872, p. 482.

Other hymns by Mentzer, tr. into English but not in C. U., are:-

ii. Du gebest in den Garten beten. Passiontide. 1st pub. in the Löbau G. B., 1726, as No. 370, in 12 st. of 6 l., marked as by Mentzer and entitled "The true school of prayer of Jesus, praying on the Mount of Olives, Matt. xxvi. 38-46." In the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 223, beginning "Du gebts zom Garten um au beten," and wrougly ascribed to B. Schmolck. ??- as "Into the garden enade to pray," by J. Kelly, in the Family Treasury, 1888, p. 661.

iii. Was das Elsinod will erlangen. Christian Warfare. A call to scittinal energy, founded on 1 Co. iz.

11. Wer cas Mained will erlanged. Cartesian War-fare. A call to spiritual energy, founded on 1 Cor. ix. 24, 25. Included as No. 783 in the New-ov-mehrtes Geistreiches G. B., Berlin, 1711, in 6 st. of 8 1.; and previously in Schlechtiger's G. B., Berlin, 1704. In the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 679. Tr. as "Who would make the prize his own." By Miss Winkworth, 1858, (J. M.)

Mercer, William, M.A., b. at Barnard Castle, Durham, 1811, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge (B.A., 1835). In 1840 he was appointed Incumbent of St. George's, Sheffield. He d. at Leavy Greave, Sheffield, Aug. 21, 1873. His principal work was :-

The Caurch Pealler and Hymn Book, comprising The Pealter, or Pealms of David, together with the Camicles, Pointed for Chanting; Four Hundred Metrical Hymns and Six Responses to the Commandments; the whole united to appropriate Chants and Tunes, for the use of Commandments. At Manufacture, when the Peal Williams. Congregations and Fundities, by the Rev. William Mercer, M.A. . . Assisted by John Goss, Etg. . . 1854; enlarged 1856; issued without music, 1867; quarto ed. 1860; rearranged ed. (Oxford edition) 1864; Appendix

For many years this collection was at the head of all the hymn-books in the Church of England, both in circulation and influence. Its large admixture of Wesleyan hymns, and of translations from the German gave it a distinct character of its own, and its grave and solemn music was at one time exceedingly popular. To it Mercer contributed several translations and paraphrases from the Latin and German, the latter mainly from the Moravian hymn-books; but his hymn-writing was far less successful than his editing, and has done nothing to increase his reputation. [See England, Hymnody, Church of, § IV.] [J. J.]

Mercy alone can meet my case. J. Montgomery. [Lent.] In Holland's Memoirs of Montgomery this hymn is referred to under the following circumstances. Speaking to Holland on April 3, 1825, of the Rev. Peter Haslem, Montgomery said :-

"On Studay afternoon be preached in Carver Street Chapel (Sheffield); there were few persons present besides myaelf and some servant girls. What were the divisions or the style of his sermon I do not recollect; but the text—'O save me for Thy mercles' sake' (Pa vi. 4)—was so powerfully impressed upon my mind that it has never since ceased to influence me; hundreds and thomands of times have I repeated it in meditation and prayer, and I feel at this moment that if I am saved at last, it must be through the free, unmerited mercy of God, exercised towards me for the Saviour's sake."—

Vol. iv. p. 103.

To this Holland adds the note:-

"How deep an impression these words made upon the poet's heart may also be inferred from his hymn, of which they are the theme. It was composed under the collonnade at Learnington, October 30, 1819, in the midst of much desolation of soul, and is a just picture of the author's feelings at the time."—Vol. iv. p. 103.

The hymn was pub. in Montgomery's Christian Psalmist, 1825, No. 463, in 5 st. of 4 l., and headed with Mr. Haslem's text, "O save me for Thy mercies' sake"; and in his Original Hymns, 1853, No. 173, [J, J, j]

Merlo, Jacques, sometimes Meilo, sometimes Horst, and sometimes Horstius, was b. of poor parents at Horst, in Germany, 1597, became a parish priest at Cologne, and d. there in 1644. He was the author of the Paradisus Anime Christiane, Cologne, 1630, which has been several times translated, and recently partly by Dr. Pusey in 1847, and in full by Canon F. Oakeley in 1850, as The Paradise of the Christian Soul, and in which several Latin hymns by older writers were embodied. So far as we are aware he was not the writer of hymns.

Merrick, James, M.A., was b. in 1720, and educated at Oxford, where he became a Fellow of Trinity College. He entered Holy Orders, but his health would not admit of parish work. He d. at Reading, 1769. His publications include :-

tions include:—
(1.) Mestah, a Divine Bray. Humbly dedicated to the Reverend the Vice-Chancellor of the University of Oxford and the Visitors of the Free School in Reading. By James Merrick, Atal. 14, Senior Scholar of the School at their last Terminal Visitation, the tilt of October, 1734. Reading. (2) The Destruction of Troy. Translated from the Greek of Tryphiodorus into Magliek Verse, with Notes, dc. 1742. (3) Poems on Sacred Subjects. Oxford. 1763. (4) The Praims of David Translated or Paraphased in Buglish Verse. By James Merrick, M.A., late Fellow of Trimity College, Oxford. Reading. J. Carnan and Co. 1765. 2nd ed. 1766. A few only of these paraphrases were divided into etanxes. In 1797 the Rev. W. D. Tattersell pub. the work "Divided into stanzas for Parochial Use, and paraphrased in such lenguage as will be intelligible to paraphrased in such language as will be intelligible to every capacity . . . with a suitable Collect to each Psalm from the Works of Archbishop Parker."

Merrick's paraphrases, although weak and verbose, were in extensive use in the early part of the present century, both in the Church of England and with Nonconformists. They have, however, fallen very much into disuse. Those in modern hymn-books, mainly in the form of centos, include :-

- 1. Biest Instructor, from Thy ways. Pt. siz.
 2. Descend, O Lord': from heaven descend. Ps. czliv.
 (In time of National Peril.)
 2. Far as creation's bounds extend. Ps. czlv.

 - Far as creation's bounds extend. Ps. cafe.
 God of my strength, the wise, the just. Ps. xxxi.
 He who with generous pity glows. Ps. xli.
 How pleasant, Lord, Thy dwellings are. Ps. lcxxxii.
 Lift up your voice and thankful sing. Ps. cxxxii.
 Lord, my Shepherd's hand divine. Ps. xxiii.
 Lord, my Strength, to Thee I pray. Ps. xxiii.
 My heart its noblest theme has found. Ps. xiv.

- Sunday Morning.)
 17. The morn and eve Thy praise resound. Ps. izv.
- Marpest.) 18. To Thy pastures, fair and large. Ps. 2011.

From his Poems on Sacred Subjects, 1763, the following centos have also come into C. U.:

 Author of good, to Thee we turn. Resignation.
 Eternal God, we look to Thee. Resignation.
 Tis enough, the hour is come. Nunc Dimittis. [J. J.]

Messiah! at Thy glad approach. M. Bruce. [Advent.] This hymn, which we have ascribed to M. Bruce (q.v.) on evidence given in his memoir in this work, was written probably about 1764-65, for a singing class at Kinnesswood, Scotland, and was first pub. by John Logan in his Poems, 1781, p. 113, No. 7, in 6 st. of 4 l. Although a vigorous hymn, and possessing much poetic beauty, it has not come into extensive use. In the American Church Praise Bk., N. Y., 1881, st. vi. and iv. are given as "Let Israel to the Prince of Peace." Orig. text as in Logan's Poems in Dr. Grosart's Works of M. Bruce, 1865, p. 144.

Metcalf, Lucy E. [Akerman, Lucy E.]

Methinks I stand upon the rock. Kelly. [Balaam. The Safety of God's people.] 1st pub. in Kelly's Coll. of Ps. & Hys., 1802, No. 271, and again in his Hymns, 1st ed. 1804, and later editions, in 9 st. of 6 l. (ed. 1853, No. 290). In Hall's Mitre H. Bk., 1836, No. 121, appeared "Come, let us stand as Balsam stood," in 3 st. of 6 l. This has usually been attributed to E. Osler. It is a cento, st. i., ii. being st. i., ii. altered from this hymn by Kelly, and st. iii. an addition probably by Osler, who assisted Hall in preparing the Mitre H. Bk. In the Hall mss. there is no ascription of authorship.

Methodist Hymnody.—Methodism has made liberal contributions to the hymnody of the Christian Church. Before the first Methodist Society was formed, its founders saw the importance of singing in religious worship, and provided, out of the best available material then at command, a collection of Psalms and Hymns for that purpose. John Wesley made some excellent translations of German hymns, and his brother, Charles Wesley, began to write spiritual songs immediately after his conversion. His father, the Rector of Epworth, and his elder brother, S. Wesley, jun., had each written a few good hymns at a still earlier date, which remain in use at the present time. Charles Wesley continued to write hymns for nearly fifty years, and he has left over six thousand five hundred hymns and sacred poems, some of which are amongst those most frequently found in collections used in public worship. Some of the followers of J. Wesley have also contributed hymns, both in the last and in this century, which have been included in many collections, and are of permanent interest.

Before dealing with the hymnody of the various Methodist bodies, it will be necessary to present some details concerning the rise and development of the principal sources from which all Methodist hymnody is derived. These sources are the Poetical Works of John and Charles Wesley.

i. Poetical Works of John and Charles Wesley.—Charles Wesley pub. about fifty different books and tracts of hymns, from different books and tracts of hymns, from 1745. From two only of these have selections been nearly all of which hymns have been selected made. 4 Short Victo of the Differences between the for use in the churches. When he was a "Missioner in Georgia," John Wesley prepared and published A Collection of Psalms and Hymns, which he described, in an enlarged edition of Wood's Athenæ Oxoniensis, as of the year 1736, but the imprint on the title-page is " Charles-Town, printed by Lewis Timothy, 1737." This work was the first collection of hymns published for use in the Church of England. The volume "illustrates his care to provide for the spiritual wants of those to whom he ministered; his earnest and serious temper; and his prominent ecclesiasticism." On his return to England, he prepared a new edition of that collection, and issued it in 1738. It is a 12mo book of 84 pages. Of the American book, only one copy is known to exist; of the English reprint of 1738 three copies are known, one of which is in the Lambeth Palace library. [For details, see England, Hymnody, Church of, §1.]

The first Methodists at Oxford sang psalms in proportion to their earnestness in religion; when they declined and shrank from the repreach of serious godliness, the singing in their meetings was given up. After the conversion of the two Wesleys, in May, 1738, singing was resumed; and from that time to the present, frequent singing has been an essential part of Methodist worship. To encourage this form of service, J. Wesley, as early as 1742, provided tune-books for the use of his followers (some of which are in use at the present time) and that all might learn to sing, be printed the melody only. We will now enumerate the original poetical works of J. and C. Wesley in detail.

of J. and C. Wesley in detail.

1. The first collection pub, by John and Charles Wesley with their names on the title-page was entitled Hymns and Sacred Poems, 1739, 12mo, pp. 223, and contained 139 hymns. This was reprinted the same year without the Poems, and a third ed., nuabridged, is also dated 1739. In this book are given the first of Charles Wesley's compositions, and out of this volume to hymns were selected for the Wes. H. Bk., 1780. A fourth ed. appeared in 1743, and another in 1747.

2. Early in 1740 appeared Hymns and Sacred Poems, an entirely new book of 209 pages, with 96 hymns, and amongst them some of the most popular now in use, including "O for a thousand tongues to sing," (p. 428, i.), and "Jesu, lover of my soul" (p. 590, i.). This volume supplied 84 hymns to the Wes. H. Hk., 1780.

This volume supplied be ayone to use wes. A. As., 1780.

3. In 1741 the Wesleys issued A Collection of Ptalms and Hymns, a volume of 126 pages, containing 165 compositions. This was not a reprint of the 1738 book, though containing a few of the pieces therein, but the Fradma were C. Wesley's version of various Psalms, and the Hymna were new. Only 3 of these found their way into the Wesley's here of 1780. After the death of John Wesley, Dr. Coke made additions thereto which doubled its size. It came into general use, so that the Conference of 1816 recommended it for "use in Methodist Congregations in the forencon," from which it came to be called The Horning Hymn Book, and such it remained till 1831, when the Suppl. was added to the 1780 book.

4. In 1741 appeared Hymns on God's Eccrisating Love, in 36 pages, containing 38 new hymns, of which 19 are in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780. The 2nd ed. contains 84 pages; the 3rd 18 dated 1770.

5. In 1742 a new volume of Hymns and Sacred Poems appeared, with 304 pages and 155 new hymns, of which

5. In 1124 a new volume of Hymn and Sacras Poens, appeared, with 304 pages and 155 new hymns, of which 102 were selected for the Wes. H. Bk. of 1780.

6. An enlarged ed. of the collection of Psalms and Hymns appeared in 1743, containing 138 hymns, 17 of which are in the 1780 book.

7. In 1744 three tracts of hymns were issued, with the titles of Hymns for the Nativity, 18 hymns; Hymns for the Wacknight, 11; and Funeral Hymns, 18. From these three 10 hymns are in the Wes. H. Bk.

Moravians and J. and C. Wesley contains 6 hymns, 3 of which are in the Wes. H. Bk. The second is a most important work: Hymns on the Lord's Supper by Charles Wesley, a volume of 141 pages and 166 hymns, with a preface concerning the Caristian Secrament and Secrifice, extracted from Dr. Brevint." From this work 20 hymns were estected for the Wes. H. Hk. of 1780. The Hys. for the Lord's Supper have been often reprinted, but generally without the preface, which was never intended, as Charles Wesley has only versified portions of Dr. Brevint's remarks, in some of the hymns. In the extracts from Dr. Brevint the doctrine of the True and Real Presence is taught, and Charles Wesley embodies the teaching of the preface in his verses. In the fourth section "Concerning the Sacrament as a Means of Grace," and in paragraph 5, are these words in reference to the efficacy of the Death of Christ: "This victim having been effered up in the fulness of times, and in the midst of the world, which is Christ's great Temple, and having been thence carried up to Heaven, which is His Sancauary; from thence spreads Salvation all around, as the burnt-offering did its smoke. And thus His Body and Blood have everywhere, but especially work 20 hymns were selected for the Wes. H. Bk. of 1780, thus His Body and Riod have everywhere, but especially at this Sacrament, a true and real presence." Catching the same inspiration, Charles Wesley expresses the same kies in at least seven of the hymns which follow:—

Hy. 33. "Drink Thy blood for sinners shed Taste Thee in the broken Bread."

Hy. 57. " Who shall say how bread and wine God into man conveys: How the bread His fleah imparts, How the wine transmits His blood?"

Hy, 65, "Now on the sacred table laid Thy flesh becomes our food,"

Hy, 77, " Taste Thee in the broken Bread Drink Thee in the mystic wine." Hy. 81. " We come with confidence to find

Thy real presence here. Hy. 116. "To every faithful soul appear And shew Thy real presence bere."

Hy. 124. "Yet may we celebrate below And daily thus Thine offering shew Exposed before Thy Father's eyes In this tremendous mystery: Present Thee bleeding on the tree Our Everlasting sacrifice."

It is worthy of remark, that Charles Wesley, in his Journals, makes no mention of the publication of this wotume of Hymns during the year 1745, but from Feb-ruary to July of that year, he makes special mention of about a dozen Sacramental Services, which are described about a dozen Sacramental Services, which are described as occasions of much blessing to himself and to others; and during the octave of Easter he communicated every day. The latter half of the year, the subject is scarcely mentioned. It seems probable, therefore, that the book was passing through the press during the months when he was so much under Sacramental influence and power.

was passing through the press during the morths when he was so much under Sacramental influence and power. In justice to C. Wesley, it should be recorded, that the "real presence" is not alluded to in any of the six thousand hymns he wrote, apart from this 1745 book, nor did he ever allude to it in his pulpit discouraes. In his Journals, he names many instances of his baptizing adult persons, but the subject of Holy Baptism does not seem to have inspired his muse, except in "God of eternal trush and love," in the Hymns for the use of Fumilies, 1787, and one or two others. This is the more noticeable when it is considered how strict he was generally in observing the ordinances of the Church.

9. The year 1746 was a remarkable one for the variety of subjects which occupied Charles Wesley's poetle mind; no less than nine separate tracts of hymns were issued during that year, including Hymns for Times of Trouble; Hymns and Prayers for Children; On the Trouble, Hymns and Prayers for Children; On the Trivity; On the Great Festivals; of Petition and Thanksgiving for the Promite of the Pathic; for out after Meat; and for the Public Thanksgiving in October of that year. These introduced 154 new compositions, of which only 12 found their way into the Wes. H. Bk. of 1780. The Petitical Hymns had Lampe's Tunes issued with them, which insured for them a long term of popularity.

10. Only one new work was issued in 1747; Humns term of popularity.

10. Only one new work was issued in 1747: Hymns r those that neek and those that have Redemption in for those that seek and these that have Redemption in the Blood of Jesus Christ, containing T2 pages and 52 new bymns, 25 of which were placed in the 1780 book.

11. In 1749, C. Wesley wrote a number of hymns on Marrisge, the subject being then uppermost in his mind, but they were not then printed. He was nurried in the spring of 1749, and when the arrangements were made with his brother respecting his stipend, the question of house-furnishing was not considered. To meet the emergency, C. Wesley gathered up all his unpublished compositions, and, without consulting his brother John, issued them in two volumes. The work was sold by subscription through the preachers, was a great success, and fully accomplished the object contemplated. Those volumes extend to 658 pages, with 455 new hymns, with the old title "Hymns and Stared Poems." In that work will be found the largest number of the author's best hymns, and it has yielded 143 compositions to the 1730 book. positions to the 1780 book.

12. In 1750 only two hypn tracts appeared, Hymns for New Year's Day, and Hymns Occasioned by the Earthquake, March 8th. The first contained 7 new bymns, one of which has been in use in Methodist Services, once at least every year since it appeared viz.:—the hymn song at the close of every watch-night Service, commencing "Come let us anew, our journey pursue." The 2 hymns selected from the Earthquake Tract ("Woe to the men on earth who dwell," and "By faith we find the place above") are said to be amongst the boldest of the poet's theological conceptions. In 1763 appeared Hymns and Spiritual Songs intended for the use of Real Christians. This was followed in 1766 by an enlarged edition of the Earthquake Hymns, with 22 hymns; and Hymns for the Fast Day, Feb. 6th, with 17 new hymns, of which 6 are in the 1780 book.

13. In 1768 was issued Hymns of Interestion for all vices, once at least every year since it appeared : viz. :-

1780 DOOK.

13. In 1768 was issued Hymns of Intercession for all Mankind, but being without author's name, the popular judgment hymn given therein, "Lo! he comes with clouds descending" (p. 681, i.), was, for nearly a century, attributed to Martin Madan. This tract has 34 pages and 40 new hymns, of which 3 are in the 1780 book.

14. There new works were issued in 1759, namely.

and 40 new hymns, of which 3 are in the 1780 book.

14. Three new works were issued in 1769, namely, Funeral Hys., enlarged to To pages, with 43 new hymns; Hymns for the Expected tenasion, with 8 new hymns; and Hymns to be used on the Thanksgiving Day, November 29, and after it 24 pages, with 16 new hymns.

16. In 1761 appeared a volume of 144 pages and 134 hymns, with the title, Hymns for those to whom Christ is All in All. This was a selection intended for popular use; it reached a 3rd ed. During the same year, John Weeley issued a volume of Schet Hymns, for the Use of Christians of all Denominations, to which was added an admirable selection of Tanes Annex. This useful an almirable selection of Tanes Annex. an admirable selection of Trans. Annext. This useful volume was used at the Foundry; a 2nd ed., corrected, was issued in 1765, a 3rd in 1770, and a 4th in 1773. In 1761, to encourage and improve the vocal part of Divine Service, John Wesley issued Sacred Melody; or, a Choice Collection of Pasks and Hymn Tunes; another book of Tunes called Sacred Harmony, and an abridged ed, of the latter.

16. One of Charles Wesley's largest contributions to 16. One of Charles Wesley's largest contributions to the service of song in the Church appeared in 1702, and was entitled Short Hymns on Select Passages of Boly Scripture, 2 vols., containing no fewer than 2030 new com-positions, out of which 99 were selected for the 1730 book. This work was rigidly revised by the author; and was republished in a somewhat condensed form, in 2 vols., 1794-96, after the author's death. In that work

2 vols., 1794-98, after the author's death. In that work are some popular hymns, and elegant renderings of Scripture phraseology.

17. Hymns for Children appeared in 1763, with 100 new compositions; and Hymns for the Tre of Families in 1767, a volume of 176 pages and 188 hymns. In the same year came Hymns on the Trinity, with 132 pages and 182 hymns. From these three works 51 hymns are selected for the Wes. H. Bh., 1780. Five or six other tracts of hymns followed, but out of these only one hymn found its way into the 1831 Supplement to the Wes. H. Bk. taken from Hymns for the National Faut Day, February 2th, 1782.

These over the covering publications from

These are the original publications from which are derived all the Wesley hymns now in use in the Hymnals of all the churches. All these volumes and tracts (except the Ps. & Hys. printed at Charlestown in 1736-37), with Age. princed at Charlestown in 1750-37, with fac similes of title pages, are reprinted in the Poetical Works of John and Charles Wesley, Lond. 1868-72 (13 volumes), and the same are tabulated with dates, titles, pages, sizes and number of hymns, in G. J. Stevenson's Methodist H. Bk. Notes, 1883, p. 635.

ii. Wesleyan Methodists.—1. With such a variety was a seried with the reconstruction.

variety of works, most of which were occasionally used by the Methodist Societies, much confusion and difficulty naturally arose, so that John Wesley did wisely when, in 1779, (soon after he had opened his chapel in the City Road, London), he prepared out of those numerous works a collection for general use in all his societies, which was issued in 1780. The necessity for such a work was felt all over the country. It extended to 504 pages, and 16 pages of contents and index, and included 525 hymns. The contents were divided into the five parts and twenty sections as still retained in the revised ed. of 1875. The 2nd ed., corrected, appeared in 1781, the 3rd in 1782, the 4th 1784, 5th 1786, 6th 1788, 7th 1791. Up to 1791 it remained unaltered, although, every edition having to be set up afresh, errors had crept in. These increased till 1797, when a few of the preschere presumed to prepare a new edition, which they issued with an ornamental title-page. In it about 36 hymns were changed, and some of the favourite hymns of the people, designedly excluded by J. Wesley, were included, and at the end 25 additional hymns were given, making the total 550. edition gave so little satisfaction to the people that the Conference of 1799 appointed Dr. Coke, G. Storey, H. Moore, and Adam Clarke "to reduce the large Hymn Book to its primitive simplicity, as in the second edition, with liberty to add a note in places to explain difficult passages for the sake of the unlearned, and with discretionary power in respect to the additional hymns." They rigidly revised the book, omitted 6 of the additional hymns, extended the work to 560 hymns and published it in 1800. The added hymns introduced a new and important feature into the collection, which is a distinct landmark (so to speak) in the history of Methodism, by including 7 hymns by C. Wesley on The Lord's Supper. All the unsold copies of the 1797 book were destroyed, and the revised edition remained unaltered for thirty years.

2. The publication at Manchester in 1825 of a piratical edition of the Collection, together with copyright needs, and the desire for greater variety of hymns, led the Conference to appoint the Revs. Thomas Jackson and Richard Watson to make such a selection as would meet the wishes of the people, and in 1831 a Supplement was issued, extending the collection from 560 to 769 hymns. These were chosen from some of Charles Wesley's original MSS.; from his Festival Hymns and from the collection of Psalms and Hymns then known as the Morning Hymn Book. Many from Dr. Watts were also added, and a few of a popular character which were favourities with the people. The Preface is dated November 9, 1830, and in this Dictionary the date of this Supplement is given as 1830, the date of the Preface. Of the entire collec-tion, including this Supplement, 668 hymns are by the Wesleys (father and three sons), and 101 by 20 other authors. Dr. Watta is represented by 66. Only two hymns in the book are specially adapted for Holy Baptism, one by Dr. Doddridge, commencing "See Israel's gentle Shepherd stand;" the other by C. Wesley, "God of eternal truth and love."

S. The copyright of the entire collection had for some years depended on only a few hynns, and when the right in those had run out, a new collection became a necessity. A collection was issued by a London publisher independently of the Conference, in 1873. It was an improvement on the 1831 book. It was compiled by a layman at Bristol, and included 1076 hymns, amongst them being many of the best modern compositions, and 71 chants and anthems. The Wesleyan Conference, however, could not recognise the work, and the Book Committee were obliged to prepare a new collection. A large committee took the matter in hand, and devoted much time and care thereto. The edition of 1800 up to hymn 539 was retained, but each hymn was compared with the original, and rigidly criticised; a few were omitted altogether; others had verses left out, or added; and in this way 49 hymns were changed in the standard part of the collection. The new Supplement includes 487 hymns. Its contents embrace what may be designated as a poetical body of divinity. In this respect it is more complete than the book prepared by John Wesley, in that it includes hymns for Holy Baptism, the Lord's Supper, and Prayers for children. It is divided into nine sections, in which the hymns are classified according to their subjects, or the season for which they are adapted, a special feature being the "Select Psalma." The authors and translators number 120. Of these 74 contribute each one hynm, and of the rest 41 have hymns therein, numbering from 2 to 9 each, the total ending with 11 by P. Doddridge, 13 by J. Montgomery, 58 by I. Watts, and 724 by C. Wesley. For the first time the authors' names are added in the index of first lines. The Methodist Hymn Book, illustrated with Biography, History, Incident, and Anecdote, by George John Stevenson, M.A., 1883, deals with this collection in an exhaustive manner.

4. Taken as a whole, whilst allowing for its distinct and definite advocacy of Methodist doctrine, and admitting the otherwise great preponderance of C. Wesley's hymns, we judge this book as ranking with the best in use amongst Protestant Christians. It is intensely Methodistic, and it is more. It retains the Standard Hymn Book, not wrongly so-called, which John Wesley gave to his people in 1780; and it has added thereto much that is choice and valuable from most branches of the Church of Christ. The wisdom displayed by the Conference in retaining the Standard portion of the old collection is realized when we find that it has done more to conserve the essential doctrines of Methodism amongst the multitude than the combined prose writings of all her divines.

5. The provision for Children and Young Persons, which is an important feature in modern 'hymnody, is not new, either in Methodism, or elsewhere. For the Methodists C. Wesley pub. his Hymns for Children, in 1763. Many of these compositions are far beyond the comprehension of children, but their object was attained in drawing attention to the spiritual wants and education of the young. In 1814, Joseph Benson, a preacher and divine of high reputs with the Methodists, published:—

Hymns for Children and Young Persons, on the Principal Truths and Duties of Religion and Morality. Selected from various Authors, and arranged in a natural and Systematic Order. London, 1806.

Joseph Benson also published eight years afterwards:—

Hymns for Children, selected chicky from the publications of the Revs. John and Charles Wesley, and Dr. Watts, and arranged in proper Order. London, 1814.

From the Preface to the first of these collections (the second has no preface), we find that it was compiled and published "to meet the wishes of many persons in different parts of the United Kingdom," but there is no indication that it (or the second collection either) had the official sanction of the Conference, although "printed at the Conference Office." The Conference, however, took up the matter at a later date, and in 1835 Thomas Jackson and Richard Watson, "compiled by the direction of the Methodist Book Committee in London":—

A Collection of Hymns for the Use of Wesleyan-Methodist Sunday Schools. London, 1835.

At the request of the same "Book Committee of the Wesleyan Conference," Dr. W. H. Rule compiled, and the Conference published, in 1857:—

The Wesleyan-Methodist Sunday-School Hymn-Book. London, 1967.

This was followed in 1870 by a "Selection of hymns suitable for use in Day and Sunday Schools," . . . "made by a number of Ministers, at the request of the Wesleyan Methodist Book Committee," which was compiled chiefly by the Rey. Samuel Lees, and published as:—

The Methodist Scholars' Hymn-Book. London, 1870.

Finally, in 1879, there was issued, after some delay which is apologised for in the preface:—

The Methodist Sunday-School Hymn-Book. A Collection of Hymns and Spiritual Songs for the in Schools and Families. Compiled by Direction of the Wasteyan Methodist Conference. London, 1879.

This collection of 589 hymns, by a very large number of authors, is not only the best hymn-book for children extant amongst the Methodist Societies, but it has no equal elsewhere except the Church of England Children's Hymn-Book by Mrs. Carey Brock. Both the official hymn-books issued by the Conference have suitable tunes pub, with some of the editions. [See Ohildren's Hymns, 8 iv.]

of the editions. [See Children's Hymns, § iv.] iii. Methodist New Connexion.—1. This branch of the Methodist family originated in 1796; the cause being the exclusion of Alexander Kilham from the ministry by the Conference of that year. From the time of J. Wesley's death, those preachers whom he had ordained had occasionally administered the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper. One of the old preachers who had done so, was much blamed for his conduct. Mr. Kilham wrote a defence of his conduct in An Address to the Members and Friends of the Newcastle Society, in which he also discussed the question of the right of the people to have the Sacrament from their own preachers. That address, in pamphlet form, was much commended by many of the old preachers, including Dr. Coke, H. Moore, J. Pawson, T. Taylor, W. Bramwell, S. Bradburn, and others, some of whom freely distributed the Address in their circuits. They also, by letters, encouraged Kilham to continue his advocacy of the rights of the people to the privileges asked for by them. Kilham wrote and spoke freely on the subject for a few years, and for so doing he was, at the desire of Mr. Mather, censured by the Conference of 1793. Other preachers, including Mr. Taylor and Mr. Bradburn, had also published their opinions in support of Kilham's views, but they were not censured. For this act of partiality, the Conference was blamed, and Kilham was encouraged by many preachers who desired to conciliate the Societies rather than the Conference. At the Conference of 1795, some steps were taken to reconcile the contending parties, under the name of the "Plan of Pacification," but it did not fully meet the case. Soon afterwards Kilham published a pemphlet entitled The Progress of Liberty, in which he pointed out the defects in the Plan of 1795, and sketched the Outline of a Constitution. This Outline included the following principles:—

1st. That the power to admit and expel members should be the act of the preachers with the consent of the people. 2. The members to have advice in choosing their leaders. 3. That local preachers be examined and admitted by preachers and lay officers conjointly. 4. That Quarterly Meetings should have a voice in recommending young men as preachers. 5. That the people have the right to representation in all the Church Courts, including the Annuai Conference. 6. That religious worship be held in such hours as were most convenient for the people. 7. That the Societies receive the Sacraments of Baptism and the Lord's Supper from the hands of their own Ministers.

For publishing this pamphlet, and advocating the principles it contained, Kilham was tried and expelled from the ministry, in 1796. Those principles became the basis of the Methodist New Connexion, which took permanent form at a Conference held in August 1797, in Ebenezer Chapel, Leeds. Kilham's chief opponent was Alexander Mather, whom J. Wesley had ordained as a bishop to exercise authority in his Societies. The New Connexion was commenced with 9 circuits, 7 itinerant preachers (5 of whom had belonged to the parent Society), and over 5,000 members. It was in defence of the principles advocated by Kilham that the new Society was formed; and the preachers and lay-officers have exercised equal rights in the government of the Society throughout its history.

2. At the first the New Connexion adopted the use of the Wes. H. Bk., but a few years later a Supplement was prepared by order of the Conference, and was designated The Small Hymn Book. It consisted of 276 hymns. This Supplement reached a 5th odition in 1810, and was used till the new hymn-book of 1835 was issued.

3. Soon after the Wesleyans issued their Supplement in 1831, the New Connexion Conference appointed a committee to prepare a revised and enlarged collection for use in their Societies. The Revs. Thomas Mills and William Shuttleworth were the acting members. The Preface says that they took from the Wes. H. Bk. and from its Supplement the best hymns "for poetic merit, happy Scriptural illustration, and those which most clearly expressed breathings after peace and holiness. With these were combined a number of other hymns from various authors, and a few by pious persons of poetic genius, composed for the work." Such hymns only were admitted as "gave prominence to those doctrinal and experimental truths which are the chief glory of Methodism." This work was divided into seven parts, and forty-one sections. All the copyright hymns in the Wes. H. Bk. were omitted, and, as far as the Committee knew them, the names of authors were added to the hymns. This was the first official Methodist Collection with authors' names. The total number of hymns was 664, and of these nearly 50 were new, and by 27 authors not found in the Wes. H. Bk. This book was in use for over a quarter of a century, when it was superseded by the Collection published in 1863.

4. This New Collection was undertaken by a Committee, with the Rev. Henry Piggin as chief acting member. It was first issued in May, 1863, and included 1024 hymns by 130 authors. A collection of suitable tunes for each hymn, prepared by the Rev. James Ogden, has since been published.

5. Whilst Mr. Piggin and his coadjutors were preparing a new collection for congregotional use, the Rev. John Stokoe, then a New Connexion minister, now a clergyman in the Irish Church, was preparing a smaller collection for use in their Sunday schools and homes, which was pub. in December, 1862, with the title The Juvenile Hymn Book. It contains 315 hymns, classified under seventeen sections, with authors' names added to each where known.

iv. Primitive Methodists .-- 1. This branch of the Methodist family originated in 1810 by the expulsion from the Methodist Society of Hugh Bourne (q.v.). Previous to this H. Bourne had compiled a small hymn-book, which he published in 1809. What was long known amongst the Primitives as The Smoll Book was issued in 1821, and consisted of 154 hymns, most of which were by Charles Wesley, and William Sanders, a few by Dr. Watts, and 16 by Bourne. This Small Book was widely known in all parts of the land by the first couplet in the book-

"Christ he sits on Zion's hill, He receives poor sinners still,"

with the chorus:

"I a soldler sure shall be Happy in Eternity.

2. With the growth of the Society, a larger number of hymns was required, and in 1824-25 Bourne prepared and issued what he called the Large Hymn Book, which included 536 hymns. Of these 16 were by William Sanders, 146 were the joint production of William Sanders and Hugh Bourne; a few were by Dr. Watts, Cowper, and Dr. Doddridge; 225 by Charles Wesley; and 20 new hymna by Bourne. A lengthy preface describes the Service of Song as set forth in the Old and New Testaments, and deals with Private Prayer, Preaching, Prayer Meetings, Class Meetings, Love Feasts, Camp Meetings, and Musical Instruments. Bourne says of the new hymns that they are "of a superior cost, and they lead into the mystery of faith."

3. As the Societies increased, a still greater variety of hymns was desired, and the Conference appointed the Rev. John Flesher to prepare an enlarged book. He acknowledges his own inability for performing the duty, but collected 852 hymns "from numerous popular authors, living and deceased, and enriched with original hymns and selected ones, altered or re-made." Mr. Flesher adds: "I had thought my lack of sufficient poetic genius and taste would save me from such an appointment, but when chosen, I was surprised, afraid, and humbled, and durst not disobey." This unqualified editor proceeded to correct and mangle over 225 hymns. It need not be added, that few but himself have approved of his work. In his preface he remarks:-

"Knowing that Providence had not stereotyped the productions of any poet, I have freely altered or re-made hymne from authors of different grades of talent and reputation—an important item in strengthening the copy-

This book, issued in 1854, may be safely described as the worst edited and most severely mutilated collection of hymns ever published.

4. The Conference of 1882 appointed a Committee to prepare an entirely new collection. This was published, in 1887, as The Primitive Methodist Hymnal, compiled by a Committee appointed by the Conference of 1882. It contains 1052 hymns by over 300 known authors and translators (besides hymns by several that are unknown), ranging from the earliest ages of hymnody to the present, and from the Unitarians on the one hand, to the Latin and Greek Churches on the other. It is divided into twelve sections, which are again subdivided: but the arrangement of subjects is more after the manner of the Congregationalists than that usually adopted in Methodist collections, and is the arrangement of Flesher's book simplified. It is supplied with of "texts," of "subjects," &c., and a table of authors and translators," with the numbers of their hymns. This last is in addition to the names of the authors being added to the hymns throughout the book. It is purely and intensely Methodistic, whilst in the number of its authors, in the comprehensiveness of its subjects, in the richness of its poetry, in the care and accuracy displayed in its text, and in the designations of authorship, it has no equal in Methodist hymnody.

5. Provision for the children in the Sunday schools has been made by the publication of the Primitive Methodist Sunday School Hymn Book, in 1879. It was edited by G. Booth, M.D., and William Beckworth. It is an admirable collection, is well edited, and is set to suitable music. Its use is extensive.

v. United Methodist Free Churches. -- 1. These Churches were formed by the amalgamation, in 1857, of several separate Societies, the members of which had formerly belonged to the Wesleyan Methodist Society. The first of these was that known as the Protestant Methodists, who, in 1827-28, came out on the Organ Question at Leeds. Another section was formed in 1834-35, when Dr. Samuel Warren was expelled, the proceedings against him arising chiefly out of the formation at that time of a Theological Institution. These two sections united to form the Wesleyan-Methodist Association. They used the Wes. H. Bk. with a small Supplement added. In 1849-50, owing to the expulsion of the Revs. James Everott. Samuel Dunu, and William Griffith from the Wesleyan Conference, another division re-sulted, and a Society designated the Wesleyan Reformers was established, which soon had fifty thousand adherents. Mr. Everett was | expelled on suspicion of baving written The Fly Sheets and Wesleyan Takings, and published them anonymously; Mr. Dunn for publishing The Wesley Banner, a monthly magazine, and for declining to discontinue the work as desired by the Conference; Mr. Griffith for reporting the proceedings of the Conference in The Wesleyan Times. The body then formed by those who adhered to those ministers, at their Annual Delegate Meeting held in Sheffield, in August, 1852, appointed the Rev. James Everett to prepare a new edition of the Wes. H. Bk., with the addition of such new hymns as would replace the copyright hymns which could not be used. The preface to that book is dated July 1st, 1853. The Supplement contained 243 hymns in addition to the hymns in the Wes. H. Bk. In these were included the compositions of 15 authors not then in the Supplement to the Wes. H. Bk. At the end of this collection there is an index which gives the source whence every hymn in the book is derived, together with the author's name. The collection contains 804 hymns.

2. When the Wesleyan Methodist Association and the Wesleyan Reformers, who united in 1857 to form the Methodist Free Churches, held their annual assembly in Sheffield, in 1859, they resolved to have a new hymn-book, and appointed the Revs. James Everett and Matthew Baxter to prepare the same. They were to retain all the original Wes. H. Bk. of 1780, and add "A Supplement of 250 hymns, and also hymns suitable for a Sunday School." The preface is dated October, 1860. Changes were made in 53 hymns, but none of the new hymns were by authors other than those who had already contributed. From No. 778 to 821 the hymns were all new. Five doxologies and two graces closed the collection of 828 hymns. The Supplement was issued in 1861 as a separate book, with the sub-title Miscellaneous Hymns. Their Sunday School Hymns, 1860, is a fairly good collection.

3. The Methodist Free Churches are compiling a new Coll. of Hymns, which may appear in 1889. A committee of ministers have been employed for a long time in its preparation. The Sunday S. H. Bl. appeared in 1888.

vi. Bible Christians.-1. The founder of this Society was William O'Bryan, a Cornishman, born February 6th, 1778, at Gunwen, Luxillian. His father owned a farm and was a Cornish miner. Both his parents were Methodists, and had heard John Wesley preach. They had preaching services in their own dwelling house. William had a fair education, and the curate of the parish offered to prepare him for college. He was converted under the Methodists in May, 1789, was apprenticed to the drapery business, became worldly, lost his religion, and again gave his heart to God, November 5th, 1795. He heard J. Wesley preach twice, and received his blessing. He began to preach in 1801, was married in 1803, and made a local preacher in 1809. For preaching in villages beyond his own parish, where there was no Methodist preaching, he was expelled from the Methodist Society. Being urged to continue his preaching, he found in North Devon fourteen villages without | B. Gough, J. Lyth, G. S. Rowe, J. Briggs.

any places of worship, and in November, 1814, he left his home to itinerate and preach in those places. In October, 1815, he preached in the house of Mr. Thorne at Shebbear, and, being urged to do so, he then formed those present into a religious Society. This Society was at first known by the name Arminian Bible Christians; afterwards the initial word was dropped, and they have since been known as Bible Christians, and sometimes, locally, Brianites. Their chief Societies are in Cornwall and Devonshire, but they have a few elsewhere. O'Bryan compiled their first hymnbook, about 1819, when their first Conference was held. In 1829 a separation took place. O'Bryan left the body in 1831, and went to America, where he died, January 8th, 1868. For his share in the copyright of the hymnbook, and for other claims, the Conference allowed him twenty pounds a year till he died. The hymn-book is divided into six parts and twenty-eight sections. The hymns are mostly those in use in the Wes. H. Bk., but they are rearranged throughout, and several by 18 other authors were added. In July, 1862, a 4th ed. was issued, with 9 hymns changed, the names of authors added as far as known, the index of Scripture texts enlarged. and an index of verses. The 6th ed. is dated 1882. The Conference of 1885 appointed a committee to prepare a new and more comprehensive collection, to be published in due

2. In 1832, a Sunday School Union for the Bible Christians was formed at Shebbear, in Devonshire, and they published The Child's Hymn Book for use in their schools. In 1863 a new ed. was prepared and published, containing 272 hymns, more than 60 of which were new. That book has served the Connexion nearly a quarter of a century, and is still in favour. The hymns are carefully classified, but no authors' names are given.

vii. Conclusion.—When the Methodist Cicumenical Conference was held in City Road Chapel, in September, 1881, a suggestion was made to have one comprehensive hymn-book for all the branches of Methodism throughout the world. This course, however, has not been adopted.

Translations of English hymns into various European and other languages have been made for use by the various branches of the Methodist Societies on the Continent of Europe and on Mission Stations. In several instances these translations have been supplemented by original hymns in the vernacular, and composed chiefly by the resident missionaries. [See Missions, Foreign.]

The Methodist hymn-writers are very limited in number. The provision made by John and Charles Wesley for every aspect of Methodism, the stereotyped character of each book when issued, the great number of years it had to run before any omissions or additions could be made, and the intense affection of Methodists for their old hymns, have had much to do in producing this result. When at rare intervals outlets for pent-up poetic life were made in new editions of old books, and in collections for children and the young, W. M. Bunting, W. M. Punshon,

E. E. Jenkins, M. G. Pearse, and a few others, have produced lyrics of merit and usefulness; but no great singer has appeared in Methodism since Charles Wesley was gathered to his fathers. [See American Hymnody, p. 58, ii., and [G. J. B.] Various.]

Methodius II., one of the Greek hymn-writers, d. 836. A native of Syracuse, he embraced the monastic life at Constantinople. He was imprisoned for nine years by Michael the Stammerer for his defence of the Icons. He was also scourged for the same cause by Theophilus, but escaped from his prison. At the triumph of the defenders of the Icons, he was made patriarch of Constantinople (842). His pieces are few. Metrophanes of Smyrna, was bishop of Smyrna towards the close of the ninth century. He was a partizan of Rome in her contest with Photius, and an adherent of his rival, Ignatius. He d. circa 910. His chief hymnological works are his Canons in honour of the Blessed Trinity, one of which has been published in Anth. Graec. Carm. Christ., 1871, p. 254. They are eight in all, one for each Tone, and are sung at Matins on Sundays, the Canon changing with the Tone on each succeeding Sunday. A cento only, and that from the Canon for the Sunday of the Second Tone, from the Octoechus, has been rendered into English. This is Dr. Neale's "O Unity of Threefold Light" (Holy Trinity), a tr. of a cento:—Τριφεγγής Moras Θεαρχική, pub. in his Hymns of the E. C., 1862, in 3 st. of 81. In 1867 it was given with a doxology of 4 l. and a slight alteration in the People's Hymnal; and again in the S. P. C. K. Ps. & Hys., the Meusel, Wolfgang, s. of Auton Meusel (Meusslin, Mäusslein, Mosel, Mösel, Musculus, &c.), cooper at Dieuze in Lorraine, was b. at Dieuze, Sept. 8, 1497. He studied for short periods in the schools at Rappoltsweiler, Colmar, and Schlettstadt, between times wandering over the country and earning his way by his singing. In 1512 he happened to come to the Benedictine monastery at Lixheim near Saarburg, just as Vespers were being sung. His beautiful voice, as he joined in, led the monks to receive him, and here he studied music, and became organist to the cloister. In his 20th year he devoted himself to the study of theology, and soon after began to preach in the church at Lixheim, and in the neighbour-ing village churches. In 1518 he became braced his views, but did not leave Lixheim till 1527, after he had declined to be elected as prior. On Dec. 26, 1527, he was formally married at Strassburg to a niece of the former prior at Lixheim. As they were without means she had to take a place as domestic servant, and he, after trying in vain to earn his living as a linen-weaver, was about to attempt to get work as a day-labourer on the fortifications, when he was appointed pastor at the village of Dorlitzheim, near Strassburg. In 1529 he became disconus of the cathedral church at Strassburg, and then, in the beginning of 1531, was sent to Augsburg, where he for some time officiated in the Holy Cross Church, and, after the Reformation had gained the upper hand, became, in 1537, chief pastor of the Cathedral. When the Interim [see Agricola, p. 31, i.] was forced on the magistracy in June, 1548, Meusel left Augsburg. There-after he had to flee from place to place, residing for longer or shorter periods at Basel, Constanz, St. Gall, and Zürich. He finally was invited to Bern as professor of theology, and went there in April, 1549. In gratitude for this timely help he refused various lucrative appointments offered to him from time to time. On Sunday, Aug. 22, 1563, he felt an attack of fever while preaching at Bern, and d. on the following Sunday, Aug. 29, 1563. (Koch, ii. 83; Allg. Deutsche Biog., xxiii. 95, &c.) Meusel's best-known work is his Commentary on the Psalms, pub. in 1550. Eight hymns are ascribed to him, six of which are printed by Wackernagel, iii., Nos. 946-951. A seventh, a tr. of the "Christe, qui lux es et dies," is noted at p. 227, ii. The eighth is:-

Der Herre ist mein treuer Hirt, Hält mich in seiner Hute. Ps. xxiii. This appeared in the Augsburg G. B., 1631, and thence in Wackernagel, ili. p. 122, in 5 st. of 71. lost, and thence in Wackernage, int. p. 122, in sec. of 7: Wackernagel, seeing that Meusel wrote another version of this Psalm (beginning "Mein Hirt ist Gott, der Herre mein"), and that the version above was not given with his name till in the Nürnberg G. B. of 1801, gives it as anonymous. It was included in Babet's G. B., 1845, in most subsequent collections up to 1700, and in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 411. In the Strassburg G. B., 1569, and many later books, it begins "Der Herr ist mein getreuer Hirt." Tr. as:

(1) "The Lord God is my Pastor gude," in the Gude and Godie Ballates, ed. 1588, f. 47 (1888, p. 79). (2) "The Lord my faithful Shepherd is," in the Moravian H. Bk., 1754, pt. ii., p. 374. In the 1789 and later eds. (1888, No. 430) it begins "The Lord my Shepherd is and Guide." (2) "The Lord He is my Shepherd is and Guide." (2) "The Lord He is my Shepherd kin.i," by Miss Manington, 1863, p. 20. [J. M.]

Meyfart, Johann Matthäus, was b. Nov. 9, 1590 at Jena, during a visit which his mother (wife of Pastor Meyfart of Wablwinkel, near Waltershausen, Gotha) was paying to her father. He studied at the Universities of Jena (M.A. 1611; D.D. 1624) and Wittenberg, and was thereafter for some time adjunct of the philosophical faculty at Jena. In 1616, he was appointed professor in the Gymnasium at Coborg and in 1623 director; and during his residence at Coburg was a great moral power. When his colleagues in the Gymnasium made a complaint to the government regarding a dissertation (De disciplina eccleriastica), which he pub. in 1633, he accepted the offer of the professorship of theology in the revived University of Erfurt. He entered on his work at Erfurt, July, 1633, was rector of the University in 1634, and in 1636 became acquainted with Luther's writings and em- also pastor of the Prediger Kirche. He d.

at Erfurt, Jan. 26, 1642 (Koch iii. 117; Allg. Deutsche Biog. xxi. 646, &c.).

Meyfart's devotional works (Tuba poenitentiae prophetica, 1825; Tuba Novissiaa, 1825; Höllisches Sodoma, 1829; Hömnitsches Jerusalem, 1830; Jüngste Gericki, 1832) passed through various editions, and produced a great impression by their vivid picturing and their earnest calls to repentance and amendment of life. His well-meant efforts, by books and otherwise, towards raising the tone of student life in Germany, and his exposition of the excesses and defects in both academical and churchy life at their particle brought him much sile. and churchly life at that period, brought him much ill will and opposition, and did not produce useful fruit till much later. His hymns were few in number, and ap-peared mostly in his devotional books.

Only one of Meyfart's hymns has passed into English, viz.:-

Jerusalem, du hochgebaute Stadt. Jerusalem. This splendid hymn appeared in his Tuba Novissima, Coburg, 1626 [Ducal Library, Gotha], a volume containing four sermons preached at Coburg on the Four Last Things, riz. Death, Last Judgment, Eternal Life, and Eternal Punishment. It forms the conclusion of the third sermon (on St. Matt. xvii, 1-9) which is entitled "On the joy and glory which all the Elect are to expect in the Life everlasting." This conclusion is reprinted verbatim et literatim (i.e. with the introductory and closing sentences, and the connecting sentences between st. i., ii., iii. and iv.) in the Blatter für Hymnologie, 1883, pp. 120-124. The text of the hymn, in 8 st. of 8 l., is given unaltered, according to the marginal directions of the original (save st. vii. l. 6, where the original is "Man spielt"), as No. 1537 in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863. Of it Lauxmann, in Koch viii. 669, says :-

"The hynn is a precious gem in our Treasury of Song, in which one clearly sees that from it the whole beart of the poet shines out on us. Meyfart had his face turned wholly to the Future, to the Last Things; and with a richly fanciful mystician full of deep and strong faith, he united a flaming zeal for the House of the Lord, and against the abuses of his times."

He adds that the hymn was a great favourite with Charles Gützlaff, the apostle of China (d. at Hong-Kong, Aug. 9, 1851), whose last words were "Would God I were in thee " (st. i. l. 3); and of Julius Schnorr of Carolsfeld, the wellknown painter, whose last work was the illustrating of this hymn, and at whose funeral in 1872 it was sung. The popularity of the hymn was greatly aided by the magnificent melody, generally ascribed to Melchior Franck (b. at Zittau, 1580; c. 1604, capellmeister at Coburg; d. at Coburg, June 1, 1639], but not yet traced earlier than to the Erfurt G. B., 1663.

Middleton, Thomas Fanshaw, D.D., s. of Thomas Middleton, Rector of Redieston, in Derbyshire, was b. there on Jan. 26, 1769. He was educated first by his father, then at Christ's Hospital, and finally at Pembroke Hall, Cambridge (B.A. in honours 1792). He was successively Curate of Gainsborough; Rector of Tansor, Northamptonshire, 1795; Vicar of St. Pancras, 1810; Archdeacon of Huntingdon, 1812; and the first bishop of Calcutta, 1814. He d. in Calcutta, July 8, 1822. Bishop Middleton's publications were mainly confined to various Sermons and Charges, and a work on the Greek Article. In 1824 his Sermons and Charges were collected and pub. with a short Memoir, by Dr. H. R. Bonney. At p. xciv. the only hymn ascribed to him is given with the explanation that it was composed by the Bishop "and always sung on new year's day, by his desire." It is: "As o'er the past my mem'ry strays" (New Year), in 4 st. of 4 l. It was printed in the August number of Carus Wilson's Family Visitor, 1826; again in Hall's Mitre Hymnal, 1836, and later in several collections. Orig. text in Bk. of Praise, 1862, p. 238. [J. J.]

Midlane, Albert, was b. at Newport, Isle of Wight, Jan. 23, 1825, and has been engaged in business in that town for many To his Sunday school teacher he ascribes the honour of prompting him to poetic efforts: and the same teacher did much to shape his early life. His first printed hymn, "Hark! in the presence of our God," was written in September, 1842, at Carisbrooke Castle, and printed in the Youth's Magazine in November of the same year. Since then he has written over 300, and of these a large proportion are in C. U. They appeared in magazines and small mission hymn-books, including:-

(1) The Youth's Magazine; (2) The British Messenger; (3) The London Messenger; (4) Trotter's Boangelical Hymn Book, 1860; (5) The Ambatsador's Hymn Book, 1861; (6) Second ed. of the same, 1868; (7) Hymn Book for Youth; (8) Good News for the Little Ones, 1860; (9) William Carter's Gospel Hymn Book, 1862; and several other works of a similar kind.

In addition to several small works in prose, Mr. Midlane has gathered his verse together from time to time and published it as:-

(1) Poetry addressed to Sabbath School Beachers, 1844; (2) Vecta Garland, 1850; (3) Leaves from Olivet 1864; (4) Cospel Echoes, 1865; (5) Above the Bright Blue Sky, 1867; (6) Early Lispings, 1880.

Of the hymns contained in these works nearly 200 have been in C.U. from 1861 to 1887, the most popular being "There's a Friend for little children." The hymn-books, however, in which many of them are found are usually very small, are used in what are commonly known as Gospel Missions, and have gradually given way to other and more important collections. We therefore append only those hymns which are at the present time in use in official or quasi-official hymnbooks, or such collections as have a wide circulation. Those hymns which are omitted from the following list may be found in the works given above, and especially in the Gospel Echoes. The bracketed dates below are those of the composition of the hymns.

The collections in which these hymns are mainly found are Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bk., 1866; Snepp's Songs of G. & G., 1872-3; Hurditch's Enlarged London H. Bk., 1873, and smaller books for Evangelical mission work. Of Mr. Midlane's hymns as a whole, Miller's estimate that "His hymns are full of spiritual thought, careful in their wording, and often very pleasing without reaching the highest form of poetical excellence" (Singers and Songs, p. 572), is just. A marked feature of these hymns is the constant and happy use of Scripture phraseology.

Midst scenes of confusion and creature complaints. D. Denham. [Heaven Anticipated.] This hymn appeared in the 1826 Appendix to J. Rees's Coll., No. 168, in 5 st., and again in Denham's Saint's Melody, &c., 1837, No. 740, in 6 st. of 4 l. It is given in a few collections in G. Britain and America.

Mighty Father! Blessed Son! B. Monsell. [Holy Trinity.] Appeared in his Spiritual Songs, 1857, in 9 st. of 9 l., as the hymn for Trinity Sunday. In the Hymnal Comp., 1876, and the Prim. Meth. Hymnal, 1887, st. i., iv., and ix. of this text are given as No. 197. In Dr. Monsell's Hys. of Love and Praise, 1863, the same hymn is rearranged and partly rewritten (but still retaining the opening lines) in 9 st. of 3 l. Snepp, in printing this form of the hymn in his Songs of G. & G., 1872, has divided it into three parts, and added this note thereto:~

"Note the Symbolic Form—three lines harmonizing in each verse; three verses in each division; three divisions making one hymn.

This form of the text, but usually without these divisions, is also in Thring's Coll., 1882, and others. [J. J.]

Miles, Elizabeth, née Appleton, wes b. at Boston, U.S.A., March 28, 1807, and ology by the production of Our Hymns and married in 1833 to Solomon P. Miles, Head Master of the Boston High School, and afterwards the Principal of a private school for young ladies in the same city. He d. in 1842. On leaving Boston, Mrs. Miles went to reside with her son at Brattleborough, Vermont. Her principal hymns are :-

1. The earth all light and loveliness. Part i. Summer.

2. When on devotion's scraph wing. Part ii., st. v., vii. Forctaste of Heaven. These two parts appeared as one hymn in The Christian Examiner, 1828.

3. Then Who didst stoop below. Looking unto Jesus. Appeared in The Christian Examiner, 1827. Sometimes it begins with st. ii., "It was no path of flowers," as in the Boston Unitarian Bk. of Hymns, 1846.

4. Father, direct my ways. Divine Guidance desired in Affliction. In the Boston Book of Hys., 1846; the Boston Hys. of the Spirit, 1864; and some other collections, it begins with st.
ii., "Thou, infinite in love."

Three additional hymns were pub. for the first time in Putnam's Singers and Songs of the Liberal Faith, 1875.

Millard, James Elwin, p.p., was b. May 18, 1823, and educated first at Magdalen College School, and then at Magdalen College, Oxford (B.A. in honours, 1845). Taking Holy Orders, he became Curate of Bradfield, Berks, 1846; Head Master of Magdalen College School, 1846; Fellow of his College, 1853; and Vicar of Basingstoke, 1864. Dr. Millard

(1) The Island Choir, or the Children of the Child Jesus, 1847; (2) Historical Notices of the Office of Choristers; and (3) A Short Account of Basingstoke, Basing and the Neighbourhood, 1874. He also contributed a few hymns to the Rev. T. F. Smith's Devout Charistre. Chorister, 1848.

From the Devout Charieter the following hymna have come into C. U.:---

God eternal, mighty King. Te Deum.
 In deep humiliation. Ascension.
 Last night I lay a sleeping. Carol.

The first of these passed, with alterations, into Hys. & Introits (Masters), 1852, with further alterations into H. A. & M., 1861. The text was corrected in Biggs's Annotated H. A. & M., 1867. The hymn is widely known. [J. J.]

Miller, Emily, née Huntingdon. (Various.)

Miller, Josiah, M.A., was b. at Putney, April 8, 1832, and educated for the Congregational ministry at Highbury College, also graduating M.A. at the University of London, 1855. After holding pastorates at Dorchester, Long Sutton, and Newark, he became Secretary of the "British Society for the Propagation of the Gespel among the Jews," and subsequently of the "London City Mission." He d. in London, December, 1880. He pub.:—

(1) Our Hymns: their Authors and Origin, 1866. The groundwork of this volume was the leading hymn-Ine groundwork of this volume was the leading hymb-books of the Congregational body. (2) Our Dispensa-tion, 1868. (3) Singers and Songs of the Church: be-ing Biographical Sketches of the Hymn-writers in all the Principal Collections. With Notes on their Padms and Hymns, Lond., Longmans, 1869. This was an exand Hymns, Lond., Longmans, 1869. This was an ex-tension of Our Hymns to twenty-five representative English hymn-books of various denominations. (4) Christianum Organum, 1873.

Mr. Miller rendered great service to hymn-

Singers and Songs. These works, and especially the latter, furnished the fullest illustrations of hymnody, which up to the time of their publication had appeared in English, and embodied a great mass of information which had been gathered by the author and other workers in the same field, notably D. Sedgwick, C. D. Hardeastle, G. J. Stevenson, and Dr. C. Rogers. Considering the wide ground which it covered. it was an accurate and painstaking work. Where it fails is usually in omissions, and not in positive errors. His statements are generally correct so far as they go, but recent researches in hymnody have shown that in numerous instances they did not go far enough. The Greek, Latin, German, and American portions of his work are especially weak. His main strength is in his Biographies. (W. G. H.)

Millions within Thy courts have met. J. Montgomery. [Sunday Evening.] Pub. in his Poetical Works, 1841, vol. iv. p. 293, in 10 st. of 6 l. and again in his Original Hys., 1853, No. 120, where it is headed "Evening Bong for the Sabbath-Day." Its use, especially in America, is extensive, but it is usually abbreviated. In Kennedy, 1863, and one or two others it begins "Thousands within Thy courts have met."

Also given as, "Within Thy courts have millions met."

Mills, Elizabeth, née King, dau. of Philip King, was b. at Stoke Newington in 1805; married to Thomas Mills, M.P., and d. at Finsbury Place, London, April 21, 1829. Her popular hymu:—

We speak of the realms of the blest [Heaven] is thus annotated in Miller's Singers and Songs, &c., 1869, p. 483: "We are much indebted to John Remington Mills, Esq., M.P., for information about this hyun, written by his accomplished relative. The original has 6 st. and was composed after reading 'Bridges on the 119th Psaim' (on ver. 44, p. 116), 'We speak of heaven, but oh! to be there.'. . Already deservedly a favourite, new interest will be asked to this hymn when we know that the authoress was early called to 'the realms of the bleet,' of which she same so sweetly, and that she wrote this hymn is usually given in an imperfect form. The corrections are supplied by W. F. Stevenson in his Hys. for Church and Home, 1873, "Children's Hymna," No. 181, and the note thereon. Few children's hymna have been received with more favour. It is found in almost every hymn-book published for Children in Great Britain and America during the last fifty years. In some collections it begins, "We sing of the Land of the blest." [J. J.]

Mills, Henry, D.D., s. of John Mills, was b. at Morriston, New Jersey, March 12, 1786, and educated at the New Jersey College, Princeton, where he graduated in 1802. After being engaged in teaching for some time at Morristown and elsewhere, he was ordained Pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Woodbridge, New Jersey, in 1816. On the opening of the Auburn Theological Seminary in 1821, he was appointed Professor of Biblical Criticism and Oriental Languages, from which he retired in 1854. He d. at Auburn, June 10, 1867. In 1845 he pub. Horae Germanicae; A Version of German Hymns. This was enlarged in 1856. The trs. are not well done, and very few are now in C. U., although 18 and 9 doxologies were given in the Lutheran General Synod's Coll., 1850. Many are noted in the articles on German hymn-writers and hymns throughout this Dictionary. [F, M. B.]

Milman, Henry Hart, D.D., the young-est s. of Sir Francis Milman (who received his Baronetage as an eminent Court physician), was b. Feb. 10th, 1791, and educated at Dr. Burney's at Greenwich, and subsequently at Eton. His career at B. N. C., Oxford, was brilliant. He took a first class in classics, and carried off the Newdigate, Latin Verse, Latin Essay, and English Essay. His Newdigate on the Apollo Betvedere, 1812, is styled by Dean Stanley "the most perfect of Ox-ford prize poems." His literary career for several years promised to be poetical. His tragedy Fazio was played at Covent Garden, Miss O'Neill acting Bianca. Samor was writ-ten in the year of his appointment to St. Mary's, Reading (1817); The Fall of Jerusa-lem (1820); Belshazzar and The Martyr of Antioch (1822), and Anne Boleyn, gained a brilliant reception from the reviewers and the public. He was appointed Poetry Professor at Oxford in 1821, and was succeeded ten years after by Keble. It must have been before 1823, the date of Heber's consecration to Calcutta, that the 13 hymns he contributed to Heber's Hymns were composed. But his poetry was only the prelude to his larger work. The Bampton Lectures (1827) mark his transition to theological study, and the future direction of it was permanently fixed by his History of the Jews (1829). This book raised a storm of obloquy. It was denounced from the University pulpit, and in the British "It was the first decisive inroad of Critic. German theology into England, the first palpable indication that the Bible could be atudied like another book, that the characters and events of the sacred history could be treated at once critically and reverently" (Dean Stanley). In 1835 he was presented by Sir Robert Peel to a Canonry at Westminster and the Rectory of St. Margaret's. In 1839 appeared his valuable edition of Gibbon's Decline and Fall; and in 1840 his History of Christianity to the Abolition of Paganism in the Roman Empire. Among his minor works in a different field were his Life of Keats and his edition and Life of Horace. It was not till 1854 that his greatest workfor "vast and varied learning, indefatigable industry, calm impartiality, and subtle and acute criticism, among the most memorable in our language" (Quart. Rev.)—Latin Christi-anity—appeared. He had been appointed Dean of St. Paul's in 1849. The great services under the dome originated in his tenure of the Deanery. His latest work, published after his death, Sept. 24, 1868, was The Annals of St. Paul's. Though one of the most illustrious in the school of English liberal theology, he had no sympathy with the extreme speculations of Germany. The "criticism" of Tübingen "will rarely bear criticism." He "should like an Ewald to criticise Ewald." "Christianity will survive the criticism of Dr. Strauss," and the "bright flashing artillery" of Rénau. His historical style has been compared to Gibbon in its use of epigram and antithesis. His narrative is full of rapidity of movement. His long complex paragraphs have often a splendour of imagination as well as wealth of thought. All the varied powers of his mind found vent in his conversation; he was called, after his death, "the last of the great conversers." The catalogue of his friends from the days of Heber, "his early friend," to those of Hallam, Macaulay, and Dean Stanley, was long and distinguished.

Milman's 13 hymns were published in Heber's posthumous Hymns in 1827, and subsequently in his own Set. of Ps. & Hys., 1887. The fine hymn for The Burial of the Dead, in Thring's Coll., "Brother, thou art gone before us," is from The Martyr of Antioch (1822). Like Heber's, they aim at higher literary expression and lyric grace. He makes free use of refrains. The structure is often excellent. His style is less florid and fuller of burning, sometimes lurid force than Heber's. His hymn for the 16th Sunday after Trinity, "When our heads are bowed with woe," has no peer in its presentation of Christ's human sympathy; the hymn for the 2nd Sunday in Lent, "Oh! help us, Lord! each hour of need," is a piece of pure deep devotion. "Ride on, ride on in majesty," the hymn for Palm Sunday, is one of our best hymns. And the stanzas for Good Friday, "Bound upon the accursed tree," form one of the finest meditations on the Passion. All his hymns are still in C. U.

Milton, John, was b. in London, Dec. 9, 1608, and d. there Nov. 8, 1674. His poetical excellences and his literary fame are matters apart from hymnology, and are fully dealt with in numerous memoirs. His influence on English hymn-writing has been very slight, his 19 versions of various Psalms having lain for the most part unused by hymnal compilers. The dates of his paraphrases

These 19 versions were all included in the 2nd ed. of his Poems in English and Latin, 1673. From these, mainly in the form of centos, the following have come into C. U.:-

- Cause us to see Thy goodness, Lord. Ps. lazze.
 Defend the poor and desolate. Ps. lazzei.
 God in the great assembly stands. Ps. lazzeii.
 How lovely are Sembly stands. Ps. lazzeii.
 How lovely are Thy dwellings fair. Ps. lazzeii.
 From this, "They pass refreshed the thirsty vale," is taken. 5. Let us with a gladsome [joyful] mind. Ps. cxxxvi.
 6. Olet us with a joyful mind. Ps. cxxxvi.
 7. The Lord will come and not be slow. Ps. kxxv.

Of these centos Nos. 4 and 5 are in extensive use. The rest are mostly in Unitarian collections. There are also centos from his hymn on the Nativity, "This is the month, and this the happy morn "(q.v.). [See Fasters, English, § xi.] [J. J.]

Minimus. One of A. M. Toplady's signatures in the Gospel Magazine.

Mir nach, spricht Christus, unser Held. J. Scheffler. [Following Christ.] This hymn, founded on St. Matt. xvi. 24, has been justly characterised as "a masterpiece of Scriptural didactic poetry." It is No. 171 in Bk. v., 1668, of Scheffler's Heilige Seelenlust (Werke, 1º62, i. p. 289), in 6 st. of 6 l., entitled "She [the Soul] encourages to the fol-lowing of Christ." In the Geistreiches G. B., Halle, 1697, p. 423, a new stanza was added as st. iv., and this form passed through Freylinghausen's G. B., 1704, and is No. 640 in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863. Tr. as:—

1. Come, follow me, our Lord doth call. A good tr. of st. i., iii., v., vii., by A. T. Russell, as No. 100 in the Dalston Hospital H. Rk., 1848, repeated, altered, as No. 183 in his own Ps. & Hys., 1851.

2. Rise, follow Me ! our Master saith. A tr. of st. i., v., vi., vii., by Miss Winkworth, as No.

78 in her C. B. for England, 1863.

3. Says Christ, our Champion, follow me. A tr. of st. i., ii., vii., included as No. 449 in the Church Praise Bk., N. Y., 1882, marked as abridged from a tr. by F. M. Finch, 1880.

Other trs. are: -(1) "My yoke, saith Christ, Upon you take," by F. W. Foster, as No. 310 in the Moracian H. Bk., 1789 (1886, No. 487). (2) "After me! Christ our Champian spake," in the British Magasine, April, 1838, p. 401. (3) "Christians, attend! Our Champion cries," in the Family Treasury, 1877, p. 111. [J. M.]

Mirabilis Deus in sanctis. [Martyre.] In the Bodleian Ms. 775, f. 160 b (written in the reign of Ethelred between 994 and 1017). this is the sequence for many martyrs. It is given in the Common of many Martyrs in the Sarum (Bodleian ms. Barlow 5, circa 1370, page 430); Paris (Brit. Mus. Add. 16905, f. 235, early 14th cent.); Sens (Brit. Mus. Add. 30058, f. 136 b of the 14th cent.); St. Andrews (reprint, 1864, p. 416), and other Missals. It is also in an 11th cent. Winchester service book now in the Library of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, No. 473. It was tr. by C. B. Pearson as, "God is to be admired in all His saints," in the Sarum Missal in English, 1868; and as "God is much to be admired," in his Sequences from the Sarum Missal, 1871. It was also tr. es, "Praise to Thee, O Lord, most holy," for the Hymnary, 1872, by "H. M. C." (i.e. Harriet Mary Chester).

Miramur, O Deus, Tuae. C. Coffin. [Wednesday.] Appeared in the Paris Breviary, 1736, for Wednesdays, at Matins; and again in his Hymni Sacri, 1736, p. 18. It is also in several modern French Brevinries: in J. Chandler's Hys. of the Prim. Church, 1837, p. 151; Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865; and in Biggs's Annotated H. A. & M., 1867.

Translations in C. U.:-

1. The wonders of the Almighty hand. J. Chandler, in his Hys. of the Prim. Church, 1837, p. 20, in 6 st. of 4 l.; and again in his Hys. of the Church mostly Primities, &c., 1841, No. 13. It is found in a few modern collections.

2. 0 God supreme! in rapt amaza. By J. D. Chambers, in his Landa Syon, 1857, p. 20, in & st. of 4 l. It was repeated in the Salisbury H. Bk., 1857; Martineau's Hymns, 1873 (in 5 st.), and in others.

3. New wonders of Thy mighty hand. By the compilers of H. A. & M., based on J. Chandler, as above, and pub. in H. A. & M., 1861, abbreviated; in Kennedy, 1863, &c.

Translations not in C.V. :-

1. O God, we behold how Thy wondrous might, I. Williams. British Mogazine, July, 1834, and his Hys. tr. from the Parisian Brev., 1839.

2. O God, Thy wender-working hand. In J. A. Johnston's English Hymnol, 1852.

Miris probat sese modis. Jean Baptiste de Santeüil. [St. Stephen.] Appeared in the Cluniae Breviary, 1686, p. 182, in Santeuil's Hymni Sacri et Novi, 1689, p. 57, and the Paris Breviary, 1736. It is also in several modern French Breviaries, and Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. Tr.

1. Holy love towards her foes, Pub, in I. Williams's Hys. tr. from the Parisian Breviary, 1839, p. 61, 7 st. of 4 l., with a doxology. In his preface Williams says that this tr. was made by a "a friend." In Johnston's English Hymnal, 1852, this tr. was altered to "Christian Love in wondrous ways"; and in the editions of 1856 and 1861 to "Holy love in wondrous ways."

2. Holy Love herself displays. This tr. in R. Campbell's Hys. & Anthens, &c., 1850, is based upon the above by I. Williams's "friend."

Another tr. is :-What kindness e'en to mortal foes. J. D. Chambers, 1857.

The Missal [Missale] is the Missals. Service-book of the Latin Church, which contains all that is said or sung in the service of the Holy Eucharist or "the Mass" [Missa]. It comprises within itself many and various elements which anciently were distributed in different volumes. Such were the Sacramentarium containing the Priest's part of the service in the unvarying Canon, with the varying Prefaces, Collects, Secrets, and Postcommons; the Epistolarium or Lectionarium, containing the Epistles; the Erangeliarium, containing the Gospels; the Graduale, containing all the choral portions of the service, viz., the Introits, Kyries, Gloria in Excelsis, Graduals, Tracts, Sequences, Creeds, Offertories, and Communious. Of these the Sequences frequently formed a separate volume called the Sequentiale. Still more ancient and long obsolete books were the Benedictionale, containing the varying triple episcopal benedictions; and the Troparium, containing verses or farces, varying with each festival, dovetailed into or in some way attached to aimost every choral part of the service. These verses, known as Tropes, went generally out of use in the 13th century.

The Missal most widely in circulation in the present day, and gradually superseding all other Latin Uses, is the Roman Missal. It was carefully revised by Pius V. (1570) in accordance with the directions of the Council of Trent, and so revised its use was enjoined in all places and on all communities which could not plead a prescription of two hundred years in favour of a local or peculiar use. It subsequently underwent two slighter but careful revisions under Clement VIII. (in 1604) and Urban VIII. (in 1634), and has received, and will continue to receive from time to time, additional services necessitated by the institution of new Festivals.

Besides the Missale Romanum there were, and to a lesser extent than formerly still are, various Missals, belonging to different Provinces, Dioceses, and Religious and Military Orders. Such were the Sarum, York, and Hereford Missals of the unreformed Church | quently mentioned, will be given in full.

of England, the Paris, Lyons, and many French Missals, the Augustinian, Benedictine, Præmonstratentian Missals, &c. These may all be regarded as variations and offshoots of the Missale Romanum.

In addition to monastic or diocesan variations of the Roman Missal, there are two living Latin Liturgies which deserve special notice, because they are, the first probably, the second certainly, of a distinct genus or family, viz.: that known as the Ephesine or Hispano-Gallican. These are the Ambrosian Missal in use in the Church of Milan, and the Mozarabic Missal in limited use in the Church of Spain.

Most of these Missals form a quarry from which an immense amount of hymnological material can be drawn in the shape of Sequences or Proses, for an account of which see Sequences.

But besides Sequences, there are other parts of the Liturgy, which sometimes, though rarely, assume a metrical or rhyming form. These are the Gradual with its Verses, the Tract, the Offertorium, the Communic, and possibly the more ancient Trope. Details concerning these are given under their respective titles (q.v.). [F. E. Missions, Foreign. The hymnody of Foreign Missions is, as a whole, practically unknown. Most persons have some idea of the great work accomplished by Christian missionaries in the translation of the Holy Scriptures into almost all known languages; but few have ever thought how much has been done by them in the translation and composition of hymns, the preparation of hymn-books, and in general, in the introduction of Christian Hymnody among the various nations to whom they have preached the Gospel. It is the object of this article to set forth this as fully and accurately as the limits of our space will allow. Although Protestant Christians of several denominations in Great Britain and America have missions in various parts of Europe, we shall not include any of these in our notice, with the single exception of the missions in European Turkey. We propose to speak of Missionary Hymnody—

I. In various parts of America; North, Central, and South;

II. In the Islands of the Pacific, in New Guinea and Borneo;

III. In Asia, from Japan westward to Turkey

IV. In Africa, East, South and West. The following abbreviations will be used :--

I. America.

i. North America.

This extends over a vast extent of country from Greenland to Mexico.

1. Greenland.—The M. M. on the western coast of Greenland commenced in 1721. In 1738 Kajarnak, the first convert, was won by "the Story of the Cross;" now the whole of the country is Christianized. Since 1772 the Greenlanders have had their own printed hymn-book. An enlarged ed., pub. in 1819, was received by them with great joy, and recent accounts show that they retain their fondness for hymns. Not only do they sing well in their churches and homes, but the long coasting voyages in the "umiaks," or women's boats, are enlivened by the sweet voices of the female rowers uniting in sacred song.

- a. Labrader.—Crossing Davis Strait to the bleak coast of Labrador we find the self-denying agents of the same society [M. M.] at work. In 1770 Jans Haven, from Greenland, sang to the Eskimoes of Labrador, a hymn in Greenlandic, a language which they understood, and in the midst of a barbaric dance they were charmed by it into silence. These Eskimoes now themselves sing Christian hymns at their morning and evening prayers, even when away from their homes on their hunting, fishing, or sealing expeditions. For a long time they have had a neat 12mo hymnsl, the last revision being by the Rev. Theodore Bourquin, who translated most of the modern hymns. The book contains about 900 hymns, and was printed in 1879, at Stolpen, in Germany. The last eight pages contain the notes of 10 melodies with the words below. The following are the first lines of a few of the hymns:—
- "Passijakaaungitotit" = "O Lamb of God, unspotted."
 "Karalit kakkanginit" = "From Greenland's icy
- mountains."

 "Attè, tupaleritse okpertut" = "Christians awake."

 "Illakks, maksualaukta" = "Held the fort."

The number of syllables and accents is the same as in the English hymns, so that they may be sung to the same tunes, but the lines do not rhyme.

- s. Cree Indians.—Crossing the northern part of North America, and passing westward through British territory, more than 3000 miles, we traverse a region at present sparsely inhabited by Indians and European settlers. Here, however, are many stations of the C. M. S., S. P. G., and W. M. S., the last named being now sustained by the Wesleyans of Canada. We can here speak of only one specimen of the hymnal work of this region. Bishop Horden, of the diocese of Moosonee, has recently completed an enlarged hymn-book in the language of the Cree Indians, containing 150 hymns, all, except three or four, being his own translations.
- 4. British Columbia. We pass to British Columbia, on the North Pacific coast. Here at Metlakahtla, and other places in the north of that territory, are stations of the C. M. S. among the Tsimshean Indians, and other tribes. For the use of the Tsimsheans a collection of 19 hymns has been made by Bishop W. Ridley, ranslated by himself, Mrs. Ridley, and Mrs. Morrison, and printed at Metlakahtla. Such bymns as "How sweet the name of Jesus sounds": "Just as I am"; "Jesu, Lover of my soul," &c. are included. In the report of the C. M. S. for 1887, we read how on one occasion the last hours of a dying Indian were southed by the singing of the last named hymn.

In the Niska dialect, akin to the Tsinshean, a collection of hymns has been prepared by the Rev. W. H. Collison, to which Mr. J. B. McCullagh, the present missionary on the upper Naas, has recently made additions, including a metrical paraphrase of Ps. xxiii., which is a great favourite with the people.

5. Queen Charlotte's Islands. — Among the Haidas of Queen Charlotte's Islands, just off the coast of B. Columbia, another mission of the C. M. S. has been established by the Rev. W. H. Collison. In their language, which differs greatly from the Tsimsheau, Mr. Collison has composed some hymns, and translated others, which, although not yet pub. in book form, are known and sung far and wide. The present missionary, Rev. C. Harrison, is adding to the number of these hymns.

6. Vancouver's Island.—The Rev. A. J. Hall, of the C. M. S., who is labouring among the Kwa Gulth tribe, in the north of Vancouver's Island, has prepared a number of hymns in the language of that people, and has taught them to sing them.

- 7. Various in the U.S.A.—Passing southward through the territories of the United States, where the Red Men still survive, we find them chiefly to the west of the Mississippi, occupying "Reservations." A recent Government return gives their number as 277,656, of whom only about 30,000 know English enough for ordinary intercourse. Ten American Missionary Societies are at work among them, and the following Hymnals have been prepared for their use by agents of the A.B. C.:—Cherokee, 52 pp.; Creek, 35 pp.; Sensea (two books); Ojibva, 40 pp.; Choctave, 84 pp.; Dakota or Sioux Indians, 97 pp., by Dr. S. B. Riggs, and another, by the Rev. J. P. Williamson, 184 pp.
- 8. Marico.—From the United States torritories we naturally pass to Mexico, where the American Baptists of the Southern Convention, the A. B. C. and A. M. E. have vigorous Protestant missions, conducted for the most part in the Spanish language. But no replies have been received to our inquiries as to their Hymnody.

ii. Central America.

In connection with the M. M. in Central America various hymns have been rendered into the language of the Mostito Indians. But these have not been printed, as the English hymn-book is mainly used in that mission-field.

In like manner in British Honduras, in Jamaica, the Bahamas, the Bermudas, and other places in the West Indies, where hundreds of congregations of Negroes and Creoles have been gathered into the Church of Christ, the hymn-books used are chiefly those of their respective Denominations in Great Britain.

iii. South America.

1. British Guiana.—Here are missions of the S. P. G. and L. M. S. The population consists of a great variety of nationalities: the Aberigines, British settlers, and Coolies from China and different parts of India. The Missionaries teach the Aborigines to sing in English. For the Chinese they obtain hymnbooks from Hong Kong; for the Indian coolies books from India in Tamil, Bengali, Hindi, and Urdu. [See on India, p. 746.]

2. Dutch Guiana, or Surinam has stations of the M. M. Being a Dutch possession the hymnal used for the services at Paramaribo is in that language, prepared in connection with the M. M. in South Africa. But a curious Creole dialect, called Negro-English, is the mother tongue of the negroes in many parts of Surinam; and a hymn-book in this dialect was issued from the mission press in 1820. A new ed, appeared in 1841. Yet another ed., revised and enlarged, has been recently pub. It contains 600 hymns, is attractively bound, and has met with a large sale.

3. Various.—More than a century ago the borderland of British and Dutch Guiana was the scene of a Moravian mission to the Arawack Indians, and there is still extant in Ms. a collection of hymns in that language. With regard to the hymnody of the far greater part of South America, viz. Venezuela, Columbia, Peru, Brazil, Bolivia, the Argentine Republic, and Uruguay, we are able to give but little information. The English South American Missionary Society uses the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns for most of its English services, and the hymn-book of the B. & F. Sailors' Society in services for seamen. The A. M. E. has missions in Uruguay, the Argentine Republic, and at several places on the Western Coast. The Southern Baptist Convention of the U. States has missions in Brazil; and the A.P.M.in Columbia, Brazil, and Chili, but no answer to letters of enquiry has been received except from Chili. From Valparaiso the Rev. D. Turnbull, D.D., writes to say that two or three hymn-books have been pub. there, the hymns being in Spanish, mostly translations, probably made in Spain, and are not very satisfactory. Hymns are sung at Ooshooia, in Tierza-del-Fuego, and we believe that some of these, probably composed by Capt. Allen Gardiner, are in the language of the Yaligan Indians, but have not been able to ascertain particulars.

II. Islands of the Pacific, &c.

Modern geographers have arranged the islands of the great Pacific Ocean under three divisions, Micronesia, Polynesia and Melanesia. (i.) Micronesia, so called from the smallness of most of its islands, comprises all those lying north of the equator, from the Hawaiian group in the east to Malaysia in the west. (ii.) Polynesia, a name once used in a wider sense, is now restricted to the islands situated to the south of the equator, and between 180° of longitude and S. America. It includes the Marquesan, Tahitian, Samoan, and other groups. (iii.) Melanesia, so called from the dark colour of its inhabitants, includes the islands south of the equator, from long. 180° westward to New Guinea, such as the Fiji group, the New Hebrides, and others. Micronesia and Polynesia are inhabited by the Malay-Polynesian race, probably of Asiatic origin. The people are, for the most part, tall and well-formed, their skin of a light yellow colour, their hair a smooth glossy black, and Melanesians, on the other hand, belong to the Papuan race, and are probably of African origin. Their skin is dark, their hair crisp, and features plain. Their language is quite distinct from the Malay-Polynesian, and is endlessly diversified. Not only on every group of islands but on every island, a different dialect is spoken, and so widely different are they as to be almost, sometimes altogether, unintelligible to the inhabitants of an adjoining island. It may be conceived how much toil in the learning of languages and the preparation of distinct books, such as hymnals, this fact imposes on missionaries.

i. Micronesia.

1. Hawaiian Islands.—In our notice of hymnody in the Pacific we begin with the Hawaiian Islands, at the eastern extremity of Micronesia. These islands, mountainous and volcanic, and yet so lovely in scenery as to be likened to a terrestrial paradise, were once notorious for the barbarism and cruelty of their inhabitants. But now, chiefly through the labours of the missionaries of the A. B. C. they are Christianized and civilized. As early as 1823 a small hymn-book of 60 pp. was prepared by the Reva. H. Bingham and W. Ellis; in 1834 appeared a Hymnand Tune Book of 360 pp. edited by the Rev. H. Bingham, and a few years later a Child's hymn-book (72 pp.) by the same editor. In 1842 another Children's book with tunes was pub., and in 1855 appeared the Hawaiian Lyre. In 1867 the Rev. L. Lyons edited a hymnal for general use, containing 400 hymns, translated by himself, H. Bingham, W. Ellis, A. O. Forbes, R. Armstrong, and A. Bishop. This has been en-larged, and the last ed. (1885) contains 612 hymns. Mr. Lyons has also translated and pub. the Sacred Songs and Solos of Sankey, and other collections of popular Christian songs with music.

In connection with the Anglican mission in these islands, commenced in 1861, services are conducted in the Hawaiian language and hymns are sung, but we have failed to obtain information as to details.

2. Marshall Islands .- Sailing west by south from Hawaii, for about 1800 miles, we come to the Marshall Islands, in two groups, comprising about 30 coral islets, with a population of 12,000. For their use the Rev. E. T. Doane, of the A. B. C., prepared, in 1860, a Primer and Hymn-book of 44 pp. In 1863 appeared Hymne, by Mr. Doane (24 pp.), and in 1866 a similar book edited by the Rev. B. G. Snow, of the same Society.

8. Caroline Islands.—Still more to the west are the Caroline Islands, claimed by the Spaniards, the chief of which are Ponape, or Ascension Island, 60 miles in circumference, and Kusaie, or Strong's Island, about 30 miles in circuit. In 1858 a hymn-book of 19 pp. was prepared in the Ponape dialect by Dr. L. H. Gulick, and enlarged in 1864-5 by the Rev. A. A. Sturges. Another collection of 32 pp. was prepared in 1865, by the Rev. B. G. Snow, in the Kusaie dialect. All this was in connection with the missionary work of the A. B. C.

4. The Gilbert Islands - Passing from the Caroline Islands in a south-easterly direction their language soft and mellifluous. The we come upon the Gilbert Islands, right on the equator, forming 16 groups of a fair size, with many islets, and a population of 30,000. Here the A. B. C. has a mission. In 1860 the Rev. H. Bingham, jun., and his wife, pub. a hymn-book of 12 pp. Three years later it was enlarged to 27 pp., and in 1874 and 1877 additional hymns were printed.

Before leaving Micronesia we may quote the Invocation of the Lord's Prayer in some of its different languages. This will show that, though allied in grammatical structure, they are yet so diverse as to require a distinct hymnal literature for each one.

"Our Father, which art in heaven."

Haussian. "E ko makou Makus iloko o ka lani."

Marshall Hilands. "Jememulj i lon."

Gilbert Halands. "Jemes er i karawa."

Kusaicon. "Papa tumus su in kosao."

ii. Polynesia.

We are not able to give information con-cerning the hymnody of more than two groups of islands in this part of the Pacific. the Society Islands, including Tahiti, the Hervey Islands, the Tonga Islands, and others, agents of the L. M. S. and W. M. S. have long laboured, and the people have possessed hymn-books, but we are without details. The Marquesas Islands, six in number, are about 2000 miles east by south from the Hawaiian group, and the language is similar but not identical. In 1870 the Rev. James Bicknell, son of an English Missionary to the Society Islands, prepared in Marquesan a hymn-book of 30 pp., since reprinted. In the important Samoan group, a hymnal is used, begun in 1840, enlarged in successive editions, and now containing 372 hymns and 39 chants. Most of the hymns are translations of wellknown English hymns, such as "Jesu, Lover frown English hymns, such as "Jesu, Lover of my soul," and "When I survey the wondrous cross" ("Jesu, faapaolo mai," and "A ou manatu ipo nei"); or passages of Holy Scripture paraphrased. The words of the chants are taken from Holy Scripture. The translators were missionaries of the L. M. S., Mesars. Buzacott, Heath, Hardie, Murray, Pratt, Nisbet, G. Turner, LL.D., Parell and Whitmee—Mrs. Turner and Mrs. Nisbett, and Peni, a Samoan pastor.

iii. Melanesia.

(1) The Fijian group comprises 80 inhabited islands, and has been Christianized mainly through the labours of the W. M. S. From the commencement of Christian worship the Lord's Prayer, the Jubilate, the Te Deum, &c., as translated by the early missionaries, have been sung to native chants; but these are monotonous and melancholy. The hymns first used were mainly translations by the Revs. J. Hunt, R. B. Lyth, and J. Walsford. A few of these are still in use and throb with life, "expressing," says the Rev. J. Nettleton, " in mellifluous and Italian-like Fijian all the cadences of Christian faith and hope and love." There have been several editions of the Fijian hymn-book, the one new in use containing 178 hymns, chiefly composed or translated by the Revs. J. Nettleton, — Lorimer,-Fison, M.A., and A. J. Webb. The best hymns are original; the translated ones are those who have been taught new tunes go round and teach them to others in the villages.

(2) The New Hebrides.—About 400 miles west of Fiji and 1000 miles nearly due north of New Zealand, is the group of the New Hebrides, so named by Capt. Cook, because he believed them to be the most westward islands of the Pacific. There are about 30 in the group; nearly 20 are inhabited and some are of considerable size. Almost every inhabited island has its own dialect, often so different from the rest as to be practically a distinct language. But all these dialects belong to the Papuan stock. The L. M. S. was the first to begin missionary labour in the New Hebrides, but many years ago the work was anticably transferred to the Reformed Presbyterian Church of Scotland, which in 1876 united with the Free Church of Scotland. The Roy. John Inglis, D.D., who was a missionary in Ancityum, the most southerly island of the group, from 1852 until recently, has furnished us with the following particulars as to the thymnody:—

(a) "The hymnal used in Aneityum contains 51 hymns—'Nobratital Itap"—partly translations or imitations of English hymna, and partly original. They were translated or composed chiefly by the Rev. Drs. Geddle and Inglis,—a few by the Revs. J. Copeland and T. Powell. Also, since the printing of the hymn-book in 1830, some additional hymns have been prepared by the Revs. J. Annand and I. Laurie.

(b) "On the inlend of Transa two languages are species.

the Revs. J. Annand and I. Laurie.

(b) "On the island of Tanna two languages are spoken, and there are two missionaries, the Rev. Messrs. Watt and Gray. Mr. Watt has from 20 to 30 hymna, chiefly prepared, and all printed by himself. Mr. Gray has a few, prepared by himself, and printed by Mr. Watt.

(c) "On Evouanga, notorious for the murder of John Williams and of the missionary brothers G. N. and J. D. Gordon, they now sing about 30 hymns, prepared by Messrs. J. D. Gordon and Robertson.

(d) "Similarly, small collections of hymns have been prepared for the use of the natives of Fatuna, Kfate, Answo, Ngana, Tangos, Epi and Ambrim, the composers or translators being the missionaries respectively located on those islands. In the northern islands of the group a commencement of missionary islands of the group a commencement of missionary labour has only just been made."

All the hymns in the above-named collections are composed to English metres and sung to English tunes, but the lines do not rhyme. The native poetry is a kind of elevated prose, cut up into divisions like verses, followed by choruses which are chiefly single syllables with no meaning, such as lil la, lil la. And the native music is a kind of chanting, with "a loud noise." Dr. Inglis is of opinion that the singing of Christian hymns would be more popular if they were composed more after the native style of song.

(3) Banks Islands, Santa Cruz Islands, Solomon Islands, Norfolk Island. All these islands, except Norfolk Island, are situated to the north and north-west of the New Hebrides, and were brought into notice as a scene of missionary labour through the self-denying devotion of the lamented Bishop Patteson. His plan was to make Norfolk Island, to the south, a base of evangelistic operations, and to visit the other islands periodically, the language of Mota, one of the Banks Islands, being used as a lingua franca. In his letters (see Life of Bp. J. C. Patteson, by C. M. Yonge) are very interesting references to Psalms and Hymns translated or composed by him, and sung in various religious services. Thus, in 1867, the bishop stiff. English metres are used and the lines writes from Norfolk Island, "we sing the rhyme. The people delight in singing, and Venite, Magnificat, Nunc dimittis, &c., in parts, to single and double chants." Again, "and now they are practising hymns in Mota for our 11 a.m. service." And the following year he writes, "Every week we read in chapel about 40 psalms and sing 12 hymns. These are pretty well known by heart." A number of hymns seem to have been in use for years, before being collected into a book. The Rev. Dr. Codrington, who was for some time Bishop Patteson's colleague in the Anglican Melanesian Mission, has favoured us with the following account of the Mota hymn-book:—

"This book, as lately reprinted, contains 67 hymns, and there are three more since in use that I know of of these, 25 are by Bishop Patteson. 21 are original compositions, most of them excellent. The rest are adaptations rather than translations. 20 are by myself, of which 9 are original; 12 are by the Rev. C. Bice; 8 by the Rev. J. Palmer, and 2 by Bishop Selwyn. The hymns by the three last named are translations or adaptations. Among the hymns translated are, 'Thou whose Almighty word,' 'Eternal Father, strong to save,' 'The Church's one foundation,' Gracious Spirit, Holy Ghost,' 'How beauteous are the feet,' &c., &c. The most interesting hymns in the book are three by native composers, particularly one by a teacher named Clement Marku, a Banks Islander."

Several hymns were composed by the Rev. C. H. Brooke in the language of Florida, one of the Solomon Islands; others, by Bishop Selwyn and the Rev. C. Bice, in the languages spoken in Ysabel (Solomon Islands), Aurora Island, Pentecost Island, and Leper's Island, in the New Hebrides.

- (4) Loyalty Islands. Between the New Hebrides and the French possession of New Caledonia is a small group, called the Loyalty Islands, the chief of which are Lift, Maré and Uvea. In these islands the L. M. S. has for many years had a mission. In 1864 what is known as the Lifu Hymn Book was prepared and printed at Maré by the Rev. S. McFarlane, U.D. It contains 231 hymns. Most are translations of the best English hymns, but many are original. The metres and tunes are English, and the natives are said to sing very well.
- (5) New Guinea.—A few years ago the L. M. S. began a mission in the eastern part of New Guinea, and the labours of the Rev. Dr. McFarlane were transferred thither from the Loyalty Islands. Already three small hymnbooks have been prepared, each containing 36 hymns, in 3 distinct dialects. These are bound up in one volume with the Gospel of St. Mark and a small catechism. Though belonging to the same Papuan or Melanesian group of languages, these dialects are distinct from the Lifuan both in words and in grammatical structure.

iv. Borneo and Singapore.

(1) Boraco, one of the largest islands in the world, is inhabited for the most part by a people called Dyaks, akin to the Malays, and divided into numerous petty tribes, with exceedingly barbarous usages. Near the causts are many Malays proper, and in the north-western portion of the island probably a quarter of a million of Chinese. For 40 years past the S. P. G. has had missions in Borneo, which now form part of the diocese of Singapore, Labuan and Sarawak. The Ven. Archdeacon Mesney has supplied us with the following particulars in regard to Christian hymnody.

"Collections of hymns have been made in three languages—Malay, Land Dyak, and Sea Dyak. These have been gradually formed, the 1st now containing about 100 hymns; the 2nd, about 80, and the 3rd, between 30 and 40. The hymns prepared in the early days of the mission were in simple Malay, and the first hymn was a metrical version of the Creed. Most of the hymns in all three collections are translations or adaptations of English hymns, such as "We love the place, O God;" "Abide with me;" "Rock of ages;" "O come, all ye faithful;" "Glory be to Jesus," &c. The translators were Sishop Chambers; the present Bishop, G. F. Hose, D.D.; the Kevs. W. H. Gomes, F. W. Abe, J. L. Zebnder, J. Perham, C. W. Fowler, and other missionaries. A few of the hymns are original, e.g. a harvest hymn in Sea Dyak, and others in Malay, by Bishop Chambers, and some in Sea Dyak by the Rev. J. Perham. English metres and tunes are used, and in most of the hymns the lines rhyme as in English. The books are printed at the mission press, at Kuching, Sarawak."

(2) Singapore has a very mixed population of Malays, Tamils, and Chinese, all of whom the S. P. G. seeks to benefit. The Malay hymn book there used was arranged by the Rev. W. H. Gomes (named above), and was printed at Singapore.

III. Asia. i. Japan.

In this remarkable country the development of Christian hymnody has been as rapid as that of other ideas and usages so recently introduced from Europe and America. At the close of 1873, when the Rev. C. F. Warren, of the C. M. S. (to whom we are indebted for much of the information contained in this section), arrived in Japan, converts were very few, and though attempts had been made to produce metrical hymns for Christian worship, some were of opinion that the use of hymns could never become general. The character of Japanese poetry presented one great difficulty. "It has neither rhyme, assonance, nor quantity. It is not marked by a regular succession of accented syllables, as in English, and is only distinguished from prose by metre." As a rule Japanese metre con-sists of lines of 5 and 7 syllables. What is called Short Postry — the most common consists of 31 syllables, divided into lines as follows:—5, 7, 5, 7, 7. There is a variation from this with lines thus:—5, 7, 7, 5, 7, 7, and another, though this is not classical, of 17 syliables, 5, 7, 5. The Long Poetry consists of any number of lines of 5 and 7 syllables, regularly alternating and closing with a final line of 7 syllables, thus:-5, 5, 7, 7. Another difficulty was to find suitable tunes to these peculiar metres. A few English tunes, like "Home, sweet home," could be easily adapted, and one or two Japanese tunes were available. These, however, were but few, and the effect was by no means pleasing. But, notwithstanding these initial difficulties, we have at this moment before us five Japanese Christian hymn-books, and have received information concerning yet others. Altogether there are now at least 350 hymns in the Japanese language. Most of these are translations or adaptations of English and American hymns. They are composed to English metres, though without rhyme, and are sung to English tunes. Among hymnals at present in use may be mentioned the following:-

(1) A hymn-book containing 76 hymns in Roman characters and 43 tunes in Sol-Fa notation was pub. at

Yokohama, in 1876, and prepared by the Rev. Nathan Brown, D.D. [A. B. M.]

(2) The same distinguished missionary, who had previously laboured in Assam and Burna, and written hymns in the language of each country [see Burma], put forth, in 1876, another hymn-book, in Japanese, containing 138 bymns. This was enlarged in successive eds. until, in 1886, it comprised 337 hymns. It is the recognised bymns of the A. B. M. in Japan, and the last ed. was pub. shortly after Dr. Brown's death. The hymns are chiefly translations, although a good number of original compositions, meetly by mative Christians, are included. Three translations and two original hymns are by Miss Clats A. Sauds, of the A. B. M. From hymn-book No. I we may quote, as a specimen of Japanese, the first verse of "All hail the power of Jesus' same": name":--

Tentel birefuse Çuno sokulwo lwei Tençuto tonaye.

(3) The hymn-book of the Episcopal Church Missions, (3) The hymn-book of the Episcopal Church Missions, American and English, pub. at Osaka, 1883. It was prepared by the Rev. T. S. Tyng, of the Amer. Spis. Mission original) by the Revs. P. K. Fyson and C. F. Warren, of the C. M. S., and H. J. Foss, M., of the Rev. The editor, in his preface, also thanks the Rev. H. Evington [C. M. S.] and several native scholars for important resistance.

for important assistance.

(4) Hymn-book of the Presbyterians, called The United Uhurch of Christ in Japan, pub. in Tokio, 1881. The translator was Mr. Hars, a Japanese, and it contains 103 bymns, the names of the tunes being attached in Feedble.

(5) Hymn-book of the A. E. C. mission, prepared by the Rev. W. Curits and a committee of natives; pub. at Osaka, 1882. This book contains 130 hymns with tunes, and 14 Psalms set to Chants, and is at present used by the Congregational Churches. But the Rev. Dwight W. Learned [A. B. C.] informs us that it is soon to be superseded by one now in course of preparation by a joint committee of missionaries and Japanese representing the A. B. C., the Presbyterian and the Reformed Missi

(6) The hymn-book of the A. M. E., containing 244 hymns and a few chants edited about 3 years ago, by the Rev. J. C. Davison, of Nagasaki. It contains several tunes composed for it in the Japanese metre 5,7,5,7, and is said by Mr. Learned to be the "most elaborate book yet produced in Japan."

Congregational singing is an innovation in Japan. In the Buddhist services the priests alone chant. But thousands of Japanese Christians now sing hymns heartily and even enthusiastically; the use of cabinet organs and harmoniums is common in the churches, and in the girls' schools the pupils learn to play on them.

ii. China.

The first hymn-book in China was pub. by Dr. Morrison in 1818, and contained 30 hymns. The number of books prepared and published during the last 50 years has been very large, partly because increased acquaintance with the language has made translators of hymns dissatisfied with their earlier efforts, and prompted them to put forth new ones, and partly because of the number of distinct spoken dialects in China. A peculiarity of the Chinese language is that the written or printed characters represent ideas rather than sounds, and these characters in the Wen Li, or "Classic style," are understood by the educated throughout the empire. But the ordinary colloquial varies according to the district. Thus, what is called the Mandarin Colloquial, used by the mandarins and in court circles at Peking, is the principal spoken language in North China, the region north of the great Yangtse Kiang. But besides this, are the Shanghai and Foochow colloquials spoken by about 8 millions each, the colloquial of Ningpo, spoken by about 5 millions, the dialects of Canton, Swatow, Amoy, and other districts. Some of these dialects differ so much that interpreters are needed between Some missionaries hold that hymnbooks should be in the Wen Li, or classical form of the language, and that the people should be educated to the use of it. But the majority have maintained that the present needs of the multitude should be considered. and for this reason have published hymn-books in the various colloquials.

In the present article we shall mention, as samples, books pub. in North, Middle, and South China.

(i.) North China. (1) Through the kindness of the Rev. Jon. Lees, of the L. M. S., we have now before us a copy of the hymn-book pub. by himself and the Rev. J. Edkins, D.D., at Tientsin in 1872. It contains 266 hymns, and from the English index of first lines it appears that almost all are translations (often very free) of the best English hymns. Previous to this the Rev. W. C. Burns had pub. a small collection; and 43 of his translations, in many cases recast, are included in the 1872 book. In the preparation of this book Mr. Lees had as assistants two very able Chinese scholars, the Rev. Chang-tsu-leu and his son, Mr. Chang-chiu-song. It is used not only in the North China missions of the L. M. S., but also by Presbyterians and New Connexion Methodists.

(2) Another equally important work is the hymnal pub. at Peking in 1872 by the Revs. D. Blodgett, p.p. and Chauncey Goodrich. It is in the Mandarin Colloquial, and has been pronounced by one authority to be "the best hymn-book used in China." Nearly all the hymns are translations. Indeed the number of original Chinese Christian hymns in exist-once is very small.

(3) In the B. M. in North China, a book is used compiled from others, but including a few translations by the Rev. F. H. James [B. M. S.].

(4) The Rev. J. Lees has pub. a small book containing 47 hymns, chiefly translations by himself from I. Sankey's Sac. Songs & Solos, but including one original hymn by Mr. Chang-chiu-seng, and said to be a fine hymn,

- (ii.) Mid-China. (1) A hymn-book in the Ningpo dialect was pub. about 1858, pre-pared by the Revds. Archdeacon Cobbold of the C. M. S.; Dr. Martin and H. V. Rankin, of the A. P. M.; J. Hudson Taylor, and others. This was revised and enlarged several times, until in 1875 it included 275 hymns, eleven being translatious or compositions by the Ven. Archdeacon Moule [C. M. S.]. This hymn-book, printed at the Presbyterian Mission Press, Shanghai, has been used hitherto by Churchmen and Nonconformists in Ningpo, and in other parts of the province of Chehkiang.
- (2) In 1871 Bishop Moule prepared a book in the Hangehow dislect for the use of the churches of the C. M. S. in that city and neighbourhood. It contains 82 hymns, and is printed in both Roman and Chinese characters.

(3) Archdeacon Moule [C. M. S.] has now (1887) in the press at Shanghat a collection which he hopes will be widely intelligible in China. It contains 221 hymns, some being translations by himself, others by his brother. Bishop Moule, and one hymn is original.

(4) The collection compiled by the Rev. Griffith John, of Hankow [L. M. S.], contains 200 hymns, all translations. Of these 8 or 10 are from the Welsh, made either by Mr. John or the Rev. Evan Bryant [L. M. S.]. In the later editions many expressions of the Mandarin Colloquial have been exchanged for others belonging to the literary style. This book is used by many missionaries of the China Inland Mission, and also at I Chang, a station of the K. S. M.

(5) At the W. M. S. at Hankow a book is used, compiled by the Rev. W. Scarborough, and pub. in 1875. It was preceded by a hymnal prepared by the Rev. Josiah Cox. The 180 hymns in the present book are chiefly translations, many of them from Sankey's Sac. Songs & Solos. "We wait," says Mr. Scarborough, "for a Christian poet in China." The dialect is the Mandarin Colloquial.

(iii.) South China. (1) The most flourishing missions in China up to the present have been those of the English Presbyterian Church at Amoy, Swatow, in Formosa and in the Hakká country. Two hymn-books have been prepared, one in the Amoy dialect, containing 70 hymns, the other, in that of Swatow, containing over 150. Some of these are translations of Psalms, others translations or adaptations of English hymns, and a few are original. The Rev. W. S. Swanson, of the E. Presb. Mission, informs us that the Rev. Wm. Young, of the L. M. S., was the first successful composer of hymns in the Amoy dialect, and 13 of his hymns are still in use. To him succeeded the Rev. W. C. Burns, already mentioned. The Revs. Carstairs Douglas, LL.D., J. V. N. Talmage, D.D., and Alex. Stronach have also helped in the work. In connection with the Presbyterian Missions in this part of China many interesting facts might be related illustrative of the value of hymnody as an evangelistic agency, but for these we have no room.

(2) The great city of Foochow is the central station of three missions—those of the C. M. S., A. B. C. & A. M. E. In 1860 the Rev. W. C. Burns, named above, was here temporarily, and prepared in the Foochow Colloquial a translation of hymns written by Mr. Young and himself, which had previously appeared in the Amoy dialect. He added others, making up a book of more than 30 hymns. These were deemed so excellent that they were adopted by all three missions, and superseded others previously used which were in the Wen-Li, or book language. In course of time more hymns were desired, and each of the missions, taking Mr. Burns's book as a foundation, pub. a Hymnal of its own. (a) The hymnbook of the C.M.S. contains 198 hymns, and was prepared by the Revs. J. R. Wolfe, R. W. Stewart, M.A., and Ll. Lloyd, Mr. Wolfe being the principal contributor. (b) The hymnbook of the A. B. C. contains 165 hymns. Through the kindness of the Rev. C. Hartwell, one of the principal contributors to this book. a copy is now before us printed at Foochow, on native paper. It contains several original hymns by native converts. (c) The hymn-book of the A. M. E. has 180 hymns, and was prepared by the Revs. R. S. Maclay, D.D., S. L. Baldwin, D.D., and F. Ohlinger. A large number of the hymns are common to all three books.

(3) We are indebted to the Rev. John Chalmers, LL.D., of Hongkong, one of the oldest and most learned missionaries now in China, for the following information concerning Hougkong and Canton. When he came to China in 1852 he found a book in use, pub. two years previously by Rev. Dr. Legge, entitled

(1) Hymns for the worship of the Lord. The number of hymns was 81, with I doxologies. No hymn was a translation, and everything was done in regard to language and metre to command the respect of the literary class, and in so far it was a success. In 1660 Dr. Challes, and the state that was a success. guage and metre to command the respect of the literary class, and in so far it was a success. In 1660 Dr. Chalmers pub. an ed. of this book with tunes in the usual Englah notation, and for nearly 30 years this was the only book in use in the London Mission at Canton and in Hongkong. In 1879 Dr. Chalmers pub. New Songs for the worthip of the Lord, as a Supplement to the previous book. This contained 18 translations of popular English and American between the long lited by previous book. This contained 18 translations of popular English and American hymns; and being liked by the people, received, in 1884, considerable additions. The volume thus finally produced is the one now in 1862. (2) Hymns for Singing Praise. W. M. S., Canton, 1863. "This," says Dr. Chalmers, "was one of the most successful early attempts to translate English bymns," The translator was the Rev. George Piercy, The number of bymns is 34. The translation is by no means literal, and the rhyming is somewhat adapted to Chinese ideas.

(3) Hymns for praising the Lord. A. B. M., Canton, 1975. It contains about 20 of the L. M. S. hymns, nearly all the 34 of the W. M. S. in both cases much altered, and many other translations of English and attered, and many other translations of English and American hymns, making up 286.

(4) Hymns for praising the Lord, W. M. S., Canton, 1877. A book much like the preceding, and containing 230 hymns. It was compiled by the Rev. G. Piercy, before named.

before named.

(5) Hymn-book of the Basel Mission. Hongkong, 1884. "This book," says Dr. Chalmers, "is exceptionally good." The number of hymns is 284. Many are translations from German bymns, and those taken from the Baptist and Wesleyan books are usually improved in style. Beginning, shout 1860, with a book of 55 hymns compiled by the Rev. R. Lechler, it has attained its present size and arrangement through the combined labours of Mesars, Piton, Genähr, Lechler, Bender and

(6) Hymn-book of the C. M. S., Hongkong. Altered from blocks in the Americo-Chinese College, Peking, 1866. This book has been introduced by Bishop Burdon.

It contains 315 hymns and 10 doxologies.

It remains to add a few words in regard to the music sung to these hymns and the metres employed. Chinese native music is quite unsuited to sacred song. English, American and German tunes are therefore used and are commonly liked by the people.

In most of the books named above our metres are used and the lines rhyme as in English. But in the Canton book of the L. M. S. and one or two others, the rules of Chinese poetry are observed, some of which are as follows. "Sevens" is decidedly the "Common Metre," our c.w. and s.w. being regarded as irregular innovations. Next comes "Fives," and then "Eights," which is really "Fours," every four syllables making a clause. The same rhyme is kept up from the beginning to the end of a hymn, an arrangement made easy by the nature of the language. Let the following represent a hymn of eight lines, and the two kinds of marks, × and o, indicate the alternations of "tones" required in a finished poem. The proper places for the rhyme syllable and changes of tone may be expressed thus:-

ì.	×	×	0	0	×	×	thyme-syllable
2.	0			×	Ö	0	rhyme
3.	ò	ò		×	ō	ò	×
4.	×	×			×	×	rhyme
6,	×	×		ø	×	×	x
6.	٥	•	×	×	0	0
7.	0	0	0	х	0	0	x
a	•	~	~	-		•	ebyene

There should also be antithesis of meaning between the third and fourth, and between the fifth and sixth lines.

lines. Referring to the difficulty of compliance with these strangs and exacting rules, a missionary correspondent wittily observes that the descendants of the writer of the 11sth Fashm would be the likeliest persons to succeed in the attempt to create a good Christian Chinese iii. Siam.

The name Siam both stands for Siam proper (chief city, Bangkok) and, in a wider sense, embraces certain dependent States of Shans and Lace, with a part of the Karen country. The population consists of about 6,000,000 in Sism proper, 3,000,000 Shans and Laos, and upwards of 1,500,000 Chinese. The religion of nearly the whole country is Buddhism, mingled with a kind of nature worship in the ruder tribes of the north. The Siamese language is monosyllabic, many words having a variety of different meanings, according to the tone with which they are pronounced. A. B. M. has missions to the numerous Chinese of Bangkok, and to the Karens and Shans, for a notice of which see Burms. The A. B. C. commenced a mission to the Siamese in 1840, which since 1871 has been carried on by the American Presbyterians. It has stations at Bangkok and Petchaburi (about 85 miles to the south from Bangkok), and also among the Laos, 500 miles to the north. The Laos speak a language akin to Siamese.

speak a language akin to Siamese.

The first hymn-book in Siamese was prepared by missionaries of the A. B. C., with the title Surved Songs. The 3rd ed. bears date 1869, and comprises, with a Supplement, 196 hymns. Another book, with a similar title, was pub. by the A. B. M. in 1880, containing 123 hymns, the compiler being the Rev. S. J. Smith, a Suptist missionary. A few years later a small collection was pub. for use in schools and prayer-meetings. These have all been superseded by the Siamese Hymnol, prepared by Dr. S. G. McFarland, and printed at Petchaluri in 1876. It contains 213 hymns, and has passed through several editions, the last in 1836. For this book the best of the old hymns in the two Sucred Songs were selected, and many new ones translated or composed. A smaller and cheaper book is also about to be issued.

About 400 hymns now evist in Siamese.

About 400 hymns now exist in Siamese, most of them being translations from the English by various missionaries. Of the original compositions some are by missionaries; 10 good ones are by a converted Buddhist priest named Chan; and quite a number by Kru Phoon, a native who, strange to say, is still a Buddhist, though having been in the employ of the mission as scribe and translator for 18 years, he has a good knowledge of both the doctrines and spirit of Christianity. Miss Mary L. Cort, of the A. P. M. (to whom we are indebted for much of the preceding information), has sent us a list of the principal translated hymns, which includes most of those best known in England and America. Our metres and tunes are used, and the lines rhyme as with us. Native airs have not yet been utilized in Christian song. "Siamese music is very weird and monotonous, and is never used in the temple services, only at funerals and weddings, in processions, and in connection with boat-races and theatres."

Every native song is composed in lines of 11 syllables, but the Siamese learn western tunes readily, and seem to like them, especially tunes in 11's metre, and everything in a minor iv. Burma.

Under the head of Burms we have to speak (1) of Burma proper, and (2) of certain tribes inhabiting the more mountainous districts, and known as Karens and Shans.

(1.) Burma Proper. In Burma the A. B. M., S. P. G. and W. M. S. have missions, but that of the last named has been commenced only recently. The A. B. Mission was begun in 1814, by the celebrated Rev. Dr. Judson [p. 609, i.], and in the early years of the mission there was no singing. Dr. Judson himself could not sing, and according to Burman ideas, singing in connection with worship was improper. In the native mind it was almost exclusively associated with theatrical and other similar performances. After a time, how-ever, Dr. Judson composed the first Burman hymn—

" Shway pyee koung-gin," " Golden country of heaven," and his fellow missionary, Dr. Wade, became responsible for the music. But it was not until long after, on the arrival of missionaries named Cutter and Hancock, who were good singers, that "the service of song" became popular as a part of worship.

The Baptists in Burma have now a hymnbook containing 294 hymns, 125 being translations and 169 originals. Through the kindness of the Rev. H. S. Burrage, D.D., of Portland, Maine, we are enabled to give the following particulars, supplied by the Rev. Dr. Cushing, the missionary in Burma:-

particulars, supplied by the Rev. Dr. Cushing, the missionary in Burma:—

Three of the hymna, and these among the best, are by Dr. Judson. They are almost the only ones in which a foreigner has endeavoured to embody Burman ideas of ocetry, which are very different from ours. In Burman songs the lines are usually short, and 'thyms runs rios,' it being quite common for every word in a line to rhyme with the corresponding word in the second verse of the complet. This arrangement is comparatively easy, owing to the menosyllabic character of the language. Fifteen hymns were written by Mrs. Sarah B. Judson [p. 609, i.], the Doctor's second wife (d. in 1845), and one by his third wife Emily C. Judson (d. in 1854). Eighty-nine hymns, chiefly trs. or adaptations from the English, are by the Rev. E. A. Stevens, D.D.; his son, the Rev. E. O. Stevens, b. in Burma in 1832, contributed 27. Mrs. C. Simons (d. in 1843) composed 22 bymns, said to be very excellent. The Rev. J. R. Haswell (d. 1877) contributed 19 bymns. Burman was a mother tongue to him, and his hymns have much of the sonorous, stately movement which characterises the religious language of the poople. 14 hymns were composed by the Rev. L. Ingalis (d. 1856), and 10 by the Rev. Lymns Stillon (d. 1866). The Rev. N. Brown, D.D., who d. at Yokohema in 1886 (see Tspan), was the writer of 9 hymns in the Burman hymnolook, one of which, a translation of 'There is a happy land,' has always been exceedingly popular. The Rev. Jon. Wade, D.D., colleague of Dr. Judson, was the author of 7 hymns. Others were written by Miss Kate F. Evans, the Revs. A. E. R. Crawley, T. Allen, and Cephes Bennett, Mr. B. Le Geois, Mrs. Crawley, Mrs. R. A. Relley, Mrs. H. C. Stevens, and Mrs. A. W. Lonsdale, Several native Burmans have also composed bymns, some of which are written in lines of seven sylhables, in accordance with the Burmans have also composed bymns, some of which are written in lines of seven sylhables, in accordance with the Burmans have also composed bymns, some of which are wr Chinese extraction on their father's side, employed as teachers in a mission school at Manimain.

In connection with the S. P. G. mission a hymn-book was pub. in 1879, edited by the Rev. J. Fairclough, but prepared chiefly by the Rev. James A. Colbeck. It contains, in-cluding the two Appendices, about 120 hymns. One appendix was prepared by the Rev. T. Rickard. A few hymns are taken from the book of the A. B. M., but most are translations by the Rev. Messrs, Colbeck and Rickard. English metres and tunes are used, and the lines rhyme as with us.

(ii.) Other parts of Burma. In the hill country of Burma dwell the

(i.) Karens, a semi-aberiginal people, of Mongolian origin, divided into three tribes, speaking distinct dislects of a monosyllabic language, Sgau, Bghai, and Pgho or Pwo. The missions of the A. B. M. have been remarkably successful among them, many thousands having embraced the Christian faith.

sands having embraced the Christian faith.

(1) For their use a hymn-book has been prepared in the Syan Karen dialect containing 442 hymns, 216 of which are translations or adaptations of English hymns by Mrs. Calista Vinton (d. 1865), wife of the missionary, the Rev. Justus H. Vinton. This lady has been spoken of as the "Watta" of Karen hymnody. Her son, the Rev. J. B. Vinton, D.D., b. in Burns, contributed 60 hymns chiefly translations) to the same book. 54 wore written by the Rev. B. C. Thomas (d. 1868); 45 by the Rev. D. A.W. Smith, D.D., now President of the Rangoon Theological Seminary, and 5 by the Rev. E. C. Cross, D.D. The Rev. Francis Mason. D.D., translator of the Karen Bible, was the author of many hymns, only 9 of which have been preserved in the Sgan Karen hymn-book. He also prepared a volume of hymns in the Spani Karen dialect, which was used until recently in the Sgai churche, Dr. Mason's hymns are written in the style of native Karen poetry. Each line consists of seven syllables, and the thought is expressed in couplets resembling the parallelism of Hebrew poetry. They can be fitly used only with the "plaintive, weird, strangely sweet" native Karen music, and bence at the revision of the hymn-book many of them were replaced by others which could be sung to Western tunes. The remaining hymns were contributed by other missionaries or their wives, or by native hymn-writers. contributed by other missionaries or their wives, or by native bymn-writers.
(2) Church Hymns.

(2) Church Hymns. A book with this title was brought out in 1881 by the Rev. Wordsworth Jones, misbrought out in 1881 by the Rev. Wordsworth Jones, missionary of the S. P. G., among the Sgan Karen. It originally comprised 98 hymns. In 1885 an Appendix was added containing 56 hymns. These are chiefly translations, 79 being by the Rev. W. Jones, 9 by the Rev. T. W. Windley, and 2 by J. Hackney; others are from the book of the A. B. M. Thirteen are original, 4 being composed by the Rev. W. Jones, and others by native clergymen. A. large number of the translations are from H. A. & M. English metres and tunes are used, and are appreciated by the natives.

ii.) Pghe Karen. The Rev. D. L. Brayton, of the A. B. M., is the principal translator and composer of hymns in this dialect. He translated the Bible into Pgho or Pwo Karen, and is the author of most of its Christian literature.

(iii.) Shan. The Shaus are a numerous people, occupying most of the region between Burma and China, the Siamese being one branch. They are Buddhists, and in their various branches speak the same language with little variation. Many are found in Burma, in the basin of the Irawadi and elsewhere; and for their use a hymn-book, containing 87 hymns, has been prepared by missionaries of the A. B. M. Seventy-nine of these are translations and four originals, by the Rev. J. N. Cushing, D.D. Three were composed by Shway Wa, an able man, who in the recent occupation of Upper Burma by the English, acted as chief Shan interpreter.

(iv.) Khyan, or Chin. There is also a people | related to the Karens inhabiting the hills separating Upper Burma from the Shan and Chinese territories, and speaking a language called Khyan. A small hymn-book has been prepared for them, but we are unable to supply particulars.

It may be added that in Burma are many Telugu, Tamil, and even Chinese immigrants, whose religious needs are not overlooked by Christian missionaries. For their use hymnbooks are brought from mission stations in India and China.

v. India.

In the collection of countries to which we give the general name of India more than 250,000,000 of people dwell, the various nations and tribes differing in colour, stature and other physical characteristics, having different local customs and, what chiefly concerns us now, speaking many different languages. In our account of hymnody in India it will be most convenient to treat the subject in sections according to the languages.

(1) The Northern and Central parts are inhabited chiefly by nations of the Aryan stock, the principal languages of this group being Bengalt, Uriya, Hindt, Hindustani or Urdu, Marathi, Gujarati, Punjabi and Sindhi. Sanskrit, to which all in this group are related, is not a spoken language: it is the language of the learned and has no Christian hymns. [See Various, under Missions. F.]
(2) In the South of India are nations and tribes of what is called the Dravidian group. Their languages belong to the agglutinative phase of human speech, as opposed to the inflexional stage, represented by the later Aryan migrations into India. The principal members of this group are Tamil, Telugu, Malayálam, Canarese, and Tulu.

(3) Tribes of common origin, though now often widely separated, and whose languages belong to what philologists call the Kolarian group, occupy certain mountainous, wooded regions, usually remote from the coast. These are the Santals, Kohls, Juangs, and others. Descended probably from the most ancient inhabitants of India, they are often spoken of as Aborigines.

(4) Lastly, there are tribes occupying Assam, Sikkim, and the passes leading towards Thibet and China, whose languages form part of the Thibeto-Burman group. These are the Kacharis, Deori-Chutias, Bhutias, Lepchas,

The Northern and Central Groups.

In these groups we have :--

Bengali, the vernacular of nearly 50 millions of people.

Baptists.—The first to compose Christian hymns in this language was the celebrated Baptist missionary, Dr. Carey. In Dr. Rippon's Annual Register is a hymn in Bengali, written by Dr. Carey about 1798, and translated into English by J. Fountain [Fountain, J., p. 884, i.]. The subject is "the Penitent's Prayer and Resolve." and the metre, the English 8.7.4, to Resolve." and the metre, the English 8.7.4, to be sung to the tune "Helmsley." Some time afterwards a hymn-book was prepared by the Serampore Missionaries, and in 1810 the missionary, J. Chamberlain, pub. a volume consisting chiefly of translations of English hymns.

The book at present in use at the Baptist mission stations appeared about fifty years ago, and was edited by the Rev. Geo. Pearce (d. 1887). It contains 475 hymns, chiefly in native metres. Among the authors named are W. Carey, J. Chamberlain, G. Pearce and A. Sutton. The names of 18 Bengalis also appear among the contributors, and Krishna Pal's well-known hymn is included.

Church of England.—(1) The hymn-book used in the Anglican missions (C. M. S. and S. P. G.) entitled 'Hymns Old and New,' was prepared by a committee of the two Societies and has been often revised and enlarged,-on the last occasion, in 1884. It contains 546 hymns, 254 being in English metres, and almost all translations. The remaining 292 are in Bengali metres, and are nearly all original. The chief and best translator was the late Roy. R. P. Greaves; others were Revs. J. Vaughan, A. Stern, C. Bomwetsch, J. J. Weitbrecht, J. J. Linke, C. D. Lippe, and Mr. J. K. Biswas, all of the C. M. S. A few hymns are taken from the Baptist collection. The original hymns in Bengali metres were nearly all written by native Christians. An Appendix to this book containing about 400 hymns is in preparation and will be pub. by the Bishop's College.

(2) The 'Sabbath School Hymn Book,' was prepared by the Teachers of the Trinity Church Sunday School, and contains 254 hymns, 2nd edit in 1885.

(3) The C. M. S. 'Mission Hymn Book' appeared in 1887. It contains 55 hymns.

Special mention ought to be made of the part taken in this great work of the Church by the Rev. Jacob K. Biswas, tutor in the Divinity School of the C. M. S. He has composed and translated no fewer than 1000 hymns in English and Bengali metres. Many of these have appeared in the books already named and in the Hymnals described below.

Wesleyan.—In connection with the W. M. S. a book has been prepared entitled A Methodist Hymnal for Bengal (2nd ed., 1886), the compiler being the Rev. J. A. Macdonald. It contains 322 hymns, and 51 lyrics of a kind very popular in all parts of India (see §§ Marathi, Tamil, &c.), usually sung in processions at festivals, to the accompaniment of a drum and cymbals. Many of the translations are by the editor. Others are by the missionaries of the B. M. S. and C. M. S., named above, with the addition of the Revs. H. Harrison and C. Krauss, of the C. M. S., and N. C. Biswas of the W. M. S.

The Calcutta Vernacular Education Society has pub. a hymn-book called Gitihar, containing 138 selected hymns. It is being revised, and promises to become very popular.

A. M. E.—The Rev. J. P. Meik, of the

A. M. E., has brought out a similar small collection, consisting of original and translated hymns.

K. S. M.—In 1884 the missionaries of the K. S. M. adopted the Anglican Bengali hymnbook. Before that time they had used two small hymnals prepared by Babu Bipro Charan Chakrabutty. This gentleman has recently pub. a collection of 29 lyrics of the kind mentioned above.

educated Christian natives are very common in Bengal. Such are the Gitamrito ("Immortal Songs"), by Amrito Lai Nath, said to be very good; the Khulnea Hymns, by Gogou Chunder Dut; Gitankur ("Song Germs"), Gitmala ("Garland of Songs"), and Gitrotro ("Jewels of Songs"), by a Christian Evange-list, Modhu Sudon Sircar. The last-named collection contains many hymns very appropriate for Bazar preaching.

In connection with Bengali hymns and hymn-writing the following remarks by the Rev. G. H. Rouse, M.A., of Calcutta (B. M. S.)

are worthy of notice :--

"Native Bengali hymnody is abundant, but meagre. New hymns are being constantly made, but the range is limited; very little about the Holy Ghost, or Christian experience, except of the mournful order. 'O my soul, how wicked thou art,' is a sentiment we are always massime, but 'How lumny they that know the Lord!' now wicked thou art, is a sentiment we are always meeting; but 'How kappy they that know the Lord!' does not meet with much response. Joyous Christian experience is very deficient in the native church of Bengal, but things are improving."

Perhaps these statements may be partly explained by the fact that in this part of India the native idea of music is wholly melancholy.

2. Uriya. Travelling from Calcutta in a south-westerly direction for about 70 miles we leave Bengal proper and enter the province of Orissa, containing a population of 5,250,000. The language is called Uriya and belongs to the Sansorit group. At Puri in Orissa is the world-famous shrine of Juggernaut, visited by 300,000 pilgrims annually. For many years the General Baptists have had a mission in Orissa, their principal station being Cuttack. Since 1836 the Free Baptists of New England, whose doctrinal sentiments are similar to those of the General Baptists, have occupied Balasore and other stations in the northern part of the province.

The first Uriya hymn-book was pub. for the Baptists by Rev. Amos Sutton, p.n., in 1844. [See Sutton, A.] It contained 310 hymns, 179 of which bear the initial of the compiler. Gungs Dhor, the first Uriya convert, a Brahmin by birth and education, composed 65, and Rev. C. Lacey 34. But this hymn-book has long been disused. As the Christian community increased, hymnwiters and bymns increased rapidly, and from these latter selections were made from time to time, and printed in tract form. The hymn-book now in use amongst the Baptists consists of eight of these selections bound together in one volume. The total number of hymns is 302, from 23 contributors, of whom 13 are now living. Forty hymns from the old book are retained, including some of Dr. Sutton's and 23 of Gungs Dhor's. It is believed that several of these latter, from their superior quality, as regards both sentiment and poetry, will continue in use for a long time to come. Makunda Das, who has been called the "Dr. Watts of Orissa," composed 145 of the hymns in the present book. Shem Sahu is the author of 57. Other native contributors are Kartick Samal, Barnache, and Daniel Malanty. In the first book a number of the hymns were in English metres. These have disappeared, and the present collection consists entirely of hymns in native metres adapted to the bellad times of the country. Makunda Das has also prepared, in conjunction with Shem Sahu and Rev. P. E. Heberlet, a selection of bynns for the Foung, mostly translations from the English. A number of these are in English metres, and are sung to English tunes in the schools.

3. Hitself, and Urdu. Ascending the stream tunes in the School

3. Hindf, and Urdu. Ascending the stream of the Ganges in a north-westerly direction we enter, as we pass the city of Rajmahal, a vast and populous region in which two languages are spoken, Hindi and Urdu, called also Hindustoni. This region includes the North-West Provinces, Oudh, and the north-Indeed, small collections of hymns by ern part of the Central Provinces of India, with a total population of 80,000,000. Some prefer to speak of these two languages as but different forms of one language, though they are almost as diverse as English and German. Hinds, which is allied to the Sanscrit, may be regarded as the original vernacular; Urds, literally, "Camp" language, came in with the Muhammadau conquerors of the country, and has Hindt for its basis, with a large admixture both of Persian, the court language of the Moguls, and of Arabic, the sacred language of Hindi uses the Sanserit characters, Islam. upright, square and block-like; Urds employs the Persian script characters, which are distinguished by flowing curves and are written from right to left. Urdu is most common in large cities, and is used by Muhammadans; Hindi is preferred by the villacers, and wherever Hindu influences prevail. The two languages, says Dr. Hooper, of the C. M. S. "act upon one another, and neither is spoken pure, except as a form of pedantry. The educated classes commonly understand

(a) The mingling of the two languages is seen in the first hymn-book we notice, the Sat Sangrah, or Git Sangrah, issued in connection with the B. M. S., and used at their stations in Monghyr, Allahabad, Agra, Benares, Delhi, Patna and Dinapore. This book, which has reached a 5th edition, contains 267 hymns, of which 193 are in (a) Hinds, language and metre; 41 in (b) Urdu, language and metre; and 33 (c) Hindi language and English metre.

Most of the 1st class (a) were written by the Reva, J. Chamberlain (d. 1826), J. Parsons, of Monghyr (d. 1869), and Mr. J. Christian, an Indigo planter, a member of the Baptist Church at Monghyr (d. 1883). A few are by native converts. The whole of the 2nd class (b) are by Hindu composers. The 3rd (c), which are free versions of English and German hymns, are by various missionaries. Two eds. of this book with music have been pub. by Dr. Lazarus.

The hymns of Mr. John Christian, composed to Hindu airs and in Hindu metres, deserve special notice. Anglican, Baptist and Congregational missionaries all speak of them as being peculiarly excellent, and as likely to retain a high place in the affection of the Christian Churches of this part of India for a long time to come.

Before us is a collection of 100 hymns, called Satyd-Shatah, all by Mr. Christian, including, however, some in the hymn-book already described. This is not a book intended for use in the churches, but rather to be circulated as a tract. Indeed, tracts of hymns are much employed as a missionary agency, the people of India being extremely fond of anything in the form of poetry; and Mr. Christian's hymns may often be heard sung in the streets, as snatches of songs are with us.

(b) Another collection similar to the one just named has been sent us by Col. Millett, of Dharmsala, India (to whom we are indebted for much of the information contained in this section). It is entitled Diffusion of Praise, a Book of Bhajans, pub. by the North India Book and Tract Society.

And here it may be stated that the word Bhajan is the name usually given in this part of India to a hymn composed to a native Hindu tune, and it implies the tune as well as the words. Col. Millett says "there is no equivalent for this word in the English language. It may be termed a song in a savage state." But speaking generally, Bhajan is the Hindu name, and Ghazal the Muhammadan name, for a Christian hymn in native

(c) An Urds hymnal was compiled and printed eight years ago by the Rev. R. F. Guyton, for the use of the Baptist Mission in Delbi. It is entitled Kharzana i Khurrami, and contains the 193 Hindi hymns of the Sat Sangrah (named above) transliterated; the 41 in Urdu, with about 70 additional, extracted or contributed.

(d) The A. P. M. pub. in 1872, Zabur aur Git ("Psalms and Hymns"). It contains 485 hymns in English metres, nearly all in Urdu. the few exceptions being in Hind: also, 31 Bhajans, chiefly Hindi, with a few Ghazals in Urdu. An appendix of 72 tunes is added.

The editor of this book was the Rev. J. F. Ullmann, who also translated, from the English or German, the far greater number of the hymna. Some are by the Revs. Messrs. Brothead, Dāuble, Droese and Janvier, and a few by Shujfat Alf, a native poet of some eminence, recently deceased. This book is printed in Roman characters, and is used in other missions besides the A. P. M.

(e) The Masshi Git ki Kitáb ("Christian Hymn-book"), printed in 1876 at the Secundra Orphanage Press, near Agra, was prepared at the suggestion of the Rev. J. Erhardt by a committee of missionaries of the S. P. G.& C. M. S., and is arranged according to the order of the Christian Year. It contains 387 hymns in English metres and 13 Bhajans. The translations are chiefly by the Rev. Messrs. Banli, Ullmann, Dauble, and Erhardt. Bishop French and others contributed single hymns. Many are identical with the hymns in the book of A. P. M. It is printed in both Roman and Persian Urdu characters.

(f) Git ki Kitab ("Book of Hymns") is the Urdu Hymnal of the A. M. E., and is printed in both Roman and Urdu characters. It contains 210 hymns in English metres, 75 Ghazals and Bhajans, and 16 hymns for Sunday-schools. The list of translators and composers of hymns contains the names of Ullmann, Fieldbrave, Baume, Waugh, Däuble, Brodhead, Parker, Chamberlain, Mansell, Gill, Janvier, Christian, Shujaat Ali and others.

(g) The preceding are the principal books: others less important include :-

others less important include:—
Gitároaii, "Hymns and Songs for Children," by J. F.
Ullmann; Int. aur Rore ("Bricks and Brickbats")
Hymns for Children, with music, by the fiev. E. Drocse; Skandra ki Choil Glimáld ("The Little Sikandra Hymnbook"), by the Rev. C. G. Däuble, a collection of Sh hymns and Anthems; Choil Gli ki Kidh, "Sunday School aur Ibadat ne Llye," containing 152 hymns, pub. at Lucknow, in 1884, at the Church Mission Congregational Press; Stuit Prakázh, a book of Hindi hymns by the Rev. W. F. Johnson, of the A. P. M.

It may be added that the American United Presbyterian Church, which does not use hymns, has brought out, in connection with the Sialkot Mission, metrical versions of many Psalms, by Licentiate T. D. Shah Baz, and quite recently (1887), a collection of 100 Psalms in metre printed at the Secundra Orphanage Press, Agra.

(h) In the broad tableland of Chota Nagpore, about 200 miles from Calcutta, are very successful missions of the German Evangelical Lutherans and of the S. P. G. The inhabitants are chiefly aboriginal tribes belonging to two distinct races, the Mundaris or Kolhs, of the Kolasian group, and the Urauns, of the Dravidian group of South India. Of the former we shall speak again in the section devoted to the aborigines of India. Both are to some extent acquainted with Hindi, as well as with their own languages. Hence the following books have been prepared in Hindi.

(a) The Hymnal of the German E. L. Mission, reprinted and enlarged several times between 1850 and 1880, and now containing 123 hymns, chiefly translated from the German, by the Revs. E. Schatz, H. Batsch, and others.

(b) The Anglican Church Hymnol, including many bymns from the German book, with 22 from H. A. & M., translated by the Rev. J. C. Whitley, together with Miss Havergal's "Tell it out among the heathen," and "Lord, speak to me," by the same author. The metres and tunes used are English and German, usually the same as in the original.

same as in the originals.

(c) A book of Hymns for Children, by the missionaries of the German E. L. M., is now (1888) ready for publication.

(i) The Rev. H. D. Williamson, of the C. M. S. of Mundla, in the Central Provinces, has lately compiled a small hymn-book in Hindi, containing some hymns of his own composition, but we are without information as to particulars.

(k) The United Presbyterians of Scotland have important missions in Rajpootans, and in the Annual Report for 1887 are some interesting allusions to hymns and sacred song. For instance:-

At Ajmere the school children "commit hymns to memory and make vigorous, if not always successful, efforts to sing." At Oodeypore "the children can repeat and sing several of the hymns dear to the heart of childhood all the world over." And at Ulwar "every Tueshood all the world over." And at Ulwar "every Tuesday evening a service of praise is held in the church. Christian hymns and bhajans are sung to the accompaniment of the organ, and a brief address is given." The principal hymn-book used is one of which the 2nd (colarged) edition appeared in 1883. It comprises about 300 hymns and bhajans, printed in Hindl characters, though many are in the Urdú language. It is chiefly a compiliation from the hymnais named above, in paragraphs a, d, e and f, with additions, original and translated, by Munshi Hasan All, the Rev. J. Gray (editor) and others.

(!) Leaving this part of India and re-crossing a portion of the immense district already traversed, on the slope of the gigantic Himálayas, we arrive at the K. S. M. at Darjeeling, and the Scottish Universities Mission in British and Independent Sikkim, languages spoken in these districts are Hindi. Nepálí, Bengalí, Urdú, Lepchá and Bhutia; but Nepálí is a dislect of Hindí, and Hindí is the lingua franca used by the Mission. to 1884 a hymn-book had been used consisting of the Urds' hymnal of the L. M. S. at Mirzapore bound up with some Hindi hymns collected by the late Rev. W. Macfarlane of the K. S. M. But in that year the Rev. A. Turnbull, B.D. pub. a book entitled Prayer and Hymn Collection.

It contains 256 hymne. Twenty-two are originals or It contains he myrmis. Twenty-two are originals or translations by Mr. Turnbull; one is by Rev. J. F. Campbell, of Mhow; the rest are taken from other Hindi or Urdi hymn-books, enth as the Git Sangrah (B.M.S.) referred to above, the Gitputtak (Allahabad, 1888), and the collection previously used.

The hymns are mainly translations of wellknown English hymns or paraphrases of English metres and tunes are used, and the lines are made to rhyme as in English. Mr. Tumbull, however, informs us that frequently hymns to native tunes are prepared by native Christians, and lithographed for use. Many of these, as adapted to the tastes of the people, will be incorporated in the next edition of the Hymnal.

4. Panjabi.-In the Panjab, or region of the five rivers, eight missionary societies have been labouring with considerable success during the last forty years. The chief of these have been American and Scottish Presbyterian Societies and the C. M. S. Urdú is extensively spoken in the Panjab, and its use as the language of literature is extending, but Panfabi, a language closely akin to western Hindi, is still the vernacular. Dr. H. U. Weitbrecht, of the C. M. S., says it is "essentially a peasant's language and is in danger of relegation to the position of a mere patois." It is written mainly in two characters, Gurmukh(and Persian. Gurmukhi signifies that which has to do with the mouth of the Guru, or religious teacher, and it is the sacred character of the Sikh religion. From Dr. Weitbrecht we learn that the following hymn-books have appeared in Panjáld:-

(1) Gitin di Pothi. A collection of Uriú and Hindi hymne and bhajans, compiled from various sources and printed in the Gurmukhi character. By the Rev. E. P. Newton, of the Ludhians A. P. M., 64 pp. 1891.

(2) Mariki Gii ki Kitato. The hymn-book of the Methodist Episcopal Church, pub. at Lucknow in Uriú-Gurmukhi hymnessen 110 pp. 1881.

Gurmukhi character. 140 pp. 1884. Edited by the Rev. J. Newton, of the Labore A. P. M. (8) Mushii Git. & Kitáb, Panjabl, in Urdú characters. 140 pp., evo. 1884. By Miss Wauton of the C. E. Z. S.

- 5. Sindhi.-Sindhi is spoken in the valley which lies along the lower course of the river Indus or Sindhu. The population of Sindh is about 2,400,000, and the prevailing religion is Muhammadanism. "Sindhi," says Dr. Weitbrecht, "is mainly a rustic tongue, with little literature." It is generally written in the Arabic character. The C. M. S. has stations in Sindh, and its missionaries have been the authors of nearly all its Christian literature. A collection of 26 hymns and 10 Bhajans has been recently prepared by Rev. J. Redman, and through the kindness of Col. Millett is now before us. It is printed at the Ludhiana Mission Press, and bears date 1887. It includes translations of "Rock of Ages," "Just as I am," "Art thou weary," and other well-known hymns. The Rev. A. W. Cotton, of Sukkur, Sindh, sent some Bhajans to press in Dec., 1887.
- 6. Gujarati.—Gujarati, another of the languages of northern India allied to the Sanscrit, is the vernacular of the province of Gujarat and Kāthiāwar, in the Bombay Presidency, and is spoken by nearly 10,000,000 of people. The boundaries of the district are, on the north, the Gulf of Cutch and a line drawn from it eastward for about 150 miles; on the south, a small river near the Portuguese territory of Daman; on the east, a line about 120 miles inland, nearly parallel to the sea coast; and on the west, the Arabian Sea from near Daman to Cutch. The L. M. S. was the first to labour here, but in 1846 and 1859 their missions at Surat and other stations were, by a friendly arrangement, transferred to the Irish Presbyterians, who have since then been the sole Christian workers in this district.
- (t) The first hymn-book in Gujarati, so far as is now (1) The first hymn-book in experient, so tar is a now known, was prepared by the brothers William and Alexander Fyvie, of the L. M. S., and concluded of translations from the Mindi. The 2nd ed. (1839) contained 112 bymns in English metres. The Rev. W. Clarkson, of the same mission, also prepared a small collection with the title Dharma Gita, i.e., "Religious Songs," lithographed at Ahmedabad in 1851.

This was reprinted two or three times.

(2) In 1856 a metrical version of the Pealms was pub. by the Rev. James Glasgow, p.p., of the Irish Presbyterian Mission, English rhyming metres being used throughout. But Gugarati, like other languages of the same stock, is unsuited to English metres. The accent must always be on the root; and the number of syllables in a line of poetry is determined, not merely by the number of syntactic large of sources, but but the number of convenience and several a line of poetry is determined, not merely by the number of vowels, but by the number of consonants and vowels, which together make up the line. Another version of the Psalms, therefore, in native metres, and fitted to be sung to native tunes, was prepared by a Gujarati Christian named Walji Bechan, and pub. at Surat in 1876.

(3) But the hymn-book now in general use is the Kürydirpana, or "Poetic Offering," first pub. in 1863. The 7th ed. was pub. at Surat in 1877, and contains in all 187 nealms and hymns. About 210 of the hymns ane ras ea. was pun. at surat in 1877, and contains in all 287 pasims and hymns. About 210 of the hymns are original, the greater part being composed by the Rev. Juseph van Someren Taylor (d. in 1881); others are by the Revs. Dr. Glasgow and W. Clarkson, and several by native Christian poets. Forty are translations of Paslans of David, and others are versions of well-known Funkal hymns. But Facilia and Cultural materials. English hymns. Both English and Gujarati metres and tunes are used.

7. Marathi.—Marathi (pronounced Marathi) is a language belonging to the Sanscrit group, and is spoken in the region comprised in a triangle having Nagpore for its apex and the west coast of India from Goa to above Bombay for its base. The population is about 17,000,000, among whom six Societies are at work. (1) A hymn-book called Sacred Songs is used in the missions of the A. B. C., K. S. M., F. C. S., and probably others, the history of which is as follows :-

The first book of hymns in Marathi was pub. hy missionaries of the A. B. C. in 1819, and contained 16 small pages. The hymns were in native metres. Another book, called Probins & Hymns, written in English metres, appeared in 1835.

These books, enlarged and improved from time to time, were used until 1846, when Rev. H. Ballantyne, a man of fine poetic tasts and culture, prepared a new collection of translations of the best English hymns in English metres. It contained more than 100 hymns, and was called Hymns for Divine Worthip. Being received with great favour, Mr. Estiantyne was prompted to enlarge it considerably. The 4th ed. was pub. in 1865 by the Bombay Tract Society, whose Committee say in the preface "336 of the choicest hymns in the English.

by the Bonusay Tract Society, whose Committee say in the preface "336 of the choicest hynnis in the English language are here rendered into flowing Marathi, with a success that leaves nothing to be desired." This hynn-book entirely superseded all previous ones. Mr. Ballantyne prepared, in addition, 64 hynns for children. Failing health, however, compelled him to leave India, and he d. at sea, Nov. 9, 1865.

In the meantine, in the years from 1862 to 1887, there was a gradual re-introduction of hynns in native metres. A true native Christian poet appeared, Mr. Krishnaraw Ramaji Sangalé, a catechist of the A. B. C. A collection of his compositions, with the title Gayanamrit, was pub. In 1867, and soon became very popular.

When it became necessary therefore, in 1874, to pub. a 5th ed. of Mr. Bellantyne's Hys. for Divine Worship, it was resolved to combine the English and native metres in the same work. Other compositions by native metres in the same work. Other compositions by native metres in the same work. Other compositions by native metres in the same work. (2) The Bulbul is a collection of 161 hymns for children, including those by Mr. Ballantyne, with additions by Mrs. Bissell, Mrs. Bruce, Dr. Fairbank, Krishnaraw, and others.

(3) The Gananidhi, or "Song-Treasury pub. at Bombay in 1886, is a collection of 215 hymns, with appropriate tunes, including more than 50 popular native airs, all in European old notation, edited by the Rev. C. Harding, of the A. B. C. Some of the hymns are now. The tunes, other than the native airs, are culled from other collections.

(4) The Rev. J. Taylor, of the S. P. G. pub. at Poona, in 1884, Hymns Ancient and Modern translated and compiled for use in the Church in Western India. Besides the hymns translated from the well-known English book, there are a few taken from the Sacred Songs noticed above, and from other sources. Translated hymns usually follow the English metre; the original hymns are for the most part in native metres.

Since it was in the Marathi-speaking country that Christian Kirttans were first performed, which have since become popular throughout India, we may here introduce a brief account of them.

The Kirttan is a musical performance in which the praises of some god are celebrated with singing and instrumental music. In the year 1862 it occurred to Mr. Krishnaraw and others, that a Christian Kirttan might be made a useful evangelistic agency. The first was performed in Ahmednagar and the neighbouring villages, and everywhere met with an arthrotestic management of the state villages, and everywhere met with an enbusiastic re-ception. The leader stood on a platform, and behind him four of five trained Christian singers, who joined in the choruses. There were Hindoo musical instruments, him four or five trained currenan singers, who probable the choruses. There were Hindeo musical instruments, including a kind of guitar,—a pair of cymbals,—a sarlingi, played like a violoncello, and a small drum, besten with the ends of the fingers. First, a brief prayer was offered; then, the leader announced the subject of the kirttan, and a chorus followed. The words of the chorus became the text for a brief exhortation, delivered in a musical tone, and leading the way to another chorus, the whole performance occupying about two hours. about two hours.

The native Christian Marathi hymns, in which choruses are frequent, afford abundant matter for these Kirttans, as do lyries among the Bengalis and Tamils, and Bhajans among the Hindis, and others.

ii. South Indian, or Dravidian Group.

I. Canarese. - Moving southward from the Marathi country we come to a people, 9,000,000 in number, speaking Canarese, a language of the Dravidian or South Indian group. These are found not only in Canara, on the Western coast, but also through the Mysore, Coorg, and northward as far as Beder, in the Nizam's territory. Seven Societies have missions in this district, those in strongest force being the Basel Evangelical Society, the W. M. S., and the L. M. S.

(1) The hymn-book used by the W. M. S. and L. M. S. ts entitled Canareas Tymns, original and selected, by the Rev. B. Rice ('the edit. revised and enlarged, Bangalore, 1881.) It contains 250 hymns, eixteen of which are for children. Among these latter are "There is a happy land," "There's a Friend for little children," & Seven are chants, such as the Te Deum. Most are sung to tunes selected from H. A. & M., the Bristol and Wesleyon

Time Books, &c.

The Rev. B. Rice was a missionary of the L. M. S., who d. in 1887, after 50 years of service. Other authors and translators were Messrs. C. Campbell, J. Paul, Coles, W. Arthur, and Riddett. 62 hymns were taken from the book of the Basel mission described below. J. Paul is a native minister of the L. M. S.

(2) Bound up with this hymnal, in a volume before us, is a collection of Christian Lyrics (Bangalore, 2nd edit. 1879) by the Rev. Abijah Samuel, a native Vesieyan minister, and very superior man, who d. a few years ago. (For further particulars concerning Lyrics in the Dravidian languages, as distinguished from Hymns, see

Malayalam and Tamil below.]

(3) The Basel missionaries, whose printing press is at Mangaiore, pub. a Canarese hymn-book in 1846, which was revised and enlarged in 1855 and 1867. At the was revised and enlarged in 1855 and 1867. At the latter date it contained 188 hymns, composed or translated by Messrs. H. Mögling, C. Weigle, J. Layer, F. Metz and others. The 7th revised edition (1855) contains 195 new hymns, or 270 in all. The translations are chiefly from the best German hymns, and are made to be sung to German tunes. Among the translators of the later hymns were Messrs. Ziegler, Graeter and A. A. Männer. The Basel missionaries have also pub. a collection of 45 Lytics, composed by a native root, and lection of 46 Lyrics, composed by a native poet, and a book of 130 hymns for children, nearly all translations from the German by Messrs. Kittel and Mack.

2. Tulu.—Tulu is the prevailing language of South Canara, which is in consequence frequently called the Tulu country. Like the Canarese, it belongs to the Dravidian group of Indian languages, but has no existing literature, except the books prepared by the missionaries of the Bosel Society, and printed Canarese characters at Mangalore. Through the illiteracy of the people, Christian instruction hitherto has been of necessity chiefly oral, and the singing of hymns has been largely used as an evangelistic agency.

(1) The 4th edition of the Tulu Hymn-book (Mangalore, 1886) contains 186 hymns, principally prepared by the Rev. A. Manner,—some, however, being composed by the missionaries Annmann, Cammerer and Wittele. Most are translations of the best German hymns, such as "Ein feate Gurg ist unser Gott," 20 only being originals. They are in German metres, and are sung to German tunes. German tunes,

(2) The Rev. A. Manner has also prepared in Tulu a collection of 115 hymns for children, and a translation of 32 of Sankey's Songs and Solos.

3. Malayalam.—To the south of the Tulu country are the provinces of Cochin and Travancore, on the Malabar coast, where the principal language speken is Malayalam, another of the Dravidian group. (1) In the northern part of this region the Basel missionaries have several stations. They have pub. a large collection of hymns, chiefly translations from the German by the Rev. Mr. Fritz, of Canuanore, and others. (2) The middle portion of the region is occupied by the C. M. S., their principal station being Cotta-yam. The hymn-book used here was prepared in 1842 by the Rev. H. Baker, one of the founders of the mission. It has 125 hymns, and in its first form consisted exclusively of translations of English hymns, composed in English metres, and intended to be sung to English tunes. In the later editions additions have been made from the book of the Basel missionaries mentioned above, and also from a similar book, prepared by the Rev. S. Mateer, of the L. M. S., whose head-quarters are at Trevandrum, towards the southern extremity of the Malayalam-speaking district. Besides the hymn-book just referred to, the Rev. S. Mateer pub. in 1872 (3) A collection of Christian Songs in native metres, sung to native tunes, called for distinction's sake Githas or lyrics. In these the rhyme is sometimes at the beginning of lines, sometimes at the end, and sometimes the lines rhyme throughout, and nearly all have a refrain or chorus. As an example may be mentioned a very popular lyric composed by the Rev. Justus Joseph, a Brahman convert. It is a paraphrase of the description of the Risen Christ, in the 1st chap, of the Apocalypse. The refrain to each stanza runs thus:-

" Praise! Praise! O Jesu, our Lord! Allelula, having sung, praise, praise, O Lord."

The 5th edit. of this book, pub. in 1887, contains 250 lyrics, on such subjects as "Adoration of Jesus," "Agony in Geth-semanc," "Call to Conversion," &c. The principal authors are the Rev. Justus Joseph and his brother Philippos, all of whose lyrics are original, and Messrs. M. J. Hochanya and M. Walsalam, most of whose compositions are translations, chiefly from the Tamil.

The tunes to the lyrics are somewhat wild and irregular, and cannot usually be expressed in English notation, because the intervals in Hindu music differ from ours, several being less than a semitone. [See Tamil.]

It may be added that in Cottayam and the neighbourhood are found the so-called Syrian Christians, for a notice of whom see Syriac Hymnody.

- 4. Tamil.—The most important of the Dravidian or non-Brahmanical languages of India is the Tamil or Tamul, spoken by more than 13,000,000 of people in south India, as well as by probably 5,000,000 in the northern part of Ceylon, in Burma, and in the Straits Settlements. In India proper the Tamil country extends from about 20 miles north of Madras to Cape Comorin in the south, and from the sea coast, on the cast, to the range of mountains called the Ghats, on the west. first Protestant missionaries to India, sent in 1706 by the king of Denmark to Tranquebar, began their labours among the Tamils. Their names were Ziegenbalg and Piutchau. the present time 14 English, German, Danish and American Societies have missions in this part of India.
- (1) The first hymn-book printed in Tamil was a collection of 48 hymns translated by Ziegenbalg, and pub. in 1713. This was repeatedly enlarged, by the missionaries Schultze, Pressier, and Walther, until toutained 300 hymns. Fabricius, an eminent Lutheran missionary, who came to India in 1742, still further enlarged it. The 13th ed., with the title Hymnologia Germano-Tumnitica (called also Fubricius's Hymn-book, 7th ed.), was printed in 1881 at Tranquebar, at the Evangelical Lutheran Mission Press. It contains 375 hymns, nearly all translations from Luther, Gerhardt, Frevilinchausen. Heermann and other German writers. Freylinghausen, Heermann, and other German writers. The neat volume now before us contains also 171 German tunes to the bymns (Tranquebar, 1×78). This bymn-book is used at the stations of the Danish and Leipzig Lutheran Missions in Tanjore and elsewhere.

Lutheran Missions in Tanjore and elsewhere.

(2) In 1831 the Madres Religious Tract Society pub, a Coll. of 42 hymns in English metres, edited by the Rev. C. T. Rhenius, a German employed by the C. M. S. This was from time to time enlarged. Its present representative, pub. by the same Society (Madras, 5th edit., 1886), is entitled Tamid Hymn-book, compiled by the Hymn-book revision committee. It contains 310 hymns and doxologies, mostly adaptations or free renderings of English and German originals, and was edited by the Rev. Ellas J. Gioria, a Tamulian, connected with the H. M. S. This book is in general use throughout the W. M. S. This book is in general use throughout the Tamil country, except in the Lutheran and some Anglican missions.

(3) In 1887 appeared the Tamil Church Hymn-book, containing 233 hymns, arranged according to the order of the festivals of the Church of England. It was compiled by Bishops Caldwell, of the S. P. G.; and Sargent, of the C. M. S. In this collection several English hymns appear in Tamil for the first time, such as, "Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty;" "The Church's one foundation;" "Jesus Christ is risen today." (3) In 1887 appeared the Tamil Church Hymn-book,

(4) Several other Tamil hymn-books have been pub., as the Nagercoil Coll., and one edited, in 1865, by the Rev. F. Baylis, but have been superseded by one or other of those last mentioned.

(5) The Christian Vernacular Education Society has also pub. Hymns for Children in Tamil. The 2nd edit. (Madras, 1883) contains 166 hymns, selected from Fabricius, and the Nagercoil Collection, or translated by Messrs. Spalding, Webb, Pervial, Kilmer, S. Nilcs and other of D. P. Nilcs (Tamulians), and others.

All compositions called Hymns in South India are in European metres, and made to be sung to European tunes; but perfectly distinct from these are Christian songs known as Lyrics, answering to the Bhajans of Northern and Central India. These compositions are different in style from anything heard in Europe. The rhyme is at the beginning of the verse instead of the end. The substance of the Lyric is frequently given in a verse (venba) at the beginning and is not sung. Then follows a chorus (pallavi) which is sung after each verse, and sometimes a sort of second chorus (anapallavi), which is sung only once. Lyrics are written in a great variety of metres, and some of the tunes sung to them are such as have been used for ages nast in the Hindu temples. The principal writer of Tamil Lyrics was a native Christian poet, named Vethanayagam, who lived at the beginning of this century. Many of the Tamil Christians have since written, but few of their productions have equalled his. Some have been composed by Mr. R. C. Caldwell, son of the Bishop, and by the Rev. E. Webb, of the A. B. C., at Madura.

There are several collections of Tamil Lyrics, pub. in There are several collections of Tamil Lyrics, pub. in Madras and Tranquebar, but the one most wide's used was compiled by the Rev. E. Webb, just named. It was pub. in 1853, and contained 226 pieces. Recent editions have been revised by the Rev. G. T. Washburn, of the A. B. C. mission at Madura. The 9th edit., pub. in 1886 by the Medras R. Tract Society, contains 300 Lyrics. Two Selections from this book have also been with the right of the Medras congruentions.

pub. for use in village congregations.

The use of Lyrics in public worship was at first opposed by many missionaries, principally because the associations with the tunes were objectionable; but they are so much preferred by the people and suit so well the genius of the language, that the opposition has almost ceased, and in many village congregations they are used exclusively.

(For information concerning Tamil hymnody in India we would express our great obligations to the Revs. J. L. Wyatt (S. P. G.); G. O. Newport (L. M. S.); and G. M. Rae (P. C. S.). Concerning Tamil in Ceylon see section on flexion.

- 5. Telugu.—Telingana, or the Telugu country, begins a few miles to the north of Madras and extends northward as far as the neighbourhood of Ganjam, in Orissa. It contains about 17,000,000 of people, most of whom speak Telugu, a language of the Dravidian group. In this region are missions, some very flourishing, of the S. P. G.; C. M. S.; L. M. S.; A. B. M.; F. C. S.; the Canadian Baptists; the Lutherans of America; the Hermannsburg Lutheran Society of Hanover, and the Brethren.
- Brethren.

 (1) A hymn-book extensively used throughout the Telugu country is the one compiled by the Rev. W. Dawson of the L. M. S. of Vlzagapetam. The latest ed. was pub. in 1883, at the C. K. S. press in Madras. It contains 258 hymnes, all in Telugu metres except the last eix. In the preparation of the first 162 hymns Mr. Dawson was assisted by Phrushöttam Chowdry, a native minister now connected with the General Baptist Mission in Orissa. The 15 hymns from 153 to 167 inclusive were composed by the Rev. P. Jagganadham of the L. M. S. of Vizagapetam; the rest by various authors. At a recent conference of missionaries and others the opinion was expressed that this hymn-book needs revision and culargement.

 (2) The Brethren (represented in England by G. Müller, of Bristol) whose mission stations are in the Delta district of the river Godavery, heve pub. a collection of 110 hymne, known as the Delta Hymn-book, of which 190 are in native metres and are sung to native tunes; the rest are in English metres.

which 100 are in native metres and are sung to native tunes; the rest are in English metres.

(3) The collection pub. by the A. B. M. was first issued in 1869, and contained 60 hymns, the editors being Mrs. Lyman Jewett and Mrs. J. E. Clough. Three eds. have since appeared, but this book is now superseded by one pub. in 1887, the work of a committee appointed at the Jubilee of the A. B. Telugu Mission held in Nellore, February 1886. The new hymnal contains 183 pieces, many being taken from the book of Mrs. Jewest and Mrs. Clough, others from the Delta-Mission collection, others from the Dawson hymn-book, the remainder being new and original compositions. A special feature of this book is a glossary at the foot of each page. Thirty-eight of the choicest hymns are by Purushottam Chowdry (named above), others by members of the native churches. The preface is signed on behalf of the Committee, by Mrs. Anna H. Downle, wife of the Rev. D. Downle, p.D., of the A. B. M.

(4) The Amer. Evangelical Lutheran Mission uses a hymn-book containing Dawson's hymns and 57 new ones, composed mainly by the Rev. B. John, of the ame mission.

(5) The Rev. John Hav. p.D., of the L. M. S. pub.

(5) The Rev. John Hay, D.D., of the L. M. S. pub. many years ago a collection of 35 hymns in English metres, composed by himself and the Rev. J. S. Wardlaw, M.A. This is new out of print, but some of the hymns appear in No. 7.

(6) Also, many years ago Mr. Newill, of the Madras Civil Service, prepared a book of about 50 hymns. This was thoroughly revised, and the number of hymns increased to 128, by the Rev. J. E. Sharkey, an able and devoted miselonary of the C. M. S., who died in 1867, Several editions of the enlarged book appeared, but it is new out of print.

(7) Dr. Chamberlain's Hymn-book. This contains 86

(7) Dr. Chamberlain's Hymn-book. This contains 86 Telugu hymns in English metres, edited by the Rev. J. Chamberlain, D.D., of the American (Old Dutch) Reformed Church, and printed at the C. K. S. press, Madras, in 1884 (2nd edit. 1885).

(8) Besides the above, 10 new hymns in Telugu metres were composed and printed, in 1887, by the Rev. P. Jagganadham, of Vizagapatam. One of these is a translation of Miss Havergal's hymn, "Take my life and let it be." Others, by the Rev. Dr. Chamberlain, have been printed, with music, as leaflets.

In regard to India generally it is to be noted that with the progress of years the use of English metres and tunes has been increasingly superseded by that of metres and tunes belonging to the country, which have come down to our time unwritten, but have been long used in festivals, at weddings and the like.

6. Ceylon.-In Ceylon, the name of which is se familiar to us from its occurrence in Heber's missionary hymn, three languages are spoken, besides English, viz., Tamil, Singhalese, and a patois of Portuguese. The S. P. G., C. M. S., W. M. S., B. M. S., and A. B. C., all have missions. For the use of the Tamil-speaking congregations the hymn-books are available which are prepared in connection with the various missions of South India, these, however, may be mentioned:

(1) A translation pub. in 1831 of the entire Wesleyan Hymn-book, as it is now used in England, the Supplementary hymns being included. The volume is beautiful in type and general appearance. The principal translators were the Revs. J. Kilner, E. Hoole, p.e., J. M. Osbora, P. Percival, W. M. Walton, J. V. Benjamin, J. Benjamin, E. S. Adama, D. P. Kiles (a Tamulian), D. Valupillal, E. Rigg, &c. The metres are the same as in English, only that 3, 7's is substituted for 7's.

(2) For the use of the Eurasian population, speaking the patois mentioned above, a hymn-book in Portuguese was prepared some time ago, and quite recently another, in which most of the hymns are translations by Advocate J. H. Eaton, of Colombo.

(3) The Singhalese hymn-book used by the Wesleyans contains 259 hymns, the last ed. being pub. in 1890, under the editorship of the Eev. John Scott. Nearly all the hymns are original compositions by native ministers.

(4) Two small S. School hymn-books, containing respectively 74 and 85 hymns, have been brought out by the same editor, under the auspices of the Ceylon Religious Tract Society. They consist almost entirely of translations of popular English hymns for children.

(5) Mr. Corca was a Baptist minister and author of Temperance and other moral poetry normals amone tha these, however, may be mentioned :-

translations of popular English hymns for children.

(5) Mr. Corea was a Baptist minister and suthor of Temperance and other moral poetry popular among the Singhalese. More than 40 years ago he pub. a book of hymns, some being set to native airs, others to English tenes. This book has passed out of use, its place being supplied by the Gicka Midnana, or "Treasury of Song," prepared by the Rev. C. Carter, of the E. M. S., assisted by the Rev. J. S. Perera, a Singhalese ministor, and pub. in 1878. It contains 125 hymns original and translated, among the latter being such hymns as "Rock of Ages," "Let us with a gladsome mind."

(6) A Union hymn-book has just been pub. (1888) by the Ceylon R. T. S., embodying a large number of the hymns in Mr. Carter's book with considerable additions.

iii. The Aboriginal and other scattered races of India.

1. Santalia or Santhalistan, may be described as a strip of the great province of Bengal, about 100 miles in breadth, extending south-wards from Bhagalpur on the Ganges for about 250 miles, until it touches Orissa. Its inhabitants dwell for the most part in villages among the hills. They belong to one of the aboriginal races of India, are free from the bondage of caste, and speak a language entirely different from Bengali or Hindi.

entirely different from Bengali or Hindi.

(1) The C. M. S. has a very successful mission among them, whose headquarters are at Talghari, in the north of the Santal country. For their use a Hymand was pub. in 1876, the Rev. F. T. Cole being the editor. The 2nd ed. (1884), entitled Dhorow Seren, contains 174 hymns and two litunies, and was printed at Bhowanipore. Most are translations of familiar English hymns, the principal translations being the Revs. F. T. Cole, H. Davis, W. T. Storrs, A. Stark, J. Blaich, and J. Brown, with several native helpers. The hymns are supposed to rhyme and most of them are sung to English tunes. Twenty-eight are set to native melodies. (2) Another remarkably interesting mission in Santalis has at its head a Norwegian and a Dane, Messra. Skrefsrud and Boerresen. For the use of their converts a new hymn-book has just been issued, composed chiefly of hymns set to native tunes.

(3) The F. C. S., whose principal station is at Pachamba, for a time used the hymnal of the C. M. S., but have now one of their own, containing however, many of the C. M. S. translations.

(4) Antong the Reimanla hills, in the north of the of the C. M. & translations.

(4) Among the Rajmahai hills, in the north of the Santal country, are a people speaking a language called Molto, belonging to the Dravidian group. For their use the Rev. E. Droese, a German missionary connected with the C. M. & prepared a small collection of 21 hymns. A new collection is now (1837), in the press prepared by Miss Stark, which includes some of Mr. Droese's hymns and a large number of new ones.

(5) In the Midnapore district of northern Oriesa are many flantals, among whom the Pree Boptists of America have a mission. They have pub. a hymn-book containing 71 hymns, mostly translations, but also a good number of originals, some composed by Santal Christians. The book is printed at the mission press at Midnapore.

(6) The Hethel Santhal mission, in the district of Talia and Agoia, under the direction of Mr. A. Haegert, has also a hymn-book, partly original, partly a compila-

Kohls or Mundaris.—In the § Hindi, reference was made to the Kohls or Mundaris, one of the aboriginal races of India, inhabiting part of the province of Chota Nagpore. As was then stated, the S. P. G. and the German Evangelical Lutherans, have successful missions among these people, and three books for their use have been prepared in Hinds. But mention has still to be made of a hymn-book in the Mundari or Kohl language, prepared by the G. E. L. missionsries, containing 100 hymns. These are chiefly original, and were composed for the most part by Dr. A. Nottrott and the native pastors Nathanael Tuagu and Manaidah Tassu. About one-fourth are set to German and three-fourths to native tunes. This book is used by many congregations of the Anglican mission.

The Rev. J. C. Whitley states that at the central station of the B. P. G. singing is regularly taught in the schools, and English tunes are sung with great accuracy; but in outlying parts of the district native tunes are much more readily learned by the people.

3. Khassi.—In the south-west of Assam is a district known as the Khassia and Jaintia Hills, inhabited by a primitive people, whose Indo-Chinese branch-monoyslinbic and agglutinative-having no close affinity with any other. Among these people the Welsh Calvinistic Methodists have had a successful mission since 1840. By their missionaries the language has been reduced to writing and a Christian literature has been created.

Christian literature has been created.

(1) The first hymn-book, printed in 1845, contained 20 hymns, translated by the Rev. T. Jones, of Berriew. In 1850 and 1865 additions were made to it by the Revs. Wm. Lewis, Robert Parry, and T. Jones, of Glyn.

(2) The book now in use was edited, in 1877, by the Rev. Hugh Roberts, and printed at Newport, Monmouthshire. It contains 242 hymns; two original, by the Rev. H. Roberts; the rest, translations of the Psalms, or of well-known English, Welsh, and American hymns, 15 being from I. Sankey's Sac. Songs & Soles. Among the translators, in addition to the missionaries above named, were the Revs. John Roberts and T. Jerman Jones.

The hymns are composed in English and Welsh metres, to which the language lends itself easily, and they are sung to English and Welsh tunes. The natives have no musical system of their own.

 Assam (proper), with a population in 1881 of 2,225,271, is about 500 miles in length, but narrow, and is divided into two portions by the Brahmapootra river. The religion of the people of the valley is Hinduism; wild and savage tribes inhabit the mountains north and south, among whom are found forms of spirit worship. The A. B. M. has stations among the Garos, Nagas, and other tribes, as well as among the Kohls from Central India, who are employed as labourers in the teagardens. The S. P. G. has also had a station at Tezpore since 1850.

Since 1850.

In the early days of the A. B. M. the Rev. Nathan Brown, D.D., a man of most versatile genius (see §§ Japan and Burms.), prepared a hymn-hook, which was afterwards revised and greatly enlarged by the Rev. Dr. W. Ward. It now contains 352 hymns, with a supplement of 32 hymns for S. S. use. 80 hymns by Dr. Brown are included, 32 original and 48 translated. Many were composed by Drs. Ward and M. Bronson. Nidth Levi, the first Asamese Christian convert, wrote 110, chiefly original; Battram Das, a former preacher, wrote 28. The rest were by other missionaries and native converts. The hymn-book is now old, and the Rev. P. H. Moore, "a musical missionary," is at the present time (1888) engaged on the work of revision. (1888) engaged on the work of revision.

iv. Tibet.

On the further side of the vast chain of the Himálayas is Tibet, the stronghold of northern Buddhism, at present closed to the gospel. But the Tibetan language is spoken by some thousands of people in British ter-ritory, as well as by tribes inhabiting the provinces adjoining Tibet proper. For their spiritual benefit the M.M. have a station at Kyelang, in the Himalayas, and there a hymnal was prepared and printed by the late Rev. Heinrich A. Jäschke, one of the greatest of modern Tibetan scholars. It contains 136 hymns translated from the German.

v. Persia,

Fifty years ago a mission was commenced by the A. B. C. among the Nestorian Christians near lake Oroomish in Eastern Persia, and in 1860 a hymn-book was printed, in the Modern Syriac language spoken by these people. This book has passed through several editions, but we have been unable to obtain further particulars. The language, however, differs from Ancient Syriac less language is of the Mongolian stock and of the than Italian from Latin. In 1869 a small collection of Revival Hymns was printed at Oroomiah. In 1871 the mission among the Nestorians was transferred to the A. P. M., which has also stations at Tabriz, Salmas, Teheran, and Hamadan; whilst the Rev. Dr. Bruce and his colleagues of the C. M. S. have been labouring at Julfa, Baghdad, and Bushire. Dr. Bruce informs us that in Baghdad (in Turkey, but on the borders of Persia) they use the Arabic hymn-book printed at the American press at Beyrout (see Syria). In Julfa (Ispahan) only Armenian hymns are used (see Turkey in Asia). There is a small Persian hymn-book which has been made by the American Missionaries in Teheran, but it is very imperfect. "A good Persian hymn-book," says Dr. Bruce, "is much to be desired, It is a most poetic language and it would be comparatively easy for one who had the gift to compose hymns in it." [See Various.]

vì. Constantinople, Asia Minor, and Armenia.

We class these places together, because the missionary work in all of them is done chiefly by one society, the A. B. C., the head-quarters of whose Turkey mission are at Constantinople. This work is a vory noble one, especially in the departments of Christian literature and education, but, owing to the religious jealousy of the Muhammadan rulers, it is confined in these regions chiefly to the Armenians and Greeks.

In 1861 a hymn-book in the Turkish language, printed in Arabic characters, was pub. by the missionaries. But in the year 1884, after the sale of 1200 copies, the remainder of the impression was destroyed by order of the Government. This was in pursuance of its determination to prevent, as far as possible, the publication of Christian literature in a form accessible to Muslims. The Arabic characters made the book accessible to them. The following hymnals have also been pub. by the agents of the A. B. C.:

An Armenian H. Bk., with 432 hymns.
 An Armeno-Turkish H. Bk., with 247 hymns.
 A Graco-Turkish H. Bk., with 247 hymns.

In explanation of these names it should be stated that the languages used in this region are Turkish, Armenian, and Greek, the latter being confined mainly to the parts along the sca-coast. In the interior of Asia Minor, and in Cilicia and Syria as far as Aleppe, the Armenians have largely lost their own language and use the Turkish, written with the Armenian alphabet. It is Turkish written or printed thus, which is called Armeno-Turkish. In like manner the Greeks of the interior have lost their language, and use Turkish, written in Greek letters. This latter is called Greco-Turkish, or sometimes Karamanian. The works in Turkish, Armeno-Turkish, and Greco-Turkish are the same; only the characters are different.

The hymn-books mentioned above are pubboth with and without tunes, and the last ed. of each appeared in 1886. They have been the growth of nearly 40 years, the earliest Armenian Hymnal having been issued in 1849. Most of the hymna are translations of well-known English and American hymne, the few originals having been usually prepared for special occasions.

The chief translators into Armenian have been the Revs. Elios Riggs, p.p., Ll.D., H. J. Van Lennep, p.p., H. O. Dwight, p.p., J. F. Pettibone, p.p., C. Tracy, M. Shemavonian, and Mrs. M. Shemavonian. The translators into Turkish were the Revs. Dr. Pratt, E. M. Dodd, and P. O. Powers, all now deceased, and the Revs. Dr. Dwight and Aveils Constantian.

The tunes used are English and American, especially those "wedded" to the hymns in their original form. The Armenian hymnbooks mentioned above are used by the A. P. M. in Persia; also, to some extent by the Lutheran Armenians in the Caucasus, and the Baptist and Campbellite missionaries in Asia Minor.

vii. Bulgaria.

In the Orthodox Bulgarian Church ancient hymns are used in the services, but are not sung by the congregation, only by the clergy and choristers; and it is rather chanting and intoning than singing. The Te Deum and various Doxologies are the most common, and there are also hymns for the following festivals:—

The Nativity of B. V. M.; Presentation B. V. M.; Creumcision; Epiphany; Candlemas; Annunciation B. V. M.; Palm Sunday; Passion Week; Easter; Ascension: Pentecost; Transfiguration; Assumption of B. V. M.; the Mass; Marriage, Baptismal and Buriat Services; and Saints' Daya, as St. Dimiter, John of Rilo, Nicolai, Vasilai, St. John Esphist, Cyrli and Methodius, George, Elia, St. Peter and St. Paul, &c.

Two American Missionary Societies—the A. B. C. and the A. M. E.—are at work in Bulgaria, the former to the south, the latter to the north of the Balkan range of mountains. The same Hymnal is used by both, as well as by the agents of a native mission, known as the Bulgarian Evangelical Society. This book, called Svyashtennee Péenee ("Sacred Songs") was first pub. in 1872, and with music attached, in 1878. Several eds. have since appeared, each one an enlargement on its predecessor.

Its predecessor.

The present book contains 250 hymns, about four-fifths of which are translations of the best English and American hymns for both adults and children. The principal translators have been the Rev. Dr. Riggs of the A. B. C.—who did most of the work of preparation—the Rev. Dr. Long of the A. M. E., and a native pastor, the Rev. Mr. Tondjoroff. The same three persons have composed most of the original hymns forming the remainder of the volume. With few exceptions translated hymns have been so rendered as to appear in the same metre in Bulgarian as in English. The lines rhyme as in English, and the tunes used are English or American, none are native. Since the last ed. of the hymn-book appeared 59 additional hymns have been jub. in a Bulgarian periodical called the Youth's Paper and Samokov Leaflet, most of which will in due time be incorporated in the hymnal.

viii. Syria.

In this land, from whose ancient capital, Antioch, the first missionaries were sent forth for the conversion of the heathen, a number of societies, both British and American, as well as Christian ladies from Great Britain and Germany, are at work with a view to its enlightenment and spiritual elevation. But the hymn-book everywhere used by Protestants is the Arabic Hymnal, with Tunes, pub. by the A. P. M. at Beyrout. From the beginning of the mission 50 years ago hymns were from time to time translated or composed, but remained in Ms. or leaflet form, until about 15 years ago, when the Rev. E. R. Lewis, M.D., Professor in the Syrian Protestant College at Beyrout, collected them into a volume and pub. them as the first Arabic Hymnal.

The present book, though based on Mr. Lewis's, is much enlarged and greatly improved. It was edited by the Revs. Samuel Jessup and George A. Ford, both of the A. P. M., and was issued Dec. 25th, 1885. It is a handsome volume of 234 pp.—the tunes being printed in good musical type (European notation, but with notes running from right to left) and occupying the upper portion of each page, whilst the hymns, in clearly printed Arabic characters, appear on the lower portion.

The bymns are 326 in number, more than 80 of which are original. All except 5 have been translated or composed by native Syrians of the Arab race, viz., Stelkh Rastf Ul Yazigi (now dead), a learned grammarian of the Greek Catholic Church, employed as proof reader whilst the Bible was translated into Arabic; Ibrahim Sarkis, also deceased, a Maronite who became a Protestant; Asaad Shedoady; Solim Kessab; Asaai Abdaliah; Ibrahim Nasif, and others. The translations are chiefly of well-known English and American hymna are chiefly of well-known English and American hymns, or Bible Psulms versified. The tunes are for the most part English and American, a few only being original.

ix. Palestine.

In Pulestine Arabic is now the common language, and the hymnal used in Jerusalem, Jaffa, and other places is the one described above [Syria]. The report of the C. M. S. for 1887 states that the hymns in this book have proved a great attraction to the people. Travellers speak enthusiastically of the singing of Arabic hymns in Miss Walker-Arnott's Tabitha Mission School at Jaffa.

IV. Africa. i. Egypt.

In passing from Asia to Africa it is natural to begin with Egypt. In this country the American United Presbyterians have a flourishing mission, with several stations; but they do not use hymns (commonly so called) in their public worship, but confine themselves to a metrical version of the Psalms. For others who wish for hymns the Arabic Hymnal of the A. P. M. pub. at Beyrout, and already spoken of [Byria], is available.

ii. Eastern Equatorial Africa.

The region included under this name extends, on the cast coast, from about the Equator southward almost to Mozambique. In the interior it reaches to the great lakes Victoria Nyanza, Tanganyika, and Nyassa. principal language spoken is Ki-sawahili or Ki-swahili (lit. coast language). Other languages are the Galla, Nyika, Gogo, and Luganda. In the northern and central parts of the region the C. M. S. and United Methodist Free Churches have stations, one of which, near L. Victoria Nyanza, was recently the scene of the martyrlom of Bishop Hannington. The L. M.S. has stations by Lake Tanganyika, and the F. C. S. and the K. S. M. in the south, near L. Nyassa. In this region also, encompassed by difficulties and perils, the English Universities' Mission is at work.

(1) Two hymnals have been prepared in Ki-sawakili; one by missionaries of the C. M. S., containing 135 hymns (pub. 1881), nearly all translations of English hymns. This was doubtless the book used at Frere Town, near Mombosa, when visited by Bishop Hannington, who remarked on the "delightfully hearty" character of the singing, the volces being of better quality than those of tribes forther south. The other was prepared for the converts of the U. M. Free Churches, containing 200 hymns, chiefly translations, the translators and composers being the Kevs. T. Wakefield (editor), C. Wew and W. Hugh During.

(2) Two books in Ri-Nyika have been prepared, one by the Rev. T. Wakefield, the other by members of the C. M. S., the former containing about 30 hymns.
(3) The Rev. T. Wakefield has also prepared a collection of about 26 hymns in the Galla language.
(4) The Report of the C. M. S. for 1887 states that 17 hymns in the Luganda language have been prepared for use in the Uganda mission.
(5) The missioneries of the L. M. S. by Lake Tangange.

(5) The missionaries of the L. M. S. by Lake Tanganyika use the hymnal in Ki-swahili of the C. M. S.

(6) Translations of English hymns have been made by the missionaries of the K. S. M. at Blantyre, near Lake Nyassa, and also by Dr. Eimslie, of the F. C. S. at Livingstonia in the same region. Among the hymns translated by Dr. Elmelie are—"Just as I am;" "One there is above all others;" "Holy, holy, holy, Lord God

iii. Madagascar.

It is well known that, during the last 60 years, Christianity and civilisation have made great progress in Madagascar, chiefly through the agency of the L. M. S.: and it is stated that "from the beginning of the mission Christian Hymnody has aided largely in the promotion of Christian life and knowledge among the people." The native Malagasy songs are without rhyme, and consist of passages resembling Hebrew poetry in their rhythmic flow and frequent parallelisms, followed by a refrain or chorus, often sung to a musical accompaniment.

The first Christian hymns probably appeared as leaflets, but in 1828 a small vol. was published. Another, containing 168 hymns, appeared in 1835, and was several times reprinted. These were chiefly translations of English hymns, and were sung to the English tunes of the period. The lines did not rhymo, -the fewness of firm ultimate syllables in the Malagasy language making rhyme difficult; and no regard was paid to acceut. The only thing aimed at was to have the right number of syllables for Long, Common, Short, and Sevens metres. But harsh and rugged though these hymns were, they endeared themselves to the hearts of the Christian converts; and affecting stories are told of their sustaining influence on the martyrs in the dark days of persecution which presently followed.

After the recommencement of the mission in 1862 singing was for some time in an unsatisfactory state. New congregations were formed so rapidly that the missionaries had not time to train them properly in psalmody. The Rev. R. G. Hartley, in 1867, wrote the first rhythmical and rhymed Malagasy hymn, which was set to the tune—"Hail to the brightness of Zion's glad morning." This, and 11 other excellent hymns of his com-position, were included in a new edition of the Hymn-book edited by him in 1870. Other missionaries also began to write, and the more popular of their productions were printed as leaflets and sold by thousands. A number of these were in course of time incorporated in the hymn-book; disused hymns were dropped, and the net result was the present book, containing 247 hymns: 30 of these were by the Rev. J. Richardson, to whom the Malagasy owe much for his efforts to improve their hymnody, and also for the thorough teaching of the Sol-fa system and the preparation of Tune Books and School Song Books. Other hymn-writers have been the Revs. W. E. Cousins, R. Toy, J. A. Houlder, G. Cousins, R. Baron, and C. T. Price; and among the natives, J. Andrianaívoravèlona,

It is remarkable that in the promotion of Christian hymnody the Madagascar press of the Society of Friends has scarcely been ba-hind that of the L. M. S. Mr. Joseph S. Sewell, a leading member of their mission at Antananarivo, translated "Abide with me," and the popular children's hymn, "Whither, are you going, pilgrims?" In connection with the S. P. G. the Rev. A. M. Hewlett, M.A., has striven to promote Psalmody according to the Anglican forms of worship. The Psalter is arranged for chanting, many of the Psalms are sung, and the Te Deum and Veni Creator Spiritus have been translated, -the latter by the Rev. W. E. Cousins, of the L. M. S. But in the country districts, more especially, the Malagasy at present prefer the style of hymn and tune popular in English village congregations 50 years ago, with many repeats, fugues, and responsive parts.

iv. Mauritius.

550 miles to the east of Madagascar, like a gem in the ocean, lies the fertile and remarkably picturesque island of Mauritius. Though only 36 miles long and 23 broad, it contains a polyglot population of 365,000. Two-thirds are natives of India, coolies working in the sugar plantations, under indentures, and so constantly coming and returning to their homes in India. The other third comprises a motley population of French, English, Negroes, Creoles, Malagasy, Parsees, Chinese, Singhalese and Malays. Both the S. P. G. and C. M. S. have interesting missions under the superintendence of Bishop Royston, D.D.

The Indian coolies belonging to at least five different nationalities, hymnals have been introduced, prepared by missionaries in India, in the Tamil, Malayalam, Telugu, Bengali and Hindi languages. In an account of these books supplied to us by the Rev. R. J. French, of the S. P. G., we recognize hymnals described by us in the sections of this article devoted to those languages. Doubtless a similar thing has been done in the mission of the C. M. S. to the Chinese immigrants. Nor are the spiritual wants of the French-speaking inhabitants of Mauritius overlocked. In services instituted for their use the French hymn-book of the S. P. C. K. and Cantiques Populaires of the McAll Mission are both employed. Finally, in religious services established for the benefit of English residents, Hymns A, A: M, and other well-known hymnals of our own country are used.

v. Matabeleland.

Twenty degrees south of the Equator, and about 400 miles from the eastern coast of Africa, is Matabeleland, where are stations of the L. M. S. The language, called Amantebele, greatly resembles the Zulu. The first hymn-book prepared was very small and imperfect, and is now out of use. The second, prepared by the Rev. W. Sykes, and printed at Cape Town in 1883, contains about 50 hymns, about half original compositions, and the remainder translations of such lymns as "All people that on earth do dwell," "Come to the Saviour, make no delay." English metres and tunes are used, and as a rule the lines do not rhyme.

vi. Bechuanaland.

The language of the Bechuanaland bears the name of Sechuana. Six societies are labouring in this field, the L. M. S., S. P. G., W. M. S., the Berlin, the Hanoverian Lutheran, and the Dutch Reformed. The S. P.G. have a hymn-book prepared by the Revs. Canon Crisp, of Bloemfontein, and W. H. R. Bevan, M.A., of Phokoane. A copy now before us, bearing date 1873, contains the translations of the Te Deum, the Magnificat, and various Pealms arranged for chanting, and 40 hymns, including, "Draw nigh, draw nigh, Emmanuel," "Abido with me," "The King of Love my Shepherd is," &c. Others have doubtless been added in later editions. The Wesleyans have a book edited by the late Rev. Mr. Ludorf, containing about 150 hymns. The Hanoverian missionaries have also a Sechuana hymn-book of their own. The Dutch Reformed, which is working in the Transvaal, and the Berlin missionaries use the hymn-book of the L. M. S., of which the Rev. Roger Price, of Kuruman, gives the following account.

gives the following account.

"It now contains 321 hymns, having been reprinted and enlarged several times. The present edit. is dated 1883. In many instances the hymns are free translations from the English; in others, the sentiment of the English hymn is followed without any attempt at a verbal translation; a few, especially some by the late Rev. Dr. Moffat, are original compositions. English metres and tunes are used exclusively. Ehyme is attempted, but this is often very difficult, owing to the great panelty of moneyllable words, which are not trere particles, and to the fact that, with but one exception, Sechnana words end in an open syllable and take the main accent on the penultimate."

Upwards of 250 hymns in this collection were translated or composed by Dr. Moffat. The remainder were contributed by the following missionaries:—the Revs. J. Hughes, Dr. Livingstone, J. Mackenzie, J. S. Moffat, R. Price, J. D. Hepburn, J. Good, A. J. Wookey, and Morolong, a native teacher.

Morolong, a native teacher.

Besides this collection a considerable number of hymns have been recently translated and printed at the Kuruman press, and will be included in the next edition of the hymn-These are chiefly translations of I. Sankey's Sac. Songe and Solos.

vii. Baeutoland.

Basutoland is situated between Cape Colony to the south and south-east, Natal to the north-east, and the Orange Free State to the west and north-west. The language spoken, called Sesuto, is one of the Bantu group, and was first reduced to writing by missionaries of the Paris Evangelical Society, who for the last 50 years have laboured there with zeal and diligence, and latterly with great success. The S. P. G. has also a small mission in this country.

The Paris missionaries began to prepare hymns in 1840. The present collection is a goodly volume of 384 pp. 8vo, containing hymns and also tunes in Tonio Sol-fa, the title being Lifela tsa Sione le Lipina tsa Tsona, or "Sacred Hymns sung in the Churches of Basutoland, followed by some of the Songs and Solos of I. D. Sankey and P. Phillips" (London, 1881). It is a 5th ed. of the words, 2nd ed. of the music.

The first part of the book contains 183 hymns, mostly original. The translations are of well-known French and English hymns, and the following are the names of the authors and translators:—Eugens Casalis, Thomas Arbousset, Theophile Jousse, Samuel and Emile Rolland, F. P. Lautré, François Coillard, Louis Duvoisin,

Fritz Ellenberger, François Daumas and Adolphe

The second part of the work, containing 132 pieces, consists entirely of translations by the Rev. F. Coillard from the books of L. D. Sankey and P. Phillips. Engfrom the books of 1. D. Sankey and F. Phillips. Eng-lish metres are chiefly used, as suiting the language better than French. Sometimes the lines rhyme, though not always. The Rev. A. Mabille, to whom we are indebted for these particulars, is now preparing a new edition which will contain a few more hymns.

Among the Basutos some of the men have splendid bass voices and all sing heartily. Their favourite hymn is No. 108 in the book just described, set to the tune "French," and commencing "If you ask me what is my hope, I shall say, It is Jesus." This hymnal is in use not only in the French missions, but also in churches belonging to the S. P. G., L. M. S., W. M. S., the Dutch Reformed, the Swiss, the Berlin, and the English Primitive Methodist Societies.

viii. Zululand and Natal.

Returning from Bechuanaland towards the eastern coast, and crossing the Orange Free State, we come to Zululand and Natal, where are 500,000 people, speaking the dialect of the Bantu language, which is known as Zulu. In this region are missions of the S. P. G., A. B. C., F. C. S., W. M. S., and Evangelical Latherans of Berlin, Hermanusburg and

(1) In 1863, the Rev. C. W. Posselt, of the Berlin mission, pub. a small collection of 74 hymns, printed at the Esidumlimi Mission Press.

(2) Many years ago Bishop Colenso pub. a number of hymns, and was followed in this good work by Bishops Callaway and Wilkinson. The hymn-book of the lastnamed appeared in 1874, and contains 217 hymns translated from H. A. & M.

(3.) In 1883 appeared a small volume prepared by the Revs. Canon Greenstock, of Springvale, and H. T. A. Thompson, of Isandhlwans. It has 117 hymns, in-Indingson, of Endangwana. It has it? hynna, in-cluding 35 of Dr. Colenso's (some of them altered), 18 of Bp. Callaway's, a few from Bp. Wilkinson's volume, and other sources. Eight or ten are by native Christian deacons. The last is a temperance hynn, by J. W. Cross. The title of this book is Incwadi Yamagama Gwallenia. Cross. The Chuhlabelela.

Chukiabelela.

(4) In 1834 the present Bishop of Zululand, the Right Rev. Douglas McKenzie, pub. a small cellection of 63 hymns, intended to be sung to tunes in H. A. & M. It includes four from Bp. Caliaway's book, one translated by Mrs. Johnson ("Now the day is over"), and one (Ps. c.) by J. Blair.

(5) The missionaries of the A. B. C. have prepared a book, containing in its 7th ed., which has just been published (1887), 285 hymns. The title is Amagama Oksaklabelela. The new ed. is in 3 forms, (a) words only; (b) with tunes in Tonic Sol-fa notation; (c) with tunes in Staff notation. Among the names of composers and translators are the following:—the Revs. J. C. Bryant, S. B. Stone, D. Rood, J. L. Döhne, and Mrs. C. B. Grout. Nineteen hymns are from Bp. Callaway's book, five from Canon Greenatock's, some from a collection prepared by the Norwegian missionaries, and a good number from the Islxosa or Kafir hymn-book.

As in the case of the Sechuana language

As in the case of the Sechuana language already noticed, as well as in the Kafir, the provalence of the penultimate accent in Zulu has made the fitting of Zulu hymns to English tunes a work of difficulty. Iambic metres are almost inadmissible, but the language is well suited to chanting.

ix. Kafirland, or Kaffraria.

Kafirland extends from near Port Elizabeth in the south to Natal in the north, and from the ocean westward as far as Basutoland. It comprises missions of the Moravians, U. P. Church of Scotland, S. P. G., F. C. S., L. M. S., W. M. S., and Lutherans of Germany. The language is allied to the Zulu.

Untsikana, one of the earliest converts to Christianity, composed in pure Kafir rhythm the remarkable hymn, "Ulo-Tixo mkulu ngo-sezulwini" ("Thou art the great God, He Who is in heaven"), which together with his music (traditional) is unique, all subsequent efforts in Kafir hymnody being subject to the trammels of European metres.

(1) Several editions of a hymn-book used at the Weskeyan stations throughout Kaffraria, and even in Natal, have been issued from the mission press at Mt. Coke, near King William's Town.

(2) The Rev. Tiyo Soga, a gifted Kafir missionary educated by the United Presbyterian Church, and early educated by the United Presbyterian Church, and early removed by death, compiled a book of hymna, which was printed in Scotland.

(3) The principal hymna-book in the Kaār language was prepared by a committee of Presbyterian and other mission press in Lovedale, and contains 219 hymna, and 30 psalms and passages of Holy Scripture arranged as chants. The hymna are in English metres, and, in most cases, hymna are attempted contins. The hybrid storm angular measurements cases, rhymes are attempted.

(4) The first collection of hymns used at the stations of the M. M. was that of the Berlin Society, which contained some hymns translated by the Moravian Brethren. tained some hymns translated by the Moravian Brethren. In 1869 a small supplement containing 186 hymns was pub. by the Rev. Th. Reichelt. But an entirely new hymnal, compiled by Revs. R. Baur and H. Weitz, was printed at Herrnhut in 1885. With litanies, litangical services, 415 hymns and indices, it forms a volume of 428 pages. Most of the hymns are translations from the derman; the remainder being chiefly selected from the hymn-books of the Wesleyans and Presbyterians.

(5) The book used in the Anglican Missions, with the title Incusati Yamaculo, was prepared by missionaries of the S. P. G. in the diocese of Graham's Town. An early ed. contained 102 bymns. That now in use has 130 bymns, and bears date 1881. The principal translators were Revs. A. J. Newton, W. M. Cameron, and C. F. Patten. The following also assisted:—B. S. Key, H. R. Woodrooffe, D. W. Dodd, J. Ntsiko, W. Ngewensa, T. Liefeldt.

x. Cape Colony.

In the Cape Colony the English-speaking part of the community naturally use the hymn-books of their respective denominations in England. But since the hymnody of the coloured races and other residents speaking the Dutch language, is due to missionary enterprise, a brief notice of it will not be inappropriate here. Colonial Dutch hymnals may be divided into two groups, according as German or English elements have chiefly predominated in their composition.

1. The books in which the hymns are for the most part translated from the German and sung to German tunes are found, are:—

(a) The earliest missions in South Africa were those (a) The entriest messions in court affect mose of the Moravians, commenced in 1736 and renewed in 1732. Of their hymnody previous to 1836 we have no knowledge; but in that year a hymn-book was pub, for the use of the coloured races, of which a new edition appeared 20 years later with an Appendix containing new hymns. These new hymns were mosely translations by the Bretbren Subl, Kühn and Hartmann. The latest edition, revised and greatly improved, was pub.

(b) The Rhenish Missionary Society, whose head-quarters in Europe are at Barmen, commenced its African mission in 1829. A bymn-book was issued in 1844, revised in 1872, and is now in its 4th edition. It contains 290 bymns, taken chiefly from the Moravian and Dutch reformed hymnals, with 64 original compositions, or translations from the Barmen Gesanghuch.

(c) The Berlin Missionary Society, founded in 1827, lasued its first S. African hymnal in 1853. This was compiled by New P. Schultheise, and the hymna are compiled by Rev. P. Schultheiss, and the hymns are arranged in the order of the Church's seasons. A 2nd ed, prepared by the missionaries Schmidt and Howe, was pub. at Amsterdam in 1875, and contains 333 hymne, of which only 23 are original,

2. The books in which, though the German element largely enters, the English element is considerable, are :--

(a) The first Dutch hymnal in which translations of English hymns appeared was that of the L. M. S., in use as early as 1829, but reprinted in 1847. It contained 40 translations of the English hymns of Watta, Doddridge, Steels and Newton. Some of these were by the well-known Dr. Vanderkemp, but the majority by the Rev. G. Barker, missionary at the Paarl. It was revised and enlarged in 1848, and after passing through 4 editions came, in 1862, under the editorship of the Rev. F. W. Kolbe (L. M. S.), through whose skill as a bymn-writer and translator it has in successive editions been enlarged at 2 hymns, and enriched by admirable translations of Kolbe (L. M. S.), through whose skill as a bymn-writer and translator it has in successive editions been enlarged to 412 hymns, and enriched by admirable translations of many of the best known in Hymns A. 4 M.

(b) Wesleyan missions in S. Africa were commenced in 1815, and in 1824 a cheap edition of the Dutch Reformed hymnal was put, with a Supplement suited to the native congregations. This contained some translations of Wesley's hymns by the Bev. Bernales Shaw. The entire book was superseded in 1840 by a collection of 392 hymns, including 160 translations from Wesley by the Rev. R. Haddy. These translations, however, being deemed unsettsfactory, a new hymnal was present in 1855. The compilers were the Revs. R. Ridgill and B. Ridsdale, the former of whom, together with the Rev. H. Tindall, has made some valuable contributions to the store of Dutch translations from the English. The 6th ed. (1882) contains 298 hymns, of which at least one fourth are versions of well-known English hymns. English hymns.

(c) The Anglican Dutch bymnal was compiled by the Rev. J. A. Hewitt, now Rector of Worcester, Cape Colony, and printed by the S. P. C. K. in 1877. It contains 201 hymns, arranged in the order of H. A. & M., and includes 28 translations from the Latin, and a very and includes at transmissions from the Latin, and a very large number from the English, many of the latter being taken, by permission, from the L. M. S. and Dutch hymnals. This is the hymnal authorized for use by the mission congregations of the English Church in the province of S. Africa.

Further information on this subject is contained in a series of articles by the Rev. J. A. Hewitt, D.C.L., Rector of Worcester (Cape Colony), in the S. African Church Chronicle. vol. vii., 1886, to which, and also to Dr. Hewitt personally, we are largely indebted for this outline of the Cape Colony hymnody.

xi. Great Namaqualand.

If from the Cape Colony we proceed northward, keeping to the western side of the African continent, one of the first regions we enter is Great Namaqualand, a missionary field of the Rhenish Society of Barmen. Hymns in the Nama (Hottentot) language were first prepared, about 1845, by Rev. J. G. Krönlein, who, in 1873, edited a hymn-book containing 60 hymns, translated from the German, and edapted to German tanes, the lines rhyming. Most of the translations were by Mr. Krönlein; the rest by the late Rev. H. C. Knudsen and the late Mrs. Kleinschmidt. Further north is a country, variously denomi-

xii. Damarakınd or Hereroland.

The first Herero hymns were prepared by the Revs. J. Rath and F. W. Kolbe (see § Cape Colony), and printed at Cape Town in 1849. The hymn-book new used was edited by the Rev. H. Brincker, and reached a 3rd ed. in 1879. It contains 123 hymns, some original, but chiefly translations from the German, and adapted to German tunes. The contributors were the Revs. J. Rath, F. W. Kolbe, C. H. Hahn, H. Brincker, G. Viebe, Mrs. Baumann, and other members of the Rhenish Mission.

xiii. Ovamboland.

As an interesting illustration of the fact that all the Protestant nations of Christendom are now engaged in missionary work among the heathen, reference may be made to the stations of the Finland Missionary Society in Ovamboland, a region of Western South Africa. to the north of the 20th degree south latitude. A small hymnal has been prepared in the language of this region, containing about 60 hymns, but we are unable to give particulars.

A few degrees further to the north is the country of Benguela, where the A. B. C. has recently planted stations. The language spoken is called Umbundu, but missionary The language work is at present in too elementary a stage for hymnody xiv. Congoland.

Few hymns as yet have been pub. in Kishi-Kongo, "the language of the Congo people."
All are in Fiote, the particular language spoken in the region of which San Salvador is the centre. First, in 1884, in connection with the B. M. S., ten hymns were printed at Stanley Pool; then a collection of 21 was made by the missionaries of the Livingstone Inland Mission and printed in England; lastly, a collection of 20 hymns (including most of the first 10) was printed in 1887, at the B. M. S. Edwin Wade Press, Underhill Station.

With few exceptions the Congo hymns are all translations. The originals are by the Revs. T. J. Comber and W. H. Bentley. The translations include "When His salvation bringing," and other children's hymns; also, "Stand up, stand up for Jesus," and "Father, in high beaven dwelling." Besides the missionaries named, the Revs. J. H. Weeks, and H. Dixon, and two native converts, Kalendenda and Mantu, have translated hymns.

The Livingstone Inland Mission has been transferred to the A. B. M. In their collection are included several hymns from the book just described, and others translated by the Revs. C. H. Harvey, H. Craven, and H. Richards. Among these are "Abide with me," "Jesus sinners will receive," "A few more years shall roll." English metres and tunes are used. Besides the hymns in these collections, others are in use, printed on slips, which, when tested and improved, will be included in future editions.

xv. Old Calabar.

To the north of the island of Fernando Po. and about 100 miles to the east of the Niger. the Old Calabar river emption itself into the Gulf of Guinea. In this part of Africa the U. P. Church of Scotland has for the last 42 years had a mission, Creek Town and Duko Town being its principal stations. The language spoken is called Efik. Soon after the establishment of the mission a small hymn-book was prepared, which has been repeatedly enlarged, and now in its 7th edit. contains 309 hymns and 7 dexologies. The Rev. H. Goldie has been the editor and principal contributor, but the following have also assisted in the work: the Revs. Dr. Robb, and Messrs. Anderson, Campbell, Edgerley, Thomson and Waddell. Some of the hymns are original, others translations or paraphrases of portions of Holy Scripture. A collection of 39 children's hymns has also been prepared, under the same auspices as the larger book, and printed at Creek Town in 1885 by a native printer. It includes "Little travellers Zionward" (Nkpri mendi-sim onyon); "Jesus loves me" (Jisus ama mi), and other well-known English hymns, and a few originals by the Rev. S. H. Edgerley.

The metres are English and the lines rhyme as with us. The larger book above named is also used in connection with an Undenominational mission in Old Calabar, supported by the friends of the Rev. H. Grattan Guinness.

xvi. Yoruba, Coast of Guinea.

The Yoruba country is to the east of Dahomey, Lagos being the principal coast town, and Abeokuta, Ibadan, and Oyo large towns in the interior. The C. M. S., W. M. S., and American Baptists of the Southern Convention, have missions there. (1) In the early years of the Church of England mission English hymn-books were used; but when, in 1850, Christian work began among the heathen, the need was felt of hymns in the language of the country. The Rev. D. Hinderor, a German missionary in the service of the C. M. S., translated a few and composed others, using them in Ms. and increasing the number from time to time to 106, when in the year 1865 they were printed in London. About the same time as Mr. Hinderer, the Rev. H. Townsend in another part of the field commenced a similar work, and in 1854 printed a small collection of 20 hymns. This was presently increased to 120, and printed at Ake Abcokuta, and several times reprinted in England. In 1867 the Rev. J. A. Maser, of the C. M. S. and others, began to translate and compose additional hymns; and in 1877 a collection of more than 200 was printed, which has been in use for the last 10 years. A new collection of 355 hymns is now passing through the press,-a selection from previous books, made by a committee of native clergymen and teachers, and revised by the Rev. D. Hinderer. Mention may also be made of a collection of 99 hymns, chiefly for use in schools, prepared by the Rev. J. B. Wood, of the C. M. S. (2) The Wesleyans have a hymn-book of their own, containing about 150 hymns, and including many of the hymns in the above collection. The 2nd edit, was pub. the above collection. The 2nd edit, was pub. in 1876. (3) It is believed that the American Baptists have also a hymn-book of their own, but we have no particulars.
In some of the Yoruba hymns rhyms has

In some of the Yoruba hymns rhyms has been attempted, but there is some difficulty arising from the fact that all words must end in vowels. Lively English tunes are preferred by the people to grave German ones; their own native songs abound in choruses.

xvii. Sierra Leone.

In Sierra Leone and the neighbouring districts of Western Africa several missionary societies are at work, but their religious services are conducted for the most part in English, and English hymn-books are used. But at Port Lokkok is a small mission of the C. M. S., among a people called Tennes, and a small collection of 17 hymns in the Tenne language has been prepared by the Rev. C. F. Schenke. These are partly original and partly translated. English metres and tunes are used, but the lines do not rhyme.

V. Conclusion.

With this brief notice of missionary Hymnody on the West Coast of the "Dark Continent" we close our paper. Beginning with Greenland, and proceeding westwards, we have made the tour of the world, and the reader will surely feel with us that the work we have looked upon-nearly all accomplished within the last 90 years—is great and marvellous, a work of most noble Christian devotion and industry. An examination of our pages will show that the languages and dialects in which Christian hymns in connection with Foreign Missions have been written, or into which they have been translated, are nearly one hundred and fifty, and that in many of them, several hymn-books of considerable size have been prepared. The list includes languages spoken by all the great divisions of the human race, Aryan, Semitic, Turanian; languages in all stages of formation, monoayllabic, as the Burman, agglutinative, as the Tamil and Turkish, inflexional, as the Sanscrit group of Northern India; languages of extreme antiquity, as the Chinese, and of comparatively recent formation, as the Urdu; languages harsh and guttural, as the speech of some African tribes, and soft and mellifluous, as that of the Polynesian islanders. All these by the energy and diligence of Christian missionaries have been mastered, their words have been arranged in tuneful measures, and in them God's praises are now sung, and His" wonderful works" declared. It will have been observed that in regard to some parts of the world our story is incomplete. This is in part due to the fact that a number of letters asking for information have not been answered, probably in some cases because they failed to reach their destination, and in others, because the good men to whom they were addressed were prevented from writing by more pressing engagements. We have, however, to thank very many friends,-mission-secretaries, missionaries, and others, both ladies and gentlemen of various professions,—for the extreme kindness with which they have sent us, from nearly all parts of the world, letters of information and specimens of hymnals. Want of space prevents the writer from appending a full list of their names, but he begs to assure them. should their eye fall on these pages, that for all their help he is most grateful. It was his original intention to include in each section a list of the principal translated hymns in each language, but he soon found that this would entail constant repetition. The fact is, that the best hymns of Watts, Doddridge, Cowper, Newton, Wesley, Heber, Lyte, Keble, Bonar, Miss Steele, Miss Havergal, and other English authors,—the best German hymns,—the best hymns of American composition, are now sung in China and South Africa, in Japan and Syria, among the peoples of India, and in the isles of the Pacific Ocean,-indeed, in almost every place where Protestant missionaries have uplifted the Gospel banner and gathered Christian Churches. [Living and dead Faith.] Appared in his Hys. & Spiritual S., 1709, Bk. i., No. 140, in 7 st. of 4 l., and headed "A living and dead Faith, collected from several Scriptures." In its original form it is in limited use. The most popular form of the text is "Deluded souls that dream of heaven," which was given in the 8th ed. of Cotterill's Sel., 1819, No. 94, in 4 stanzas, being Watte's at. i.—iii. and vi. altered. These two forms of the hymn are in use in G. Britain and America.

This noble swan-song, as Bunsen calls it, has comforted many, princes and plous Christians, in their last hours. Lauxmann, in Eoch, vilt. 580, gives various instances of its consoling effects, stating, e.g., that Prince Charles of Anhalt, during his last illness in 1561, comforted himself with it, and if with trembling voice, yet with joyful heart, sung the whole hymn a quarter of an hour before his death.

[See Greek Hymnody, § v.] The full texts of the ten hymns are given in the Anthologia Græca Carminum Christianorum (Leipzig), 1871; and from that work they were translated by the Rev. A. W. Chatfield, and pub. in his Songs & Hys. of Earliest Greek Christian Poets, &c., 1876. The tr. of this hymn begins "Lord Jesu, think on me." It was given in H. A. & M., 1875, in 5 st. Subsequently 3 st. were added (i., iv., vi., viii.), and it was included in his Songs & Hys., &c., 1876, in 9 st. of 4 l. From this No. 338, in Thring's Coll., 1882, is taken. To his tr. Mr. Chatfield has added this note at p. 86:—

"In translating this Ode I have given my spirit more liberty. It may be considered as a paraphrase or amplification, rather than an exact translation of the original. A brief form of it appears in Hymns Ancient and Modern."

Another tr. was pub. by I. Williams in his Thoughts in Past Years, 1838. It begins:—
"Christ the Son Of God moet high,"

is in 15 lines, but is not in C. U. [J. J.]

Möckhel, Johann Friedrich, was b. Jan. 16, 1661, at Culmbach in Franconia, and matriculated at the University of Jens in 1681. He was for some time private chaplain to Herr von Redwitz at Teisenort, and from 1685 to 1691 to Herr von Küntzberg at Hayn near Bayreuth. In 1691 he became pastor at Neuhauss, and in 1693 at Steppach and Limpach, near Neustadt on the Aisch. He d. April 19, 1729 (Koch, v. 523, &c.). Of his 11 hymns one has been tr. into English, viz.:—

Il hymns one has been tr. into English, viz.:

Kun sich die Macht geendet hat. Die Finsternies zertheilt. Morning. Wetzel, iv., 357-359, quotes at length from a letter in which Mickele says this hymn was composed by himself in 1691 while at Hayn; and was written at the request of the widowed Fran von Küntzberg (Kindsberg) in order that she might have a hymn for morning prayer as a companion to her favourite hymn for evening prayer, which was "Nun sich der Tag geendet hat" (p. 516, i.). A copy, he adds, was sent to a sister in Bayreuth, and so inserted in the Printzen G. B., Bayreuth, 1691. Included in Wagner's G. B., Leipzig, 1697, vol. iv. p. 1438, in 16 st. of 41. and in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1663, No. 1122. Tr. as:—

(1) "Thanks, dearest Jesus, for Thy love." A tr. of st. ix. as st. iii. of No. 886 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1801 (1886, No. 1174). (2) "Lo! Night's deep shades are scattered wide." By H. J. Buckoll, 1842, p. 39.

Mone, No. 343, prints from a 13th cent. Ms. at Mohr, Joseph, was born at Salzburg, St. Paul, in Carinthia, and other sources: and Austria, on Dec. 11, 1792. After being ordained priest on Aug. 21, 1815, by the Roman Catholic Bishop of Salzburg, he was successively assistant at Ramsau and at Laufen; then coadjutor at Kuchl, at Golling, at Vigaun, at Adnet, and at Authoring; then Vicar-Substitute at Hof and at Hintersee all in the diocese of Salzburg. In 1828 he was appointed Vicar at Hintersee, and in 1837 at Wagrein, near St. Johann. He d. at Wagrein, Dec. 4, 1848 (ms. from Archivar Augustin Hilber, Salzburg, &c.). The only hymn by him tr. into English is:—

Stills Nacht! hellige Nacht! Christmas. This pretty little carol was written for Christman, 1818, while Mohr was assistant clergyman at Laufen, on the Salza, near Salzburg, and was set to music (as in the Garland of Songs) by Franz Gruber, then schoolmaster at the neighbouring village of Arnsdorf (b. Nov. 25, 1787, at Hochburg near Linz, d. June 7, 1863, as organist at Hallein, near Salzburg). What is What is apparently the original form is given by O. Kraus, 1879, p. 608, in 3 st. of 6 l., and in Dr. Wichern's Unsere Lieder, Hamburg, 1844, No. 111. Another form, also in 3 st. of 8 L, is in T. Fliedner's Lieder-Buch für Kleinkinder - Schulen, Kaiserswerth, 1842, No. 115, and the Evang. Kinder G. B., Basel, 1867. The trs. are from the text of 1844.

1. Holy night! peaceful night! All is dark. By Miss J. M. Campbell in C. S. Bere's Garland of Songs, 1868, and thence in Hys. & Carols, Lond., 1871.

2. Bilent night! hallowed night. Land and deep. This is No. 131 in the Christian H. Bk., Cincinnati, 1865. It is suggested by, rather than a tr. of, the German.

3. Hely night! pesceful night! Through the darkness. This is No. 8 in J. Barnby's Original Tunes to Popular Hymns, Novello, N. D., 1869; repeated in Laudes Domini, N.Y., 1884, No. 340.

4. Silent night! holy night! All is calm. This is in C. L. Hutchins's Sunday School Hyl., 1871 (1878, p. 198), and the S. S. H. Bk. of the Gen. Council of the Evang. Luth. Church in America, 1873, No. 65,

5. Peaceful night, all things sleep. No. 17, in Carols for St. Stophen's Church, Kirkstall, Leeds, 1872.

6. Silent night, holiest night. All asleep. By Dr. A. Edersheim, in the Sunday at Home, Dec. 18, 1875, repeated in the Church S. S. H. Bk., 1879, No. 35,

7. Silent night! holy night! Slumber reigns. By W. T. Matson, as No. 132, in Dr. Allon's Children's Worship, 1878.

8. Still the night, hely the night! Sleeps the world. By Stopford A. Brooke, in his Christian Hys., 1881, No. 55.

Moibanus, Ambrosius, was b. at Breslau, April 4, 1494. After studying at Krakau (Cracow), and graduating M.A. at Vienua, he became, in 1518, rector of the Cathedral School at Breslau, and in 1520 rector of the Silesis, but in April, 1572, was ordained as

St. Mary Magdalene School. Incurring the displeasure of the clergy, he left Breslau in 1521, and, after studying Hebrew at Ingolstadt, under Johann Reuchlin, went to Wittenberg. After his return to Breslau he was, in April, 1525, appointed pastor of the St. Elisabeth Church, and in the same year became D.D. at Wittenberg. He d. at Breslau, Jan. 16, 1554 (Allg. Deutsche Biog., xxii. 81, &c.). only hymn known by him is:---

Ach Vater unser der du bist. (Lord's Prayer.) 1st pub. in Eyn gesang Buchleyn, Zwickau, 1625, in 3 st, of 14 1., and thence in Wackernagel, iii. p. 544. In some later books it begins "Vater unser, der du bist." Tr. as "O Father, ours celestiall," by Bp. Coverdale, 1638 (Remains, 1846, p. 648). [J. M.]

Moir, David Macbeth, was b. at Musselburgh, Jan. 5, 1798. After attending the medical classes in the University of Edinburgh, he settled down as a doctor in his native place. In June, 1851, he went to Dumfries to recruit, but d. there, July 6, and was buried at Inveresk, Musselburgh, July 10, 1851. His poems, selected and edited, with a memoir, by Thomas Aird, were pub. in 1852, in 2 vols., as The Poetical Works of David Macbeth Moir. He marked his graver contributions to Black-wood's Magazine with the signature "Delta" or A, and in the number for August, 1832, there appeared "Devotional Melodies by Delta." These were 3 in number:—

Return, once more return, O wanderer,
 O who is like the Mighty One.
 How pleasant is the opening year.

and seem to have been the only hymns suited for public worship that he ever wrote. [J. M.]

Molanus, Gerhard Walther (Wolter), D.D., s. of Wilcke Ludwig van der Muelen or Molanus, syndic and advocate at Hameln on the Weser, was b. at Hameln, Nov. 1, 1633 (Oct. 22, o. s.), and studied at the University of Helmstädt. In 1659 he was appointed Professor of Mathematics at the University of Rinteln, but in 1664 extraordinary, and in 1665 ordinary Professor of Theology and D.D. In 1674 he was appointed Director of the Consistory at Hannover and General Superintendent of the Electorate of Brunswick-Lüneburg, and in 1677 (titular) Abbot of Loccum. He d. at Hannover, Abbot of Loccum. He d. at Hannover, Sept. 7, 1722 (Allg. Deutsche Biog., xxii. 86, &c.). He was a man of extensive learning, and in his official position wielded a very great influence over the whole Electorate. He edited the Hannover G. B. of 1698. Of his five hymns one has passed into English :-

Ich trete frisch zu Gottes Tisch. Holy Communion. In the Rinteln G. B., 1673, No. 124, in 11 st. of 5 l. Repeated in the Hannover G. B., 1740, and in Burg's G. B., Breslau, 1746, No. 1673. Tr. as:-

Thy Table I approach. This is No. 270, in the Ohio Luth. Hyl., 1880, and omits st. iii., iv., viii., ix.

Moller, Martin, son of Dionysius Moller, mason at Liessnitz (now Kropstüdt), near Wittenberg, was b. at Liessnitz, Nov. 11, 1547. He attended the town school at Wittenberg and the gymnasium at Görlitz, but was too poor to go to any university. In 1568 he was appointed canter at Löwenberg in pastor of Kesselsdorf, near Löwenberg. In the autumn of 1572 he was appointed disconus at Löwenberg, in 1575 pastor at Sprottau, and in July, 1600, became chief pastor at Görlitz. He preached his last sermon, Oct. 30, 1605, and d. at Görlitz, March 2, 1606 (Koch, ii. 211, iv. 552, &c.).

iii. 211, iv. 552, &c.).

Moller's hymns appeared in his two very popular devictional books, (1) Meditationes sanctorum patrum, Gorlitz, 1584; pt. ii., Görlitz, 1591, and various later eds. This was mostly made up of meditations from St. Augustine, St. Bernard, and Tauler, selected and tr. into German by Moller. (2) Manuale de praeparatione ad mortem. Gorlitz, 1593 (Library of the Frediger-Seminar at Hannover]. Wackernagel, v., Nos. 71-75, gives only 5 hymns under Moller's name. Of these No. 72 ("Heiliger Gelst, du Tröster mein") is from "Voni Sancte Spiritus, et emitte" (q.v.), and No. 73, ("Nimm von uns Herr") from "Aufer immensam" (see p. 92, ii.). Two versions of the "Jesu dulcis memoria" have also often been ascribed to Moller, vis. "Ach Gott, wie manches Herzeleid" (see p. 10, i.), and with less reason, "O Jesu süss, wer dein gedenkt" (see p. 589, ii.). See also "Hilt, Herr, mein Gott," noted under Selmecker, N. [J. M.]

Molther, Philipp Heinrich, was b. in Alsace, Dec. 28, 1714. At Jene, where he studied theology, he joined the [Moravian] Brethren in 1737, and went to London 1739. He was minister of the Brethren's congregation at Neuwied from 1750 to 1761, and spent the rest of his life, 1762-1780, in Dublin and in Bedford. He d. at Bedford, Sep. 9, 1780, five years after his consecration as a Bishop of the Brethren's Unity. See "At God's right hand," &c., p. 89, i. fG. A. C.

Mone, Franz Joseph, was b. May 12, 1796, at Mingolsheim, near Bruchsal, Baden. He entered the University of Heidelberg in 1814, where in 1817 he became University lecturor, was in 1819 appointed extraordinary and in 1822 ordinary Professor of History, and in 1825 also director of the University library. In 1827 he became Professor of History and Statistics at the University of Louvain, but during the Belgian Revolution of 1831 resigned and retired to Heidelberg. In 1835 Dake Leopold of Baden appointed him Privy Recorder and Director of the General-State-Archives at Carlsruhe, and this post he held till his retirement on a pension in 1868. He d. at Carlsruhe, March 12, 1871 (Allg. Deutsche Biog., xxii. 165, &c.).

12, 1811 (Aug. Deutsche Diog., XXII. 103, XS.). He interested himself specially in Celtic studies, in the history of the Upper Rhine, and in Liturgiology (Lateinische und Griechtsche Messen, 1850, &c.). He claims notice here specially on account of his Lateinische Hymnen des Mittelalters, pub. at Freiburg in Baden, in three vols., viz.:—(1.) Lateinische Hymnen des Mittelalters, aus Handschriften herausgegeben und erklärt won F. J. Mone, Director des Archies zu Rarles vold. 1832 with Henne of Ged and the Anade (Nos.). erklist won F. J. Mone, Director des Archies zu Karls-rude, 1883, with Hymns on God and the Angels (Nos. 1-220); (ii.) Hymns Latini Medii Assi, c. Codd. MSS. edidit et Adnotationibus illustravit, 1854, on the B. V. M. (Nos. 321-620); (iii.) Same title as vol. il. 1865, on the Saints (Nos. 621-1215). The interest of this work, now unfortunately out of print, consists in its texts rather than in its notes, and in the comparative same with which to one requisited with German, it can texts rather than in its notes, and in the comparative ease with which, to one acquainted with German, it can be used. The information given is all printed together at the end of the individual hymns, and the abbreviations used are clear and intelligible, not symbols such as those employed by Dawiel. The work throughout is arranged on a consistent plan, i.e., in order of subjects and not according to authors. Mone published no hymns except those found in manuscripts, of which he says he consulted "some hundreds from more than fifty libraries;" among the most valuable being those which formerly belonged to the Benedictine Abbey of Beichenau (not Rheinau), near Constanz, and are now at Carlsruhe. A large proportion of the hymns were here first printed; many of those in the second and third volumes being however not of much value. In Daniel's fourth and fifth volumes a large amount of space is filled by texts and notes which he transferred from this work of Mone (see p. 279, i.).

Monsell, John Samuel Bewley, LL.D., s, of Thomas Bewley Monsell, Archdeacon of Londonderry, was b. at St. Columb's, London-derry, March 2, 1811, and educated at Trinity College, Dublin (B.A. 1832, LL.D. 1856). Taking Holy Orders in 1834, he was successively Chaplain to Bp. Mant, Chancellor of the diocese of Connor, Rector of Ramoan, Vicar of Egham, diocese Worcester, and Rector of St. Nicholas's, Guildford. He d. in consequence of a fall from the roof of his church, which was in the course of rebuilding, April 9, 1875. His prose works include Our New Vicar, 1867; The Winton Church Catechist, &c. His poetical works are:

Montgomery, Ignatius, younger brother of James Montgomery, was b. Sept. 4, 1776, at Gracehill, near Ballymena, county of Antrim, a settlement of the [Moravian] Brethren, to which his father, the Rev. John Montgomery, had removed in that year from Irvine, in Ayrshire. Ignatius Montgomery served as minister in four of the Brethren's congregations in England and Ireland. He d. at Ockbrook, near Derby, April 28, 1841. See "At God's right hand, &c.," p. 89, i. [G. A. C.]

Montgomery, James, s. of John Montgomery, a Moravian minister, was b. at Irvine, Ayrshire, Nov. 4, 1771. In 1776 he removed with his parents to the Moravian Settlement at Gracehill, near Ballymena, county of Antrim. Two years after he was sent to the Fulneck Seminary, Yorkshire. He left Fulneck in 1787, and entered a retail shop at Mirfield, near Wakefield. Soon tiring of that he entered upon a similar situation at Wath, near Rotherham, only to find it quite as unsuitable to his taste as the former. A journey to London, with the hope of finding a publisher for his youthful poems ended in failure; and in 1792 he was glad to leave Wath for Sheffield to join Mr. Gales, an auctioneer, bookseller, and printer of the Sheffield Register newspaper, as his assistant. In 1794 Mr. Gales left England to avoid a political prosecution. Montgomery took the Sheffield Register in hand, changed its name to The Sheffield Iris, and continued to edit it for thirty-one years. During the next two years he was imprisoned twice, first for reprinting therein a song in commemoration of "The Fall of the Bastille," and the second for giving an account of a riot in Sheffield. The editing of his paper, the composition and publica-tion of his poems and hymns, the delivery of lectures on poetry in Sheffield and at the Royal Institution, London, and the carnest advocacy of Foreign Missions and the Bible Society in many parts of the country, gave great variety but very little of stirring incident In 1833 he received a Royal to his life. pension of £200 a year. He d. in his sleep, at the Mount, Sheffield, April 30, 1854, and was honoured with a public funeral. A statue was erected to his memory in the Sheffield General Cemetery, and a stained glass window in the Parish Church. A Wesleyan chapel and a public hall are also named in his henour. Montgomery's principal poetical works, including those which he edited, were :-

(1) Prison Amusements, 1797; (2) The Wanderer of Switzerland, 1806; (3) The West Indies, 1807; (4) The World before the Flood, 1813; (6) Greenland and Other Poems, 1819; (6) Songs of Zion, 1822; (7) The Christian Psalmist, 1825; (8) The Christian Post, 1825; (9) The Pelican Island, 1828; (10) The Poet's Portfolio, 1835; (11) Original Hymns for Public, Private, and Social Devotion, 1863. He also published minor pieces at various times, and four editions of his Poetical Works, the first in 1828, the second in 1836, the third in 1841, and the fourth in 1854. Most of these works contained contained by when He also of the third in 1841, and the fourth in 1854. Most of these works contained original hymns. He also contributed largely to Collyer's Coll., 1812, and other hymn-books published during the next 40 years, amongst which the most noticeable was Cotterili's Sci. of 1819, in which more than 50 of his compositions appeared. In his Christian Psalmist, 1825, there are 100 of his hymns, and in his Criginal Hymns, 1853, 555 and 5 doxologies. His Songs of Zion, 1822, number 56. Deducting those which are repeated in the Criginal Hymns, and the control of the Councestions and the Councestions are the control of the Councestions. Hymns, there remain about 400 original compositions.

MONTGOMERY, JAMES

Of Montgomery's 400 hymns (including his versions of the Psalms) more than 100 are still in C. U. With the aid of Montgomery's Mss. we have given a detailed account of a large number. The rest are as follows:—

In common with most poets and hymn-writers, Montgomery strongly objected to any correction or rearrangement of his compositions. At the same time he did not hesitate to alter, rearrange, and amend the productions of others. The altered texts which appeared in Cotterill's Sel., 1819, and which in numerous instances are still retained in some of the best hymn-books, as the "Rock of Ages," in its well-known form of three stanzas, and others of equal importance, were made principally by him for Cotterill's use. We have this confession under his own hand.

As a poet, Montgomery stands well to the front; and as a writer of hymns he ranks in popularity with Wesley, Watts, Doddridge, Newton, and Cowper. His best hymns were written in his earlier years. In his old age he wrote much that was unworthy of his reputation. His finest lyrics are "Angels from the realms of glory," "Go to dark Gethsemane," "Hail to the Lord's Anointed," and "Songs of praise the angels sang." His "Prayer is the soul's sincere desire," is an expanded definition of prayer of great beauty; and his "For ever with the Lord" is full of lyric fire and deep feeling. The secrets of his power as a writer of hymns were manifold. His poetic genius was of a high order, higher than most who stand with him in the front rank of Christian poets. His ear for rhythm was exceedingly accurate and refined. His knowledge of Holy Scripture was most extensive. His religious views were broad and charitable. His devotional spirit was of the holiest type. With the faith of a strong man he united the beauty and simplicity of a child. Richly poetic without exuberance, dogmatic without uncharitableness, tender without sentimentality, elaborate without diffusiveness. richly musical without apparent effort, he has bequeathed to the Church of Christ wealth which could only have come from a true genius and a sanctified heart.

Moore, Thomas, s. of John Moore, a small tradesman at Dublin, was b. in that city, May 28, 1779, educated at a private school and Trinity College, Dublin; read at the Middle Temple for the Bar; held a post under the Government in Bermuda for a short time, and d. Feb. 26, 1852. His Memoirs, Journal, and Correspondence were pub. by Lord John Russell in 1855. In that work every detail concerning himself and his numerous publications, most of them of high poetical merit, will be found. His connection with hymnody is confined to his Sacred Songs, which were pub. in 1816, and again in his Collected Works, 1866. These Songs were 32 in all, and were written to popular airs of various nations. Of these Songs the following have passed into a few hymn-books, mainly in America:--

1. As down in the sunless retreats of the occan. Private Prayer.

2. But who shall see the glorious day. The Final

2. But who shall see the glorious day. Incressus Bliss of Mon.
3. Come, ye discensolate, where'er you languish. Relief in Prayer. In American hymn-books the text is sometimes as in T. Hassings and Lowell Mason's Spiritual Songs, 1831. This may be distinguished from the original by the third stanza, which reads, "Here see the Bread of life; see waters flowing." &c.

Moraht, Adolph, Ph.D., s. of J. D. M. Moraht, merchant in Hamburg, was b. at Hamburg, Nov. 28, 1805. From 1825 to 1828 he was a student of theology at the Universi-ties of Halle, Göttingen, and Berlin, gradu-ating Ph.D. at Göttingen in 1828. He was then resident for nine years as a candidate of Theology (licensed preacher) at Hamburg, teaching in private schools, and devoting his spare time to the work of Home Missions. At Easter, 1838, he was appointed second pastor at Möllen, in Lauenburg, and in 1846 chief pastor. He d. at Möllen, Dec. 6, 1884 (Koch vii. 296; ms. from his daughter, &c.).

His hymns appeared principally in his (1) Harfen-klänge (20), Lüneburg, 1840; 2nd ed. (107), Hamburg, 1865. (2) Zweite Sammlung der Harfenklänge (73), Hamburg, 1880. Some of them first appeared in various papers and collections. The best are his hymns of Love to Christ, which are sweet in tone and the fruits of ripe Christian experience. Those which have passed into English are:—

Moravian Hymnody. By the name of the Moravian Church is signified the Church of the ancient Bohemian Brethren renewed in 1722 at Herrnhut in Saxony [see Bohamian Hymnody, § 1.-Iv. 3.] The ancient Brethren lived in Moravia and Poland as well as in Bohemia, but because their main settlements were situated in Bohemia (until 1547), and the Bohemian language the one they employed in their writings, they received the general name Bohemian Brethren. They called themselves in Bohemian jednota bratrska, and in Latin Unites Fratrum. In like manner the Brethren of the Renewed Church are commonly called Moravians, because the first founders of Herrnhut immigrated from Moravia. They assumed this name in England and America, but in the Act of Parliament under the 12th May, 1749, they are acknowledged as the Protestant Episcopal Church known by the name of Unites Fratrum or the United Brethren, and therefore their official name is: Unites Fratrum (Brethren's Unity), or the United Brethren.

i. History of the Moravians.

The history of the Moraviane is required in an article on the Moravian Hymnody only so fur as it may help to further the better under-standing of their hymns and hymn-books, their special character being modified by that Church from whose midst they originated, and for whose use they were written and compiled. The most prolific Moravian hymn-writer is Count N. L. von Zinzendorf, and nearly all the other Moravian hymn-writers were influenced by him. After his death there arose but few Moravian bymn-writers, as Gregor, Garve, Albertini; and the hymn-book now in use among the Moravians is for the most part the same, which was edited towards the close of the last century. Therefore it may suffice to give a brief account of Moravian history up to Zinzendorf's death in 1760.

Introduction. From the commencement of the Bobemian Brethren's Unity, some of its members existed in Moravia, deputies from this land having already been sent as representatives to the constitutive Symod held at Linotka (1467). About 1480 several hundred Waldenses emigrated to Moravia from the Mark Brandenburg emigrated to Moravia from the Mark Brandenburg and joined the Unity. These, settled in Funek and Landskron, formed the only German-speaking part of the Unity, for whom Weisse edited the first German hymn-book. Nevertheless the Moravian branch of the Unity was fully incorporated with the whole body, stood under the same direction, and had the same doctrines, natitutions, &c. After the persecutions in Bobemia, in the fatal year 1547, the fugitive Brethren chiefly found a refuge in Moravia, but in consequence of the battle of the White Mountain, near Prague, Nov. 8, 1620, the Unity in Moravia was destroyed, as it was in Bobemia, by a cruel and bloody Anti-reformation.

The anclent Brethren's Church was already dissolved by a crust and 51000y Anti-reformation.

The ancient Brethren's Church was already dissolved in 1827, and three different sections of it can afterwards be distinguished, each of which has its particular fate.

(1) The Polish Brethren's Church. It developed itself independently and joined with the Reformed Church in their contest with the Lutherans, so much so that at first the brethren had the upper hand, and their constitution was accepted by the Reformed Church in Poland. Later, however, matters were reversed, and the Brethren had to give up more and more of their peculiarities. With the Union of the Evangelleal Churches in 1817, the Brethren's Unity in Poland ceased altogether. (2) A second branch, in existence since 1821, is the Biohemian-Moravian Brethren's Caurch. This migrated formally into Poland, Hungary, Silesia, and Prussia. Altogether there are said to have been, till 1856, about 100 congregations of the Brethren's Church, iii 1856, this second branch, the Exile Church, which has no importance for the Recurrence of Lissa (in Poland) in 1856, this second branch, the Brethren's Church, which has no importance for the Rechren's Church who remained to Bohemia and Moravia, whom Comenius calls the "hidden seed." Amos Comenius, born at Comna, in Moravia, March 28, 1892, was the last bishop of the Bohemian and Moravia, whom Comenius calls the "hidden seed." Amos Comenius, born at Comna, in Moravia, March 28, 1892, was the last bishop of the Bohemian and Moravia, whom Comenius calls the "hidden seed." Amos Comenius, born at Comna, in Moravia, March 28, 1892, was the last bishop of the Bohemian and Moravian branches, and he consecrated "in spem contra spem" his sun-in-law, Peter Figulus, or Jablonsky, bishop of the Unity. To his death he unaintained the hope that the expelled Brethren would be allowed to return to their fatherland, and that the Unity would be re-established. Therefore when Cromwell, after having crushed Ireland, intended to settle the homoless Bohemians and Moravians there as a Protestant colony, Comenius could not agree to it: "Ego quidem a nostris dispersis nondum in hoco puncto responsum haboo at, quid sit, facile intelligo, nemps spes recollectionis in patria, quam plerique pertinaciter fovent, et in his (ut verum fatear) ego quoque (see Vaughan's The Protectorate of Comenius could not agree to it: "Ego quidem a nostris dispersis nondum in hoco puncto respo Herrinut.)

2. A revival of the Brethren's tradition among the German-speaking part of that "hidden seed" seems to have been called forth by the change in Church affairs in the neighbouring country of Silesia. Charles XII. by the Altranstädter Convention, 1707, had compelled the Emperor to restore 121 churches which had been taken from the Protestants. In connection with this Convention, six other churches ("Goaden-Kirchen") were granted to them in 1709. The ministers who were appointed to them in 1709. The ministers who were appointed to these churches were mostly excellent persons. Their sermons had great effect, and as some of these Churches were not far from the boundaries of Moravia, some of the "hidden" Protestants (the "hidden seed") made use of the opportunity and often attended the services, especially in Teschen.

In Moravia the Brethren's traditions were kept alive particularly in the so-called "Kuhländehen." One circle was in the villages of Schlen and Schlendorf. George Körches in Schlen was the bever of these traditions

In Moravia the Brethren's traditions were kept alive particularly in the so-called "Kuhländehen." One elrele was in she villages of Schlen and Schlendorf. George Jäschles in Schlen was the bearer of these traditions. His forefathers had fied in the 16th century from Bohemia to Moravia. He was a true descendant of the ancient Brethren, and is described as a real patriarch in appearance. In constant intercourse with this circle formed by the families Jäschler, Neisser, &c.) was another in the neighbourhood of Fulnek, in the villages of Zauchlenthal and Kunewalde, where Samuel Schneider played the same part as G. Jäschke. To the secret assemblies held by Schneider belonged the families Kunz, Beyer, Stach, Zeisberger, Tannenberger in Zauchtenthal, and Nitschmaun in Kunewalde.

In these circles Christian David appeared twice in succession. This remarkable man was a carpenter from sohemia, who, not content with his Roman Catholic faith, had after long wanderings through Germany in scarch for true children of God, became a Luthoran, at Berlin. With the year 1717 he began to take journeys to Moravia and Bohemia, on which he sought out the hidden Protestants on his own account. During this time he made the acquaintance of the Count of Zinzendorf, who was already widely famed for his willingness to receive all oppressed people. With Zinzendorf's permission David guided the first three emigrants with wife and child from Schlen in Moravia, to Zinzendorf's estate, Berthelsdorf in Saxony, which they reached on June 8th, 1742. Zinzendorf was in Dresden, but his steward Heiz received the poor people. He would not allow them, however, as they had contemplated, to build a house in the village, but directed them to a place at some distance, in the wood between Löbau and Zittau. Here Christian David felled the first tree for building a house, on the 27th June, 1722. Helz called this place the "Herrnshut," meaning that these homeless families stood under the direct "protection of the Lord" (German Hat des Herra).

3. The Count of Zinzendorf, who had afforded a refuge to these way proceeded to the land.

to these poor persecuted people, was born on the 26th May, 1700, in Dresden, and was descended from one of the most ancient noble families of the Archduchy of Austria. His father, Saxon Minister of State, died six weeks after the birth of his son. The latter, after the second marriage of his mother in 1704 to the Prussian Field-Marshai von Nazmer, was brought up by his grandmother Henriette Catharine von Gersdorf (p. 419, i.), on her cetate of Hennersdorf. His education was exi.), on her estate of Hennersdorf. His education was exclusively Pictistic. [We designate by the name of Pictism a religious movement which took place in Germany about the end of the 17th century. As Puritanism appeared in strong contrast to the High Church party in England, so Pictism opposed a cessation or retrogression of the Reformation in Germany by the awakening of "true picty." Spency, a main representative of that tendency, was Zinzendorf's godfather.] He would have liked to study theology, but his family wished him to prepare himself for State service. After having finished his study of law in 1719, he travelled in Holland and France, everywhere giving his attention to the condiand France, everywhere giving his attention to the condi-tion of the Church and religious life. He sought the com-pany of Catholic and Reformed, of Pietists, Mystics, and Socialans, and everywhere made the observation that to all these different denominations one thing was common, namely, that true Christianity consisted in personal re-ligion, or, as he expressed it, in Christianity of the heart. He felt himself at home wherever he found personal faith, even with the most extreme sects. In contrast to the confessional views, he named this "pure religion." Returned from his travels, Zinzendorf undertook the sole management of his paternal property. Once again he attempted to enter the ministry, but in consideration for his family was again obliged to relinquish his wish, and took a situation as Councillor in the Saxon Governand took a situation as Councillor in the Saxon Government in Dreaden. At any rate he had the firm resolution to employ his religious ideas and opinions for the benefit of his follow-men even in this situation, beedless of the offence which he neight give thereby. This he proved, not only by the meetings which he held in his own house in Dreaden, but also by editing his first four collections of hymns, 1725-31 (see ii., 2. 1-4). They have no connection with Herrnhut and the Moraviaus, for he writes in the preface to the first Moraviau hymnolok of 1135 (see ii., 2. 1): "Until now four editions of hymns have been published. The first once [ii., 1. 1, is and 2nd editional were intended for use in the Church at Berthelsdorf [his own estate], the other for that of the children (ii., 1. 2). In 1731 Mr. Marche published a collection of ancient and modern hymns, which were to be useful to the children of God scattered hither and thither." It can be ascertained to a certainty that the congregation at Herrnhut availed itself of no hither and thither." It can be ascertained to a certainty that the congregation at Herrnbut availed itself of no part of these collections.

4. In 1722 Zinzendorf, as already stated, permitted the carpenter, Chr. David, to bring some emigrants from Moravia to his estate at Berthelsdorf. From this year the emigration went on uninterruptedly till 1733. But besides these Moravian emigrants there came other people from all parts of Germany, attracted by the report of religious freedom on the Zinzendorf estates. This led to sharp doctrinal and confessional disputes among the inhabitants of Hornhut, so that Zinzendorf found himself, in 1727, compelled to give up his post in Dresden and to reside in Berthelsdorf. Zinzendorf wished that the Brethren should attach themselves to the Lutheran Church, but they wished to re-establish their old constitution as it was described by Comenius in his "Ratio disciplinae." And they gave him planly to understand that "they would rather take up their staff and wander further, and doubted not that they would find places where this freedom would be granted them, on which they laid so much stress." Zinzendorf could not for conscience sake let them go, and formed on the ground of the "Ratio disciplinae," "Congregation Regulations" which on May 12, 1727, were accepted and signed by all the inhabitants of Herrnbut. The renewal of the Brethren's Episcopal Consecration being conferred on David Nitschmann by Jablonsky. This Daniel Ernst Jablonsky, the son of the shove-mentioned Petrus Figuitss or Jablonsky, then Court Chapitain in Berlin, bad, in 1699, received from his father the Episcopal Consecration for the Botenian and Moravian branch. With the consent of the Polish Brethren's Bishop, Sitkovius, he consecrated David Nitschmann a Bishop on March 13, 1735.

5. Prior to this event, in 1732, when the colony at Herrnhut numbered but six hundred souls, the first two missionaries to foreign lands had been sent forth. the 21st of Aug. of that year, David Nitschmann, after-wards the first hishop of the Renewed Church, and Leon-hard Dober, set out for the Island of St. Thomas, each with six dollars in his pocket, determined to sell themselves as slaves if there were no other way of preaching the Gospel to the negroes. The missionary work grow out of this humble beginning, and has always remained the chief undertaking of the Moravian Church. We enumerate the Moravian Missions as they exist at the present time, because the Brethren translated their hymn-books into the languages of most of those nations to whom they were preaching the Gospel. (The first year in the following List indicates the time of commencement, the second date the baptism of the first convert.)

Partly through their travels to the heathen, partly the farty their fame which gread unconsciously to them, the Meravians became known in other European lauds. In 1728, the Countess of Schaumburg-Lippe then in London, asked for nearer accounts of the Moravian settlement in Herrnhut. She was a German lady attached to the retinue of the Queen of the British monarch George II., retinue of the Queen of the British monarch George II, and had previously corresponded with Zinzendorf. The reply of the Moravian Church was taken by three exiles, who were kindly received by the Countess of Lippe, but they did not obtain an audience of the Queen. In January, 1735, 10 Brethren carue to London, and, in August, 20 others followed. They were all destined for the English colony of Georgia, partly to colonise, but matuly with the object of bringing the Gospel to the Creek and Cherokee Indians. Br. Spangenberg had been previously sent to London to make the needful arrangements with the Georgia Trustees. His stay at London was of much immortance for the future, as Scangenberg. was of much importance for the future, as Spangenberg, who had been introduced to Mr. Vernon (the Secretary was of much importance for the future, as Spangenberg, who had been introduced to Mr. Vernon (the Secretary of the fifty Georgia Trustees), also to General Oglethorpe (the Governor of the colony), and to the Bishop of London, was greatly respected. Some of the Bishops not only expressed a wish to see the Brethren settled in the English colonies, but of their own accord offered to confer Anglican Episcopal Ordera, should it be desired. The other company, which had left Herrnhut in August of the same year for Georgia, sailed in the very ship which conveyed General Oglethorpe, the Revs. John and Charles Wesley, B. Ingham, as well as the colonial officials. It was therefore on this voyage the Brethren and the Methodists became acquainted—an acquaintance which in its results proved to be of the atmost importance, both as concerned Christendom and heathen lands. In the following years the Moravians hired Lindsey House, Chelsea, and began to hold meetings in London and also in Yorkshire. On the 12th May, 1738, certain statutes were drawn up conjointly by P. Boehler (Moravian minister) and J. Wesley for the guidance and edification of the small Religious Society meeting in the house of J. Hutton in Little Wyld Street. A part of this Society constituted itself as a distinct congregation in union with the Brethern's Church on Nov. 10, 1742. Society constituted itself as a distinct congregation in union with the Brethren's Church on Nov. 10, 17+2. Until this date two English Moravian hymn-books had been published. The first was put to press Oct. 24, 1741, and was ready for use Nov. 24. It consisted almost exclusively of translations from the German. The second left the press Aug. 4, 1742, thad some thad some

English byunns in addition to the contents of the first edition. All the editions till 1754 must be regarded as the undertaking of private individuals, having no sanction from the Church as such. On the 12th May, 1749, the Moravians were acknowledged by a Bill of the English Parliament as a "Protestant Episcopal Church known by the name of United Fratrum or The United Bucklews." Brethren.

7. In the meantime the Moravians founded new settlements in Germany, of which Herrnhaag in Wetteravia (founded 1738) was the most important. In the year 1738, the Count of Zinzendorf had been exiled from 1733, the Count of Zlazendorf had been exiled from Saxony, by which means his adversaries had aimed at the distruction of the settlement at Herinhut. But although Herrnhut during the next years suffered from the Count's exile, yet this misortune had the foundation-stone of several new settlements in Germany. The Count, accompanied by his family and some of his most abic fellow-labourers, left Saxony, and this "pilgrims' congregation" sought refuge with a friend of Zinzendorf's, the Count of Bildingen, in Wetteravia. Here they bought land, and founded Herrnhaag, which became the centre of the Brethren's Unity for the next 2 years. Here the ultirim's congregation was stationed. 12 years. Here the pilgrim's congregation was stationed, visitors from all parts of Germany came and went con-tinually, news from the Missions arrived every week from all parts of the world, while missionaries themselves, accompanied by converted negroes, or Esquimaux, or Indians, &c., gave accounts of their work. Every inhabitant of this little colony, homeless on this Every inhabitant of this little colony, homoless on this earth, was every day prepared to be sent to any part of the world. No wonder that this remarkable congregation felt itself standing above all national, ecclesiastical or other distinctions, that it lost sight of the real relations of this life, and that in its midst a fantastic and sentimental form of religious thought grew up. This is proved by the hymn-books, which were published in the years 1741-49, and which were later suppressed by the Moravians themselves. In 1750, a new Count of Büdingen, who was jealous of Zinzondorf, commanded the inhabitants of Herrnhaug to renounce Zinzendorf by signing an edict; but they all, without exception, rethe inhabitants of Herrnhang to renounce Zinzendurf by signing an edict; but they all, without exception, refused, preferring to leave Herrnhang, and settled, partly in Niesky (Silesia), founded 1742, partly in Pennsylvania. Herrnhang thus deserted, fell to ruins, which stand to this day. In 1747, Zinzendorf was allowed to return to Saxouy, and spent the last years of his life of (1758-60) at Herrnhut, where he died May 9, 1760. With his death the original period of the Moravian history regarding their hymn-books ends, the next 40 years (1760-1860) being devoted to the constitutional and financial affairs of the Brethren's Church.

ii. Moravian Hymn-books,

(1) Zinzendorf's Collections of Hymns.

The following books are sometimes but falsely taken for the first Moravian books. They have no further connection with Herrnhut than that Zinzendorf edited them, and that most of the hymns in the Moravian H. Bk., 1735, are taken from them. (See i. § 3.)

1. Sommitting geistlicher und lieblicher Lieder (a collection of hymns and spiritual songs), Leipzig, dedicated to his grandmether, Henriette Catharine von Gerschoff. The dedication is dated : Dresden, May 28, 1725. It contains 889 hymns (28 by Zinzendorf). 2nd ed. unaltered, besides an "Anhang" (No. 390–1078), and a "Zugabe" (addition), No. 1079–1149) (17 hymns by Zinzendorf). Zinzendorf)

He retained this appointment till his death in 1840. His Studies of History were pub. in a series of volumes; and his Christian Pastor (a poem in three books) in 1809. His hymns are not widely known. The best are:

1. Father of mercies, condescend. Departure of a Missionary. 2. Go, and the Saviour's grace proclaim. Departure of a Missionary.

These hymns were given in the Evangelical Magazine, Dec., 1818, p. 544, as "Hymns composed for a Missionary Ordination Service. Sung at the Rev. Mr. Morell's Chapel, St. Neots, Oct. 28, 1818, at the ordination of Mr. C. Mault, Missionary to India." Both hymns are signed "M." They were included in Conder's Cong. H. Bk., 1886, and from thence have passed into other collections. [J. J.]

Morison, John, p.p., was b. in Aberdeenshire in 1749. He studied at the University of Aberdeen (King's College), where he graduated M.A. in 1771. In 1780 he became parish minister of Canisbay, Caithness. He received the degree of p.p. from the University of Edinburgh in 1792. He d. at Canisbay, June 12, 1798. He was one of the members added on May 26, 1781, to the Committee appointed by the General Assembly of 1775 to revise the Translations and Paraphrases of 1745. To him are ascribed Nos. 19, 21, 29, 30 and 35, in the 1781 collection, and he is said to have been joint author with John Logan of Nos. 27 and 28. [See Scottish Translations and Paraphrases.] [J. Morn hath brightened slowly. Davis. [Sunday. Autumn.] The author has published this hymn in two forms. The first form is a hymn for Sunday, and was given in his Hys. Old and New, 1864, No. 6, in 6 st. of 6 l., and the second, for Autumn, in his Annus Sanctus, 1877, p. 221. The only difference in these two forms of the hymn is in st. i., k.4:-For Sunday. "Calm, and sweet, and holy, Be our Sabbath Day."

For Autumn. " Calm and sweet and holy, Be our Autumn day.

The first form only is in C. U. [J, J,]

Morning breaks upon the tomb. W. B. Collyer. [Easter.] 1st pub. in his Hys. partly Collected and partly Original, 1812, No. 960, in 4 st. of 4 l., entitled "Jesus rising—An Easter Hymn," and signed "W. B. C." Its modern use is mainly confined to America.

Morris, Alfred John, was b. at Hampstead, London, March 6, 1814. Educated privately at Cheltenham. Ministered to Congregational Churches at Warrington (1833 to 1839), Manchester (1839 to 1842), Holloway (1842 to 1862), and Bowdon, Cheshire (1862). He d. Nov. 15, 1868. His principal works were Glimpses of Great Men, Religion and Business, Words for the Heart and Life, The Shepherd and his Lambs, and a posthumous volume of sermons, The Open Secret. He was an extensive contributor to the Congregational periodicals. He wrote a large number of hymns for friends which appeared in various magazines. The one hymn by which he will be remembered is "Blest Saviour, let me be a child" (A Child's Prayer), which was appended to one of the discourses in The Shepherd and His Lambs, 1868. This is a hymn of great distinctiveness both of thought and expression, and has been included in many hymnals, especially those for children. [W. G. H.]

Morris, Eliza Fanny, née Goffe, was b. in London in 1821, and married in 1849 to Josiah Morris. She gained the prize for a poom on Kindness to Animals offered by the Band of Hope. Her pub. works are The Voice and the Reply, Worcester, 1858, and Life Lyrics. She also edited a Bible Class Hymn Book, and contributed the words to School Harmonies, pub. by her husband. Her hymns in C. U. include :--

1. Come unto Me and rest. Christ's Invitation. From The Voice and the Reply, 1858, into the 1874 Suppl. to the New Cong. in an altered form.

2. God of pity, God of grace. Lent. This bymn in Litany form appeared in Pt. ii. of The Voice and the Reply, 1858, entitled "The Prayer in the Temple." From Miller's Singers and Songs of the Church, 1869, we gather that this hymn was written on the 4th of Sept., 1857. It is in extensive use.

3. O Thu, blast Lamb of God. Love for and Trust.

3. O Thou, blest Lamb of God. Love for and Trust in Jesus desired. From The Voice and the Reply, 1858, into the Anglican H. Bk., 2nd ed., 1871. [W. G. H.]

Morris, George Perkins, was b. in Philadelphia, Oct. 10, 1802. In early life he removed to New York, where, in 1822, he became the editor of the New York Mirror magazine. On that magazine, together with The Home Journal, he was associated with N. P. Willis. His works include The Deserted Bride, and Other Poems, 1843; Poems, 1853; American Melodies; and some prose pieces. He is best known as a writer of songs, one of which, "Woodman, spare that tree," is very popular. His hymns, "Man dieth and wasteth away" (Victory over Death); and "Searcher of hearts! from mine erase" (Lent), are in a few American collections, as the Songs for the Sanctuary, 1865, and the Methodist Hymnal, 1878. Mr. Morris d. in New York July 6, 1864. [F. M. B.]

Mote, Edward, was b. in Upper Thames Street, London, Jan. 21, 1797. Through the preaching of the Rev. J. Hyatt, of Tottenham Court Road Chapel, he underwent a great spiritual change; and ultimately he became a Baptist minister. For the last 26 years of his life he was pastor at Horsham, Sussex, where he d. Nov. 13, 1874. Mr. Mote published several small pamphlets; and also:

Hymns of Praise. A New Selection of Gospel Hymns, combining all the Excellencies of our spiritual Poets, with many Originals. By E. Mots. London, J. Nichols, 1836. The Originals number nearly 100.

Concerning the authorship of one of these original hymns much uncertainty has existed. The hymn is:-

1. Nor earth, nor hell my soul can move. [Jesus All in All.] In 6 st. of 4 l., with a refrain. Mr. Mote's explanation, communicated to the Gospel Herold, is:—

explanation, communicated to the Gaspel Merald, is:—
"One morning it came into my mind as I went to labour, to write an hymn on the 'Gracious Experience of a Christian.' As I went up Holbour I had the chorns,
'On Christ the sofid Rock I stand,
All other ground is sinking sand.'
In the day I had four first verses complete, and wrote them off. On the Sabbath following I met brother King as I came out of Lieis Street Meeting... who informed me that his wife was very ill, and asked me to call and see her. I had an early tea, and called afterwards. He said that it was his usual custom to sing a hymn, read a portion, and engage in prayer, before he cati and see ner. I had an early tea, and catied after-wards. He said that it was his usual custom to sing a hymn, read a portion, and engage in prayer, before he went to meeting. He looked for his hymn-book but could find it nowhere. I said, 'I have some verses in my pocket; if he liked, we would sing them.' We did; and his wife enjoyed them so much, that after service he asked me, as a favour, to leave a copy of them for his wife. I went home, and by the fireside composed the last two verses, wrote the whole off, and took them to sister King. . As these verses so met the dying woman's case, my attention to them was the more arrested, and I had a thousand printed for distribution. I sent one to the Spiritual Magasise, without my initials, which appeared some time after this. Brother Rees, of Crown Street, Sobo, brought out an edition of hymns [1837] with Rees's name, and others after. . . Your inserting this brief outline may in future shield me from the charge of stealth, and be a vindication of truthfulness in my connection with the Church of God."

The form in which the hymn is usually

The form in which the hymn is usually found is :-

3. My hope is built on nothing less (st. ii.), sometimes in 4 st., and at others in 5 st., and usually without the refrain. The original in the author's Hys. of Protise, 1836, is No. 465, and entitled, "The immutable Basis of a Shaper's hope." Bishop Bickersteth calls it a "grand hymn of faith" (H. Comp. Nates). It dates circa 1834, and is in extensive use. [W. R. S.]

From the subjects of the hymns noted above it will be seen that Mr. Moultrie wrote principally on matters not usually dealt with by hymn-writers. This is specially the case with his Cantica Sanctorum, in which most of the 103 hymns are for "Black Letter Saints'

Moultrie, John, M.A., father of Gerard and Mary D. Moultrie, was b. Dec. 31, 1799, at London, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge (B.A. 1823), where he was Bell's University Scholar, 1820, and Trinity College Scholar, 1822. Taking Holy Orders in 1825, he was presented the same year by the Earl of Craven to the Rectory of Rugby, where he remained till his death, on Dec. 26, 1874.

His publications included :-

- My Brother's Grave, and other Poems, 1837;
 Dream of Life, Lays of the English Church, &c., 1843;
 Momeir and Poetical Remains of W. S. Walker, 1852; (4) Sermons, 1852; (5) Altars, Hearths, and Graves, 1854; (6) Pealme and Hymns as Sung in the Parish Church, Rugby, 1851.
- In his Preface Mr. Moultrie says of the Ps. & Hys., 1851:-
- "The present collection of Psalms & Hymns is founded on the basis of that which has been in use during the last twelve years in the Parish Church of Rugby, and for which the congregation of that Church are indebted to the kindness and taste of the Rev. H. J. Buckoll."

Further on in the same preface he says :-

"More than twenty original compositions—some altered or abridged from my former publications, others written expressly for the present collection, and (I am sorry to add) on the spur of the moment—have thus been introduced into company with which they have perhaps but slender claims to associate. Several of these are little more than paraphrases of the Epistles or George for the day." Gospel for the day.

These hymns, most of which are in Kennedy, 1863, include the following:-

- 1. Blest are the eyes of those. Gospel, 13 S. after Trinity. (The Good Samaritan.)
 2. Bring the infant to the font. Holy Baptism.
 3. Christ His own Apostles chooseth. St. Andrew.
 4. Dear Lord, a lonely life was Thine. Gospel, 4 S. after Epiphany. (Stilling the Tempest.)
 5. Friends and parents lingered weeping. Gospel, 24 S. after Trinity. (Ruising the Ruler's daughter.)
 6. God, Who dost the increase grant. Sexagesima. (The Sourc.)
 7. In patient faith till Christ shall come. Gospel. 8
- 7. In patient faith till Christ shall come. Gospel, 8
- S. after Epiphany. 8. In the beaming brow of Moses. Epistic, 12 S. after Trinity.
- 9. Lord, with glad and grateful spirits. Spisile, 1 S. after Trinity. (Perfect Love.)
 10. Meek to suffer, strong to save. St. Mark.
 11. Mysterious to the Christian heart. St. Michael and All Angels.

- 12. No act of sin our Saviour wrought. Collect, 2 S.
- after Easter. (Christ the Example.)
 13. O Lord, a wondrous story. For Sunday Schools.
 14. Our mortal eyes are all too dim. S. Slephen.
 15. Source of wisdom, past and present. For Sunday
- 16. The world may look serene and bright. Circum-17. Thon gavest, Lord, the life we live. Holy Com-
- 18. When our hearts with grief are sore. Epistle.

19. Wondrous was Thy path on earth. Gospel, 2 S. after Epiphany, (Earriage in Cana of Galilee.)

These hymns, from the special subjects of which they treat, are of more than ordinary interest to hymnal compilers, and are worthy of attention. Nos. 4, 6, 7, 12, 16, 18, 19, are from his Lays of the English Church, 1843; the rest were written expressly for the Ps. & Hys., 1851 (s. mss.).

Moultrie, Mary Dunlop, dau of John and sister of Gerard Moultrie, was b. at the Rectory, Rugby, July, 1837, and d. there, June 15, 1866. Her hymns were included in her brother's Hymns and Lyrics, 1867, with her initials "M. D. M." [J. J.]

Μούνη μοι πάτρη περιλείπετο. [Ποῦ δὲ λόγοι πτερόεντες.]

Möwes, Heinrich, was b. Feb. 25, 1793, at Magdeburg. After passing through the Cathedral school at Magdeburg, he entered the University of Göttingen in 1812, and in 1814 volunteered for service against Napoleon and fought in a Westphalian Jäger Battalion at the battles of Ligny and Waterloo and before Paris, gaining the Iron Cross for his bravery. Thereafter he resumed his studies (now at the University of Halle), and was then for a year assistant master in the Cathedral school at Magdeburg. In 1818 he was appointed pastor at Angern and Wenddorf; and in 1822 at Altenhausen and Ivenrode near Magdeburg. On account of a weak chest, and bleeding from the lungs, in January, 1829 he was compelled to cease preaching for a time, and finally had to resign his charge in June, 1830, retiring to Magdeburg. Failing to obtain suitable work, he returned, in July, 1832, to Altenhausen, where he remained ever after. In January, 1834, he had so far recovered that he began to try to obtain preferment; and in the beginning of October was offered the appointment of Pastor and Super-intendent at Weferlingen, near Neuhaldensleben. But meantime, in April, his illness had returned with redoubled violence, and, after great suffering, he d. Oct. 14, 1834 (Koch, vii. 247; Allq. cal sketch prefixed to his Geduchte, 1836, &c.).

After the sprittual change which Mowes expretenced in his first pastorate he became a most earnest and devoted pastor and preacher, and greatly interested litmself in the work of Foreign Missions. He bore his long continued sufferings with great fortitude and patience. His hymna, not numbering more than ten, and all written after the beginning of his illness, bear the stamp of heroic Christian faith, childlike submission, and deep affection for the Almighty Hand that loves even when it wounds. They are great favourites in Germany with the sick and sorrowing; but are too subjective, and too unfinished in style to be employed otherwise than for private use. Only one or two have passed into German hymn-books. They appeared, along with his other poems, and with a prefatory memoir by Friedrich Arndt of Berlin, as his Gedichte, at Magdeburg, 1836.

Nine of Möwes's hymns have passed into English, viz. .-

i, Der Rimmel hängt voll Wolken sohwer. Cross and Consolation. Written Oct. 9, 1831, at Magdeburg under sufferings during which the period of his death seemed to have come; and when his daughter Mary seemed also in perii of death. In a letter to a friend he

"My soul strove with all her might to soar away from the tortured body, and rent the clouds with her prayers, to obtain by entreaty the order for departure from the Heavenly Master... But, while my body would succumb, my soul arose, she sang what I send to you" (Life prefixed to his Gedichte, 1836, pp. 81-84).

The text of the hymn is included in the Gedicate, 1836, p. 72, in 7 st. of 4 1., as a "prayer in distress and in death." In the Witttemberg G. B., 1842, No. 468. Much in sorrow, oft in woe. White. [Christian Soldier encouraged.] In Collyer's Hys. partly Collected and partly Original, &c., 1812, No. 867, the following lines were given together with the note added thereto:-

- " The Christian Soldier encouraged. 1 Tim. vi. 12. H. K. WHITE.
- "1. Much in sorrow, oft in wee, Onward, Christians, coward go, Fight the fight, and worn with strife, Steep with tears the bread of life.
- "2. Onward, Christians, onward go, Join the war, and face the foe: Faint not—much doth yet remain, Dreary is the long campaign.
- "3. Shrink not, Christians—will ye yield?
 Will ye gult the patnful field?
 *Fight till all the condict's o'er, Nor your formen rally more
- " 4. But when loud the trumpet blown Speaks their forces overthrown, Christ, your Captain, shall best Crowns to grace the conqueror's brow."

^{* &}quot;The mutilated state of this hymn, which was written on the back of one of the mathematical papers of this excellent young man, and which came into my hands a mere fragment, rendered it necessary for something to be added—and I am answerable for the last six lines."

In 1827 Mrs. Bethia Fuller-Maitland compiled and published Hymns for Private Devotion, Selected and Original (Lond., Hatchards). In this work an enlarged form of "Much in sorrow, oft in woe," made by her daughter Frances Sara Fuller-Maitland, then but 14 years of age, was given as No. 106. White's st. i., ii., iii., il. 1, 2, were given as above, and the following lines were added thereto:—

Will ye fice in danger't hour! Know ye not your Captain's power!

- 4. Let your drooping hearts be glad; March in heavenly armour clad: Fight, nor think the battle long, Victory soon shall tune your song.
- 4 5. Let not sorrow dim your eye, Soon shall every tear be dry; Let wat was your course impede, Great your strength, if preat your need.
- "6. Onward then to battle move, More than conquerors ye shall prove: Though opposed by many a foe, Christian soldiers, onward go."

This text was republished by Mrs. Colquhoun, née Fuller-Maitland, in her Rhymes and Chimes (Lond., Macmillan), 1876. We may add that of the "original" compositions in the 1827 Hys. for Private Devotion, &c., one was by Miss F. S. Fuller-Maitland, and two others were by her sister Esther.

In his Christian Psalmody, 1893, No. 125, E. Bickersteth gave the White-Fuller-Maitland text in 4 st., with several alterations, the most important being in st. i., which read:—

" Oft in sorrow, oft in woe, Onward, Christians, onward go; Fight the fight, maintain the strife, Strangthen'd with the bread of life."

Another version of the same text was given in Hall's Mitre H. Bk., 1836, the opening lines of which are:—

" Oft in danger, oft in woe, Onward, Christians, onward go."

From these four sources H. K. White, 1806; W. B. Collyer, 1812; F. S. Fuller-Maitland, 1827; E. Bickersteth, 1833; and W. J. Hall, 1836, the popular modern form of this hymn has been manipulated. In translating the hymn varying texts have been used. Those in Latin are (1) "Ito seepe per dolorem," by Bingham, in his Hymno. Christ. Lat., 1871, is from the S. P. C. K. Ps. & Hys., No. 273; and (2) "Vos dolores tolerantes," by Macgill in his Songs of the Christian Creed and Life, is from the Kirke White Fuller-Maitland version. [J. J.]

Mudie, Charles Edward, the founder of the well-known library which bears his name, was b. at Cheyne Walk, Chelses, Oct. 18, 1818. In 1872 he collected his poems and pub. them as Stray Leaves (2nd ed., 1873). Several poems on Scriptural subjects, and a few hymns are included in the volume. The hymn by which he is best known is "I lift my heart to Thee, Saviour divine" (His and Mi.:e). It is from the Stray Leaves, and is in several hymn-books, including the Scottish Evang, Union Hymnol, 1878; Horder's Cong. Hys., 1884, and many others. It is marked by great beauty and tenderness of expression. Several of Mr. Mudie's hymns, which are not in C. U. are worthy of attention. [W. G. H.]

Mühlenberg, William Augustus, p.D., s. of the Rev. Dr. Mühlenberg, and grandson of Henry Melchior Mühlenberg, the patriarch of Lutheranism in America, was b. in Philadelphia Sept. 16, 1796. He graduated at the University of Pennsylvania in 1814. Entering Holy Orders in 1817, he was successively Assistant Rector of St. James's Lancaster, 1823; Rector of the Church of the Holy Communion, New York, 1843; St. Paul's College, Flushing (1828); St. Luke's Hospital, New York (1855); St. John's and Long d. April 6, 1877. His poetical gift was genuine, but not largely used. In 1826 he contributed 4 hymns to the Prayer Book Coll, (of which he was one of the Committee). His Poems appeared in 1859. He had previously pub. Church Poetry, 1823; and The People's Pealter, 1858. I would not live alway followed in 1859 (revised in 1871). This last contains 26 pieces, the hymns in the Prayer Book Coll., 1826, with the exception of "I would not live alway," being emitted. The following are his principal lyrics:-

1. Carel, brothers, earel. Christmas Carel. "Made for the boys of St. Pau": College—the Chorus adapted from one of the Rev. [Bp.] A. C. Coxe's Christian Ballads "—in 1840.

How short the race our friend has run. Death of a Young Person. Contributed to the Prayer
Bk. Coll., 1826.

3. I would not live alway. Eternal rest desired. Four texts of this poem are extant: 1st the Original; 2nd the version given in the Prayer Bk. Coll., 1826; 3rd the author's revised version of 1859; and 4th his rewritten text of 1871, the second of these being that known to the hymn-books. The history of the poem is somewhat complicated. We quote it here as given by us in the History of the American Episcopal Church, 1885, p. 637, as we have nothing further to add thereto:—

"The most famous of these (Dr. Mühlenberg's bymns) was probably first written. 'I will not live alway bas an intricate history, which was not simplified by the author's lapse of memory in his later years. In his brief 'story of the hymn,' printed with its 'evangelized' text in 1671, every date is wrong by two or three years; and his assertion, 'The legend that it was written on an occasion of private grief is a fancy,' hardly agrees with the clear and minute recollections of persons of the highest character, still living, and who knew the circumstances thoroughly. The date of composition assigned, 1824, is probably (not certainly) correct; it was written at Lancaster, in a lady's sibum, and began:—

I would not live alway; no, no, holy man, Not a day, not an hour, should lengthen my span.' In this shape it seems to have had six eight-line stanzas. The album was still extant in 1876, at Pottstown, Pa., and professed to contain the original manuscript. Said the owner's sister, 'It was an impromptn. He had no copy, and, wanting it for some occasion, he sent for the album.' In 1826 he entrusted his copy to a friend, who called on him on the way from Harrisburg to Philadelphia, to carry to the Episcopal Recorder, and in that paper it appeared June S. 1826 (not 1824). For these facts we have the detailed statement of Dr. John B. Clemson, of Claymont, Del., the Ambassador mentioned, who also chances to have preserved that volume of the paper. Thus appearing (without name) it was adopted by the sub-committee [of the Prayer Bic. Coll., 1828]. When their report was presented to the entite committee in 1826—not 1829, as Ir. Mühlenberg has it—each of the hymns was passed upon. When this came up one of the members remarked that it was very sweet and pretty, but rather sentimental, upon which it was unanimously thrown out. Not suspected as the author, I voted against myself. That, I supposed, was the end of it. The committee, which sat until late at night at the house of Bishop White, agreed upon their report to the Convention, and adjourned. But the next morning Pr. Onderdonk (who was not one of their number. but who, on invitation, had acted with the sub-committee, which in fact consisted of him and myself), called on me to inquire what had been done. Upon my telling him that among the rejected hymns was this one of mine, he said. That will never do, and went about among the members of the committee soliciting them to restore the hymn in their report, which accordingly they did; so that to him is due the credit of giving it to the Church. As thus adopted it was a small and altered selection from the original lines, made by Dr. Onderdonk 'with some revision' by the author. He was never astisfied with these texts, but revised the poem in 1859, and rewrote it in 1871. . . The authorship of this, as of many another popular lyric, has been disputed. The claim of Henry Ward, a printer of Lichfield, Coom., has been valemently urged, and revived but a few years ago. Of course it is unampropred by adequate evidence. When Dr. Mühlenberg was asked to assure 'some of his brethren, editors of Church papera,' of his paternity, his manly reply was, 'If they thought I was capable of letting the work of another pass for so many years as my own, they would not be sure of anything I might say." gay.' "

4. Jesus' Name shall ever be. The Holy Name. Jesus. This is entitled "The Blessed Name of Jesus. An Evangelical Rosary." It was written in 1842, and revised for Schaff's Christ in Song in Aug., 1868.

5. King of kings, and wilt Thou deign. Sub-

- mission to Jesus. Appeared in his Poems, 1859.

 6. Like Meah's weary dove. The Ark of the Church. Contributed to the Prayer Bh. Coll., 1826, No. 24, in 5 st. of 4 l. It sometimes begins with st. ii., "O cease, my wandering soul;" and again with st. iii., "Behold the Ark of God."
- 7. Saviour, Who Thy flook art feeding. Holy Baptism. This is the most widely known of Dr. Mühlenberg's hymns. It was contributed to the Prayer Bk. Coll., 1826, No. 86, in 4 st. of 4 l. It is sometimes given as "Jesus, Who Thy flock art feeding."
- 8. Shout the glad tidings, exultingly sing. Christmas, Contributed to the Prayer Bk. Coll., 1826, No. 46, in 3 st. of 4 l., with the chorus:-

"Shout the glad tidings, exultingly sing, Jerusalem triumphs, Messlah is King;"

the opening lines, followed by the first stanza, and a repetition of the chorus, and so on to the end. Sometimes the hymn opens with st. i.: "Zion, the marvellous story be telling," or as "Sion the marvellous story be telling," instead of the chorus. Dr. Mühlenberg says that the hvmn was written--

"at the particular request of Bishop Hobart, who wanted something that would go to the time by Avison, then popular, to the words of Moore, 'Sound the loud timbrel,' &c. He liked the verses I made so well that he had them struck off before the hymns [Prayer Bk. Coll.] were published, and sung in Trinity Church on Christmas day."

- 9. Since o'er Thy footstool here below. Earth and Heaven. Appeared in the Episcopal Register, 1824, and in his Poems, 1859.
- 10. The mellow eve is gliding. Evening. Dated 1825 (?) and pub, in his Poems, 1859.
- 11. The throne of his glory—as snow it is white. Advent. Dated 1839, and pub. in his Poems, 1859.
- 12. Thine handmaid, Saviour, can it be ! Admission of a Nursing Sister. Written on the words, "Come, follow me," for the reception of a Sister at St. Luke's Hospital, New York, 1859. [F. M. B] for some time Saturday preacher at St. Thomas's Church in Leipzig. In 1599 he was appointed diaconus of the St. Wenzel Church in Naumburg, and in 1604 pastor at Laucha on the Unstrut. In the end of 1604 he became archidiaconus of the St. Nicholas he became archimeterias of the Church at Leipzig, and, in 1607, was also appointed Professor of Theology in the University, and D.D. in 1612. He d., of University, and D.D. in 1612. He d., of typhus, at Leipzig, Nov. 14, 1613. (Allg. Deutsche Biog. xxii. 483; Goedeke's Grundriss, vol. iii., 1887, p. 151, &c.)

Mühlmann, Johannes, s. of Hieronymus

Mühimana was a staunch upholder of Lutheran ortho-doxy, alike against Romanists and Calvinists. He was a great lover of the Psalms; his published sermons, as well as his hymns, are based on them, and aimost his last words were Ps. lxiii., 3, "Thy lovingkindness is better than life." Wackernagel v. pp. 443-447, gives hymns under his name, all of which are found in the Geistliche Psalmen, &c., pub. at Nürnberg in 1618, by J. Lauer. [The only known copy, in the Royal Library, Berlin, has lost its titlepage.]

Two of Mühlmann's hymns have passed into English, viz. :-

i. Dank sei Gott in der Höhe. Morning. The most popular of his hymns. Appeared 1618 as above, with his initials, and thence in Wackernagel v. p. 444, in 7 st. of 8 l. Also in the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 443. Tr. as:-

While yet the morn is breaking. A good tr. of st. i., ii., v., vii. by Miss Winkworth, as No. 163 in her C. B. for England, 1863. Repeated in full in the Ohio Luth. Hymnal, 1880, and abridged in the Marlborough College H. Bk ..

Another tr. "Christ is the vine, we branches are" (st. vil.). By J. Swertner, as No. 438, in the Moravian H. Bk., 1789 (1849, No. 612).

- ii. O Lebens-Brunnlein tief und gross. Ps. lxv. Appeared 1618 as above, with his initials, in 9 st. of 9 1., entitled "a hymn from the 65th Psalm." Thence in Wackernagel v. p. 446; also in the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 426. It is really a hymn on Christ as the Fountain of Life here and in Eternity, and with Ps. lxv. 10 as its motto. Tr. as:-
- O spring of Life, so deep, so great. A good fr. of st. i., ii., v., vi., ix. by A. T. Russell, as No. 166 in his Ps. & Hys., 1851.

For the hymn "Wer Gott vertraut" sometimes ascribed to Mühlmann, see Magdeburg, J. [J. M.]

Müller, Heinrich, was a native of Nürnberg. About 1526 or 1527 he was imas a Lutheran by Duke Georg of Saxony, but was released after the Duke d. on April 17, 1539. Thereafter, till about 1580, he kept a school for writing and arithmetic at Annaberg in Saxony. Bartholomäus Müller, sometime schoolmaster at Zwickau in Saxony, in a petition presented to the Elector Christian I. in 1587, and in another petition presented to the Elector Christian II. in 1601, described himself as the son of this Heinrich Müller, and declared that the hymn noted below was written by his father during his imprisonment (see Koch i. 417; Wetzel's A. H. ii. 720, &c.). The hymn in question is:—

Hilf Gott, dass mir gelinge. History of the Passion. In his Bibliographie, 1855, p. 100, Wackernagel cites two broadsheets as of 1627. In his D. Kirchenlied iii. Mühlmann, or Mülmann, pastor at Pegau, to broadsheets as of 1627. In his D. Riversettics iii. p. 85, the carliest source from which be prints the text, near Leipzig, was b. at Pegau, July 28, 1873. Is however the Bergkreyen, Nürnberg, 1538, though he studied at the Universities of Leipzig print for 1827). He speaks of the Magdeburg G. B., (M.A. January, 1597) and Jena, and was then 1534, as the earliest hymn-book in which it is included, This is however an oversight, as it is found in the Rostock G. H., 1531, where it is entitled "A new bymn on the Word of God and His bitter sufferings," and begins "Help God mi mach gellugen." It is in 13 st. of ? 1, the initial letters of the stanzas giving the name Heinrich Möller, and the two concluding lines being. "Hat Heinrich Müller gesungen In dem Gefängniss sein."

Atter, and the two concluding lines being. "Hat Heinrich Müller gesungen In dem Gefängniss sein."

From the above note it is clear that the hymn was written by a Heinrich Müller, during an imprisonment, and was in print at least as early as 1531. The ascription to Heinrich Müller, professor at Wittenberg, is therefore impossible, seeing he was only b. in 1530. The ascription to Heinrich von Zütphen [b. at Zütphen in Gelderland, c. 1488, became an Augustinian monak, and in 1515 prior of the Augustinian monastery at Dordrecht; began to preach as a Reformer in Bremen, Nov. 9, 1522; murdered at Helde near Meldorf, in Holstein, Dec. 10, 1524] is also untenable, for neither by himself nor by his contemporaries was he ever styled Helnrich Müller, and there was during his life no period of imprisonment during which he might have written his bymn. The history of the Nürnberg Müller noted above is not indeed very clear, but his claim has at least much more appearance of truth than that of any other.

The hymn was a great favourite during the Reforma-much more appearance of truth that that of any other. The hymn was a great favourite during the Reformation period, was included by Luther in V. Babsi's G. B., 1545, and passed into many later books. It is a ballad rather than a hymn properly so called, and has now fallen out of use in Germany. The only tr. is: "Help, God, the formar of all thing." In the Gude and Godlie Ballates, ed. 1568, f. 22 (1868, p. 37).

See also note under Gesenius, J., p. 419, ii. [J. M.]

Müller, Ludwig Ernst Siegmund, was b. Nov. 23, 1766, at Stroppen, in the Principality of Oels, and in 1796 became disconus of the Frauenkirche at Liegnitz. He was then, in 1808, appointed archidiaconus of the Church of SS. Peter and Paul, at Liegnitz, in 1814 pastor primarius, and in 1818 superintendent. He d. at Liegnitz, Nov. 7, 1850 (MS. from H. Ziegler, paster primarius of SS. Peter and Paul, Liegnitz, &c.). His hymn "Trauernd und mit bangem Schnen" is noted under Neunhertz, J. [J, M.]

Müller, Michael, s. of Zacharias Müller. brewer at Blankenburg, in the Saxon Harz, was b. at Blankenburg, January 12, 1673, studied theology at Halle under Francke and Breithaupt, and received license as a Candidate of Theology (general preacher). Just after completing his university course, in 1697, he was seized with violent hæmorrhage. He so far recovered as to be able to accept the position of house tutor in the family of Gaisberg (Geyssberg) at Schaubeck, near Klein-Bottwar in Württemberg, but after a time his illness returned and he d, there March 13, 1704 (Koch iv. 405; Blätter für Hymnologie, 1886, p. 146; ms. from General Superintendent G. Schönermark, Blankenburg, &c.).

Müller's principal work is his excellent version of the Psaker (Bic Psaken Davids, &c., Stuttgart, Paul Treuer, 1700), noted under Psaklers, German, § 5. To the copy of this work in the Royal Library at Berlin there is appended (without separate title-page of date, but by the same printer) his Aufmunternder New-Johr-Zuruf an die Braut, &c. This contains 5 hymns which are repeated in his Gestifiche Erquickstunden, dated 1706, but without name of publisher (Wernigerode Library). This last work contains 61 hymns on the Gospels for Sundays and Festivals, followed by hymns 82-83, on miscellaneous subjects. The first lines of all these hymns are given in the Blätter as above. Many of Müller's psalm versions came deservedly into favour Müller's principal work is his excellent version of the toese hymns are given in the Bitatier as above. Many of Mülicr's psaim versions came deservedly into favour in Germany, but of his hymns few are found except in the hymn-books of the Separatists from 1710 to 1750. In Freylänghausen's C. B., 1704 and 1714, there are 21 of his psalms and 2 of his hymns.

Those of Müller's hymns which have passed into English are-

i. Auf, Seele, auf, und suume nicht. Epiphany.

1st pub. as No. 4 in his Zuruff as above, in 34 as to 6 4 l. entitled "The way to Life. On the Gospei for the Three Holy Kings Day, Luke it." In Freylinghausen's G. B., 1704, No. 68, st. vii., x .- xvi. were omitted, and the same form is No. 205 in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863. The tr. in C. U. is-

Up, up, new light upon thee breaks. A free tr. of st. i.-iv., xvii., xviii. xxii., xxxi., xxxii., by Dr. Kennedy, in his Hymn. Christ., 1863.

ii. Sich wie lieblich und wie fein. Brotherly love. The original form of this hymn is a version of Ps. cxxxiii. by Müller, in his Psalmen Davids, 1700, p. 244, in 4 st. of 4 l. In Freylinghausen's G. B., 1704, No. 390, these st. are i.-iv., while st. v.-xiv. (on the subject of brotherly love) are added from the MS. of J. C. Nehring (q.v.). This text, in 14 st., is No. 1045 in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863. The form tr. into English is that in Bunsen's Versuch, 1833, No. 534, being st. i., iv., viii., x. of the above text and the following three st .:-

> Sonne der Gerechtigkeit, Gehe auf zu unerer Zeit, Brich in deiner Kirche an Dass die Welt es sehen kann.

Jesu, Haupt der Kreuzgemein, Mach uns alle, gross und kieln, Durch dein Evangelium Ganz zu deinem Eigenthum.

Less die ganze Brüd-rechaur, Lieben, loben immerdar, In dir ruben allezeit, Immer und in Ewigkeit.

These three st. are from the Brüder G. B., 1778, No. 711, and are by Christian David (see Moravian Hymnody, § iii. 9). The first and third had previously appeared in the Kleine Bridger G. B., London, 1754, pt. ii., Bk. ii., on the Church of God, section 7. The only tr. in C. U. is:

Good and pleasant 'tis to see. A good tr. from Bunsen, by Miss Cox, in her Sacred Hys. from the German, 1841, p. 143, repeated abridged in Alford's Ps. & Hys., 1844, and Year of Praise, 1867, and in the Rev. F. Pott's Coll., 1861.

Other trs. are, both from Bunsen's text:-(1) "Behold how sweet it is to see," by Lady E. Forteccue, 1843, p. 64. (2) "Lo! how sweet it is to see," by W. Arnot, in the Family Treasury, 1872, p. 204. [J. M.]

Mülmann, J. [Kühlmann, J.]

Mundi renovatio. Adam of St. Victor. [Easter.] A beautiful poem on the coincidence of the Easter of Nature and the Easter of the Church; and on the joys of returning Spring. L. Gautier, in his Ocurres poetiques d'Adam de Saint Victor, 1881, p. 98, gives it from a Gradual of St. Victor before 1239 (Bibl. Nat. Paris, No. 14,452); a Missal of St. Genevieve also apparently before 1239; a 13th cent. Paris Gradual (B. N. Paris, No. 15,615), &c. It is in two early 14th cent. French Missals in the British Museum, both apparently of the Paris use (Add. 16,905, f. 154; Harl. 2891, f. 345b). The printed text will be found in Daniel, ii. p. 68; Morel, No. 70; Trench, ed. 1864, p. 153; Kehrein, No. 90; Macgill, 1876-9, and Wrangham, 1881. The use of St. Victor and of Paris was on Saturday in Easter Week, that of St. Genevieve on the Friday. Tr. as :-

Mundi salus affutura. [Visitation of the B. V. M.] This is the hymn at Matins in the Office of the Visitation of the B. V. M. in the Sarum and Aberdeen Breviaries. The Office was sanctioned by Convocation in 1480, was printed by Caxton in the same year, and was incorporated in the Sarum Breviary, Venice, 1495, pars Estiv. pt. ii., where this hymn is given at f. 130b. The text of the hymn is also in Card. Newman's Hymni Ecolesiae, 1838 and 1865. Tr. as:—

1. What the just by faith believed. By W. J. Blew, in his Church H. and Tune Bk., 1852-55. This tr. begins with st. iv. ("Sic in mundo practer morem"), and adds trs. of st. v.-vii.; and of stanza iv. of "Festum matris gloriosae" (p. 376, i.).

2. Lo! the Fount of earth's salvation. By J. D. Chambers, in his Lauda Syon, Pt. ii., 1866, p. 84, in 7 st. of 6 l. In the Antiphoner and Grail, 1880, p. 126, and again in the Hymner, 1882, it is given in an altered form of 5 st. as "Portal of the world's salvation;" [J. M.]

Mundi salus qui nasceris. C. Coffin. [Christmas.] Given in the Paris Breviary, 1736, and again in Coffin's Hymni Sacri, 1736, p. 94. It is also in J. Chandler's Hys. of the Prim. Church, 1837, No. 13, and Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1888 and 1865. Tr. as:-

Infant, been the world to free. By I. Williams, in the British Magazine, Jan., 1833 (vol. v. p. 31), and in his Hys. tr. from the Parisian Breviary, 1839, p. 50. In 1864 it was repeated in Skinner's Daily Service Hymnal, No. 49.

Other tre. are :-

1. O boly Babe, our prayer receive. J. Chandler, 2. Lord of all, Thy glory veiling. R. Campbell, 1850. [J. J.)

Mundus effusis redemptus. [Holy Communion.] In the Cluniac Breviary, Paris, 1686, p. 556, this is the hymn at First Vespers for the Octave of Corpus Christi, and consists of 5 st. and a doxology. Also in the Narbonne, 1709; the Sens, 1726; and other French breviaries. Tr. as :-

Sing, 0 earth, for thy redemption. By E. Caswall, in his Masque of Mary, &c., 1858, p. 304, and his Hys. & Poems, 1873, p. 157, in 5 st. of 6 l. In the Hymnary, 1872, it is given for "Ascensiontide," and in others as a general [J. M.] hvma.

Münter, Balthasar, a of Lorenz Münter, merchant in Lübeck, was b. at Lübeck, March 24, 1735. He entered the University of Jens. as a student of theology in 1754, graduated M.A. in 1757, and thereafter became lecturer and adjunct of the philosophical faculty. In 1760, Duke Friedrich III., of Gotha, appointed him assistant court preacher, and preacher at the Orphanage in Gotha, and then, in 1763, Superintendent at Tonna (Gräfen-Tonna) near Gotha. In 1765 he became first preacher at the German Church of St. Peter in Copenhagen, receiving, in 1767, the degree of n.p. from the University. He d. at Copenhagen, Oct. 5, 1793 (Kook vi. 348; Allg. Deutsche Biog. xxiii. 33, &c.).

Biog. XXIII. 33, &c.).

Münter was a very popular and influential preacher, a true pastor and teacher of practical Christianity, a successful religious instructor of children, an active friend of the poor, a man of culture and one of the most prominent figures in the literary society of Copenhagen. His hymna, 100 in number, are among the best of the period, were highly esteemed by his contemporaries, and many still survive in German hymnals compiled before 1876 and still in use. They appeared in his two works: (1) Gentificae Lieder. Leipzig, 1772. (2) Zaote Summing Gentificae Lieder. Leipzig, 1772. (2) Zaote Summing Gentificae Lieder. Leipzig, 1773, the first 50 were republished at Leipzig set to melodies composed for them by the most famous musicians of the day; and the second 50 were republished at Leipzig in 1774 set to melodies composed for them by J. C. F. Bach, of Bickeburg. Bückeburg.

Of Münter's hymns the following have passed into English:-

i. Seht welch' ein Mensch! Wie lag ac nahwer. Christ before Pilate. 1774, No. 6, p. 21, in 10 st. of 7 l. Included in full in the Schleswig Holstein G. B., 1780; and, reduced to 5 st., in the Berlin G. B., 1829. Tr. as:

Mure, Sir William, eldest s. of Sir William Mure of Rowallan Castle, Ayrshire, was b. at Rowallan in 1594. In the Civil War he sided against the king; and in 1644, accompanying these sent under the Solemn League and Covenant to the help of the Parlianient, was wounded at the battle of Marston Moor. He d. at Rowallan in 1657. In 1628 he pub. a tr. of Robert Boyd's Hecatombe Christiana, at Edinburgh, in a volume containing also an original poem entitled Doomesday, and three sonnets entitled Fancies Farewell. His [MS.] Version of the Psalms, which seems to have been begun in 1629 and completed in 1639, was recommended to the use of the committee who compiled the Scottish Pratter of 1650. A complete us. of this version was found about 1825, with various other poetical MSS. by him, among the old family papers in Rowallan Castle. These MSS. were kindly searched for by Lord Donington in 1884, but could not be discovered among the family papers now in Loudoun Castle, Ayrshire.

Μυστήριον ξένου. [Χριστός γενναται.]

My blessed Saviour, is Thy love. J. Stennett. [Holy Communion.] Appeared in his Hys. on the Lord's Supper, 1697, No. 22, 10 10 st. of 4 l., and again in his Works, 1732, vol. iv. p. 111. It is usually given in 3 stanzas (st. i.-iii.) somewhat altered, as in the Leeds H. Bk., 1853, and others. Another arrangement is, "O blessed Saviour, is Thy love." In some collections this extends to 6 stanzas, as in Snepp's Songs of G. & G., 1872, but a shorter form is in more frequent use. [J. J.]

My Father, for another night. Sir H. W. Baker. [Morning.] Contributed to the revised ed. of H. A. & M., 1875. It is repeated in a few collections, including the Additional Hys., added to the Leeds S. S. H. Bk., 1878. In this last case it is ascribed to "Oakes" in error. [J. J.]

My former hopes are fied. W. Cowper. [Seeking God.] Appeared in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. iii., No. 8, in 5 st. of 4 1., and headed "The Shining Light." It was passed into C. U. in G. Britain and America, its use in the latter being somewhat extensive. [J. J.]

My God, accept my heart this day.

M. Bridges. [Confirmation.] 1st pub. in his
Hys. of the Heart for the Use of Catholics, 1848, in 5 st. of 4 l., and entitled "Confirmation." In some collections it begins, "My God, accept my heart, I pray," in others, "O God, accept my heart, &c.," and in others, including the Unitarian Hymn [& Tune] Ble.
for the Church and the Home, Boston, U. S. A., 1868, it opens with st. ii., "Before the Cross of Him Who died." In these various forms it is in extensive use in G. Britain and America.

[J. J.]

My God and Father! while I stray. Charlotte Elliott. [Resignation.] The uncertainties with regard to the text of this popular hymn have arisen out of the fact that four forms of the text were pub. by Miss Elliott, and each of these has been taken in turn as the original. The facts and texts are as follows:—

i. The original hymn was pub in the Appendix to the 1st ed. of the Invalid's Hymn Book, 1834, No. 17, as follows:—

- "1. My God and Father! while I stray
 Far from my home in life's rough way,
 Oh! teach me from my heart to say,
 'Thy will be done!'
- "2. Though dark my path, and sad my lot, Let me 'be still,' and murmur not, Or breathe the prayer divinely taught, 'Thy will be done!'
-  9. What though in lonely grief I sigh For friends beloved, no longer nigh, Submissive still would I reply, 'Thy will be done!'
- "4. If thou shouldst call me to resign
 What most I prize, it ne'er was mine;
 I only yield thee what was thine;
 'Thy will be done!'

- "6. Should pining sickness waste away, My life in premeture decay, My Father? still I strive to say, Thy will be done!"
- "6. If but my fainting heart be blest
 With thy sweet spirit for its guest,
 My God! to thee I leave the rest—
 'Thy will be done!'
- " ?. Renew my will from day to day, Blend it with thine, and take away All now that makes it hard to say, 'Thy will be done!'
- "8. Then when on earth I breathe no more The prayer of mixed with tears before, I'll sing upon a happier shore, 'Thy will be done!'"
- ii. The second form of the hymn appeared in Miss Elliott's brother's (H. V. Elliott), Ps. and Hys., 1835, as follows:—
 - "1. My God my Father, while I stray
 Far from my home, on life's rough way,
 O teach me from my heart to say,
 'Thy will be done!'
 - "2. If thou shouldst call me to resign
 What most I prize,—it ne'er was mine;
 I only yield thee what was thine;—
 'Thy will be done!'
 - "3. E'en if again I ne'er should see The friend more dear than life to me, Ere long we both shall be with thee;— 'Thy will be done!
 - "4. Should pining sickness waste away My life in premature decay, My Father, still I strive to say, 'Thy will be done!'
 - "5. If but my fainting heart be blest With thy sweet Spirit for its guest, My God, to thee I leave the rest;— 'Thy will be done!'
 - "6. Renew my will from day to day;
 Blend it with thins, and take away
 Ali that now makes it hard to say
 'Thy will be done!'
 - "7. Then when on earth I breathe no more
 The prayer oft mix'd with tears before,
 I'll sing, upon a happier shore,
 'Thy will be done!'"
- iii. The third form of the hymn was given in Miss Elliott's Hours of Sorrow, &c., 1836, pp. 130-1, as follows:—
 - "My God and Father! while I stray
 Far from my home in life's rough way,
 O! teach me from my heart to say,
 'Thy will be done!'
 - "Though dark my path and sad my lot, Let me 'be still' and murmur not; Or breathe the prayer divinely taught, 'Thy will be done!
 - "What though in lonely grief I sigh For friends belov'd, no longer nigh, Submissive still would I reply, 'Thy will be done!
 - "Though thou hast call'd me to resign What most I pris'd, it ne'er was mine: I have but yielded what was thine;—
 'Thy will be done!'
 - "Should grief or sickness waste away My life in premature decay; My Father! still I'll strive to say, 'Thy will be done!'
 - "Let but my fainting heart be blest, With thy sweet Spirit for its guest. My God! to thee I leave the rest: 'Thy will be done!'
 - "Renew my will from day to day!
 Blend it with thins; and take away
 All that now makes it hard to say,
 'Thy will be done!'"

iv. The fourth form is in the 1839 ed. of Ellictt's Ps. & Hys. and later editions. In this the text of the Ps. and Hys., 1835, has undergone one change only, and this in the opening line, which reads, "My God, my Father, while I stray."

The great diversity in these texts, and all

pub. by Miss Elliott, or with her sanction, accounts for the curious anomaly that Lord Selborne, in his Bk. of Praise, gives one form as the original, Bp. Bickersteth, in his H. Comp., another, and some one else a third. In varying forms it is in extensive use in all English-speaking countries, and of all Miss Elliott's hymns it ranks next to her "Just as I am" in popularity. It has also been tr. into several languages, including Latin, German, French, &c,

My God, and is Thy table spread? P. Doddridge. [Holy Communion.] Pub. in Job Orton's posthumous edition of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., 1755, No. 171, in 6 st. of 4 L, and headed "God's Name profaned, when his Table is treated with Contempt. Malachi i. 12. Applied to the Lord's Supper." The same text was repeated in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., 1839. The extensive use of this hymn, and especially in the Church of England, is due to a great extent to the fact that it, with a few others, was appended to Tate and Brady's Version of the Psalms. The history of that circumstance is given in the article on the New Version (q.v.). The only changes in the text are st. i., l. 2, of "does" into "doth," and l. 3 of the same stanza of "its" into "thy." In addition to its use in this form, and in the original (often abbreviated), it is also found as :-

1. Father, and is Thy table spread. This is adopted by some of the American Unitarian collections.

2. Lord Jesus, is Thy table spread. This is as early as the 1815 Appendix to Cotterll's Sci., and is found in Rickersteth's Christian Psalmody, 1833, and later hymn-books of the same type.

3. 0 God, and is Thy table spread. This is in the Hymnury, 1812, in 4 st., together with a doxology which in not in the original.

The only alterations of any moment which have crept into the text, and are sometimes adopted, are :-

"Rich banquet of His Flesh and Blood!"

" Memorial of His Flesh and Blood!"

and:-

"Why are its daintles all in vain?"

"Why are its bounties all in vain?"

In full or in part this hymn has been tr. into several languages. One in Latin (of 4 st., the fourth being very much altered), by Bingham, in his Hymno, Christ. Lat., 1871, is "O Deus, anne patet nobis Tua mensa reforta?" [see English Hymnody, Early, § XIV.] [J. J.]

My God, how endless is Thy love. I. Watts. [Morning or Evening.] Pub. in his Hys. and Spiritual S., 1709, Bk. i., No. 81, in 8 st. of 4 l., and headed "A Song for Morning or Evening." It was included in J. Wesley's Ps. & Hys., Charles-town, 1736-37, and subsequently in a large number of hymn-books. In addition to its use under its original first line, sometimes with slight changes, but usually unaltered, it is also found as :-

1. O God, how endless is Thy love. This form appeared in G. Whitefield's Hynnes, &c., 1753, No. 17; M. Madan's Ps. & Hys., 1760, No. 103, and many later collections.

2. O God, how constant is Thy lave. This was given in the 1819 ed. of Cotterill's Sel., p. 2, in 4 st., the 3rd stanzs being an addition by Cotterill or Montgomery.

3. O God, how boundless is Thy love. This form is in the Irvingite Hys. for the Use of the Churches, 1864 and 1871.

Through the original and in these various forms this hymn is in use in all English-speaking countries. It is a beautiful example of Watts's tender style, but somewhat tinged with sadness. [See English Hymnody, Early, § vi. 3, xiii.] ŤĴ. J.1

My God, how perfect are Thy ways. W. Cowper. [The Lord our Righteousness.] Appeared in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. i., No. 67, in 5 st. of 4 l., and entitled "Jehovah our Righteousness." It is generally given in its original form, but its use is limited. [J. J.]

My God, how wonderful Thou art. F. W. Faber. [The Eternal Father.] 1st pub. in his Jesus and Mary, &c., 1849, No. 2, in 9 st. of 4 l., and entitled, "The Eternal Father," and again in his Hymns, 1862, p. 22. Its use is very extensive both in G. Britain and America, but it is often given in an abridged form. In some of the American collections, including H. W. Beecher's Plymouth Coll., 1855, The Baptist Praise Bk., 1871, it begins with st. ii., "How dread are Thine eternal years," but this does not equal the original in popularity in America, and is almost unknown in G. Britain. Another cento in C. U. in America begins with st. iv., "O how I fear Thee, living God." IJ. J.1

My God, I am Thine; What a comfort divine. C. Wesley. [Peace with God.] Appeared in Hys. and Sac. Poems, 1749, vol. i., as No. 16 of "Hymns for Believers," in 6 st. of 3 l. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. v. p. 24). It was republished in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, No. 197, and thence passed into most of the Methodist hymn-books throughout all Englishpeaking countries. Few hymns amongst the Methodists have equalled it in the influence which it has had upon the sick and dying. Numerous instances of great interest are given in G. J. Stevenson's Meth. H. Bk. Notes, 1883, p. 167. The stanzas most frequently quoted are, i. "My God, I am Thine," and iv., "My Jesus to know; And feel His blood flow."
Outside of the Methodist bodies its use is limited. [J. J.]

My God, I know, I feel Thee mine. C. Wesley. [Peace and Holiness desired.] Pub in Hys. & Sac. Poems, 1740, p. 156, in 12 st. of 4 l., and entitled, "Against Hope, Believing in Hope" (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. i. p. 328). In the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, No. 351, st x. is omitted, and slight changes in the text are introduced. This form is repeated in the revised ed., 1875, and has passed into several collections. In addition there are also the following arrangements of the hymn in C. U. :—

Pather, Thy all-victorious love. This opens with at. iv. altered, and is in use in American Unitarian hymn-books.

nymn-noose.
2. Jesus, Thine all-victorious love. This also begins with st. iv. altered, and is in American C. U.
3. My God, I humbly call Thee mine. This is in Mercer's Ukurch Psatter & H. Bk., Oxford ed., 1864,

My God, I love and I adore. I. Watts. [God, the Creator and Preserver.] This poem of 63 lines, appended to an essay on "Searching after God," is in Watte's Reliquise Juveniles: Miscellaneous Thoughts in Prose and Verse, &c., 1734. In the Coll. of Hys. & Ps., &c., by Kippis, Rees, and others, 1795, a hymn in 4 st. of 4 l. appeared as No. 62, beginning "Who can by searching find out God?" The opening stanza is based on ll. 1-4 of the poem, whilst st. ii.-iv. are almost word for word from 11. 5-20. This same hymn, with the substitution of ll. 1-4 of the poem for the first stanza as in Kippis, is No. 148 in The Bap. Praise Bk., N. Y., 1871. This, together with the text as in Kippis, is in other collections. Another arrangement, beginning with the same first line, in 4 st. is No. 177 in H. W. Beecher's Plymouth Coll., 1855, but it is not equal to either of the former in purity or beauty. The hymn, in either of those forms, is very poetical and of more than usual excellence. [J. J.]

My God, in Whom are all the springs. I. Watts. [Ps. lvii.] 1st pub. in his Psalms of David, 1719, in 6 st. of 4 l., and entitled, "Praise for Protection, Grace and Truth." In some collections, as in Dr. Alexander's Augustine H. Bk., 1849 and 1865, it begins with st. iii., "Be Thou exalted, O my God." Both the original and the abridged form are in limited use. [J. J.]

My God, is any hour so sweet. Charlotte Elliott. [The Hour of Prayer.] Pub. in her Hours of Sorrow, &c., 1836, p. 45, in 7 st. of 4 l., and entitled "The Hour of Prayer"; again in her brother's Ps. & Hys., 2nd thousand, 1837, in 6 st., and again in her Morning and Evening Hys. for a Week, 1839. The text in each of these works is different from that in the rest. The text in the H. Comp., 1876, which is generally received as the original, differs slightly from each of the above. The 1836 text is in Lyra Brit., 1867, p. 219, with "There for," changed to "Here for," in st. v. 1. 2. In Kennedy, 1863, and in Thring's Coll., 1882, it is altered to "Sweet is the morning light to me." The use of this hymn in one or the other of these two forms is extensive. [J, J.]

My God, my Father, blissful Name. Anne Steele. [Humility and Trust.] Appeared in her Poems on Subjects chiefly Devotional, 1760, vol. i. p. 114, in 8 st. of 4 l., and headed "Humble Reliance." It was repeated in the 2nd ed. of the Poems, 1780, and in Sedgwick's reprint of her Hymns, 1863, p. 70. In its full original form it is not usually found in C. U.; but the following centes therefrom are given in several hymn-books in G. Britain and America:

and America:—

1. My God, my Father, blissful Name. Composed of st. i.—iv., vi.—vili. in the Bap. New Selection, 1828; the Bap. Ps. & Hys., 1859; the New Cong., 1859, &c.

9. My God, my Father, charming Name. This is usually No. 1, with the alteration of the opening line.

3. Lord, what Thy providence denies. Composed of st. iii., iv., vil., viii. in the 1863 Appendix to the S. P. C. K. Ps. & Hys., and others.

4. My God, whate'er Thy will ordains. In Kennedy, 1863, No. 1211, is a cento from this hymn and Miss Steele's "Dear Refuge of my weary soul."

[J. J.]

My God, my Father, dost Thou call? Bp. E. H. Bickersteth. [Home Missions.] Written for the London Church Mission, 1874, and printed in the Guardian, and afterwards passed into several hymn-books, including the Prim. Methodist Hymnal, 1887, &c. [J. J.]

My God, my Portion and my Love. I. Watts. [God Man's only Happiness.] Pub. in the 1st ed. of his Hys. and Spiritual S., 1707 (ed. 1709, Bk. ii., No. 94), in 8 st. of 4. l., and headed "God my only Happiness." It is in C. U. both in full and in an abridged In Dale's English H. Bk., 1874, No. 639, "My God, my life is in Thy love," is also from this hymn, and is composed of st. i., ii., v., vii., viii. slightly altered. [J, J.]

My God, the Covenant of Thy love. P. Doddridge. [The Divine Covenant.] This hymn is No. 86 in the D. MSS., but is undated. The latest date in the mss. is given to No. 83, as "Jan. 9, 172". This hymn is, we judge, circa 1740. It was included, unaltered, in Job Orton's posthumous ed. of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., 1755, No. 21, in 5 st. of 4 l., and headed "Support in God's Covenant under domestic troubles;" and again in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the same, 1839, No. 26. It is in extensive use in G. Britain and America, but usually with the omission of st. ii., "What tho' my house be not with Thee."

My God, the Spring of all my joys. I. Watts. [God, Light in darkness.] 1st pub. in his Hys. & Spiritual S., 1707 (ed. 1709, Bk. ii., No. 54), in 5 st. of 4 l., and headed "God's presence is Light in darkness." In 1741, J. Wesley included it with alterations in his Ps. & Hys., p. 118, but did not introduce it into the Wes. H. Bk. in 1780. It is in the 18th ed., 1805, as No. 87, with an asterisk to denote that it was not placed there by Wesley. In its original form the hymn is about God, and He is spoken of in the third person thus: "In darkest shades if He appear."

The Wesley version is an address to God: "In darkest shades if Thou appear."

Both versions are in extensive use in all English-speaking countries; the original, however, being the more popular of the two. In a few collections it is altered to: "My God, the Source of all my joys." [J. J.]

My God, Thy service well demands. P. Doddridge. Thanksgiving for Recovery from Sickness.] In the D. MSS. this hymn is No. 55, is dated "Nov. 14, 1737," and headed,

"A Thought on recovery from Sickness in which much of the Presence of God had been experienced. Particularly intended for the use of Miss Nanny Bilss."

This heading is altered in Doddridge's handwriting to

"Thought on recovery from a dangerous sickness in which much of the presence of God had been experienced. Particularly intended for the use of a friend who had been in extreme danger by the bursting of an artery in her stomach."

It was included in Job Orton's posthumous ed. of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., 1755, No. 364, in 7 st. of 4 l., as one of the "Hymns on Particular Occasions, and in Uncommon Measures." It is headed therein "On Recovery from Sickness, during which much of the Divine Favour had been experienced." In J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the Hymns, &c., the text and heading as in Orton's ed. were repeated. When the nature of the sickness pub. in his H. Comp., 1876. It has since is remembered, the original Ms. is more intensely vivid than the printed text. In the Ms. st. ii., ll. 3, 4, read:—

"When life in purple torrents flowed From every gushing vein;"

st. iii., l. 3 :---

"And teach me with my quivering lips;" and st. v., 1. 4:—

"That made salvation mine."

The special personal character of this hymn has limited its use. It might, however, be easily adapted for special or general thankegiving after sickness.

[J. J.]

My God, 'tis to Thy Mercy-seat.

Anne Steele. [The Mercy-Seat.] 1st pub. in her Poems on Subjects chiefly Devotional, &c., 1760, vol. i. p. 133, in 6 st. of 4 l., and headed: "Refuge and Strength in the Mercy of God." It was repeated in the 2nd ed. of the Poems, &c., 1780, and in Sedgwick's reprint of her Hymns, 1863. It is in C. U. both in its original form and as "Dear Father, to Thy Mercy-seat." The letter form is chiefly in use in America.

My God, what silken cords are Thine. P. Doddridge. [Gratitude.] 1st pub. in Job Orton's posthumous ed. of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., 1755, No. 152, in 5 st. of 4 l., and entitled "Gratitude the Spring of true Religion;" and again in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the same, 1899, No. 171. It is in C. U. in its original form, and as "My God, what cords of love are Thine," in the London H. Bk. (enlarged) 1873, and others. [J. J.]

My gracious Lord, I own Thy right. P. Doddridge. [The Service of Christ a delight.] Pub. by Job Orton in his posthumous ed. of Doddridge's Hymns, 1755, No. 294, in 5 st. of 4 l., and headed "Christ's Service the fruit of our Labours on earth:" also given in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the same, 1839, No. 320. Its use, especially in America, is extensive. Sometimes it is given as "All-gracious Lord, I own Thy right," as in the Unitarian Hys. of The Spirit, Boston, U.S.A., 1864. [J. J.]

My heart is resting, O my God. Anna L. Waring. [The Lord the Portion of his people.] Appeared in the 4th ed. of her Hys. and Meditations, 1854, p. 65, in 11 st. of 8 L., and based upon Lam. iii. 24, "The Lord is my Portion, saith my soul; therefore will I hope in Him" (ed. 1871, p. 62). It is also in her Additional Hys., 1858. Being too long to be used in full, various arrangements of lines and stanzas have been adopted for C. U. Most of these begin with the opening line of the hymn. One exception is, "I have a heritage of joy," in the American Unitarian Hy. [& Tune] Bk. for Church & Home, Boston, 1868, which begins with st. iii., 1. 5. [J. J.]

My Helper, God, I bless His name. P. Doddridge. [New Year.] This hymn is almost entirely unknown under its original first line, but altered as "Our Helper, God, we bless His [Thy] name," it is found in several collections, including Horder's Cong. Hys., 1884. It was let pub. in Job Orton's posthumous ed. of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., 1755, No. 19, in 4 st. of 4 l., and headed, "Ebenezer, or God's helping hand review'd and acknowledged. 1 Sam. vii. 12. For New-Year's day." It is also in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the same, 1839, No. 28. [J. J.]

My Hope, my All, my Saviour Thou. [Jesus, All in All.] This hymn has been traced to A Pocket Hymn Book designed as a constant Companion for the Pious, collected from Various Authors. York, B. Spence, 1774 (5th ed., 1786, No. 114), in 5 st. of 4 l. Through this Pocket H. Bk., which, in a reprint, was the first Methodist hymn-book used in America [American Rymnody, § v.], it came into use in that country. The full and unaltered text is in Dr. Hatfield's Church H. Bk., N. Y., 1872, No. 964. In the Meth. Episco. Hymnol, 1878, it is given in 4 st., and ascribed to "Thomas Coke." As the hymn was published in a Methodist Pocket H. Bk., in 1774, and Dr. Coke did not make the acquaintance of J. Wesley until August 13, 1776, this can hardly be so. Moreover, there is no mention of his having written hymns at that time, or at any time, in Dr. Etheridge's authorised edition of his Life, 1860. We are obliged therefore to say it is Anonymous.

My Jesus, while in mortal flesh. P. Doddridge. [Abidings—Faith in Christ.] This is No. 280 in Job Orton's posthumous ed. of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., 1755, and No. 906 in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the same, 1839. It is in 6st. of 4 l., and headed "Living while in the flesh by faith in Christ, Who loved us, &c. Galat. ii. 26." It is in C. U. in its original form, and as "Blest Jesus, while in mortal flesh." The latter form is mainly in use in America.

My Lord, my Love was crucified. J. Mason. [Sunday.] Appeared in his Spiritual Songs, or Songs of Praise, &c., 1683, No. 18, in 3 st. of 8 l., and 1 st. of 4 l., and entitled "A Song of Praise for the Lord's Day." It is also in Sedgwick's reprint of Mason's Spiritual S., 1859, p. 30. It is in use in three forms: (1) The original abbreviated; (2) "My Lord, my Life, was crucified;" and (3) "Come, dearest Lord, and feed Thy sheep." The altered forms are principally in use in America.

The opening line of this hymn is well known in Church history and song. St. Ignatius used it in the first century: it was common throughout the middle sges, and the prefatory plate to Luke Boileau's Reformed Monastery, 1677, has the motto "Amor meus crucifixus est." The refrain to each stanza of C. Wesley's "O Love divine, what hast Thou done?" is "My Lord, my Love is crucified:" to each stanza of Faber's "O come and mourn with me awhile, it is "Jesus, our Love, is crucified"; and in H. A. & M., and most crucified"; and in H. A. & M., and most modern collections which have copied Faber's hymn, it is "Jesus, our Lord, is crucified." It is a beautiful thought, and full of spiritual meaning. Its tenderness is not intensified by the change of "our Love" to "our Lord."

My Maker, and my King; to Thee my whole I owe. Anne Steele. [God, Creator and Benefactor.] 1st pub, in her Poems on Subjects chiefly Devotional, &c., 1760, vol. i. p. 48, in 6 st. of 4 l., and entitled. "God my Creator and Benefactor." It was repeated in her Poems, &c., 1780; and in Sedgwick's reprint of her Hymns, 1863. Two forms of this hymn are in C. U. (1) The first is the original in its full or abridged form. This came into C. U. through the Bristol Bap. Coll. of Ash & Evans, 1769, where it is No. 25, and sign d "T." (2) The second is:---

"My Maker and my King! What thanks to Thee I owe."

This appeared in Hall's Mitre H. Bk., 1836, No. 286, in 4 st. of 4 l.; and again in E. Osler's Church and King, June 1, 1837. It was rewritten from Miss Steele's hymn by Osler for the Mitre H. Bk., and should be given as Anne Steele, 1760; E. Osler, 1836. [J. J.]

My Saviour, be Thou near me, Through life's night. Mary Duncan, née Lundie. [Supplication.] let pub. in her Memoir, 1841, in 2 st. of 8 l., and thus introduced :--

"To a Greek air, which a dear friend loved to hear her sing, she composed, at the planoforte, the annexed stanzas, not being satisfied with the triffing words attached to it. They bear date the 20th December [1839], the last effusion of her muse, and the prayer of their petition was about to be answered speedily" (ed. 1843,p. 294).

The hymn is included, set to this air, in the Rev. J. H. Wilson's Songe of Zion, 1877, and, without the air, in other collections. [J. M.]

My song shall be of mercy. H. Downton. [Ps. ci.] Written for his congregation at St. John's Church, Chatham, and first printed at the close of his Sermon, preached in 1852, on "God, the Refuge of His people" (Chatham, A. Ethertugton); and then in Barry's Ps. & Hys., 1867. It was also included in his Hys. & Verses, 1873. [W. T. B.]

My song shall bless the Lord of all, W. Cosper. [The Godhead of Christ.] 1st pub. in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. ii., No. 38, in 6 st. of 4 l., and headed "Jehovah Jesus." Although not in extensive use, it is a dogmatic hymn of more than usual merit, and is worthy of greater attention.

My soul and spirit fill'd with joy. N. Tate. [Magnificat.] This metrical version of the Song of the Blessed Virgin was given in the Appendix to the New Version of the Psalms appended to the Book of Common Prayer, 1702 (licenced 1703). It is not found in modern collections of hymns (full text in old P. Books). In the Draft of the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, 1745, it was given with very slight alterations as No. ii. Before its adoption, however, in the authorised issue of the Translations, &c., of 1781, it underwent further revision, and as No. xxxvi. stands thus:-

St. I., N. Tate; st. ii., rewritten, 1781; st. iii., rewritten, 1781, with 1st line from 1745; st. iv., N. Tate; st. v., l. 1, 1745; l. 2 altered; il. 3, 4, N. Tate.

This recast, which has been in use in the Church of Scotland for more than 100 years, is claimed for W. Cameron (p. 200, ii.) by his daughter in her list of authors and revisers of the 1781 issue. Full recast text in modern editions of the Scottish Trs. and Paraphrases.

Spiritual Songs, or Songs of Praise, 1683, p. 52, in 5 st. of 8 l., and I st. of 4 l., and entitled "A Song of Praise for Joy in the Holy Ghost"; and again, in Sedgwick's reprint of the Spiritual Songs, 1859, p. 38. The hymn in its full form is not in C. U. The following centos however are in C. U.:—

1. A living stream as crystal clear. This begins with st. iii., and, as altered by J. Keble, it appeared in the Salisbury H. Bk., 1867, and subsequently in other collections.

2. My soul doth magnify the Lord. This, as No. 354 in the Dutch Reformed Hys. of the Charch, N. Y., 1869, is composed of st. i., ii., il. 1-4, and a dexology not in the original.

8. There is a stream which issues forth. This, as No. 104 in Lord Selborne's Book of Praise, 1862, is st. v. to the end of the hymn unaltered.

These centos, especially No. 1, are in several collections; but their use is not equal to their merits. [See English Hymnody, Early,

My soul, go boldly forth. R. Baxter. [Death Anticipated.] This poem appeared in Baxter's Additions to the Poetical Fragments of Richard Baxter, Written for himself and Communicated to such as are more for serious Verse than smooth. London: Printed for B. Simmons, &c., 1683, p. 62, in 31 st. of 6 l., dated "Decemb. 19, 1682," and headed "The Exit." In the American Plymouth Coll., 1855, st. i., iv. and xxxi. were given as No. 887, and in Kennedy, 1863, st. i., iv. xiii. and xxxi. as No. 1375. Both the original and these centos are admirably adapted for private [W. T. B.]

My soul, inspired with sacred love. C. Wesley. [Ps. cxlvi.] 1st pub. in The Arminian Magazine, 1798; again in Fish's collection of C. Wesley's Psalms, 1854; and again in the P. Works, 1868-72, vol. viii. p. 260, in 8 st. of 6. l. In 1830, it was given in the Supp. of the Wes. H. Bk., with the omission of st. iii. and vi., and retained in the revised ed., 1875. [J. J.]

My soul, repeat His praise. I. Watts. [Ps. citi.] 1st pub. in his Ps. of David, &c., 1719, p. 267, in 8 st. of 4 l., and headed, "Abounding Compassion of God; or, Mercy in the Midst of Judgment." It was given with the omission of st. ii., iv. and vi., in G. Whitefield's Hys. for Social Worship, &c., 1753, No. 9. This abbreviated form was repeated in M. Madan's Ps. & Hys., 1760, No. 117, and others, and thus came into C. U. in the Church of England. It is also given in full in some collections, and again, altered in another way, in others. Its use is extensive.

My soul, there is a countrie. H. Vaughan. [Heaven—Peace.] This poem on "Peace" appeared in 20 lines in his Silex Scintillans, or Sacred Poems, Pt. i., 1650 (2nd ed. 1655); in Lyte's reprint of the same, 1847, and in the Bell and Daldy reprint, 1858. In the reduced form of 4 st. of 4 l., it was given in the People's H., 1867; and in its full and unaltered form, as a hymn for "Private (J. J.] Use," in Thring's Coll., 1882.

My soul, thy great Creator praise. Sir J. Denham and I. Watts. [Ps. 104.] 1st My soul doth magnify the Lord. Sir J. Denham and I. Watte. [Ps. 104.] 1st J. Mason. [Whitsuntide.] 1st pub. in his pub. in Watte's Psalms of David, &c., 1719. in 28 st. of 4 l., and headed "The glory of God in Creation and Providence." In a note he 68.Y8 :---

"Several Lines in this Psalm I have borrow'd of Sir John Denham; if I have made the Connection more evident, and the Sense more easy and useful to an ordinary Reader, I have attained my End, and leave others to judge whether I have dishonour'd his Verse, or improved it," p. 274.

The lines borrowed from Sir J. Denham's version of 1714 are st. i., ii., iii., vii., ll. 1, 2; xxviii., Il. 3, 4. The paraphrase naturally from its great length is not in C. U., but the following centos therefrom are in several hymn-books in G. Britain and America:-

1. Great is the Lord, what tongue can frame! This cento, in the Andover Sabbath H. Bk., 1858, and other American collections, is made up of odd lines from Watts's portion of the paraphrase somewhat freely altered. In some hymnals st. ii. of this cento is omitted.

2. My soul, thy great Creator praise. This cento in the Leeds H. Bk., 1853, 4 stanzas, is thus composed: et. I., ii. Sir John Denham, and the rest by Watts; in the New Cong., 1859, 8 stanzas, st. i., it. are by Denham, and the rest by Watts; and in Dale's English H. Bk., 1874, st. i.-iii., are by Sir J. Denham, and iv., v. by Vast are Thy works, Almighty Lord. Of this cente in Martinesu's Hymns, 1840, No. 127, 1l. 1, 2 of st. iii. are by Sir J. Denham, and the rest by Watts.

These centos, taken together, are in somewhat extensive use.

My soul, with joy attend. P. Doddridge. [The Security of Christ's Sheep.] This is No. 97 of the D. MSS., but is undated [circa 1740]. It was pub. by J. Orton in his posthumous ed. of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., 1755, No. 231, in 6 st. of 4 l., and headed, "The Happiness and Security of Christ's Sheep, John x. 28." It was also repeated in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the same, 1839, No. 255. It is in C. U. in G. Britain and America.

My soul, with sacred joy survey. T. Kelly. [Missions.] 1st pub. in his Coll. of Ps. & Hys., &c., Dublin, 1802, No. 264 [there are two hymns in the collection with this number], in 7 stanzas of 4 l., and based on Isa. xliii. 5, 6. It was repeated in the 1st ed. of his Hymns, &c., 1804, and again in all later editions (ed. 1853, No. 575). In addition to appearing in a few collections under its opening line, two centos therefrom are in C. U., both beginning: "Arise, arise; with joy survey." These are: (1) In Hatfield's Church H. Bk., N. Y., 1872, No. 1219, composed of st. i., iii., ii., vi. and vii. in the order named; (2) In the Bap. Praise Bk., N. Y., 1871, where st. i., iv. form No. 1204. [J. J.]

My spirit longeth for Thee, J. Byrom. [No Rest but in God.] Pub. in his Miscellaneous Poems, 1773, in two parts, Pt. i. being "The desponding Soul's wish"; and Pt. ii. "The Answer." The "Wish" is in 4 st. of 4 L; and the "Answer" in 4 st. of 4 l. Both parts are in C. U., the first, usually as, "My spirit longs for Thee; and the second, "Cheer up, desponding soul. The full text was reprinted in Byrom's Works, 1814, vol. ii. p. 140. (W. T. B.)

My stock lies dead, and no increase. G. Herbert. [Divine Grace Desired.] Appeared in his posthumous work The Temple, 1633 (ed. Chandos Classics, 1887, p. 107), in 6 st. of 3 L, with the refrain "Drop from above!" It is given in its original form in a few collections, and again in several American hymnals, as "My heart lies dead, and no increase." It is a sweetly pathetic hymn for private devotion. ľJ. J.]

My times of sorrow and of joy. B. Beddome. [Resignation.] Written on Jan. 4, 1778, and pub. in Rippon's Bap. Sel., 1787, No. 276, in 5 st. of 4 l., and headed "Resignation; or God's Portion." In R. Hall's posthumous edition of Beddome's Hymns, &c., 1817, No. 222, it is simply entitled "Resignation." It is a striking coincidence that, unknown to Beddome, his son, Dr. Benjamin Beddome, died of a fever in Edinburgh on the day that this hymn was written. Dr. Rippon says, in the Baptist Register, 1794, that the father preached on that day (Sunday) from Ps. xxxi. 15, "My times are in Thy hand," and that this hymn was sung at the close of the Sermon. It is very plaintive, and well suited for private use. It is in several modern collections, including the Bap. Ps. & Hys., 1858 and 1880.

My whole, though broken heart, O Lord. R. Baxter. [Resignation.] Ap-peared in his Poctical Fragments, 1681, p. 81, in 8 st. of 8 l., and entitled, "The Covenant and Confidence of Faith." To it is appended the note: "This Covenant, my dear wife, in her former sickness, subscribed with a cheerful will." The hymn was republished in Pickering's reprint of the Poetical Fragments, 1821. In its complete form it is not found in modern hymn-books. The following centos therefrom are in C. U.:-

1. Christicade me through no darker rooms. This is in the Cooke and Denton Hymnal, 1853, and several American collections.

3. Come, Lord, when grace has made me meet. In The Church Praise Book, N. Y., 1882.

3. Lord, it belongs not to my care. This is the most popular of the centos. It is in extensive use in all English-speaking countries.

4. Lord, it is not for us to care. This ranks in popularity next to No. 3.

5. Lord, may we feel no anxious care. This appeared in Hall's Mitre H. Bk., 1838, No. 248, and is found in a few modern collections.

6. Now it belongs not to my care. This also is somewhat limited in use.

When all these centos are taken into account the popularity and acceptableness of this hymn are very marked.

Myddleton, William, an eminent poet and grammarian, was the third s of Richard Myddleton, of Denbigh, an elder brother of Sir Hugh Myddleton. W. Myddleton was educated at Oxford, and served as a soldier in the armies of Elizabeth. He subsequently joined the navy. He was the means of saving the English fleet which was sent in 1591 to the Azores to intercept the Spanish galleons when Philip II. sent another fleet of ten times the English force to defeat the design.

Myddleton's first publication was Burddoniaeth; or, the Art of Welsh Poetry, London, 1593. His chief work is an elegant version of the Psalms in the higher kind of Welsh metres, or "Cynganedd." It was finished January 24, 1595, and pub. in London by T. Salisbury in 1603. A 2nd ed. was pub. by the Rev.

W. Davies, M.A., in 1827. It was not intended for public worship, and was never used in that form. [W. G. T.]

Mysterium mirabile, Hac luce nobis panditur. [Passiontide.] This is the hymn at Matins in the Office of the Most Holy Winding Sheet of our Lord Jesus Christ-an office added to the Roman Breviary since 1740. In the Roman Breviary, Bologus, 1827, Pars Verna, Supplement, it is assigned to Saturday after the 2nd S. in Lent, and marked as a Greater Double; the text of this hymn being given at p. 274. It is also found in later eds. of the Roman Breviary. Tr. as :-

This day the wendrous mystery. By E. Caswall. 1st pub. in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 80, in 7 st. of 4 l.; and again in his Hys. & Poems, 1873, p. 45. It is in several collections, including the Hymnary, 1872, &c., but usually in an abridged form.

Other trs. are :-

Nachtenhöfer, Caspar Friedrich, s. of Caspar Nachtenhöfer, advocate at Halle, was b. at Halle, March 5, 1624. He entered the University of Leipzig in 1647, as a student of theology (M.A. 1651). He was then for a few months tutor in the house of the Chancellor August Carpzov at Coburg. In the end of 1651 he was appointed diaconus, and in 1655 pastor, at Meeder near Coburg. He was then, in 1671, called to Coburg as pastor of the Holy Cross Church, and diaconus He afterwards of the St. Moritz Church. devoted himself wholly to St. Moritz, and d. as second senior in charge Nov. 23, 1685 (Wetzel ii. 203; Allg. Deutsche Biog. xxiii. 192, &c.) He pub. a metrical history of the Passion under the title of Erklärung des Leidens- und Sterbens-Geschichte Jesu Christi, at Coburg in 1685. Four hyme are ascribed to him, two of which have been tr. viz. :-

i. Diess ist die Nacht, da mir erschienen. Christmas.

i. Diess ist die Macht, da mir erschiemen. Christmas. This is in J. H. Hävecker's Kirchenecho, 1895, No. 406, in 5 st. of 8 l., marked as by M. C. F. N. It had previously appeared in the Coburg G. B., 1683 [Coburg Gymnastum Library], and is included in the Unv. L. S., 1861, No. 51. The tr. in C. U. is:—

This is the night wherein appeared. A good and full tr. by A. T. Russell, as No. 68 in his Ps. & Hys., 1851.

H. Se gehat du dann, mein Jesu, hin. Passiontide, This appears in the New-Vollständigers Margaräf. Engagedomysickes Gesuag-Buch, Culmbach and Rayrenth, 1868, p. 81, in 4 st. of 8 i., entitled "A beautiful hymn for Lent." It is also in the Coburg G., 1688, Appendix, p. 4, entitled "Christ's Death the sinner's Life." In both books to is without name of author. Westel ii. 206, ascribes it to Nachtenhöfer, and says it was written in 1651, while he was tutor at Coburg. It was written in 1651, while he was tutor at Coburg. It is a hymn on Christ's way to the Cross, and in the form of a dialogue between the soul and Christ. In order to complete the sense an additional stanz, was inserted between the original jii, and iv., and this is the form in the Une. L. S., 1881, No. 781. This new st., according to Wetzet H. 210, is by Magnus Daniel Omeis, Pressor at Altdorf (b. at Nurnberg, Sept. 6, 1646; d. at Altdorf Nov. 22, 1708), and was included in the Altdorf G. B. of 1690. The tr. in C. U. 18:—

80, Lord, Thou goest forth to die. A good tr. of st. i., v. by A. T. Russell, as No. 92 in his Ps. & Hyt., 1851.

Ναίων Ίωνας έν μυχοίς. [Έσωσε λαδν.]

Naked as from the earth we came. I. Watts. [Submission.] 1st pub. in his Hys. and Spiritual S., 1707 (ed. 1709, Bk. i., No. v.), on Job i. 21, in 5 st. of 4 l., and entitled "Submission to afflictive Providence." In this form its use is limited. In the 1745 Draft Translations and Paraphrases of the Church of Scotland it was included, unaltered; but in the authorized ed. of 1781, No. iii., it was given in a recast form, in which st. i.-iii. were Watte's rewritten, and st. iv. was new. This recast, which has been in use in the Church of Scotland for more than one hundred years. is claimed for W. Cameron (p. 200, i.) in the markings by his daughter of the 1781 Trs. & Paraphrases.

Nason, Elias, a Congregational minister, lecturer, and writer, was b. at Wrentham, Massachusetts, April 21, 1811, and was educated at Brown University, where he graduated in 1835. He was a teacher in Georgia for some time, and from 1840 to 1849 in Newburyport, Massachusetts. Subsequently he entered the Congregational ministry. He is the author of several biographies. In 1855 he pub. Songs for the School Room; in 1857 his Congregational Hymn Book; and in 1863, in conjunction with Dr. Edward Kirk, Songs for Social and Public Worship. His hymn, "Jesus only, when the morning" (Jesus always), was written at Natick, Massachusetts, about 1856, and was pub. with music by the author in the Boston Wellspring. [F. M. B.]

Nato canunt omnia. [Christmas.] This sequence is found in the Bodleian ws., No. 775, written about the year 1000 (f. 139 b); in an 11th cent. Winchester Sequentiary, now at Corpus Christi, Cambridge (us. No. 473); an 11th cent. ms. at Munich (Lat. 14083, f. 7), &c. In the Sarum, Hereford and York Missals it is placed in the Midnight Mass ("Missa in Gallicantu") of Christmas Day. The printed text is also found in Daniel ii. p. 56, and Kehrein, No. 9. Clichtovacus represents it as describing the joy of Christmas, announced by the angel to the shepherds, and sung by the angelic choir; and as inviting the whole buman race to rejoice in God made Man. 13. Nato nobis Salvatore. Adam of St. Nato noois Salvatore. Ausm of oc. Victor. [Christmas.] This fine sequence is given by L. Gautier in his Ocurres poetiques D'Adam de Saint-Victor, 1881, p. 237, among the "Proses attributed to Adam." According to Gautier it is not found in the Graduals of St. Victor or of St. Geneviève; but is in a 13th cent. Paris Gradual in the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris (No. 15,615), and other sources. He says the ascription is at least "very probable," and so prints the text in full. The text is also in Daniel, ii. p. 222; Neale's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1851, p. 64; Kehrein, No. 23; Wrangham, 1881, i. 34, &c. St. i., ll. 4-6, of this sequence:-

Neale, John Mason, D.D., was b. in Conduit Street, London, on Jan. 24, 1818. He inherited intellectual power on both sides: his father, the Rev. Cornelius Neale, having been Senior Wrangler, Second Chancellor's Medallist, and Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, and his mother being the daughter of John Mason Good, a man of considerable learning. Both father and mother are said to have been "very pronounced Evangelicals." The father died in 1823, and the boy's early training was entirely under the direction of his mother, his deep attachment for whom is shown by the fact that, not long before his death, he wrote of her as "a mother to whom I owe more than I can express." He was educated at Sherborne Grammar School, and was afterwards a private pupil, first of the Rev. William Russell, Rector of Shepperton, and then of Professor Challis. In 1836 he went up to Cambridge, where he gained a scholarship at Trinity College, and was considered the best man of his year. But he did not inherit his father's mathematical tastes, and had, in fact, the greatest antipathy to the study; and as the strange rule then prevailed that no one might aspire to Classical Honours unless his name had appeared in the Mathematical Tripos, he was forced to be content with an ordinary degree. This he took in 1840; had he been one year later, he might have taken a brilliant degree, for in 1841 the rule mentioned above was rese ind d. He gained, however, what distinctions he could, winning the Members' Prize, and being elected Fellow and Tutor of Downing College; while, as a graduate, he won the Seatonian Prize no fewer than eleven times.

At Cambridge he identified himself with the Church movement, which was spreading there in a quieter, but no less real, way than in the sister University. He became one of the founders of the Ecclesiological, or, as it was commonly called, the Cambridge Camden Society, in conjunction with Mr. E. J. Boyce, his future brother-in-law, and Mr. Benjamin Webb, afterwards the well-known Vicar of St. Andrew's, Wells Street, and editor of The Church Quarterly Review. In 1842 he married Miss Sarah Norman Webster, the daughter of an evangelical clergyman, and in 1843 he was presented to the small incumbency of Crawley in Sussex. Ill-health, however, prevented him from being instituted to the living. His lungs were found to be badly affected: and, as the only chance of saving his life, he was obliged to go to Madeira, where he stayed until the summer of 1844. In 1846 he was presented by Lord Delawarr to the Wardenship of Sackville College, East Grinstead. This can hurdly be considered as an ecclesisatical preferment, for both his predecessor and his successor were laymen. In fact the only coclesiastical preferment that ever was offered to him was the Provostship of St. Ninian's, Perth. This was an honourable office, for the Provostship is equivalent to a Deanery in England, but it was not a lucrative one, being worth only £100 a year. He was obliged to decline it, as the climate was thought too cold for his delicate health. In the quiet retreat of East Grinstead, therefore, Dr. Neale spent the remainder of his comparatively short life, dividing his time between literary work, which all tended, directly or indirectly, to the advancement of that great Church revival of which he was so able and courageous a champion, and the unremitting care of that sisterhood of which he was the founder. He commenced a sisterhood at Rotherfield on a very small scale, in conjunction with Miss S. A. Gream, daughter of the rector of the parish; but in 1856 he transferred it to East Grinstead, where, under the name of St. Margaret's, it has attained its present proportions. Various other institutions gradually arose in connection with this Sisterhood of St. Margaret's, viz., an Orphanage, a Middle Class School for girls, and a House at Aldershot for the reformation of fullen women. The blessing which the East Grinstead Sisters have been to thousands of the sick and suffering cannot here be told. But it must be mentioned that Dr. Neale met with many difficulties, and great opposition from the outside, which, on one occasion, if not more, culminated in actual violence. In 1857 he was attending the funeral of one of the Sisters at Lewes, when a report was spread that the deceased had been decoyed into St. Margaret's Home, persuaded to leave all her money to the sisterhood, and then purposely sent to a post in which she might catch the scarlet fever of which she died. To those who knew anything of the scrupulously delicate and honourable character of Dr. Neale, such a charge would seem absurd on the face of it; but mobs are not apt to reflect, and it was very easy to excite a mob against the unpopular practices and sentiments rife at East Grinstead; and Dr. Neale and some Sisters who were attending the funeral were attacked and roughly handled. He also found opponents in higher quarters; he was inhibited by the Bishop of the Diocese for fourtoen years, and the Aldershot House was obliged to be abandoned, after having done useful work for some years, in consequence of the prejudice of officials against the religious system pursued. Dr. Neale's character, however, was a happy mixture of gentleness and firmness; he had in the highest degree the courage of his convictions, which were remarkably definite and strong; while at the same time he maintained the greatest charity towards, and forbearance with, others who did not agree with him. It is not surprising, therefore, that he lived all opposition down; and that, while from first to last his relatious with the community at East Grinstead were of the happiest description, he was also, after a time, spared any molestation from without. The institution grew upon his hands, and he became anxious to provide it with a permanent and fitting home. His last public act was to lay the foundation of a new convent for the Sisters on St. Margaret's Day (July 20), 1865. He lived long enough to see the building progress, but not to see it completed. In the following spring his health, which had always been delicate, completely broke down, and after five months of acute suffering he passed away on the Feast of the Transfiguration (Aug. 6), 1866, to the bitter regret of the little community at East Grinstead and of numberless friends outside that circle. One trait of his singularly lovable character must not pass unnoticed. His charity, both in the popular and in the truer Christian sense of the word, was unbounded; he was liberal and almost lavish with his money, and his liberality extended to men of all creeds and opinions; while it is pleasing to record that his relations with his ecclesiastical superiors so much improved that he dedicated his volume of Seatonian Poems to the bishop of the diocese. If however success in life depended upon worldly advantages, Dr. Neale's life would have to be pronounced a failure; for, as his old friend, Dr. Littledale, justly complains, "he spent nearly half his life where he died, in the resilient of the second o in the position of warden of an obscure Almshouse on a salary of £27 a year." But, measured by a different standard, his short life assumes very different proportions. Not only did he win the love and gratitude of those with whom he was immediately connected, but he acquired a world-wide reputa-tion as a writer, and he lived to see that Church revival, to promote which was the great object of his whole career, already advancing to the position which it now occupies in the land of his birth.

Dr. Neale was an industrious and voluminous writer both in prose and verse; it is of course with the latter class of his writings that this sketch is chiefly concerned; but a few words must first be said about the former.

I.—Prose Writings.—His first compositions were in the form of contributions to The Ecclesiologist, and were written during his graduate career at Cambridge. Whilst he was in Madeira he began to write his Commentary on the Pealms, part of which was published in 1860. It was afterwards given to the world, partly written by him and partly by his friend, Dr. Littledale, in 4 vols., in 1874, under the title of A Commentary on the Pealme, from Primitive and Mediaval Writers. This work has been criticised as pushing the mysticul interpretation to an extravagant extent. But Dr. Neale has anticipated and disarmed such criticism by distinctly stating at the commencement that "not one single mystical interpretation throughout the present Commentary is original;" and surely such a collection has a special value as a wholesome correction of the materialistic and rationalistic tendencies of the age. His next great work, written at Sackville College, was The History of the Holy Eastern Church. The General Intro-duction was published in 1847; then followed part of the History itself, The Patriarchate of Alexandria, in 2 vols.; and after his death another fragment was published, The History of the Patriarchate of Antioch, to which was added, Constantius's Memoirs of the Patriarchs of Antioch, translated from the Greek, edited by the Rev. G. Williams, 1 vol. The whole fragment was published in 5 vols. (1847-1873). The work is spoken very highly of, and constantly referred to, by Dean Stanley in his Lectures on the History of the Eustern Church. Dr. Nesle was naturally in strong sympathy with the struggling Episcopal Church of Scotland, and to show that sympathy he published, in 1856, The Life and Times of Patrick Torry, D.D., Bishop of St. Andrews, &c., with an Appendix on the Scottish Liturgy. In the same direction was his History of the so-called Junsenist Church in Holland, 1858. Next followed Essays on Liturgiology and Church History, with an Appendix on Liturgical Quotations from the Isapostolical Fathers by the Rev. G. Moultrie, 1863, a 2nd edition of which, with an interesting Preface by Dr. Littledale, was published in 1867. It would be foreign to the purpose of this article to dwell on his other prose works, such as his published sermons, preached in Sackville College Chapel, his admirable little devotional work, Readings for the Aged, which was a selection from these sermons; the various works he edited, such as the Tetralogia Liturgica, the Sequentiz ex Missalibus Germanicis, Anglicis, Gallicis, aliisque Medii Ævi Collectæ; his edition of The Primitive Liturgies of S. Mark, S. Clement, S. James, S. Chrysostom and S. Basil, with a Preface by Dr. Littledale; his Translation of the same; his many stories from Church History, his Voices from the East, translated from the Russ, and his various articles contributed to the Ecclesiologist, The Christian Remembrancer, The Morning Chronicle, and The Churchman's Companion. It is time to pass on to that with which we are directly concerned.

II. Poetical Writings.—As a sacred poet, Dr. Neale may be regarded under two aspects, as an original writer and as a translator.

i. Original Writer.—Of his original poetry, the first specimen is Hymns for Children, pub. in 1842, which reached its 10th edition the year after his death. It consists of 33 short hymns, the first 19 for the different days of the week and different parts of the day, the last 14 for the different Church | This little volume was followed in 1844 by Hymns for the Young, which was intended to be a sequel to the former, its alternative title being A Second Series of Hymns for Children; but it is designed for an older class than the former, for young people rather than for children. The first 7 hymns are "for special occasions," as "on going to work," "leaving home," &c.; the next 8 on "Church Duties and Privileges," "Confirmation," "First Holy Communion," &c., the last 13 on "Church Festivels," which, oddly enough, include the Four Ember Seasous, Rogation Days, and the Sundays in Advent. In both these works the severe and rigid style, copied, no doubt, from the old Latin hymns, is very observable. Perhaps this has prevented them from being such popular favourites as they otherwise might have been; but they are quite free from faults into which a writer of hymns for children is apt to fall. They never degenerate into mere prose in rhyme; and in every case the purity as well as the simplicity of their diction is very remarkable. In the same year (1844) he also pub. Songs and Ballads for Manufacturers, which were written during his sojourn in Madeira, and the aim of which (he tells us) was "to set forth good and sound principles in metaphors which might, from their familiarity, come home to the hearts of those to whom they were addressed." They are wonderfully spirited both in matter and manner, and their freedom of style is as remarkable as the rigidity of the former works. They were followed eleven years later (1855) by a similar little work entitled Songs and Ballads for the People. This is of a more aggressive and controversial character than the previous ones, dealing boldly with such burning questions as "The Tectotallers," "Why don't you go to Meeting?" &c. Passing over the Seatonian Poems, most of which were of course written before those noticed above, we next come to the Hymns for the Sick, which is a fitting companion to the Readings for the Aged, and then to Sequences, Hymns, and other Ecclesiastical Verses, which was published just after the author's death (1866), and may be regarded as a sort of dying legacy to the world. In fact, the writer almost intimates as much in the preface, where he speaks of himself as "one who might soon be called to have done with earthly composition for ever." Many of the verses, indeed, were written earlier, "forty years ago," he says, which is evidently intended for twenty. The preface is dated "In the Octave of S. James, 1866," and within a fortnight, on the Feast of the Transfiguration, "the veil" (to use the touching words of his old friend, Dr. Littledale) "was withdrawn from before his eyes, and the song hushed on earth is now swelling the chorus of Paradise." Was it an accident that these verses dwell so much on death and the life beyond the grave? or did the coming event cast its shadow before? Not that there is any sadness of tone about them; quite the reverse. He contemplates death, but it is with the eye subjects connected with the Church Seasons, respecially with what are called the "Minor especially with what are called the "Minor Festivals:" but the first and last poems are on different subjects. The first, the "Prologue," is "in dear memory of John Keble, who departed on Maundy Thursday, 1866, and is a most touching tribute from one sacred poet to another whom he was about to follow within a few months to the "land that is very far off." The last is a poetical version of the legend of "the Seven Sleepers of Ephesus," and is, the writer thinks, "the first attempt to apply to primitive Christianity that which is, to his mind, the noblest of our measures."

That measure is the hexameter, and undoubtedly Dr. Neale employed it, as he did all his measures, with great skill and effect; but it may be doubted whether the English language, in which the quantities of syllables are not so clearly defined as in Latin and Greek, is quite adapted for that measure. Throughout this volume, Dr. Neale rises to a far higher strain than he had ever reached

ii. Translations.—It is in this species of composition that Dr. Neale's success was pre-eminent, one might almost say unique. He had all the qualifications of a good translator. He was not only an excellent classical scholar in the ordinary sense of the term, but he was also positively steeped in mediaeval Latin. An anecdote given in an appreciative notice by "G. M." [Moultrie] happily illustrates this:—

braies this:—
Dr. Neale "was invited by Mr. Keble and the Bishop of Salisbury to assist them with their new hymnal, and for this purpose he paid a visit to Hursley Parsonage."
On one occasion Mr. Keble "having to go to another room to flud some papers was detained a short time. On his return Dr. Neale said, "Why, Keble, I thought you told me that the "Christian Year" was entirely original.' 'Yes,' he answered, 'it certainly is,' 'Then how comes this ' and Dr. Neale placed before him the Latin of one of Keble's hymns. Keble professed himself utterly confounded. He protested that he had never seen this 'original,' no, not in all his life. After a few minutes Neale rolieved him by owning that he had just turned it hut Latin in his absence."

Again, Dr. Neale's exquisite ear for melody prevented him from spoiling the rhythm by too servile an imitation of the original; while the spiritedness which is a marked feature of all his poetry preserved that spring and dash which is so often wanting in a translation.

(i) Latin.—Dr. Neale's translations from the Latin include (1) Medizeral Hymns and Sequences (1851). He was the first to introduce to the English reader Sequences, that is, as he himself describes them, "hymns sung between the Epistle and Gospel in the Mass," or, as he explains more definitely, "hymns whose origin is to be looked for in the Alleluia of the Gradual sung between the Epistle and the Gospel." He was quite an enthusiast about this subject:—

"It is a magnificent thing," he says, "to pass along the far-sirecting vists of hymne, from the sublime self-containedness of S. Ambrose to the more fervid inspiration of S. Gregory, the exquisite typology of Venantius Fortunatus, the lovely painting of S. Peter lamiani, the crystal-like simplicity of S. Notker, the scriptural caim of Godescalcus, the subjective loveliness of S. Bernard, till all culminate in the full blaze of glory which surrounds Adam of S. Victor, the greatest of them all."

of a Christian from whom the sting of death has been removed. Most of the verses are on before him, it is no wonder that he spared no pains over it, or that he felt it his duty to adopt "the exact measure and rhyme of the original, at whatever inconvenience and cramping." That he succeeded in his difficult work, the verdict of the public has sufficiently proved. Of all the translations in the English language no one has ever been so popular as that of the Hora Novissima, in this volume, afterwards (1858) published separately, under the title of the Rhythm of Bernard de Morlaix, Monk of Cluny. Some original hymns may be as well known as "Jerusalem the Golden. "For thee, O dear, dear country," or "Brief life is here our portion." but it would be hard to find any translations which come near them for extensive use. A second edition of the Medieval Hymns, much improved, came out in 1863, and a third, "with very numerous additions and corrections," in 1867.

(2.) We next come to the Hymnal Noted, in which 94 out of the 105 hymns are the work of Dr. Neale. These are all translations from the Latin. The first part appeared in 1852, the second in 1854. Dr. Neale has himself given us an interesting account of his connection with this work :-

"Some," he writes, "of the happlest and most instructive hours of my life were spent in the Sub-Comstructive hours of my life were spent in the Sub-Committee of the Ecclesiological Society, appointed for the purpose of bringing out the Second Part of the Hymnal Noted. It was my business to lay before them the translations I had prepared, and their's to correct. The study which this required drew out the beauties of the original in a way which nothing else could have done, and the friendly rollisions of various minds elicited ideas which a single translator would in all probability have missed." Proface, Med. Hys.

(3.) The last volume of translations from the Latin published by Dr. Neale appeared in 1865, under the title of Hymns, chiefly Medizval, on the Joys and Glories of Paradise. It was intended to be a companion volume to the Rhythm of Bernard of Cluny. In this work the writer gives the general reader an opportunity of comparing the translation with the original by printing the two together in parallel pages. Two specimens may be given :-

These two stanzas have been chosen because they illustrate, the first the freer, the second the more literal method of translation. The second is especially noteworthy. It will be seen that, while the English runs quite emoothly and might easily be mistaken for a stanza in an original hymn, there is not one single ides, or even one single turn of phrase in the original, which is not faithfully reproduced in the translation; and the same is observable in many of his other translations. Dr. Neale included in this work two hymns (XVIII, and XIX.) which have a biographical interest. "They are," he says, "two choruses of a Tragedy, written by my father, on the Greek Model, and founded on the death of Saul," and they show that, if he did not inherit mathematical, he may have inherited poetical, tastes from his father.

Before quitting the subject of Dr. Neale's translations from the Latin, it is only fair to notice that while they have been almost universally accepted by the English Church, and some of them adopted by dissenting congregations, they called down upon the trans-lator a storm of indignation from an opposite quarter. The Roman Catholics accused him of deliberate deception because he took no pains to point out that he had either softened down or entirely ignored the Roman doctrines in those hymns. So far, they said, as the originals were concerned, these translations were deliberate misrepresentations. As however the translations were intended for the use of the Anglican Church, it was only to be expected that Neale should omit such hymns or portions of hymns as would be at variance with her doctrines and discipline.

(ii.) Greek.-Dr. Neale conferred even a greater boon upon the lovers of hymnology than by his translations from the Latin, when he published, in 1862, his Hymns of the Eastern Church. In his translations from the Latin he did what others had done before; but in his translations from the Greek he was opening entirely new ground. "It is," ho says in his preface to the first edition, "a most remarkable fact, and one which shows how very little interest has been hitherto felt in the Eastern Church, that these are literally, I believe, the only English versions of any part of the treasures of Oriental Hymnology." As early as 1853 he had printed a few of his versions in The Ecclesiastic, but it was not till the appearance of the complete volume that the interest of the general public was awakened in them. Then they became wonderfully popular. His trs. "Christian, dost thou see popular. His trs. "Christian, dost thou see them?" "The day is past and over," "Tis the day of Resurrection," and his Greek-inspired "Art thou weary," and "O happy band of pilgrims," are almost as great favourities as "Jerusalem the golden," and the first in his Hys. of the E. Church, "Fierce was the wild billow," deserves to be. Dr. Neale had a far more difficult task before him when he undertook these Greek hymns than he had with the Latin, and he appeals to the reader "not to forget the immense difficulty of an attempt so perfectly new as the present, when I have had no predecessors and therefore could have no master." That difficulty in comparison with the Latin cannot be better stated than in his own words:-

"Though the superior terseness and brevity of the Latin hymns renders a translation which shall represent those qualities a work of great labour, yet still the versifier has the help of the same metre; his version may be line for line; and there is a great analogy between the collects and the hymps, most helpful to the translator. Above all, we have examples enough of fermer translation by which we may take pattern. But in attempting a Greek canon, from the fact of its being in prose (metrical hymns are unknown) one is all steen. What measure shall we employ? Why this more than that? Might we attempt the rhythmical prose of the original, and design it to be chanted? Again, the great length of the canons renders them un-suitable for our churches as tokoles. Is it better simply to form centos of the more beautiful passages? or can separate odes, each necessarily imperfect, be employed as separate hymns?...My own belief is, that the best way to employ Greek hymnology for the uses of the English Church would be by centos."

That, in spite of these difficulties, Dr. Neale succeeded, is obvious. His Greek hymns are, indeed, adaptations rather than translations; but, besides their intrinsic beauty, they at any rate give some idea of what the Greek hymn-writers were. In this case, as in his translations from the Latin, he omitted what he held was not good from his Anglican point of view, e.g., the Doxologies to the B. V. M.

One point strikes us as very remarkable in these hymns, and indeed in all Dr. Neale's poetry, viz., its thorough manliness of tone. Considering what his surroundings were, one might have expected a feminine tone in his writings. Dr. Littledale, in his most vivid and interesting sketch of Dr. Neale's life, to which the present writer is largely indebted, has remarked the same with regard to his teaching: "Instead of committing the grave error of feminising his sermons and counsels [at St. Margaret's] because he had only women to deal with, he aimed at showing them the masculine side of Christianity also, to teach them its strength as well as its beauty."

In conclusion, it may be observed that no one had a higher opinion of the value of Dr. Neale's labours in the field of ancient and mediaeval hymnology than the one man whose competency to speak with authority on such a point Dr. Neale himself would assuredly have rated above that of all others. Over and over again Dr. Neale pays a tribute to the services rendered by Archbishop Trench in this domain; and the present sketch cannot more fitly close than with the testimony which Archbishop Trench has given of his sense of the services rendered by Dr. Neale. The last words of his preface to his Sacred Latin Poetry (ed. 1864) are :- "I will only, therefore, mention that by patient researches in almost all European lands, he [Dr. Neale] has brought to light a multitude of hymns un-known before: in a treatise on sequences, properly so-called, has for the first time explained their essential character; while to him the English reader owes versions of some of the best hymns, such as often successfully overcome the almost insuperable difficulties which many among them present to the translator." [J. H. O.]

Dr. Neale's original hymns and translations appeared in the following works, most of which are referred to in the preceding article, and all of which are grouped together here to facilitate reference:

(1) Hymns for Children. Intended chiefly for Village Schools. Lond., Masters, 1842. (1) Hymns for the Sick. Lond., Masters, 1843, improved ed. 1849. (3) Hymns for the Foung. A Second Series of Hymns for Children. Lond., Masters, 1844. (4) Songa and Ballads for Manufacturers. Lond., Masters, 1844.

(5) Hymns for Children. A Third Series. Lond., Mastern, 1846. (6) Medicarol Hymns and Sequences. Lond., Masters, 1851; 2nd ed. 1861; 3rd ed. 1862. (7) Hymnal Noted. B., Archpriest of the Patriarchal Ecumenical Throne. Lond., Hayes, 1882. Several of these translations and notes appeared in The Reciessastic and Theologian, in 1863. (12) Hymus, Chiefly Mediaccal, on the Joys and Glories of Paradise. Lond. Hayes, 1865. This work contains notes on the hymns, and the latin texts of the older amongst them. (13) Original Sequences, Hymns, and other Reclesiastical Verses, Lond., Hayes, 1866. This collection of Original verse was published posthumously by Dr. Littledale.

In addition to these works Dr. Neals published collections of Latin verse as :-

(1.) Hymni Eccleriae e Breviariis quibusdam et Missalibus Gallicanis, Germanis, Hispanis, Lustianis, desmpti. Oxford & Lond. J. H. Parker, 1861: and (2) Sequentiae e Missalibus Germanicis, Anglicis, Gallicis, aliisque Medii Aevi collectae. Oxford & 1.0nd. 1 H. Darbera 1887. J. H. Parker, 1852,

A few of his translations appeared from time to time in The Ecclesiastic; and a few of his original hymns in The Christian Remembrancer. In the collection compiled for use at St. Margaret's, East Grinstead, S. Margaret's Hymnal, Printed Privately for the use of the Community only, 1875, there are several of his hymns not traceable elsewhere.

Most of Dr. Neale's translations are annotated elsewhere in this Dictionary under their respective original first lines, as are also several of his original compositions. Those original hymns in C. U. which remain to be noted are :--

These 66 hymns now in C.U. by no means represent Dr. Neale's position in modern hymnody. Those tabulated in the Index of Authors and Translators must be added thereto. Even then, although the total is very large, it but feebly represents and emphasises the enormous influence which Dr. Neale has exercised over modern hymnody. [J. J.]

Neander, Joachim, was b. at Bremen, in 1650, as the eldest child of the marriage of Johann Joachim Neander and Catharina Knipping, which took place on Sept. 18, 1649, the father being then master of the Third Form in the Paedagogium at Bremen. The family name was originally Neumann (=Newmau) or Niemann, but the grandfather of the poet* had assumed the Greek form of the name, i.e. Neander. After passing through the Pacdagogium he entered himself as a student at the Gymnasium illustre (Academic Gymnasium) of Bremen in Oct. 1666. German student life in the 17th cent, was anything but refined, and Neander seems to have been as riotous and as fond of questionable pleasures as most of his fellows. In July 1670, Theodore Under-Eyek came to Bremen as pastor of St. Martin's Church, with the reputation of a Pietist and holder of conventicles. Not long after Neander, with two like-mindel comrades, went to service there one Sunday, in order to criticise and fin I matter of amusement. But the earnest words of Under-Eyek touched his heart; and this, with his subsequent conversations with Under-Eyck, proved the turning-point of his spiritual life. In the spring of 1671 he became tutor to five young men, mostly, if not all, sons of wealthy merchants at Frankfurt-am-Main, and accompanied them to the University of Heidelberg, where they seem to have remained till the autumn of 1673, and where Neander learned to know and love the beautics of Nature. The winter of 1673-74 he spent at Frankfurt with the friends of his pupils, and here he became acquainted with P. J. Spener (q.v.) and J. J. Schütz (q.v.) In the spring of 1674 he was appointed Rector of the Latin school at Düsseldorf (see further below). Finally, in 1679, he was invited to Bremen as un-ordained assistant to Under - Eyck at St. Martin's Church, and began his duties about the middle of July. The post was not inviting, and was regarded merely as a stepping stone to further preferment, the remuneration being a free house and 40 thalers a-year, and the Sunday duty being a service with sermon at the extraordinary hour of 5 A.M. Had be lived, Under-Eyek would doubtless have done his best to get him appointed to St. Stephen's Church, the pastorate of which became vacant in Sept., 1680. But meantime Neander himself fell into a decline, and d. at Bremen May 31, 1680 (Joachim Neander, sein Leben und seine Lieder. With a Portrait. By J. F. Iken, Bremen 1880; Allg. Deutsche Biog. xxiii, 327, &c.)

Neander was the first important hymn-writer of the German Reformed Church since the times of Blaurer and Zwick. His hymns appear to have been written mostly at Düsseldorf, after his lips had been sealed to any but official work. The true history of his unfortunate conflict has now been established from the original documents, and may be summarized thus.

The school at Dhaseldorf was entirely under the control of the uninister and elders of the Reformed Church there. The minister from about July, 1873, to about May, 1871, was Sylvester Lürsen (a native of Bremen, and only a few years older than Neander), a man of ability and cernestness, but fealous, and, in later times at least, quarrelsome. With him Neander at first worked harmoniously, frequently preaching in the church, assisting in the visitation of the sick, &c. But he soon introduced practices which inevitably brought on a conflict. He began to hold prayer-meetings of his own, without informing or consulting minister or elders; he began to abeent himself from Holy Communion, on the ground that he could not conscientiously communicate along with the unconverted, and also persuaded others to follow this example; and became less regular in his attendance at the ordinary services of the Church. Besides these causes of offence he drew out a new timetable for the school, made alterations on the school buildings, held examinations and appointed holdays without consulting any one. The result of all this was a Visitation of the school on Nov. 29, 1676, and then his suspension from school and pulpit on Feb. 3, 1677. On Feb. 17 he signed a full and definite declaration by which "without mental reservations" he bound nimself not to repeat any of the acts complained of; and thereupon was permitted to resume his duties as rector but not as assistant any of the nots complained of; and thereupon was permitted to resume his duties as rector but not as assistant and his salary was never actually stopped. The statements that he was banished from Dissediorf, and that he lived for months in a cave in the Neanderthal near Metimann are therefore without foundation. Still his having had to sign such a document was a humiliation which he must have feit keenly, and when, after Lürsen's departure, the second master of the Latin school was appointed permanent assteat an set of the Latin school was appointed permanent assteat an set Neander thus thrown back on himself, found consolation in communion with God and Nature, and in the composition of his hymns. Many were without doubt inspired by the scenery of the Neanderthal (a lovely valley with high rocky sides, between which flows the little river Düssel. See No. ii. below); and the tradition is probable enough that some of them were composed in a cave there. A number were circulated among his friends at Düsseldorf in Ms., but they were first collected and pub. after his removal to Bremen, and appeared as:—

Danek-Paalmen, Bremen, Hermann Braner, 1689; 2nd ed.
Bremen, 1683; 3rd ed. Bremen, 1687; 4th ed. Frankfurt, 1689. These editions contain 57 hymns. In the 5th ed., Frankfurt and Leipig, 1691, edited by G. C. Strattner, eight hymns were added as being slee by Neander. (The whole of these eds. are in the Royal Library, Berlin,
The so-called 3rd. ed. at Wesel, 1686, also found in Berlin, was evidently pirated.] Other editions rapidly followed till we find the complete set (i.e. 57 or 58) formally incorporated as part of a hymn-book, e.g. in the Marburg Reformed G. B., 1722, where the first part consists of Lobwasser's Psalter, the second of Neander's Bundestieder, and the third of other byunns.
Neander's Bundestieder, and the third of other byunns.

in the 5th ed., Solingen, 1769, has the tille Gott-pehelidgtes Neander's Similichen Bundes-Liedern, &c. In this way, especially in the district near Disselford and on the Ruhr, Neander's name was honoured and beloved long after it had passed out of memory at Bremen.

Many of Neander's hymns were speedily received into the Lutheran hymn-books, and are still in universal use. The finest are the jubilant hymns of Praise and Thanksgiving, such as his "Lobe den Herren" (p. 683, i.), and those setting forth the Majesty of God in His works of beauty and wonder in Nature, such as his "Himmel, Erde" (p. 525, ii.), and "Unbegreiflich Gut" (see No. ii. below); while some of his hymns of Penitence, such as his "Sieh hier bin ich, Ehrenkönig" (q.v.), his "Sieh hier bin ich, Ehrenkönig" (q.v.), are also very beautiful. Many are of a decidedly subjective cast, but for this the circumstances of their origin, and the fact that the author did not expect them to be used in public worship, will sufficiently account. Here and there there are doubtless harshnesses, and occasionally imagery which is rather jarring; and naturally enough the characteristic expressions and points of view of German 17th cent. Pietism and of the "Covenant Theology" are easily enough detected. But the glow and sweetness of his better hymns, their firm faith, originality, Scripturalness, variety and mastery of rhythmical forms, and genuine lyric character fully entitle them to the high place they hold.

Of the melodies in the original ed. of 1680 there are 19 by Neander himself, the best known being those to Nos. viii. and xi. below.

The hymns by Neander which have passed into English, and have not already been referred to, are:—

Hymns in English C. U.:

i. Maine Hoffnung stehet feste. Thanksgiving. Founded on 1 Tim. vi. 17. 1680 as above, p. 115, in 5 st. of 71., entitled "Grace after meat." In the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 712. Tr. as:—

All my hope is grounded surely. A full and good to. by Miss Winkworth, as No. 8 in her C. B. for England, 1863.

Another tr. is: "All my Hope is fix'd and grounded."
By J. C. Jacobi, 1720, p. 17 (1722, p. 40), repeated in his ed., 1732, p. 64, altered and beginning, "All my Hope is firmly grounded."

ii. Unbegreiflich Gut, wahrer Gott alleine. Summer. According to tradition this was written in the summer of 1677, in a cave in the Neander-thal near Düsseldorf, while Neander was in enforced absence from his school duties (Koch, vi. 20). It is founded on Ps. civ. 24. 1680, p. 165, in 12 st, of 6 lines, and entitled, "The Joys of Summer and Autumn in Field and Forest." The following note shows that the "Feeling for Nature" is not entirely modern.

"It is also a travelling hymn in summer or autumn for those who, on their way to Frankfurt on the Main, go up and down the river Rhine, where between Cologne and Mainz, mountains, cliffs, brooks and rocks are to be beheld with particular wonder; also in the district of Berg in the rocky region (the "Gestein' now called the Neanderthai), not far from Düsseldorf."

The hymn is in Knapp's Ev. L. S., 1850, No. 2163 (1865, No. 2231), omitting st. x. Tr. as:—

O Thou true God alone. A very good tr., omitting st. x., by Miss Winkworth, in her Christian Singers, 1869, p. 286. Her trs. of st. i., iii.-v. altered in metre, and beginning "Thou true God alone," are No. 53 in M. W. Stryker's Christian Chorals, 1885.

Hymns not in English C. U. :---

iii. Auf, auf, mein Geist, erhebe dich sum Himmel, Holy Communion. Founded on Ps. xxiii. 6. 1860, as above, p. 27, in 5 st., entitled, "The soul strengthened and refreshed. After the reception of the Holy Communion." In Porst's G. B., ed. 1856, No. 218. In the Moravlan London G. B., 1758, No. 697, it begins, "Der Hinmels-Vorschmack hab' ich auf der Erte," and in the Bridger G. B., 1778, No. 1178, it was further recast (by C. Gregor?) and altered to "hab' ich schon kinieden."

Tr. as, "Heav'n's foretaste I may here already have." By F. W. Foster & J. Miller, as No. 596, in the Moravian H. Bk., 1788. In the 1801 ed. (1849, No. 1003) it begins, "Since Jesus dy'd, my guilty soul to save."

"Since Jesus dy'd, my gullty soul to save."

iv. Der Tag ist hin, mein Jesu, bei mir bleibe.

Evening. Founded on St. Luke xxiv. 29. 1680, p. 15, in 6 st., entitled, "The Christian returning thanks at eventide." In the Univ. L. N., 1861, No. 512. The trs. are:
(1) "The Day is gone, come Jesu my Protector." In the Supp. to German Pastmody, ed. 1765, p. 72. (2)
"The day is past, Thou Saviour dear, still dwell my breast within." By H. J. Buckell, 1842, p. 82. (3)
"The day is gone, abide with me to-night." By E.
Massic, 1887, p. 192. (4) "The day is gone, abide with me, O Jesus." By R. Massle, in the Day of Rect, 1877.

v. Grosser Prophete, mein Herze begehret. Love to Christ. Founded on 1 Cor. xvl. 22. 1680, p. 191, in 4 st. Tr. as "Heavenly Prophet, my Heart is desiring." By J. C. Jacobi, 1729, p. 40.

vi. Jehovah ist mein Licht und Gnadenzonne. God's Perfections. Founded on 1 John i. 7. 1680, p. 19, in 4 st., entitled, "Walking in the Light." Pr. as, "Jehovah is my light, salvation showing." By Dr. H. Mills, 1845 (1856, p. 6).

vil. O allerhöchster Menschenhüter. Morning. A bymn of praise to our Aimighty Preserver. 1889, p. 11, 16 est., founded on Ps. lix. 16; and entitled, "The Christian singing at Morning." Tr. as, "O Thou Most Highest: Guardian of mankind." By Miss Winkworth, 1868, p. 72.

viii. Unser Herrscher, unser König. Thanksgiving. Founded on Acts viii. 2. 1680, p. 147, in 6 st., entitled, "The glorious Jehovah." In the Unv. L. S., 1861, No. 344. The well-known melody (in the S. P. C. K. Church Hys. called Munich) is also by Neander, and appeared along with the hymn. Tr. as, "Sovereign Ruier, King victorious," In the British Herald, Dec., 1865, p. 185, and Reid's Fraise Bk., 1872.

and Reid's Praise Bk., 1872.

ix. Wie fleucht dahin der Menschenseit. For the Dying. A powerful hymn on the vanity of the earthly, founded on Ps. xc. 12. 1680, p. 174, in 7 st., entitled, "He that counts his days." In the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 848. The trs. are: (1) "This life is like a flying dream" (beginning with st. ii. "Das Leben ist gleich wie ein Traum"). By Mrs. Findlater, in H. L. L., 1858, p. 24 (1884, p. 146). x. Wa call job hin? wer halfet wird Leat. Founded.

the grave." By E. Massie, 1867, p. 36.

x. We sell ich hin? wer helfet mir? Lent. Founded on Romans vii. 24. 1680, p. 51, in 5 st. entitled "The distressed on: longing for Redemption." In the Univ. L. S., 1851, No. 398. The Irs. are: (1) "For help, O whither shall I flee." By Dr. H. Mills, 1845 (1856, p. 145). (2) "How shall I get there? Who will sid?" By Miss Warner, 1858, p. 52.

Miss Warner, 1858, p. 52.

zl. Wunderbarer König. Thanksgiving. Founded on Ps. cl. 6. 1680, p. 159, in 4 st., entitled, "Inciting oneself to the Praise of God." In the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 787. The melody, a very fine one (called by Mr. Mercer Groningers), is also by Neander, and appeared along with the hymn. The irs. are: (1) "Wonderful Creator." By J. C. Jacobi, 1722, p. 88. (2) "Wonderful and blessed." By J. D. Burns in his Memoir and Remains, 1869, p. 230. (3) "Wondrous King Almighty." By N. L. Frothingham, 1870, p. 266.

Nearer, my God, to Thee, Hear Thou my prayer. Bp. W. W. How. [Nearness to God desired.] This was written for the 1864 ed. of Morrell & How's Ps. & Hys., where it was given as No. 154, a somewhat slightly different version of the same having appeared in Kennedy (1863) a short time before, as:—

" Nearer to Thee, my God, Still would I rise."

The 1864 text has been repeated in several collections in G. Britsin and America. In the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871, it begins:—

"Nearer, O God, to Thee! Hear Thou my prayer," and is accompanied in the folio ed., 1881, with the note:—

"A paraphrase of Mrs. Adams's hymn, expressing more definitely Christian faith, and better adapted for congregational worship."

Although in somewhat extensive use, it is the least musical of Bp. How's bymus. [J. J.] Nearer, my God, to Thee, Nearer to Thee! Sarah Adams, see Flower. [Nearness to God desired.] Contributed to W. J. Fox's Hymns and Anthems, 1841, No. lxxxv., as follows:—

"Nearer, my God, to thee, Nearer to thee! E'en though it be a cross That raiseth me: Still all my song would be, Nearer, my God, to thee— Nearer to thee!

"Though like the wanderer,
The sun gone down,
Darkness be over me,
My rest a stone;
Yet in my dreams I'd be,
Nearer, my God, to theeNearer to thee.

"There let the way appear, Steps unto heaven; All that thou send'st to me In mercy given: Angels to beckon me Nearer, my God, to thee— Nearer to thee!

"Then with my waking thoughts, Bright with thy praise, Out of my stony griefs, Bethet I'll raise: So by my wees to be Nearer, my God, to thee--Nearer to thee!

"Or if on joyful wing Cleaving the sky, Sun, moon, and stars forgot, Upwards I fly: Still all my song shall be, Nearer, my God, to thee— Nearer to thee!"

The use of this hymn, generally with very slight alterations, but often with the omission of the last stanza, is very considerable in all English-speaking countries. It has also been translated into many European and other languages.

This bymn is a curious illustration of the colouring which is given to a hymn by the antecedents of its author. In the case of Addison's "When all Thy mercies, O my God," and many other hymns of a like kind, no attempt has ever been made to alter its distinctive character as a hymn to the FATMER alone. With Mrs. Adams, being an Unitarian, the treatment is changed, notwithstanding the redeeming lines,

"E'en though it be a Cross That raiseth me:"

in the opening stanza. The following alterations and additions have been made to bring the hymn more in harmony with the views of the editors by whom it has been adopted.

The first change with which we are acquainted was the addition of the following stanza:—

"Christ alone beareth me
Where Thou dost shine;
Joint heir He maketh me
Of the Divine:
In Christ my soul shall be,
Nearest, my God, to Thee—
Nearest to Thee!"

This is by the Rev. A. T. Russell, and was given in his Ps. & Hys., 1851, from whence it passed into the Bap. Ps. & Hys., 1858, Snepp. 1872, and others.

2. The second change and addition are :-

"Though by Thy bitter Cross
We raised be."

and the dexology : "Glory, O God, to Thee; Glory to Thee, Almighty Trinity In Unity Glorious Mystery, Through all Eternity Glory to Thee!

This addition is given in Skinner's Daily Service Hymnal, 1864, No. 280.

3. Another change in the same direction is :-

"And when on joyful wing,
Cleaving the sky,
Unto the Light of Lights,
Upward I fly." (St. v. ll. 1-4.)

by Dr. Monsell in his Parish Hymnal, 1873. 4. In Kennedy, 1863, the following is substituted for st. v.:--

" And when my Lord sgain Glorious shall come, Mine be a dwelling-place In Thy bright home, There evermore to be Nearer to Thee, my God! Nearer to Thee!"

This same stanza is repeated in the Hys. for the Church Catholic, 1882, with line 6 as "Nearer my God! to Thee."

5. In Bp. Bickersteth's note to this hymn in his annotated ed. of the H. Comp., 1876, No. 312, he says:

NO. 512, He says:—

"The Editor shrunk from appending a closing verse of his own to a hymn so generally esteemed complete as this, or he would have suggested the following:—

"There in my Father's home,
Safe and at rest,
There in my Saviour's love
Perfectly blest;
Assa After and to be

Age after age to be Nearer, my God to Thee, Nearer to Thee."

In addition to these alterations and changes, it has been entirely rewritten, by Bp. How, as "Nearer, my God to Thee, Hear Thou my prayer." See above. G. J. Stevenson's note in his Meth. H. Bk. Notes, 1883, p. 497, is worthy of attention as dealing with the spiritual uses of this hymn.

Nec quisquam oculis vidit. [Eternal Life.] This is from a poem 1st pub. by Mone, Nos. 303–305, from a 15th cent. MS. at Karlsruhe (see Jerusalem luminosa, p. 579, ii.). It is the third and concluding part, consists of 84 lines, and is entitled, "On the glory of the Heavenly Jerusalem as concerning the endowments of the glorifled soul." In Pastor O.

A. Spitzen's Natesing op min Thomas à Kempis, Utrecht, 1881, p. 72, it is given as by Thomas, and as a second part; the first part beginning "Jerusalem luminosa" [in Spitzen gloriosa.] (see p. 579, ii.). Both parts are cited as in a Ms. circa 1480 which belonged to the Brethren of the Common Life at Zwolle, and is now in the library of the Emmanuelshuizen there. The only tr. is "Eye hath never seen the glory," by J. M. Neale, in his Hys., chiefly Medizval, on the Joys and Glaries of Paradise, 1865, p. 62; omitting ll. 13-24, 48-66, 79-84. [J. M.]

Needham, John, was the son of John Needham, Baptist Minister, of Hitchin, Herts, but the date of his birth is unknown. He would doubtless be educated by his father, who was a tutor and in repute as a learned man. In 1750 Needham became co-pastor with John Beddome at the Baptist meeting-house in the Pithay, Bristol; but, two years later, Beddomo having retired through age, a violent controversy arose in the Church with regard to a continuance of the plan of co-pastorship. As the result, Needham and a number of his friends removed to a Baptist meeting-house in Callowhill Street, where a Mr. Foot was paster. For a time the two societies used the same build-ing at different hours, but in 1755 they were united, with Mr. Needham and Mr. Foot as co-pastors. It is known that up to 1774 this arrangement continued, and it is also known that in 1787, both Mr. Needham and Mr. Foot having died, the Callowhill Street Church became extinct, but which of the two pastors was the survivor is not known. The date of Needham's death is unknown. It was probably circa 1786. In 1768 he pub. Hymns Devotional and Moral on various Subjects, collected chiefly from the Holy Scriptures, &c., Bristol, S. Farley, 1768. These hymns are 263 in all, and whilst none of them possess great excellence, yet several are of a pleasing and useful character. During the past 120 years several have appeared in Nonconformist hymnbooks, and specially in those of the Baptists. Of these the following are still in C. U.:-

1. Ashamed of Christ! my soul disdains. askamed of Christ.

2. Awake, my tongue, thy tribute bring. The Divine Perfections.

Neele, Henry, s. of a map and heraldic engraver in the Strand, London, was b. in London, Jan. 29, 1798. He was educated for the Law, and practised as a solicitor. In 1817 he published a volume of Poems, and in 1823 a volume of Dramatic and Miscellaneous Poetry. These were followed by contributions to several magazines; the delivery of Lectures on English Poetry at the Russell, and again at the Western Literary Institution, in 1827; and the publication of his largest work, The Romance of English History, 1827. His mind gave way under the pressure of work, and he died by his own hand, Feb. 7, 1828. His Lectures on English Poetry, with Miscellaneous Tales and Poems, were pub. posthumously, in 1829. In this work the following "Hymns for Children" (p. 330) are found :-

1. O Thou! Who sittest enthroned on high. Child's Prayer.
2. O'Thou! Who makest the sun to shine. Child's Prager.

3. God of mercy, throned on high. Child's Prayer.
Usually given with the same first line but altered as in E. Bickersteth's Christian Praimody, 1833. No. 439

4. Remember Him, for He is great. Remember thy Creator.

Of these hymns No. 3 is widely used. [J. J.]

Nehring, Johann Christian, s. of J. C. Nehring, lawyer in Gotha, was b. at Gotha, Dec. 29, 1671. He studied at first medicine and afterwards theology at the University of Halle. In 1700 he became rector of the school at Essen, and, in 1703, inspector of the foundation scholars in the Orphanage at Halle. He was then, in 1706, appointed pastor of Neuendorf (or Naundorf) on the Petersberg, near Halle, and in the end of 1715 pastor at Morl, near Halle, on the Bernburg road. He d. at Morl, April 29, 1736 (Alig. Deutsche Biog. xxiii. 394, &c.) Fivo hymns by Nehring are in Freylinghausen's G. B., 1704. A sixth is noted under Müller, M., p. 776, ii.

Nelson, David, M.D., s. of Henry Nelson, was b. near Jonesborough, East Tenessee, Sept. 24, 1793. He graduated at Washington Colege, Virginia, in 1810, and took his M.D. degree at Philadelphia in 1812. He acted for some time as a surgeon in the war against Great Britain. During that time he became an infidel, but returning to the faith, he, in 1823, resigned medicine and took up theology, and subsequently became a Presbyterian Minister. He held several appointments, and founded two manual-labour colleges, one at Greenfields, and the second near Quincy, Illinois. He d. Oct. 17, 1844. His hymn, "My days are gliding swiftly by" (Death Anticipated), was written in 1835, to be sung to the tune of "Lord Uilin's Daughter." It is exceedingly popular.

Nelson, Horatio, 3rd Earl Nelson, s. of Mr. Thomas Bolton, of Burnham, Norfolk (nephew of the celebrated Admiral Viscount Nelson, whose name he assumed on succeeding to the title as 2nd Earl); was b. Aug. 7, 1823, and educated at Eton, and at Trinity College, Cambridge. He succeeded to the title Nov. 1, 1835. In 1857 he edited the Salisbury Hymn-Book. In this work he was assisted by J. Keble, who re-wrote some of the older hymns and translated others from the This collection was remodelled and published as the Sarum Hymnal in 1868. In the preparation of this work Earl Nelson was assisted by the Revs. J. R. Woodford (afterwards Bishop of Eiy) and E. A. Dayman. In 1864 he pub. his Hymn for Saint's Day, and other Hymns. In this appeared the hymn by which he is most widely known, "From all Thy saints in warfare, for all Thy saints at rest" (p. 398, ii.). He has also pub. A Form of Family Prayer, with Special Offices for the Seasons, 1852; and A Calendar of Lessons for Every Day in the Year, 1857. He is also an active member of the Home Reunion Society, and writes extensively on the subject. [J. J.]

Netfleton, Asahel, D.D., a well-known | H. Bk., 1848 |
Connecticut evangelist, was b. at North | Killingworth, Connecticut, April 21, 1783, and chucated at Yale College, graduating in 1809. of st. i., ii., v. lu 1811 he was licenced to preach, receiving | $\frac{1}{2}$ Hys., 1853.

ordination in 1817. He never settled as a pastor with any congregation, but preached in Western Massachusetts, Connecticut, and New York; in Virginis, 1827–28; and also in Great Britain in 1831. He dued in 1843. His Memoirs, Sermons and Remains were pub. in 1844. Dr. Hatfield ascribes to him a hymn:—

"Come, Holy Ghost, my soul inspire—
This one great gift impart;"
apparently on no other ground than that it appeared anonymously (as did many others) in his Village Hymns, in 1824, and has been traced no further. Nettleton's hymnological work centred in the compiling of his Village Hymns, from which more hymns of the older American writers have passed into English collections than from any other source. He knew and could appreciate a good hymn, but it is doubtful if he ever did or ever could have written one. [F. M. B.]

Neumann, Caspar, s. of Martin Neumann, city tax-collector at Breslau, was b. at Breslau, Sept. 14, 1648. He entered the University of Jena in Sept. 1667, graduated M.A. in August 1670, and was for some time one of the University lecturers. On Nov. 30, 1673, he was ordained at the request of Duke Ernst of Gotha as travelling chaplain to his son, Prince Christian, whom he accompanied through Western Germany, Switzerland, Northern Italy, and Southern France; returning to Gotha in 1675. In 1676 he became court preacher at Altenburg, but in Dec. 1678 was appointed diaconus of the St. Mary Magdalene Church at Breslau, and pastor there in 1689. Finally, in Feb. 1697 he became pastor of St. Elizabeth's at Breslau, inspector of the churches and schools of the district, and first professor of theology in the two Gymnasia at Breslau. He d. at Breslau, Jan. 27, 1715 (S. J. Ehrhardt's Presbyterologie Schlesiens i. 211; Allg. Deutsche Biog. xxiii. 532, &c.). Neumann was a celebrated preacher, and edited a well-known prayer-book, entitled Kern aller Gebete (Breslau, 1680; complete ed. Breslau, 1697) which passed through many editions. He wrote over thirty hymns, simple, heartfelt and useful, which became very popular in Silesia, and almost all of which passed into Burg's G. B., Breslau, 1746, and later eds. They mostly appeared, with his initials, in the 9th ed., N.D., but about 1700, of the Breslau Vollständige Kirchen- und Haus-Music. Those which have been tr. are .-

i. Adam hat im Paradies. Christmas. 1700, as above, p. 71, in 8 st. In the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 23. Tr. as "Adam did, in Paradise." By Miss Manington, 1864, p. 21.

v. Nun bright die finstre Nacht herein. Sunday Evening. 1700 as above, p. 962, in 11 st. In the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 1177. Tr. as "Soon night the world in gloom will steep." By Miss Manington, 1863, p. 152. [J. M.]

Neumann, Gottfried, was b. at Hohenheida, near Leipzig, apparently Nov. 30, 1686. He studied at the University of Leipzig, and thereafter was licensed as a candidate of theology (i.e. general preacher). In 1710 he joined the staff of the Halle Orphanage, but was expelled from Halle as a Separatist, and went to Hanau. He was then for a number of years receiver of rents (Fruchtschreiber) at Bergheim in Wetteravia, Hesse, to the Count Isenburg Meerholz, living later at Himbach, and at Marienborn (1736-39). Himbach was the headquarters of Johann Friedrich Rock, one of the principal leaders of the sect of the "Inspired," and between 1714 and 1734 Noumann generally speaking belonged to this sect. During the visits which Count N. L. von Zinzendorf paid to Wetteravia, about 1730, Neumann felt drawn to the Moravian Brethren. He joined the Moravian Community at Marienborn, Hesse, in 1738. In 1747 he was living at Meerholz, where he remained till his death. In the Weekly Reports of the Unitys-Elders-Conference in Barby, No. xix. for May 9-15, 1779, is the entry, "7. We are advised from Wetteravia, that the agod brother Gottfried Neumann at Meerholz has recently entered into his rest." Neumann therefore probably d. in the end of April or beginning of May, 1779 (Allg. Deutsche Biog. xxiii. 519; Ms. from Disconus J. T. Müller, Herrnhut, &c.) Three of his hymns, all written in 1736, are in the Brüder G. B., 1778. One has passed into English, viz. :-

i. Ei, wie so sellg schiäfest dn. Burial. Written on the death of Christian Ludwig, s. of Count N. L. von Zinzendorf. This child died in his third year, at Ronneburg, Aug. 31, 1736. In the first printed copy of Neumann's hymn (preserved in the Archives at Herrnhut, along with the original Ms., which is dated Sept. 3, 1736) is the footnote:—

"In the evening of the night, during which the young Count Zinzendorf blessedly fell asleep, en opening the bymn-book (the Herrnhut G. B., 1735) with reference to that noble child, I chanced upon the bymn, 'El, wie so selig schlafest du,' [p. 322, ii.] which I referred to bis death."

When Neumann's hymn was included as No. 1284 in Appendix viii., circa 1739, to the Herrnhut G. B., 1735, it appears in 5 st. of 4 l., beginning "Ei, wie so sanft verschläfest du." In the Brüder G. B., 1778, No. 1728, it begins: "Ei, wie so sanft entschläfest du," and in Bunsen's Versuch, 1833, is further altered to "Ach wie so sanft." The trs. in C. U. are:—

1. Blest soul, how sweetly dost thou rest. A tr. of st. i., ii., and of the anonymous 17th cent. st. described under "Ei, wie so selig" (p. 822, ii.), as No. 961 in the Moravian H. Bh., 1801 (1886, No. 1259), and in J. A. Latrobe's Coll., 1841.

3. At length releas'd from many wees. A full and good tr. by Miss Cox, in her Sucred Hys. from the German, 1841, p. 75. Included in full in the Pennsylvania Luth. Ch. Bk., 1868; and, abridged, in Alford's Ps. & Hys., 1844, his Year of Praise, 1867, and others.

Another tr. is: "Sweet slumbers now thine eyelids close." By Lady E. Fortescue, 1843, p. 24. [J. M.]

Neumark, Georg, s. of Michael Neumark, clothier at Langenealza, in Thuringia (after 1623 at Müllhausen in Thuringia), was b. at Langensalza, March 16, 1621; and educated at the Gymnasium at Schleusingen, and at the Gymnasium at Gotha. He received his certificate of dimission from the latter in Sept. 1641 (not 1640). He left Gotha in the automn of 1641 along with a number of merchants who were going to the Michaelmas Fair at Leipzig. He then joined a similar party who were going from Leipzig to Lübeck; his intention being to proceed to Königsberg and matriculate at the University there. After passing through Magdeburg they were plundered by a band of highwaymen on the Gardelegen Heath, who robbed Neumark of all he had with him, save his prayer-book and a little money sewed up in the clothes he was wearing. He returned to Magdeburg, but could obtain no employment there, nor in Lüneburg, nor in Winsen, nor in Hamburg, to which in succession the friends he made passed him on. In the beginning of December he went to Kiel, where he found a friend in the person of Nicolaus Becker, a native of Thuringia, and then chief paster at Kiel. Day after day passed by without an opening, till about the end of the month the tutor in the family of the Judge Stephan Henning fell into disgrace and took sudden flight from Kiel. By Becker's recommendation Neumark received the vacant position, and this sudden end of his anxieties was the occasion of the writing of his hymn as noted below. In Henning's house the time passed happily till he had saved enough to proceed to Königsberg, where he matriculated June 21, 1643, as a student of law. He remained five years, studying also poetry under Dach (p. 276, ii.), and maintaining himself as a family tutor. During this time (in 1646) he again lost all his property, and this time by fire. In 1648 he left Königsberg, was for a short time at Warsaw, and spent 1649-50 at Thorn. He was then in Danzig, and in Sept. 1651 we find him in Hamburg. In the end of 1651 he returned to Thuringia, and brought himself under the notice of Duke Withelm II. of Sachse-

Weimar, the chief or president of the Fruitbearing Society, the principal German literary union of the 17th cent. The Duke, appa-rently in 1652, appointed him court poet, librarian and registrar of the administration at Weimar; and finally secretary of the Ducal Archives. In Sept. 1653 he was admitted as a member of the Fruit-bearing Society, of which he became secretary in 1656, and of which he wrote a history (Der New-Sprossende Teutsche Palmbaum, Nürnberg and Weimar, 1668); and, in 1679, became also a member of the Pegnitz Order (see p. 143, L). In 1681 he became blind, but was permitted to retain his emoluments till his death, at Weimar, July 18, 1681. [K. Goedeke's Grundriss, vol. iii., 1887, p. 74; Allg. Deutsche Biog. xxiii. 539; Wei-marisches Jahrbuch, vol. iii., 1855, p. 176, &c. The dates given by the different authorities vary exceedingly, and are quite irreconcilable. In the registers at Schleusingen Neumark is last mentioned in 1636, and then as in the Third Form. Dr. von Bamberg, director of the Gymnasium at Gotha, informs me that Neumark's name appears in the matriculation book there under January 31, 1641; and as one of the "newly entered" scholars.]

A long liat of Neumark's poetical works is given by Goedeke. A large proportion of his secular poems are pastorals, or else occasional poems written to order at Weimar; and in all there is little freshness, or happiness in expression, or glow of feeling. As a musician, and as a hymn-writer, be is of more importance. His hymns appeared in his (1) Poetisch- und Mutikalisches Lustwildchen, Hamburg, 1652; the enlarged ed., entitled (2) Fortgepfantster Musikalisch- Poetischer Lustwild. Jena, 1857; and (3) Unterschiedliche, so wol gottseliger Andacht; als auch su christischen Tugenden aufmunternde Lieder, Weimar, 1875. Of the 34 hymns in these three works a few are found in the German hymnbooks of the 17th cent., and three or four still survive. The best of Neumark's hymns are those of Trust in God, and patient waiting for His belp under trial and suffering; and one of these may be fairly called classical and imperiebable. It is:—

Wer nur den lieben Gott lässt walten. Trust in God. 1st pub. in his Fortgepfantzter musikatisch-poetischer Lustwald, Jeun, 1657, p. 26, in 7 st. of 6 l., entitled "A hymn of consolation. That God will care for and preserve His own in His own time. After the saying 'Cast thy burden upon the Lord, and He shall sustain thee' (Ps. Iv. 22). This, his finest hymn, was written in 1641, at Kiel, when after unsuccessful attempts to procure employment he became a tutor in the family of the judge Stephan Henning. Of this appointment Neumark, in his Thränendes Haus-Kreutz, Weimar, 1681, speaks thus:—

"Which good fortune coming suddenly, and as if fallen from heaven, greatly rejoiced me, and on that very day I composed to the honour of my beloved Lord the here and there well-known hymn 'Wer nur den lieben Got lässt walten'; and had certainly cause enough to thank the Divine compassion for such unlocked for grace shown to me," &c.

As the date of its composition is thus December, 1641, or at latest Jan. 1642, it is certainly strange that it was not pub. in his Lustwäldchen, Hamburg, 1652. In that volume he does give, at p. 32, a piece entitled, "a hymn of consolation, when, in 1646, through a dreadful fire I came to my last farthing." The apocryphal story, according to which the hymn was written at Hamburg, about 1653 (see Miller's Singers and Songs, 1869, p. 91), has not been traced earlier than 1744. The hymn speedily became popular, and passed into hymn-books all over Germany (Leipzig Vorrath, 1673, No. 1169), and still holds its place as in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 73.

Lauxmann, in Koch, vili. 336-390, relates that it was the favourite hymn of Magdalems Sibylis (d. 1637), wife of the Elector Johann Georg II. of Saxony; was eughy bis command, at the funeral, in 1740, of King Friedrich Wilhelm I. of Prussia; was sung, or rather played, by the first band of missionaries from Herrmannsburg as they set sati from Brunshausen on the Elbe (near Stade) on Oct. 28, 1853, &c.

The beautiful melody by Neumark was probably composed in 1641 along with the hymn, and was pub. with it in 1657. On it J. S. Bach composed a cantata. It is well known in England through its use by Mendelssohn in his St. Paul ("To Thee, O Lord, I yield my spirit"), and from its introduction into H. A. & M. (as Bremen), and many other collections.

Translations in C. U. :-

Neumeister, Erdmann, s. of Johann Neumeister, schoolmaster, organist, &c., at Uechteritz, near Weissenfels, was b. at Uechteritz, May 12, 1671. He entered the University of Leipzig in 1689, graduated M.A. in 1695, and was then for some time University lecturer. In June 1697 he was appointed assistant pastor at Bibra, and in 1698 pastor there, and assistant superintendent of the Eckartsberg district. He was then, in 1704, called by Duke Johann Georg, to Weissenfels as tutor to his only daughter, and assistant court preacher, and shortly afterwards court preacher. After the death of this princess, Neumeister was invited by the Duke's sister (she had married Count Erdmann II. von Promeitz) to Scrau, where on New Year's Day, 1706, he entered on the offices of senior court-preacher, consistorial rath, and superintendent. Finally, in 1715, he accepted the appointment of Pastor of St. James's Church at Hamburg, entering on his duties there Sept. 29, 1715. He d. at Hamburg, Aug. 18 (not 28), 1756 (Bode, p. 120; Allg. Deutsche Biog. xxiii. 543, &c.).

Neumeister was well known in his day as an earnest and eloquent preacher, as a vehement upholder of High Lutheranism, and as a keen controversialist against the Pietists and the Moraviana by means of the pulpit as well as the press. His underlying motive was doubtless to preserve the simplicity of the faith from the subjective novelties of the period. He was the author of one of the earliest historico-critical works on German Poetry (1895); and of many Cantatas for use in church, of which form of service be may be regarded as the origi-nator. He had begun to write hymns during his student nator. He had begun to write hymns during his student days, and in later years their composition was a favourite Sunday employment. He takes high rank among the German hymn-writers of the 18th cent., not only for the number of his productions (over 550), but also for their abiding value. A number are founded on well-known hymns of the 18th and 17th cent.; and many of his later productions are inferior. Of his earlier efforts must productions are interior. On his earner emoras many soon took and still hold their place as standard German hymns; and deservedly so, for their simple, musical style, scripturalness, poetic fervour, depth of faith and Christian experience, and for their clear-cut sayings which have almost passed into proverbial use.

sayings which have almost passed into proverbial use. They appeared principally in the following works:—

1. Der Rugens zum Gnudenttuble tens Christo. This was a devotional manual of preparation for Holy Communion, with interspersed hymns. The lated appeared at Weissenfels in 1706, the 2nd 1707, 3rd 1712, 4th 1716. The earliest ed. of which precise details are available is the 5th ed. 1717, from which Weissel, il. 231, quotes the first lines of all the 77 hymns (the page references to the earlier eds. given by Fischer appear to be conjectural); and the earliest ed. available for collation was the 7th ed. 1724 (Güttingen University Lib.]. In the later eds. many hymns are repeated from his other works.

2. Fünfacks Kirchen-Andochten, Leipig, 1716 [Wernigerode Library], a collected ed. of his Cantatas (Wernigerode Library), a collected ed. of his Cantatas (Wernigerode Library), as the 1704 ed. of his Gentilche (Wernigerode Library has the 1704 ed. of his Generations Canadam), and similar productions. A second set (Portgetette) appeared at Hamburg in 1726 [Hamburg Town Library]; and a third set (Dritter Theil) at Hamburg in 1752 [Hamburg Town Library].

3. Evangelizeder Nackklang, Hamburg, 1718 [Hamburg Town Library], with 86 hymnus on the Gospels for Sundays and Festivals, originally written to form conclusions to his sermons. A second set of 86 appeared to the second set of 86 appeared in the second seco as the Anderer Theil at Hamburg, 1729 [Hamburg Town Library].

Those of Neumeister's hymns which have passed into English are :--

i. Gott verlässt die Beinen nicht, Ei so fahret hin ihr Sorgen. Cross and Consolation. In his Evang. Nachklang, 1718, No. 71, p. 149, in 5 st. of 8 l., appointed for the 25th S. after Trinity. In Burg's G. B., Breslau, 1746, it appears in two forms. No. 127 is the original with alterations, and arranged in 11 st. of 4 l., with the refrain "Gott verlässt die Seinen nicht." No. 128 is a form in 3 st. of 6 l., rewritten to the melody, "Jesus meine Zuversicht" (p. 708, ii.), and beginning with st. iii. l. 5, of the original, viz.
"Gott verlässt die Seinen nicht, Nach dem Seufzen, nach dem Weinen." This second form is noted at p. 444, ii.

ii. Jeen, grosser Wunderstern. Epiphany. In his Kirchen-Andachten, 1716, p. 646, in 4 st. of 6 l., with the motto, > Auf ihr Christen insgemein! Stellt euch mit den Weisen ein. Jeaus muss geschenket sein."

It is a hymn on the Gifts of the Magi, and the spiritual sense in which we can offer the same the Gold of Faith, the Frankincense of Prayer, the Myrrh of Penitence. In the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863. No. 208. Tr. as :--

1. Jesus! great and wondrons star. A good and full tr. by E. Cronenwett, as No. 52 in the Ohio Luth. Hyl., 1880.

ill. Jesus nimmt die Bunder an! Baget doch dies Trestwort Allen. Lent. The best hymn of its author. First pub. in his Evang. Nachklang, 1718, No. 47, p. 96, in 8 st. of 6 l., founded on the Gospel for the 3rd S. after Trinity (St. Luke xv. 1-7), and also suggested by St. Matt. xi. 28, and Isaiah i. 18. It has come into very extensive German use, especially at Mission services at home and abroad. In the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 110. The trs. are:-

1. This man sinners doth receive. In full by Dr. H. Mills, in his Horae Germanicae, 1845 (1856, p. 73). His trs. of st. i., ii., iv., v. are included in the Amer. Luth. Gen. Synod's C.ll., 1850-52, No. 844.

2. Jesus sinners doth receive! Spread the word of consolation. A good fr. of st. i., iii.-v., by A. T. Russell, as No. 47 in the Dalston Hospital H. Bh., 1848, repeated in his own Ps. & Hys., 1851.

3. Jesus is the sinner's Friend. A good and full tr. by Miss Dunn in her Hys. from the German, 1857, p. 82. Her trs. of st. i., ii., iv. are No. 46 in Dr. Pagenstecher's Coll., 1864.

4. Sinners Jesus will receive. A full and good tr. by Mrs. Bevan in her Songs of Eternal Life, 1858, p. 23. Repeated in full in L. Rehfuess's Church at Sea, 1868, p. 50, and, abridged, in the Eng. Presb. Ps. & Hys., 1867, and Flett's Coll., Paisley, 1871. In Dr. W. F. Stevenson's Hys. for Ch. & Home, 1873, st. i., v., vi., vii. are included, altered, and beginning "Jesus sinners will receive; Say this word of grace to all;" and this form is also in the Bapt. Hyl., 1879.

Other trs. are :-

(1) "My Jesus the sinner receives." By Miss Warner, 1869, p. 57. (2) "Jesus sinners doth receive! Tell to all." By B. Massle in the Day of Rest, 1877. The hymn "Jesus sinners will receive, When they fail," by E. Cronenwett, in 5 st., in the Ohio Luth. Hyl., 1880, is marked as a tr. of Neumeister. It follows Neumeister, in reserve but seems without an arministration of the second of the secon Myl., 1880, is marked as a tr. of Neumeister. It follows Neumeister in metre, but seems rather a paraphra e of the hymn "Jesus nimmt die Sünder an, Drum so will ich nicht verzagen." This hymn is by Ludwig Heinrich Schlosser [b. Sept. 7, 1663, at Darmstadt; d. Aug. 18, 1733, as pastor at Frankfurt am Main], and appeared in the Appendic to the Frankfurt ed., 1893, of Crüger's Praxis, and in his own Stilles Lob Gottes in dem geistlichen Zion, Frankfurt a. M., 1724 (see Wetzel, iv. 433; Rambach's Anthologic, vi. p. xi., &c.). In Burg's G. B., Breslau, 1746, the Neumeister bymn is given as No. 1593 and marked as by G. G. Hofmann, and the Schlosser bymn as W. 1593 and marked as by W. 1595 and marked as by Neumeister hymn as No. 1592 and marked as by Neumeister. Hence perhaps the confusion.

Neuss, Heinrich Georg, a. of Andreas Neuss, surgeon at Elbingerode in the Harz. was b. at E., March 11, 1654, and entered the University of Erfurt in 1677 as a student of theology. In 1680 he became a private tutor at Heimburg, near Blankenburg, and then in 1683 conrector, and in 1684 rector of the school at Blankenburg in the Harz. In 1690 he was appointed assistant preacher at Wolfenbuttel, and soon afterwards diaconus of the Heinrichstadt church there. For holding prayer meetings, &c., he was denounced as a Pietist, and chose to resign rather than desist. In the same year, 1692, he became preacher at Hedwigsburg, and travelling Chaplain to Duke Rudolph August of Brunswick, who, at Easter, 1695, appointed him superintendent at Remlingen for the district of Asseburg. In 1696 he received the degree of D.D. from the University of Giessen, and became super-intendent, consistorial rath, and chief pastor of the Church of SS. Sylvester and George at Wernigerode, being instituted on Feb. His appointment there was at first unpopular, for he was suspected of Separatist tendencies, but he soon gained the love of the people by his earnest and loving practical Christianity, and by the interest he took in the development of Church music, for which under his care Wernigerode became famous in all the district. He d. at Wernigerode, Sept. 30, 1716 (Koch, iv. 425; Allg. Deutsche Biog. xxiii. 556; Heinrich Georg Neuss. By Ed. Jacobs. In the Zeitschrift des Harz-Vereins, vol. xxi. 1888, p. 159, &c.).

The hymns of Neuss appeared principally in his Heb-Opfer sum Bau der Hilten Gottes, das 1st, Geitkliche Lieder, &c.; of this the 1st ed. with 100 hymns was pub. at Lûneburg, 1892; and the 2nd ed., with 3st additional, at Wernigerode, 1703 [both in Berlin], most of the pieces bearing the dates of their composition. They were received with great favour in Pietksteircles, and Frevlinghansen in his Geistreiches G. B. included no less than 38 (5 in pt. i., 1704; 33 in pt. ii., 1714). In the Wernigerode G. B., 1712, edited by Neuss, 5 are included, and 6 more in the ed. of 1735. Only a few are found in recent German collections. The 1703 ed. of the Heb-Opter had also 86 melodies, of which some 75 were by Neuss, and of these 15 passed into Freylingbausen's G.B. In 1706 Neuss also pub. a collection of Brunner-lieder at Pyrmont, for the frequenters of the Baths there.

Only one of his hymns has passed into English, viz. :-

Ein reines Herz, Herr, schaff in mir, Sanctification.

A simple and beautiful hymn, 1st pub. in the 2nd ed., 1703, of his Heb-Opfer, p. 217, in 5 st. of 41. In the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 390. Tr. as:—

A new and contrite heart create. A good and full tr. by Miss Cox, in her Sucred Hymns from the German, 1841, p. 183 (1864, p. 177), repeated in the Bayt. Hyl., 1879.

Another tr. is:—"Lord! grant a new-born heart to me," by Lady E. Fortescue, 1843, p. 58. [J. M.]

Nevin, Edwin Henry, D.D., s. of Major David Nevin, was b. at Shippensburg, Pennsylvania, May 9, 1814. He graduated in Arts at Jefferson College, 1833; and in Theology at Princeton Seminary, in 1836. He held several postorates as a Presbyterian Minister from 1836 to 1857; then as a Congregational Minister from 1857 to 1868; and then, after a rest of six years through ill health, as a Minister of the Reformed Church, first at Laucaster, Pennsylvanis, and then in Philadelphia. Dr. Nevin is the author of several hymns, the more important of which are :--

1. Always with me [us], always with [us] me. Jesus always present.

2. Come up hither, come away. Invitation Heavenward,

- 3. Happy, Saviour, would I be. Trust. This is given in the Lyra Sac. Americana as "Saviour! happy should I be." This change was made by the editor "with the consent and approbation of the author," (Note, p. 299).
- 4. O heaven, sweet heaven. Heaven. Written and pub. in 1862 "after the death of a beloved son, which made heaven neaver and dearer from the conviction that now a member of his family was one of its inhabitants" (Schaff's Christ in Song, 1870, p. 539).
- 5. Live on the field of battle. Duty. Appeared in the Bap. Devotional H. Bk., 1864.
- 6. I have read of a world of beauty. Heaven. 7. Mount up on high! as if on eagle's wings. Divine Aspirations.

Of these hymns, Nos. 1, 2, 3 appeared in Nason's Congregational H. Bk., 1857; and all, except No. 5, are in the Lyra Sacra Americana, 1868. [F. M. B.]

New England Pealter, or Bay Psalm Book. [Pealters, English, § vii.]

New Version, The. This Version of the Psalms of David, commonly known as Tate and Brady, is fully set forth, so far as it is a part of the general history of English Psalters, in the article Psalters, English, § XIII. That article must be read for its history, the value of its authorization, its character and merits, and for biographical notices of its authors. It remains for us here to give (1) the history of the Version from 1696 to the present time; (2) an account of its Supplement; and (3) a list of the contents of each.

i. History of the N. V. As stated in the article referred to, it was first published in its complete form in 1696, and the second edition, with somewhat extensive corrections, in 1698, although it had been "allowed" by the King in Council, "December 3, 1696." Soon after in 1698, another version of the original text was published which differed considerably both from "The second edition corrected" and the original of 1696. The copy before us is dated 1698. The titlepages of the three books are :-

(1) A New Version of the Psalms of David, Fitted to the Tunes Used in Churches. By N. Tale and N. Brady, Iondon, Printed by M. Clark: for the Company of Stationers, 1696. This has a Dedication to King William signed by "N. Brady; N. Tate,"

(2) A New Version of the Psalms of David, Fitted to the Tunes Used in Churches. By N. Tate and N. Brady. The Second Edition corrected. London: Printed by M. Clark, for the Company of Stationers. 1898. This also has a Dedication to the King signed by "N. Brady, N. Tate."

1111.

(3) A New Version of the Psalms of David, Fitted to the Tunes Used in Churches. By N. Tate and N. Brady, London, Printed by T. Bodgkin, for the Company of Stationers, 1698. And are to be Sold at Stationers'—Hall, near Ludgate, and by most Bookselters. This has the same Dedication as Nos. 1 and 2, and, in addition, the Authorication dated "At the Court at Kensington, December 3, 1698. Present the King's Misst Excellent. December 3, 1696. Present the King's Most Excellent Majesty in Council."

As examples of the changes made in the text of the New Version we will give quotations from Ps. xviii., verse 7.

- From the Original edition, 1696.
 - "When God arose to take my part,
 The trembling Earth did quake for fear;
 From their firm Posts the Hills did start, Nor durst his dreadful Fury bear.
- (2) From "The Second Edition corrected," London, M. Clark, 1698.
 - "When God arose to take my part, The conscious Earth did quake for foar; From their firm Poste the Hills did start, Nor could his dreadful Fary bear."
- (3) From the Edition of 1698. London, J. Hodgkin.
 - "When God arose my part to take, the conscious Earth was struck with fear; The Hills did at his presence shake, nor could his dreadful fury bear."

In these quotations the italies represent the changes made in the 1698 (Hodgkin) edition when compared with "The Second Edition corrected" of 1698 (Clark). This is but one of hundreds of instances of changes in the text. The text of the Original of 1696 was not again reprinted, and it was natural to expect that the publication of one of the other two would cease. This, however, did not take place for over a hundred years. We have before us two copies of the New Version, both of which have been in use at public worship, and both dated 1796, as follows:

(1) A New Version of the Psalms of David Fitted to the Tunes used in Churches. By N. Brady, D.D., Chap-tain in Ordinary, And N. Tute, Esquire, Poet-Laureat to His Majesty. London. Printed. MDCCNCVI.

This edition is a reprint of No. 2, "The Second Edition corrected," pub. by Clark in 1698. The next is:-

(2) A New Version of the Pealms of David, Fitted to the Tunes used in Churches. By N. Brady, D.D., Chaplain in Ordinary, and N. Tute, Eq., Poet-Laureate to His Majesty. London, Printed by M. Brown, For the Company of Stationers, and are to be Sold at Stationers Hall, near Ludgate-Street, and by most Booksellers. MDCCXCVI.

This is a reprint of the edition pub. by Hodgkin in 1698 (No. 3 above). It has the Authorization of the King dated Dec. 3, 1696, and the Bishop of I ondon's approval and good wishes for success, dated May 23, 1698. From this it is clear that these two texts were "The Second Edition corrected" was issued | reprinted, and were used side by side in public worship for more than one hundred years, as it was only when the printing of the New Version was undertaken by the University Press that the reprinting of Clark's ed. No. 2 above, "The Second Edition corrected," 1698, was gradually suspended, and the text approved by the Bishop of London, on "May 23, 1698" (No. 3 above, printed by J. Hodgkin), became the absolute Tate & Brady of the future. The issue of this Tate & Brady continued for many years, and is that usually quoted by hymnologists as the "original text." In the "Selection of Paslms," which was given in the American Prayer Bk. Coll., 1826, those taken from the New Version were from this text.

ii. The Supplement. The earliest notice of the Supplement is the following advertisement at the end of the 8vo ed. of the New Version, printed by Hodgkin, 1698:-

printed by Holgkin, 1698:—

"A Supplement to the New Version of Psalms by N. Tute and N. Brady, containing 1. The usual Hymns, Creed, Lord's Prayer, Ten Commandments, all set to their proper Tunes; with additional Hymns for the Holy Sacrament, Pestivale, dc. 2ty. Select Psalms done in particular Measures, to make up the whole variety of Metres that are in the old Version, with Duplicates to most of them, and Cloria Patris with the Tunes. With a Collection of the most usual Church-Tunes. All very useful for the Facher or Learner of Psalmody. London: Printed and Sold at Stationers Hall, near Ludon. um: Fried and Sud at Statumers Hall, near Indo-gate, D. Brown at the Bible without Temple-Bar, J. Wilds at the Elmhant, Charing Cross, and other Booksellers. "a" This Supplement to be had either in the large Octavo to bind up with the Volume, or in the small size for the Twelves. Price in Sheets 6d."

This advertisement was repeated, with slight variations, in the 32mo ed. of 1699. The earliest fulfilment of the promised Supplement that we have been enabled to see is the 3rd edition published in 1702. Its contents are :-

These Psalms are all in peculiar metres, and are given in full. Then the following Psalms from the New Version as above, first lines only being printed :- xLIV., xXVII., IV., v., xxiii., xxxviii., xix., xvi., oxivii. After these 28 tunes are given with references to the Psalms only. Then are given the following Psalms, also from the New Version as above :— CXIX., XCII., C., XXV. CXIII., CXLVIII., LXXXVIII.

The 6th ed. of the Supplement, 1708, contained the same psalms in peculiar metres and hymns, together with the addition of "O Lord, turn not Thy face from me" (in a re-written form), and "O all ye works of God the Lord," from the Old Version; and "We sing to Thee Whose wisdom formed," from Playford. (This arrangement was repeated with the exception of "O Lord, turn not," as late as the Savoy ed., 1717.)

As this 6th ed. of the Supplement, 1708, is of special importance to the musical student, we append the title and some details concerning its musical contents. The title is:-

A Supplement to the New Version of Palms by Dr. Brady and Mr. Tate: containing, The Palms in Peculiar Measures; the usual Hymns, Creed, Lord's Prayer, Ten Commandments, for the Holy Sacroment, de., with Gloria Patris, and Tunes (Troble and Base), de., with Gioria Pairis, and Tinnes (Troble and Baus), proper to each of them, and all the rest of the Pacian-The Sixth Edition Corrected; and much Enlarged: With the Addition of Piain Instructions for all those who are desirous to Learn or Improve themselves in Palmody: near 30 Now Tunes, composed by several of the Best Masters: and a Table of Pasins mited to the Peasts and Pasts of the Church, de. With Tables of all the Peasts and Pasts of the Church, de. With Tables of all the Peatins of the Old, New, and Br. Parick's Versions, directing what tunes are fitted for each Padm. The whole being a Compleat Padmody. Useful for Tauchers and Learners of cither Version. In the Savoy: Printed Learners of either Version . . . In the Savoy: Printed by John Nutt; and Sold by James Holland, at the Bible and Ball, at the West-End of St. Paul's, MDCCVIII.

This edition contains 63 psalm tunes, and 12 tunes for the Hymns of the Church, 75 in all. Of these tunes 28 are marked thus *, as being new. These are :-

St. Martin's. St. Giles's. St. Mark's. New Tune to Ps. St. Paul's. 121, 129. [Jer-St. Andrew's. Ston. sey). St. James's. St. Matthew's. St. Thomas's New Tune to Ps. New Tune to Pa. 114, 126. New Tune to Ps. 45, 93, 117. New Tune to Ps. All Saints The Penitent's Tune. 117, 149, [Han-Another St. Anne's. St. John's. Tune to the over.] New Tune to Ps. same. St. Luke's. 111, 131.

There were also New Tunes to the Magnificat, The Creed, The Lord's Prayer (1st metro), the Ten Commandments, the Benedicite, and the Hymn on the Divine Use of Music. How for the word new with regard to these 28 tunes means nearly composed for this edition of the Supplement, or, published therein for the first time, is doubtful. Courteville's tune, St. James's, for instance, is in the 7th cd. of Playford's Pealter, 1701, and was not absolutely new then.

The earliest association of the New Version with what is known as the University Press with which we are acquainted, is the following:-

New Version of the Psalms of David, fitted to the Funes used in Churches. By N. Brady, D.D., Chaplain in Ordinary, and N. Tate, Esq., Poet-Laureat to His Majesty. Cambridge. Printed by J. Archdeacon, Printer to the University; and sold by John, Francis, and Charles Rivington, Henjamin While, Charles Dilly, and John Fielding in London; and J. & J. Merrill, in Cambridge. 1782. Cum Privilegio. Price 6d. unbound.

At the end, after the Gloria Patri, are the following Hymns:-

1. High let us swell our tuneful notes.

Hark, the herald angels sing.
 Christ from the dead is rais'd and made.

My God, and is Thy table spread.
 Awake my soul, and with the sun.

These 5 hymns, and no more, are in a 1791 Cambridge edition of the N. V. printed by "J. Archdeacon, Printer to the University": and the 1802 edition printed by "J. Burges," printer to the University. These hymns are also given in an Oxford edition " Printed by Dawson & Co., 1803: and in an 1807 edition "Printed at the Ciarendon Press by Dawson, Bensley, and Cooke, Printers to the Univer-

Some time after 1807, two additional hymns were added, viz. :-

Jesus Christ is risen to-day, Our triumphant.
 Glory to Thee, my God, this night.

But the exact date at which they were inserted we have been unable to determine.

In addition to these University editions of the N. V. and the 2 Hymns, we find J., F. and C. Rivington issued the following in 1779:—

Hymns taken from the Supplement to Tate and Brady's Psalms.

In this, and subsequent editions, including 1787, the 5 hymns in the University edition of 1782 are not found. These hymns are thus distinctly associated with the Cambridge and Oxford University issues of the N. Version.

Miller, in his Singers and Songs, &c., 1869, p. 173, says concerning these hymns:-

""My God, and is Thy table spread?"  This is inserted as a Communion Hymn in the 'Prayer Book of the Church of England.' It was introduced by a University printer about half a century ago. He was a Dissenter, and filled up the blank leaves at the end of the Prayer Book with hymns he thought would be acceptable. The authorities did not interfere, and the hymns thus took their place. In some books there are two hymns by Doddridge, one probably by Wesley, one by Sternhold or J. Mardley, and Blatop Ken's Morning and Evening Hymns, altered and abridged."

In the Oxford Essaus for 1858 in an article

In the Oxford Essays for 1858, in an article on "Hymns and Hymn-writers," by C. B. Pearson, he speaks of the introduction of hymns to Tate and Brady as being due to the "University printers in modern times more particularly to one about half a century back [i.e. 1808], who being a Dissenter, thought fit to fill up the blank leaves at the end of the Prayer Book with hymns suggested by himself."

This is doubtless the source of Miller's information. Both Pearson and Miller are very vague in their dates. Pearson's date is circa 1808: and Miller's circa 1819. Whereas the hymns appeared in the Cambridge edition of the N. Version in 1782, printed by "J. Archdeacon, Printer to the University." Was "J. Archdeacon" a Dissenter? We cannot [J. J.] say.

Newman, John Henry, D.D. The hymnological side of Cardinal Newman's life and work is so small when compared with the causes which have ruled, and the events which have accompanied his life as a whole, that the barest outline of biographical facts and summary of poetical works comprise all that properly belongs to this work. Cardinal Newman was the eldest s. of John Newman, and was b. in London, Feb. 21, 1801. He was educated at Ealing under Dr. John Nicholas, and at Trinity College, Oxford, where he graduated in honours in 1820, and became a Fellow of Oriel in 1822. Taking Holy Orders in 1824, he was for a short time Vice-Principal of St. Alban's Hall, and then Tutor of Oriel. His appointment to St. Mary's, Oxford, was in the spring of 1828. In 1827 he was Public Examiner, and in 1830 one of the Select University Preachers. His association with Keble, Pusey, and others, in what is known as "The Oxford Movement," together with the periodical publication of the Tracts for the Times, are matters of history. It is well known how that Tract 90, entitled Remarks on Certain Passages in the Thirty-nine Articles, in 1841, was followed by his retirement to Littlemore: his formal recantation, in February, 1843, of all that he had said against Rome; his resignation in September of the same year of St. Mary's and Littlemore; and of his formal application to be received into the communion of the Church of Rome, Oct. 8, 1845. In 1848 he became Father Superior of the Oratory of St. Philip Neri, at Birmingham; in 1854 Rector of the newly founded Roman Catholic University at Dublin; and in 1858 he removed to the Edgbaston Oratory, Birmingham. In 1879 he was created a Cardinal, and thus received the highest dignity it is in the power of the Pope to bestow. Cardinal Newman's prose works are numerous, and his Parochial Sermons especially being very popular. His Apologia pro Vita Sua, 1864, is a lucid exposisition and masterly defence of his life and work.

Cardinal Newman's poetical work began with poems and lyrical pieces which he contributed to the British Magazine, in 1832-4 (with other pieces by Keble and others), under the title of Lyra Apostolica. In 1836 these poems were collected and published under the same title, and Greek letters were added to distinguish the authorship of each piece, his being 8. Only a few of his poems from this work have come into use as hymns. The most notable is, "Lead, kindly Light" (p. 667, i.). His Tract for the Times, No. 75, On the Roman Breviary, 1836, contained translations of 14 Latin hymns. Of these 10 were repeated in his Verses on Religious Subjects, 1853, and his Verses on Various Occasions, 1865, and translations of 24 additional Latin hymne were added. Several of these translations are in C. U., the most widely known being " Nune Sancte nobis" ("Come. Holy Ghost, Who ever One"). His collection of Latin hymns from the Roman and Paris Breviaries, and other sources was pub as Hymni Ecclesiae, in 1838, and again in 1865. His Dream of Gerontius, a poem from which his fine hymn, "Praise to the Holiest in the height," is taken, appeared in his Verses on Various Occasions, in 1868. Cardinal Newman's influence on hymnology has not been of a marked character. Two brilliant original pieces, and little more than half a dozen translations from the Latin, are all that can claim to rank with his inimitable prose.

Newton, James, A.M., was b. at Chenies, in Bucks, in the year 1732. At the age of 17 he went to London, where he joined the Baptist church under the care of the Rev. B. Wallin [Wallin, E.]. In 1757 he became assistant minister to the Rev. J. Tommas, pastor of the Baptist church in the Pithay, Bristol; and in 1770, classical tutor at the Baptist College in that city. He filled both these offices with honour and usefulness until his death in 1790. As a hymn-writer he is known by one hymn only, "Proclaim, saith Christ, my wondrous grace" (Holy Baptism), which appeared in 3 st. in the Bristol Coll. of Ash & Evans, 1769, No. 381; Rippon's Bap. Sel., 1787, and others of the older hymn-books. In the Bap. New Sel., 1828; the Bap. Ps. & Hys., 1858; the New Cong., 1859, and others, it begins with st. ii. —"Let plenteous grace descend on those." In this form it is widely used.

Newton, John, who was b. in London, July 24, 1725, and d. there Dec. 21, 1807, occupied an unique position among the founders of the Evangelical School, due as much to the romance of his young life and the striking history of his conversion, as to his force of character. His mother, a pious Dissenter, stored his childish mind with Scripture, but died when he was seven years old. At the age of eleven, after two years schooling, during which he learned the rudiments of Latin, he went to sea with his father. His life at sea trems with wonderful escapes, vivid dreams, and sailor recklessness. He grew into an abandoned and godless sailor. The religious fits of his boyhood changed into settled infidelity, through the study of Shaftesbury and the instruction of one of his comrades.

Disappointing repeatedly the plans of his father, he was flogged as a deserter from the navy, and for fifteen months lived, half-starved and ill-treated, in abject degradation under a slave-dealer in Africa. The one restraining influence of his life was his faithful love for his future wife, Mary Catlett, formed when he was seventeen, and she only in her fourteenth year. A chance reading of Thomas a Kempis sowed the seed of his conversion; which quickened under the awful contemplations of a night spent in steering a water-logged vessel in the face of apparent death (1748). He was then twenty-three. The six following years, during which he commanded a slave ship, matured his Christian belief. Nine years more, spent chiefly at Liverpool, in intercourse with Whitefleld, Wesley, and Nonconformists, in the study of Hobrew and Greek, in exercises of devotion and occasional preaching among the Dissenters, elapsed before his ordination to the curacy of Olney, Bucks (1764). The Olney period was the most fruitful of his life. His zeal in pastoral visiting, preaching and prayer-meetings was unwearied. He formed his lifelong friendship with Cowper [see Cow-per, William], and became the spiritual father of Scott the commentator. At Olney his best works—Omicron's Letters (1774); Olney Hymns (1779); Cardiphonia, written from Olney, though pub. 1781—were composed. As rector of St. Mary Woolnoth, London, in the centre of the Evangelical movement (1780-1807) his zeal was as ardent as before. In 1805, when no longer able to read his text, his reply when pressed to discontinue preaching, was, "What, shall the old African blasphemer stop while he can speak!" The story of his sins and his conversion, published by himself, and the subject of lifelong allusion, was the base of his influence; but it would have been little but for the vigour of his mind (shown even in Africa by his reading Euclid drawing its figures on the sand), his warm heart, candour, tolerance, and piety. These qualities gained him the friendship of Hannah More, Cecil, Wilberforce, and others; and his renown as a guide in experimental religion made him the centre of a host of inquirers, with whom he maintained patient, loving, and generally judicious correspondence, of which a monument remains in the often beautiful letters of Cardiphonia. As a hymn-writer, Montgomery says that he was distanced by Cowper. But Lord Selborne's contrast of the "manliness" of Newton and the "tenderness" of Cowper is far juster. A comparison of the hymns of both in The Book of Praise will show no great inequality between them. Amid much that is bald, tame, and matter-of-fact, his rich acquaintance with Scripture, knowledge of the heart, directness and force, and a certain sailor imagination, tell strongly. The one splendid hymn of praise, "Glorious things of thee are spoken," in the Olney collection, is his. "One there is above all others" has a depth of realizing love, sustained excellence of expression, and ease of development. "How sweet the name of Jesus sounds" is in Scriptural richness superior, and in structure, cadence, and almost tenderness, equal to Cowper's "Oh! for a closer walk with God." The most characteristic hymns are those which depict in the language of intense humiliation ! his mourning for the abiding sins of his regenerate life, and the sense of the withdrawal of God's face, coincident with the never-failing conviction of acceptance in The Beloved. The feeling may be seen in the speeches, writings, and diaries of his whole life. For its bearing on his relations with Cowper, see Olney Hymns and Cowper, William. (H. L. B.)

A large number of Newton's hymns have some personal history connected with them, or were associated with circumstances of importance. These are annotated under their respective first lines. Of the rest, the known history of which is confined to the fact that they appeared in the Olney Hymns, 1779, the following are in C. U .:-

Nicholas, Tressilian George, M.A., S. of the Rev. George Nicholas, LL.D., was b. in London, April 14, 1822, and educated at Wadham College, Oxford. (B.A. in honours, 1843, M.A. 1846.) On taking Holy Orders he became Curate of St. Lawrence, Reading, 1845; Incumbent of West Molesey, 1846; and Vicar of Lower Halstow, 1859. In 1863 he returned to West Molesey. He contributed several poetical pieces to the Church of England Magazine. These were collected and pub. as Poems in 1851. From this work his wellknown and extensively used hymn for Holy Communion, "Lord, when before Thy throne we meet," was taken. It is part of a poem which was printed in the Church of England Mag. for Jan. 6, 1838. It is usually given in 3 st. of 6 l., and often as anonymous. [J. J.]

Nicholson, Horatio Langrishe, D.D., was educated at Trinity College, Dublin (B.A. in honours 1855, D.D. 1880). After taking Holy Orders in 1856, he held several appointments in Ireland to 1859, when he became Lecturer of Holy Trinity, Newington, London. Subsequently he was Incumbent of St. James's, Kennington, 1862, and then of other parishes, the last being the Vicarage of St. James's, Forest Gate, Stratford, Essex. During his Incumbency of St. Saviour's, Brockley Hill, London, he pub. :-

19. What are those sounds that fall. Processional for Chrisimas Day. [J. J.]

Nicolai, Philipp, D.D., s. of Dieterich Nicolai, sometime Lutheran pastor at Herdecke, in Westphalia, and after 1552, at Mengeringhausen in Waldeck, was b. at Mengeringhausen, August 10, 1556. (The father was s. of Nicolaus Rafflenböl, of Rafflenköl, near Hagen, in Westphalia, and in luter life had adopted the Latinised form Nicolai of his father's Christian name as his own surname.) In 1575 Nicolai entered the University of Erfurt, and in 1576 he went to Wittenberg. After completing his University course in 1579 (D.D. at Wittenberg July 4, 1594), he lived for some time at Volkhardinghausen, near Mengeringhausen, and frequently preached for his father. In August, 1583, he was appointed Lutheran preacher at Herdecke, but found many difficulties there, the members of the Town Council being Roman Catholics. After the invasion by the Spanish troops in April, 1586, his colleague re-introduced the Mass, and Nicolai resigned his post. In the end of 1586 he was appointed disconus at Niederwildungen, near Waldeck, and in 1587 he became paster there. He then became, in Nov. 1588, chief pastor at Altwildungen, and also court preacher to the widowed Countess Margaretha of Waldeck, and tutor to her son, Count Wilhelm Ernst. Here he took an active part on the Lutheran side in the Sacramentarian controversy, and was, in Sept. 15:2, inhibited from preaching by Count Franz of Waldeck, but the prohibition was soon removed, and in the Synod of 1598 held at Mengeringhausen, he found all the clergy of the principality of Waldeck willing to agree to the Formula of Concord. In October, 1596, he became pastor at Unna, in Westphalia, where he again become engaged in heated controversy with the Calvinists; passed through a frightful pestilence (see below); and then on Dec. 27, 1598, had to flee before the invasion of the Spaniards, and did not return till the end of April, 1599. Finally, in April 1601, he was elected chief pastor of St. Katherine's Church, at Hamburg, where he entered on his duties Aug. 6, 1601. On Oct. 22, 1608, he took part in the ordination of a colleague in the St. Katherine's Church, the disconns Penshorn, and returned home feeling unwell. A violent fever developed itself, under which he sank, and d. Oct. 26, 1608 (D. Philipp Nicolai's Leben und Lieder, by L. Curtze, 1859; Koch, ii. 324; Allg. Deutsche Biog. xxiii. 607, &c.).

In Hamburg Nicolai was universally esteemed, was a most popular and influential preacher, and was regarded as a "pillar" of the Lutheran church. In his private life he seems to have been most lovable and estimable. iffe he seems to have been most lovable and estimable. Besides his fame as u preacher, his reputation rests mainly on his hymns. His printed works are mostly polemical, often very violent and acrid in tone, and such as the undoubted sincerity of his zeal to preserve pure and unadulterated Lutheranism may explain, but cannot be said to fustify. Of his bymns only four seem to have been printed.

Three of Nicolai's hymns were first pub. in his devotional work entitled Frewden-Spiegel dess ewigen Lebens, pub. at Frankfurt-am-Main, 1599 (see further below). The two noted here ("Wachet auf" and "Wie schön") rank as classical and epoch-making. The former is the last of the long series of Watchmen's Songs. The latter marks the transition from the objective churchly period to the more subjective and experimental period of German hymn writing; and begins the long series of Hymns of Love to Christ as the Bridegroom of the Soul, to which Franck and Scheffler contributed such beautiful examples. Both are also worthy of note for their unusual and perfect rhythms, and for their splendid melodies. They are :-

i. Wechet auf, ruft uns die Stimme. Eternal Life. This beautiful hymp, one of the first rank, is founded on St. Matt. xxv. 1-13; Rev. xix. 6-9, and xxi. 21; 1 Cor. ii. 9; Ezek. iii. 17; and Is. lii. 8. It first appeared in the Appendix to his Frewdon-Spiegel, 1599, in 3 st. of 10 l., entitled "Of the Voice at Midnight, and the Wise Virgins who meet their Heavenly Bride-groom. Matt. 25." Thence in Wackernagel v. p. 259, the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 690, and most German collections

It is a reversed scrostic, W. Z. G. for the Graf zu Waldeck, viz. his former pupil Count Wilhelm Ernst, who d. at Tübingen Sept. 16, 1598, in his fifteenth year. It seems to have been written in 1597 at Unna, in Westphalia, where Nicolai was then paster; and during the iteratile next lines were the next lines with next lines with the second to the latter than the latter than the second to the latter than the terrible pestilence which raged there from July, 1597, to January, 1598, to which in July 300, in one week in August 170, and in all over 1300 fell victims. Nicolai's pursonage overlooked the churchyard, and there daily interments took place, often to the number of thirty. In these days of distress, when every boushold was in mourning, Nicolal's thoughts turned to Death, and thence to God in Heaven, and to the Eternal Fatherland. In the process of the days in 1500 to the Eternal Fatherland. preface (dated Aug. 10, 1598) to his Frewden-Spiegel he says: "There seemed to me nothing more sweet, delightpreserve totact aug. 10, 1000 to me Freedom-years to says: "There seemed to me nothing more sweet, delightful and agreeable, than the contemplation of the noble, sublime doctrine of Eternal Life obtained through the Blood of Christ. This I allowed to dwell in my heart day and night, and searched the Scriptures as to what they revealed on this matter, read also the sweet treatise of the ancient doctor Saint Augustime [De Civitate Bei]..... Then day by day I wrote out my meditation, found myself, thank God! wonderfully well, comforted in heart, joyful in spirit, and truly content; gave to my manuscript the name and title of a Mirror of Joy, and took this so composed Freedom-Spiegel to leave behind me (if God should call me from this world) as the token of my peaceful, joyful, Christian departure, or (if God should allow from this world) as the token of my peaceful, joyful, Christian departure, or (if God should also visit with the pestilence.... Now has the gracious, holy God most mercifully preserved me amid the dying from the dreadful pestilence, and wonderfully spared me beyond all my thoughts and wonderfully spared me beyond all my thoughts and hopes, so that with the Prophet David I can say to Him "O how great is Tby goodness, which Thou hast laid up for them that fear Thee," &c.

The hymn composed under these circumstances (it may be stated that Curtze thinks both hymns were written in 1596, while Nicolai was still at Alt-Wildungen) soon became popular, and still retains its place, though often altered in the 3rd stanza. Probably the opening lines:

"Wachet auf! ruft uns die Stimme Der Wächter sehr hoch auf der Zinne" are borrowed from one of the Wächter-Lieder, a form of lyric popular in the Middle Ages, introduced by Wolfram von Eschenbach. (See K. Goedeke's Deutsche Dichtung im Mittelalter, 1871, p. 918.) But while in the Songs the voice of the Watchman from his turret summons the workers of darkness to flee from discovery, with Nicolai it is a summons to the children of light to awaken to their promised reward and full

The melody appeared first along with the hymn, and The metody appeared instruction with the synth, and is also apparently by Nicolai, though portions of it (e.g. 1.1 by the Gregorian Fifth Tone) may have been sugested by carller tunes. It has been called the King of Chorales, and by its majestic simplicity and dignity it well deserves the title. Since its use by Mendelessolin in his St. Paul it has become well known in England, and, in its original form, is given in Miss Winkworth's C. B. for England, 1863 (see below).

ranslations in C. U.:-

1. Sleepers wake, a voice is calling. This is an unrhymed tr. of st. i. by W. Ball in his book of words to Mendelssohn's oratorio of St. Paul, 1836. This form is in Horder's Cong. Hymns, 1884, and others. In the South Place [London] Coll., 1873, it is a recast by A. J. Ellis, but opens with the same first line. In the Parish H. Bk., 1875, a tr. of st. ii., also unrhymed, is added.

2. Weke ye hely maidens, wake ye. A good tr. contributed by Philip Pusey to A. R. Reinagle's Coll. of Ps. and Hy. Tunes, Oxford, 1840, p. 134. It was considerably altered, beginning "Wake, ye holy maidens, fearing" in the Salisbury H. Bk., 1857, and this is repeated, with further alterations, in Kennedy, 1863, and the Sarum Hyl., 1868.

3. Wake, arise! the call obeying. A good tr. by A. T. Russell, as No. 110 in the Dalston Hospital H. Bk., 1848.

4. Wake, oh wake; around are flying. This is a recast, by A. T. Russell, not for the better, from his 1848 tr., as No. 268 in his Ps. & Hys. 1851, st. iii. being omitted. Thence, unaltered, in the New Zealand Hyl., 1872.

5. Wake, awake, for night is flying. good tr. by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger., 2nd Ser., 1858, p. 225, repeated in her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 200, with st. ii., ll. 7, 8, rewritten. Included in the Eng. Pres. Ps. & Hys., 1867; Scottish Pres. Hyl., 1876, &c.; and in America, in Laudes Domini, 1884, and others. In the Cantate Domino, Boston, U.S., 1859, it begins " Awake, awake, for night is flying."

6. Wake! the startling watch-cry pealeth. Miss Cox, in Lyra Messianica, 1864, p. 4, and her Hys. from the German, 1864, p. 27; repeated in W. F. Stevenson's H. for Church and Home, 1873. The version in J. L. Porter's Coll., 1876, takes at. i., ll. 1-4 from Miss Cox. The rest is mainly from R. C. Singleton's tr. in the Anglican H. Bk., but borrows lines also from Miss Winkworth, and from the Hymnary text.

7. Wake! the watchman's voice is sounding. By R. C. Singleton. This is No. 259 in the Anglican H. Bh., 1868, where it is marked as a " versification by R. C. Singleton, 1867."

8. Wake, awake, for night is flying. This is by Canon W. Cooke, in the Hymnary, 1871, and signed A. C. C. In the ed. of 1872, ll. 7, 8 of st. ii. are recast, and the whole is marked as "based on E. A. Dayman." It is really a cento, four lines of the 1872 text (i., l. 5; ii., ll. 7, 8; iii., l. 9) being by Canon Cooke; and the rest being adapted from the versions of P. Pusey as altered in the Sarum Hyl., of Miss Winkworth, of Miss Cox, and of R. C. Singleton. It may be regarded as a success, and as passed into the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871; the 1874 Appx. to the N. Cong.; Horder's Cong. Hye., 1884, and others.

9. Wake, arise! the voice is calling. This is an anonymous tr. in the Ohio Luth. Hyl., 1880.

10. Slumberers, wake, the Bridegroom cometh. A spirited version, based on Miss Winkworth (and with an original st. as iv.), by J. H. Hopkins in his Carols, Hys. & Songs, 3rd ed., 1882. p. 88, and dated 1866. Repeated in the Hyl, Comp. (Reformed Epis.) Philadelphia, U.S., 1885.

fi. Wie schön lenchtet der Morgenstern, Voll Gnad und Wahrheit von dem Herrn. Love to Christ. 1st pub. in the Appendix to his Frewden-Spiegel, 1599, in 7 st. of 10 l. entitled "A spiritual bridal song of the believing soul concerning Jesus Christ, her heavenly Bridegroom, founded on the 45th Psalm of the prophet David." Lauxmann, in Koch, viii. 271, thus gives an account of it as written during the Pestilence of 1597. He says Nicolai was "One morning in great distress and tribulation to his quiet study. He rose in spirit from the distress and death which surrounded him to his Redeemer and Saviour, and which surrounded him to his Redeemer and Saviour, and while he clasped Him in ardent love there welled forth from the inmost depths of his heart this precious hymn of the Saviour's love and of the joys of Heaven. He was so entirely absorbed in this holy exalitation that he forgot all around him, even his midday mesl, and allowed nothing to disturb him in his poetical labours till the hymn was tompleted "—three hours after midday.

As Nicolai was closely connected with Waldeck he formed with the initial letters of his stanzas the acrostic W. E. G. U. H. Z. W., viz. Wilhelm Ernst Graf Und Herr Zu Waldeck-his former pupil.

The hymn has reminiscences of Eph. v., of Canticles, and of the Mediæval Hymns to the B. V. M. It became at once a favourite in Germany, was reckoned indispensable at weddings, was often sung around death beds, &c. The original form is in Wackernagel v. p. 258, and the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 437; but this (as will be seen by comparing Miss Winkworth's version of 1869) is hardly suited for present day congregational use. In Bunsen's Versuch, 1833, No. 554, it is slightly altered. The form in Knapp's Ev. L. S., 1837, No. 2074 (1865, No. 1810) is a recast by Knapp made on Jan. 14, 1822, and archive the light statement of the light 1832, and pub. in his Christoterpe, 1833, p. 285, preceded by a recast of "Wachet aufl being marked as "rewritten according to the requirements of our times."

The popularity of the hymn was greatly aided by its beautiful chorale (named by Mr. Mercer, Frankfort), which has been called "The Queen of Chorales," and to which has been called "the Queen or Chorales," and to which many city chimes in Germany were soon set. It was pub. with the hymn, and is probably an original tune by Nicolai, though portions may have been suggested by earlier melodies, especially by the "Resonet in laudbus," which is probably of the 14th cent. (Bismeter 1., No. 48, cites it from the Obsequiale, Ingoletadt, 1670. In Allon's Cong. Pealmist named Arimathea).

Translations in C. U.:--

1. How bright appears the Morning Star! This is a full and fairly close version by J. C. Jacobi, in his Psal. Ger., 1722, p. 90 (1732, p. 162); repeated, with alterations, in the Moravian H. Bk., 1754, pt. i., No. 317 (1886, No. 360). The versions of st. v., vii. beginning, "The Father from eternity," are included in Aids to the Service of Song, Edin. N.D., but since 1860. In 1855 Mercer gave in his C. P. & H. Bh., as No. 15, a hymn in 4 st. of 10 l., of which five lines are exactly from Jacobi. St. i., ll. 1-3; ii., ll. 8, 9; iii., 11. 2, 3, 6; iv., l. 10, are exactly; and i., l. 9; ii., ll. 2, 3, 6, 10; iii., il. 1, 4, 5; iv., ll. 7, 9 are nearly from the Moravian H. Bh., 1801. The interjected lines are by Mercer, but bear very slight resemblance either to Nicolai's original text, or to any version of the German that we have seen. In his 1859 ed. he further recast it, leaving only the first line unaltered from Jacobi; and this form is in his Or. ed., 1864, No. 121, in the lrish Church Hyl., 1869 and 1873, and in the Hyl. Comp., 1870 and 1876. In Kennedy, 1863, the text of 1859 is given with alterations, and begins "How brightly dawns the Morning Star"; and this form is in the People's Hyl., 1867; Dale's Eng. H. Bk., 1874, &c.

2. How graciously doth shine afar. By A. T. Russell, as No. 8 in the Dalston Hospital H. Bk., 1848, and repeated in the Cheltenham College H. Bk., No. 37. It is a free tr. of st. i., vi., v.

- 3. How lovely shines the Morning Star! good and full tr. by Dr. H. Harbaugh (from the text in Dr. Schaff's Deutsches G. B., 1860), in the German Reformed Guardian, May, 1860, p. 157. Repeated in full in Schaff's Christ in Song, 1869, and abridged in Adams's Church Pastorals, Boston, U.S.A., 1864.
- 4. O Morning Star! how fair and bright. A somewhat free tr. of st. i., iii., iv., vii., by Miss Winkworth, as No. 149 in her C. B. for England, 1863. Repeated in the Pennsylvania Luth. Church Bh., 1868; Onio Luth. Hyl., 1880, &c.
- 5. How brightly shines the Morning Star, In truth and mercy from afar. A tr. of st. i., iii., iv., vii., by Miss Borthwick, as No. 239 in Dr. Pagenstecher's Coll., 1864.
- 6. How brightly glows the Morning Star. full, from Knapp's German recast, by M. W. Stryker, in his Hys. & Verses, 1883, p. 52; repeated, omitting st. ii., iv., in his Christian Chorals, 1885, No. 145.

Nitschmann, Anna, daughter of David Nitschmann, cartwright, at Kunewald, near Fulnek, Moravia, was b. at Kunewald, Nov. 24, 1715. Her cousin, David Nitschmann (the first Bishop, 1735, of the renewed Brethren's Unity) while on a visit to Kunewald in the beginning of 1725, persuaded her father to remove to Herrnhut, where the family arrived on Feb. 25, 1725. On March 17, 1730, Anna was appointed Unity-Elder, with the care of the unmarried sisters; on May 4, 1730, joined with Anna Dober in founding the Jung-frauenbund (see p. 304, ii.); and in 1738 en-tered the unmarried sisters' house at Herrnhut. In 1735 she became companion to Zinzendorf's daughter, the Countess Benigna, and accompanied her, in 1737, to England. During the summer of 1740 she went with her own father to America, arriving in Pennsylvania Dec. 5, 1740. After the arrival of Zinzendorf and the Countess Benigna, in 1741, Anna joined with them in work among the Indians. She returned to Germany in 1743. After the death of his first wife on June 19, 1756, Zinzendorf married Anna at Berthelsdorf on June 27, 1757. When on May 5, 1760, Zinzendorf felt his fatal illness, she also succumbed, and after his death, on May 9, gradually sank and d., May 21, 1760, at Herrnhut (Allg. Deutsche Biog. xxiii. 700; Ms. from Diaconus J. T. Müller, Herrnhut, &c.). Her hymns were written 1735-1748; the earlier in Herrnhut, some in Pennsylvania, others from 1743 to 1748. They appeared in the various Appendices to the Herrnhut G. B. of 1735. Only two have passed into use outside of the English Moravian H. Bk. These are:-

i. Ich bin das same Würmlein dein. Humility. Ist pub. as No. 1592 in Appendix x. circa 1741 to the Herrnhut G. B., 1735, in 12 et. of 41. When repeated in the Brüder G. E., 1778, No. 851, st. 1., Il. 1, 2; iv., Il. 1, 2; il., ili.; xii. were selected with alterations, and a stanza by C. Gregor (which begins "Mein Relland! dass ich ohne dich") was prefixed. The tr. in C. U. is:—My Saviour, that I without Thee. Tr. in full by F. W. Foster, from the text of 1778, and given as No. 450

NITSCHMANN, JOHANN

in the Moravian H. Bk., 1789 (1886, No. 580). Included, omitting st. v., in J. A. Latrobe's Coll., 1841.

H. Mein Künig, deine Liebe. Christian Work. Appeared as No. 1233 in Appendix vil. circa 1737 to the Herrshut G. B., 1735, in 14 st. of 61. In the Brüder G. B., 1778, No. 1355, reduced to 6 stanzas (st. v. in 1778 is by N. L. Zinzendorf). The only tr. in C. U. is noted at p. 558.

noted at p. 556.
Another tr., is: "Thou our exalted first-born Brother." This is a tr. of st. xiv. in the Moravian H. Bk., pt. ii., 1748, p. 798. In 1754, pt. ti., p. 385, altered to "O Thou our first-born Brother" (1849, No. 862, st. ii.). [J. M.]

Nitschmann, Johann, brother of Anna Nitschmann, was b. Sept. 25, 1712, at Kunewald, and came to Herrnhut in 1725. In 1726 the Count von Promnitz took him into the Orphanage at Sorau, and in 1728 sent him to study theology at Halle. In 1731 he became a tutor in the Orphanage at Herrnhut, in 1732 went to Halle to study medicine, but returned to Herrnhut in 1733, and spent a year as private secretary to Count Zinzendorf. Thereafter up to 1745 he was principally engaged in mission work in Swedish Lapland, and in forming communities in Livonia. He was then appointed, in 1745, diaconus and Gemeinhelfer at Horrnhaag in Wetteravia, and in 1750 to the same position at Herrnhut. Consecrated Bishop of the Brethren's Unity in 1758, he took in 1761 the superintendence of the communities in England and Ireland. In 1766, he was appointed to the charge of the new settlement of Sarepta on the Volga in Asiatic Russia, and d. there June 30, 1783 (Allg. Deutsche Biog. xxiii, 714; ms. from Diaconus J. T. Müller, Herrnhut, &c.). His hymns are few in number, and not of much importance. Only one has passed into use outside the English Moravian H. Bk. It is:-

Du blutiger Versühner. The Lamb of God. Du blutiger versühner. The Lamb of God. Appeared as No. 1210 in Appendix vi., c. 1737 to the Herrahut G. B., 1735, in 5 st. of 6 l. In the Brüder G. B., 1738, it is No. 575, and in the Historische Nachricht thereto st. iv. is ascribed to N. L. von Ziuzendorf. The tr. in C. U. is noted at p. 558, i.

Another tr. is "Dear Lamb, from everlasting slain," as No. 21 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1742. In the 1739 and later eds. (1849, No. 441), it begins "Gracions Redeemer, Who for us."

[J. M.]

No Gospel like this Feast. Elizabeth Charles, nee Rundle. [Holy Communion.] Pub. in her The Three Wakings and Other Poems, 1859, p. 149. It has passed into a large number of hymnals, including the Universal H. Bk., 1885, the American Laudes Domini, 1884, and others. [J. J.]

No prophet, nor dreamer of dreams. J. Hart. [Adoration.] 1st pub. in his Hys. composed on Various Subjects, &c., 1759, in 7 st. of 8 l., and based upon the words "If there arise among you a prophet, or a dreamer of dreams, and giveth the sign or wonder," &c., Deut. xiii. I, &c. In its original form it is not in common use; but the following centos have been compiled therefrom :-

1. This God is the God we adore. This is the last stanza of the hymn, and was given in M. Madan's Supp. to Pr. and Hys., 1763, No. 182, broken into 2 st. of 41. The same arrangement was repeated by A. M. Topisdy in his Ps. & Hys., 1776, No. 127. From these collections it descended as an individual hymn to the modern hymnals. The same stanza, but altered to:

2. This, this is the God we adors, was given in the Supp. of the Wez. H. Bk., 1830, is continued in the revised ed., 1875, and also found in other collections. In the Bap. Sci. of Pt. and Hys., 1838, No. 380, a cento is given, the first stanza of which we have not traced; but

st. ii., iii., are composed of Hart's "This God is the God we adore." It begins :-3. The God Who oreated the skies, and is repeated in the Bap. Ps. & Hys., 1858, No. 280.

4. How good is the God we adore. In The Enlarged London H. Bk., 1873. [J. J.]

No sleep, no slumber, to his eyes. I. Watts. [Ps. czxxii.] 1st pub. in his Pealms of David, &c., 1719, in S et. of 4 l., and headed "A Church Established." In its full form it is not in general use; but as, "Arise, O King of grace, arise" (st. iii.-v.), as in the Leeds H. Bk., 1853, it is in somewhat extensive use, especially in America. [J. J.]

No songs shall break our gloom today. W. C. Dix. [Good Friday.] Pub. in Lyra Messianica, 1864, p. 244, in 7 st. of 4 l., and entitled "Calvary." It was also included in the author's Hys. and Carols for Children, 1869. In the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871, "O Thou the Eternal Son of God" is composed of st. ii., iv.-vii. of this hymn. [J. J.]

No track is on the sunny sky. F. W. Faber. [Whitsuntide.] Appeared in his Jesus and Mary, &c., 1849, in 18 st. of 4 l., on "The Mission of the Holy Ghost." From it three centos have come into C. U.: (1) "No track is on the sunny sky;" (2) "The Mother prays her mighty prayer;" and (3) "The Mother sits all worshipful." In these various forms its use is somewhat extensive. [J. J.]

Nobis, Olympo redditus. Jean Baptiste de Santeüil. [Ascension.] This hymn appeared in the Cluniac Breviary, 1686, p. 503, as "Nostras, Olympo redditus." It was repeated in Santeuil's Hymni Sacri et Novi, 1689, p. 24 (ed. 1698, p. 106), in 5 st. of 4 l. In the Paris Breviary, 1736, st. ii. is omitted, and another was added as the concluding stanza, beginning, "Venture Judex saeculi." The 1736 text is in J. Chandler's Hys. of the Prim. Church, 1837, and Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. Tr. as :-

1. 0 Christ, Who hast prepared a place. By J. Chandler, from the Paris Brev. text, in his Hys. of the Prim. Church, 1837, p. 86. It was soon introduced into the hymn-books, sometimes with slight alterations, as in Murray's Hymnal, 1852; and at other times with the omission of st. v., as in Mercer, Oxford ed., 1864, and others. In H. A. & M., 1861, it reads: "O Christ, Who dost prepare a place," but it is omitted from the revised ed., 1875. This tr. in various forms is in extensive use. In Martineau's Hymns, 1873, 3 st. are given as "The Crucified is gone before,"

2. Thou Who dost build for us on high. By I, Williams. 1st printed in the British Magazine, Dec. 1834 (vol. vi. p. 621, with the Latin). It was also included in his Hys. tr. from the Parisian Breviary, 1839, p. 145. It is given, with alterations, in the Hymnary, 1872.

3. 0 Christ, Who, lifted to the sky. By R. C. Singleton. Written in 1867, and pub. in his Anglican H. Bk., 1868.

Other trs. are :-

1. Jesu! Thou from earth hast vanished. W. J. Blew, 1852-56.

2. Enthroned in heaven, Thy mansions fair.

Octave of Corpus Christi, and consists of 5 st. and a doxology. Tr. as:-

Soon the fary sun ascending. By E. Caswall. 1st pub. in his Musque of Mary, 1858, p. 305, in 5 st. of 6 l.; and again in his Hymns, &c., 1873, p. 158. It is given in the People's H., 1867; the Hymnary, 1872: and others, including some Roman Catholic collections. [J. M.]

Nocte surgentes vigilemus omnes. St. Gregory the Great. [Early morning.] This is one of the eight hymns which the Benedictine editors assign to St. Gregory (Opera, Paris, 1705, iii., col. 879). It is found in three 11th cent. Hymnaries of the English Church, now in the British Museum (Vesp. D. xii., f. 6b; Jul. A. vi., f. 20b; Harl. 2961, f. 219), and in an 11th cent. Breviary of the Spanish Church (Add. 30848, f. 67 and f. 70 b). It is in an 11th cent. Ms. at Corpus Christi, Cambridge (391, p. 229), and in the Latin Hys. of the Anglo-Saxon Ch. (Surtees Society), 1851, is printed from an 11th cent. MS. at Durham (B. i.i. 32, f. 3 b). Also in a tenth cent. Ms. at Bern, No. 455, and an 11th cent. Ms. at St. Gall, No. 387. It is the companion hymn to and in the same metre as "Ecce jam noctia," (p. 320, i.) It was included in the Roman (Venice 1478, and Rome, 1632), Sarum, York, Aberdeen, and other Breviaries, generally assigned to Sunday Matins or Nocturns from Trinity S. to Advent. The text is also in Daniel i. No. 146: Wackernagel i., No. 95.; Hymnarium Sarisb., 1851, p. 127; Königsfeld i., p. 76, and Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and [J. M.]

The translations of this hymn are :-

I. Let us arise and watch by night. Card. Newman in Tracts for the Times, 1836, No. 75, p. 27; Verses, &c., 1863 and 1868 2. Throughout the hours of darkness dim. Hymna-

Noel, Hon. Baptist Wriothesley, M.A., younger s. of Sir Gerard Noel Noel, Bart., and brother of the Earl of Gainsborough, was b. at Leithmont, near Leith, July 10, 1799, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge. Taking Holy Orders he was for some time Incumbent of St. John's Episcopal Chapel, Bedford Row, London, and Chaplain to the Queen; but in 1848 he seceded from the Church of England, and subsequently became a Baptist Minister. He was pastor of St. John's Street Chapel, Bedford Row, until 1868. He d. Jan. 19, 1878. His prose works, about twelve in all, were pub. between 1847 and 1868. His association with hymnology is through :-

(1) A Selection of Psalms and Hymns adapted chiefly for Congregational and Social Worship by Baptist Wriothesley Noel, M.A. (2) Hymns about Jesus, by Baptist Wriothesley Noel, N. n. A collection of 159 hymns, the greater part of which are his own or recasts by him of older hymns.

The Sel. appeared in 1832. It passed through several editions (2nd ed., 1838; 3rd, 1848, &c.), that for 1853 being enlarged, and It passed having also an Appendix of 39 original "Hymns to be Used at the Baptism of Believers." From this Sel. the following hymns are still in C. U.:-

Devoted unto Thee. Holy Baptism. From "O God, Who art our Friend."

2. Glory to God, Whose Spirit draws. Hely Baptism. 3. Jesus, the Lord of glory died. Jesus the Guide.
4. Lord, Thou hast promised to baptize. Holy Bap-

5. We gave [give] ourselves to Thee. Holy Baptim. [J. J.]

Noel, Hon. Gerard Thomas, M.A., elder brother of the Hon. Baptist W. Noel, was b. Dec. 2, 1782, and educated at Edinburgh and Cambridge. Taking Holy Orders, he held successively the curacy of Radwell, Hertfordshire, the Vicarages of Rainham and Romsey, and a Canonry in Winchester Cathedral. He died at Romsey, Feb. 24, 1851. His published works include Fifty Sermons for the Use of Families, 1830; Sermons preached in Romsey, 1853; and Arvendel, or Sketches in Italy and Switzerland, 1813. In this last work some of his earlier hymns appeared. He also compiled:—A Selection of Psalms and Hymne from the New Version of the Church of England and others; corrected and revised for Public Worship, London, J. Hatchard, 1810. In this Sel. he gave a few hymns of his own, but anonymonsly. The 3rd ed., 1820, is enlarged, and has an Appendix of 17 hymns. Three of his hymns are in C. U.:-

1, If human kindness meets return. Jesus the 1. If human kindness meets return. Faus the Friend. This appeared in his Arvendel, &c., and his St. of Ps. & Hys., 1810, No. 45. It is in extensive use.

2. Stamped as the purpose of the skins. Missions. This is found in the February number of the Christian Observer, 1810, in 6 st. of 4 l., and is signed "N." In his Sel. of Ps. & Hys., 1810, No. 43, and in the 3rd ed., 1820, No. 174, it begins "Mark'd as the purpose of the skies." In this form it is known to the modern collections.

Νόμος ήν γενικός του παντός δ πρώτιστος νόος (Naasseni, The.]

Non abluunt lymphae Deum. Nicolas le Tourneaux. [Epiphany.] This hymn, on the Baptism of our Lord, appeared in the Chimiae Brev., 1686, p. 229, beginning, "Lavacra puri gurgitus," and signed "N. T. P. R."
When included in the Paris Brev., 1786, as the hymn for Compline during the Octave of the Epiphany, it began with st. ii., " Non abluunt lymphae Deum," and in this form it is known to the present time, both in Latin and in the tra into Euglish. This text is in Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. Tr. as :-

1. It is not that the wave can wash our God. By I. Williams, in the British Magazine, 1835 (vol. viii, p. 152), and his Hys. tr. from the Parisian Breviary, 1839, p. 90.

2. Since the heavenly Lamb hath stood. By W. J. Blew, in his Church Hy. and Tune Bk., 1852-

55, and Rice's Sel. from the same, 1870, No. 19. The opening stanza of this hymn is original, by Mr. Blew. The tr. of "Non abluunt" begins Mr. Blew. The tr. of "Non abluunt" with st. ii., "Water washes not our God."

Other trs. are :-1, God needeth not the cleansing wave. R. Campbell. 1850. 2. The waters cleanse not Thee, O Lord. [J. J.] Chambers. 1857.

Non ce n'est pas mourir. C. Malan. [Hope in Death.] Pub. in his Chants de Sion, ou Receuil de Cantiques, 1832, No. 233. It was tr. into German by A. Knapp, and included in his Christoterpe (an annual), 1836, p. 116. It is No. 2 of "Hymns by Caesar Malan of Geneva. Translated from the French by the Geneva. Translated from the French by the Editor" [Knapp]. It is also in Knapp's Gedichte, Neueste Folge, 1843, p. 301, and begins, "Nein, nein, das ist kein Sterben." It was tr. from the German into English by Dr. G. W. Bethune (p. 139, i.), as "It is not death to die," and by Dr. R. P. Dunn (p. 316, ii.) as "No, no, it is not dying." The latter is in Sacred Lyrics from the German, Philadelphia, U.S., 1859, p. 153; in Schaff's Christ in Song, 1869, p. 661 (1870, p. 531), and several hymn-books.

Non parta solo sanguine. Jean Baptiste de Santeuil. [Saints, not Martyrs.] Appeared in the Cluniac Breviary, 1686, p. lvii., and his Hymni Sacri et Novi, 1689, p. 214 (ed. 1698, p. 252). In the Paris Breviary, 1736, it is given for the "Common of Just Persons." The text is also in J. Chandler's Hys. of the Prim. Church, 1837; and Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. Tr. as:

1. Not by the martyr's death alone. By I. Williams, in the British Magazine, Dec., 1833, p. 622, and again in his Hys. tr. from the Parisian Breviary, 1839, p. 315, in 6 st. of 4 i. This text is rarely given in its original form in the hymn-books. That in H. A. & M. is very considerably altered by the compilers; and that in the Hymnary by the editors. Thring takes the H. A. & M. text, and adds thereto emendations by himself. Others adopt a somewhat similar plan, so much so that it is almost always safe to say that any given text beginning "Not by the martyr's, &c." is based upon I. Williams.

9. No purple with his life-blood stained. By R. F. Littledale, made for, and first pub. in the People's H. 1867, and signed "F. R."

Other trs. are :-

1. 'Tis not the blood-stained vest alone. J. Chandler, 1837.

2. Not always earned by wounds and pain. [J. J.]

None is like Jeshurun's God. Wesley. [Safety in God.] Appeared in Hys. and Sacred Poems, 1742, p. 248, in 9 st. of 8 L, and based on Deut. xxxiii. 26, &c. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. ii. p. 205.) It was included in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, No. 395, with the emission of st. vii.-ix., and the alteration in st. ii. of :-

"God liath underneath thee spread His everlasting arms, to :---" Round thee and beneath are spread The everlasting arms.

The alteration in the same st. of "Sinner! what hast thou to dread?" to "Israel, what hast thou," &c., has been traced to a copy whose transient years.

of the Wes. H. Bk. of 1797. The hymn, usually with these changes, is in C. U. in G. Britain and America. [J, J,]

Norris, John, b. at Collingbourne, Kingston, Wilts, 1657, his father being clergyman of the parish. He was educated at Winchester. and Exeter College, Oxford, subsequently becoming a Fellow of All Souls. From Oxford he passed, in 1689, to the Rectory of Newton St. Loe, Somersetshire, and thence, in 1691, to Bemerton, near Salisbury (and once the home of George Herbert), where he d. and was buried, in 1711. He was noted as a theologian, and as a metaphysical writer, his works on those subjects being many. In 1687 he published A Collection of Miscellanies, in prose and verse, in which four versions of individual psalms were given. A specimen from these is found in Holland's British Psalmists, and the whole were reprinted in 1871 with Norris's other poems in Dr Grosart's Fuller Worthies' Miscellanies. From his Coll. of Miscellanies, 1687, two hymns have passed into Martineau's Hymns, &c., 1873 :-1. In vain, great God, in vain I try. God Omniscient.
2. Long have I viewed, long have I thought. Resignation.

Norton, Andrews, D.D., s. of Samuel Norton, was b. at Higham, Massachusetts, Dec. 31, 1786, and was educated at Higham, and at Harvard College. After being engaged there for a short time as a tutor, he was appointed Librarian, and subsequently Lecturer on Biblical Criticism, as successor to Dr. Channing. When the Theological School was opened in 1819 he became Dexter Professor of Literature. This position he held until 1830. He d. at Newport, Rhode Island, Sept. 18, 1853. He was for some time editor of the General Repository and Review, and pub. several prose works, one of the most extensive being The Genuineness of the Gospels, in 4 vols. His hymns are few in number, and are mainly meditations in verse. They were contributed to various periodicals, and after his death were collected and pub. in a small volume. Of these hymns the following are in C. U.:- nation.

1. Another year, another year, The unceasing rush, to. Close of the Year. Appeared in the Christian Examiner in Nov. and Dec., 1827, in 11 st. of 4 l. It is used in an abbreviated form. In the American Boston Unitarian Hymn [4] Tune] Bk., 1868, it begins with st. vi., "O what concerns it him whose way."

2. Faint not, poor traveller, though thy way. Fortitude. Printed in the Christian Disciple, July and Aug., 1822, in 7 st. of 4 l., and again in the West Boston Coll., 1823.

3. He has gone to his God, he has gone to his home. Burial. Printed in the Christian Examiner, Jan. and Feb., 1824.

4. My God, I thank Thee! may no thought. Trust and Submission. Appeared in the Monthly Anthology and Boston Review, Sept., 1809. This is his earliest and best known hymn.

5. 0 stay thy tears : for they are blest. Burial of the Young. Printed in the General Repository and Review, April, 1812, in 5 st. of 4 l. In 1855, st. iii.-v. were given in Beecher's Plymouth Coll., No. 1094, as "How blest are they

6. Where ancient forests round us spread. Dedication of a Church. This "Hymn for the Dedication of a Church," is dated 1883.

These hymns are in some of the American hymnals. Nos. 1, 4, 5 are in Martineau's Hymns, 1873, and the full texts of all are in Putnam's Singers and Songs of the Liberal Faith, Boston, U.S.A., 1875. [F. M. B.] Faith, Boston, U.S.A., 1875.

Norton, Thomas. [Old Version, § ix. 7.]

Not all the blood of beasts. I. Watte. [Christ the Heavenly Sacrifice.] 1st pub. in his Hys. and Spiritual Songs, enlarged ed., 1709, Bk. ii., No. 142, in 5 st. of 4 l., and headed "Faith in Christ our Sacrifice." It was brought into use in the Church of England through M. Madan's Ps. & Hys., 1760; and A. M. Toplady's Ps. & Hys., 1776. In these collections alterations were introduced which, with additions from other sources, have been handed down to modern hymnbooks. These changes in the text are the outcome of religious convictions and controversy. The most striking instance of this fact is given in the Wes. H. Bk. new ed., 1875. The outlook of Watts, which is that of hope, and the outlook of Methodism, which is that of absolute knowledge, is strikingly set forth in st. iv. and v. as follows:-

I. Watts, 1709. " My soul looks back to see The burdens Thou didst bear,

When hanging on the cursed tree, And hopes her guilt was there.

"Believing we rejoice To see the curse remove; We bless the Lamb with cheerful voice, And sing His bleeding love."

Wes. H. Bk. 1875. "My soul looks back to see The burden Thou didst

When hanging on the accursed tree, And knows her guilt was there,

"Believing, we rejoice To feel the curse remove:

We bless the Lamb with cheerful voice, And trust His bleeding love."

U. Presb. H. Bk., 1852.

In addition to these, other alterations have crept into the text. The following list will assist in tracing these out :--

St. I. . . . our stain . Wes. H. Bk., 1830. Stowell's Ps. & Hys., 1831. St. iii. Upon that head Divine . . . Elliott's Ps. & Hys., 1835. On that meek head . Wes. H. Bk., 1875.

to the mark death of the first like for the first l there St. v. To feel the curse . To feel the curse . Wes. H. Bk., 1830.

And trust His . Wes. H. Bk., 1875.
And sing redecating Stowell's Ps. & Hys., 1831.
And sing His dying U. Presb. H. Bk., 1852.

In some American collections the hymn begins, "No blood of bird or beast;" but its use in this form is limited. With one or more of the above alterations in the text, it is in extensive use in all English-speaking countries. It has also been translated into several languages. The Latin tr. by B. Bing-ham in his Hymno. Christ. Lat., 1871, is "Omnis sanguis bestiarum." [J, J]

Not for three or four transgressions. G. Phillimore. [Cattle Plague.] Written for and pub. in the Parish H. Bk., as an addition to the edition of 1863, circa 1866, in 7 st. of 4 l., and again in the new ed. 1875, No. 271. In the Sarum Hyl., 1868, st. i.-iv., vii., were given with slight alterations as No. 95. [J. J.]

Not from the dust affliction grows. I. Watts. [Affliction of God.] Pub. in his Hymns, &c., 1709, Bk. i., No. 83, in 4 st. of 4 l., and from thence has passed into a few In the Translations and Parahymnals. phrases of the Church of Scotland, which were authorized in 1781, this hymn (No. 5) is included in a new form as, "Tho' trouble springs not from the dust." In this form Watts is reproduced in everything but the actual words. By whom this recast was made is not known. In the marked copy of the Trs. & Paraphs. by the daughter of W. Cameron (p. 200, ii.) it is left a blank. [J. J.]

Not here as to the prophet's eye. J. Montgomery. [Opening of a Place of Worship.] Written for the opening of the Methodist New Connexion Chapel, South Street, Moor, Sheffield, June 8, 1828, and printed as a flyleof for the occasion. [M. MSS.] It was included in Conder's Cong. H. Bk., 1836, No. 465, and in Montgomery's Original Hymns, 1853, No. 297, in 5 st. of 41. It is in C. U. in G. Britain and America. [J. J.]

Not to the terrors of the Lord. Watts. [Whitsuntide.] Appeared in his Hys. and Spiritual Songs, 1709, Bk. ii., No. 152, in 6 st. of 4 l., and entitled "Sinal and Sion." It is in C. U. in G. Britain and America. It is also in use in the following forms:

1. Not to the terrors of the Lord. In the Mitre H. Bk., 1836, No. 203; Hennedy, 1863, and others. This is composed of st. i., ii., from Watts, and a third stanza probably by E. Osier, who assisted W. J. Hall in compiling the Mitre H. Bk.

2. Behold the radiant, countless host. Composed of

st. iii., v. altered, in The Church Hymnal, Philadelphia,

3. The saints on earth and those above (q.v.). The opening stanza of this cento is st. v. of this hymn. [J, J]

Not unto us, but to Thy Name. [Salvation through Grace.] The first stanza of this cento is from J. Cennick's hymn, "Let us the sheep in Jesus named" (p. 678, ii.), somewhat altered, and the rest of the cento is by T. Cotterill. It appeared in the Utloxeter Collection [see Staffordshire Hymn-books], 1805, and again in Cotterill's Sel., 1810-20. It is given in several modern collections in G. Britain and America. [J. J.]

Not what these hands have done. H. Bonar. [Salvation through Christ alone.] Pub. in his Hys. of Faith and Hope, 2nd Ser., 1861, in 12 st. of 4 l. In its full form it is not in C. U.; but the following centes are in several hymnals in G. Britain and America:---

1. Not what these hands have done. In the Cong.

Church Hymnai, 1887, and others.

2. Not what I feel or do. Beginning with st. ii. in the American Bap. Hymn and Tune Bk., Philadelphia, 1811, &c.

3. I bless the Christ of God. Opening with st. vii.
This is the most popular of the centos, and is given in a great number of hymn-books in G. Brit. and America.

4. I praise the God of grace. This begins with st. ix., and is in several collections.

Through these various forms this hymn is in extensive use. [J. J.]

Not worthy, Lord, to gather up the crumbs. Bp. E. H. Bickersteth. [Holy Communion.] Written in 1872, and included in the revised ed. of his H. Companion, 1876. It is also in several other collections. [J. J.]

Notker Balbulus, so called from his slight stuttering, was b. in Switzerland about 840. Ekkehard V. in the 2nd Chapter of his Vita Sancti Notheri (written about 1220), savs he was b. at Heiligau, now Eigg, in the Canton of Zürich; but Meyer von Knonau (see below), seeing that his family were closely connected with Jonswil in the Canton of St. Gall, thinks that Notker was probably b. at Jonswil. He entered the school of the famous Benedictine Abbey of St. Gall at an early age, and spent the rest of his life there. In due course he was admitted as one of the brethren of the monastery; in 890 is marked as librarian, and in 892 and 894 as guestmaster (hospitarius); his principal employment being in scholastic and literary work. He became eventually one of the foremost in the monastery at that its most flourishing period; but was never abbot there (Notker the Abbot of St. Gall, who d. 975, was of a younger generation), and declined various offers of preferment elsewhere. He d. at St. Gall, April 6, 912. In 1513 he was beatified by Pope Julius II., but does not seem to have been formally canonized, nor does an office in his honour appear to have been authorised for use except at St. Gall (Lebensbild des heiligen Notker von St. Gallen, by G. Meyer von Knonau, Zürich, 1877; Allg. Deutsche Biog., xxiv. 35, &c.).

Ekkehard IV. (d. 1060), in his Casus Sancti Galli, chapter iii., thus lovingly characterises Notker (a tr. would not express the conciseness of the original) :-

"Corpore, non animo, gracilis; voce, non spiritu, bal-buius; in divinis erectus, in adversis patiens ad omnia mitis, in nostratium acer erat exactor disciplinis; ad repentina timidulus et inopinata, praeter daemones infest-antes, erat ; quibus quidem se audenter opponere sole at. In orando, legendo, dictando, creberrimus. Et ut omnis sanctitatis ejus in brevi complectar dotes, sancti Spiritus erat vesculum, quo suo tempore abundantius nullum."

Notker was a favourite of the Emperor Charles the Fat, who paid him special attention during his visit to St. Gall, Dec. 4-6, 883. His claim to notice here is as the first important writer of sequences; and as indeed the practical inventor of this species of compositions. He seems to have begun writing sequences about 862, and in 885 collected them into a volume (the Liber Sequentiarum Notheri, hereafter in this article entitled the L. S. N.), which he dedicated to Liutward, who was Bishop of Vercelli, and Chancellor (till 887) to Charles the Fat. In the dedicatory epistle prefixed (reprinted by Daniel, v. p. 5, from the St. Gall us., No. 381) Notker gives an account of his first essays, of which the following is a summary:

ii. Origin of Nother's Sequences. — In his youth he says he found great difficulty in remembering the cadences of the neumes for musical notes which were set to the final a of the word Alleluia in the Gradual, between the Epistle and the Gospel; see p. 848, and p. 852]. When one of the monks of the Abbey of Jumièges (near Rouen, destroyed by the Normans in 851), after wandering from place to place came to St. Gall (about 862), he brought with him his Antiphonary. There, to his delight, Notker found words set to these troublesome neumes, but the words seem to to have been merely strung together for mnemonic purposes. Incited by this example, Notker determined to try to compose something more worthy of the occasion, and wrote the sequence "Laudes Deo concinat" to one of these sets of neumes. He showed his work to his master Iso.

[the first important teacher at St. Gall, where he was in residence 852-870; and, finally, as head of the outer school, which was meant for those who did not intend to become monks of St. Gall], who was delighted with it, but suggested various improvements, and especially that each syllable should go to one note. Following these instructions, Notker wrote a second sequence beginning "Psallat Ecclesia, mater illibata," and showed both to his other master Marcellus.

Insider marcellus, fan Irish Bishop, to Rome, and on their return journey settled at St. dall, about 850. He was certainly there from 853 to 855. He was a good scholar, and, above all, an excellent musician. On the division of the monastic school, he became head of the hinter school, which was meant for those who looked forward to becoming brether of the monastery. ward to becoming brethren of the monastery], who was greatly pleased with them, transcribed them on rolls, and gave them to the scholars to practice. (So the Dedicatory Epistle. Compare Dr. Neale's note in his Medieval Hymns, ed. 1863, p. 29, where he gives an interesting account of the origin of Sequences, though not a little of the information he gives regarding Notker seems to be derived from his own imagination.)

ili. The Notkerian Sequences. Genuine and False.—From this account it might seem perfectly easy to determine which are the genuine sequences of Notker. But no autograph copy of the L. S. N. has survived, and although there are still extant at least eight MSS. not later than the 11th cent., all professing to furnish us with the L. S. N., yet on examination it is found that no two MSS. exactly agree. From the fact that Notker was an accomplished musician, and is known to have composed the melodies as well as the words of sequences, one might hope to gain help. There is indeed an important as. at St. Gall (No. 484) apparently written early in the 10th century, which contains the melodies without words; but there is nothing to show which of these are by Notker, and which are earlier. Nor does early tradition help us much. In the interlinear notes to his Rhythmi de Sancto Otmaro (St. Gall Ms. 393, p. 153, both the text and notes being in Ekkehard's autograph), Ekkehard IV speaks of Notker as having composed 50 sequences, but nowhere does he give a list of their first lines. The conjecture of Wilmanns is probably correct, viz., that Ekkehard took the St. Gall Ms., No. 378, as his standard. It contains 55 sequences in the L. S. N. (Nos. 84, 114 had not been inserted when Ekkehard wrote), and deducting from this the sequences which in his Casus Sancti Galli Ekkehard definitely ascribes to others (Nos. 48, 95, 97, 106, 110, 111) there remain, in round numbers, 50. (See further below.)

The most careful attempt to settle what are genuine and what are fulse is in an article by W. Wilmanns (Welche Sequenzen hat Notker verfasst?) in Moriz Haupt's Zeitschrift für deutsches Alterthum, vol. xv., Berlin, 1872, pp. 267-294. With this may be compared P. Anselm Schubiger's Sängerschule St. Gallens, Einsiedeln, 1858; and K. Bartsch's Lateinische Sequenzen des Mittelatters, Rostock, 1868. The references in Daniel are confused and inexact.

iv. MSS. of Notker's Liber Sequentiarum. As a further contribution towards the settlement of this question, the present writer has procured collations of the sequences in the L. S. N, of the MSS. noted below.

To the kindness of Dr. Laubmann, Director of the Royal Library at Munich, we are indebted for the collations of the Mss. we and n; to the kindness of P. Gabriel Meier, O.S.B., of Einsiedeln, for the collation of Ms. c; and to the kindness of Dr. Rose, Director of the Ms. department of the Royal Library, Berlin, for the collation of Ms. l. References to the Mss. g, h, t, k, are given in the Index to the 1875 Verssichniss of the St. Gall Mss., but on examination it became evident that these references were very incomplete; and Horr Idtensohn, the librarian of the Stiftsbibliothek at St. AMERISONN, LIE HOTATIAN OF THE SKIIISDIDLICIDER AT St. Gall, has most obligingly made fresh collistions, with the results shown below. The was. g, h, i, k, l, m, n, are more fully described in Leon Gautier's Histoire de la Poesic Liturgique au Moyen Age. Les Tropes. Paris, 1886, pp. 127-135.

The eight mas, here indexed are :-

(e.) The Einsiedeln MS., No. 121, of about the end of the 10th cent. The first part of this Ms. consists of an Antiphonary, the so-called Antiphonarium Sancti Gre-gorii (see Scherer's Verseichnies, 1875, of the St. Gall gors (see Scherer's Verzeichnies, 1878, of the St. Gall 1883, p. 124). The L. S. N. occupies pp. 436-639. (g.) The St. Gall MS., No. 376, of the 11th cent. The L. S. N. occupies pp. 312-435. (h.) The St. Gall MS., Ro. 378, of the 11th cent. Here the L. S. N. is at pp. 146-296. (i.) The St. Gall MS., Ro. 380, of the 11th cent. The L. S. N. occupies pp. 118-272.

(k.) The St. Gall MS., No. 381, of the 11th cent. Here the L. S. N. is at pp. 325-498.
(i.) The Berlin MS. Lat. Theol., Quarte 11. Written at Minden about 1025, but apparently copied from a St. Gall Ms. The L. S. N. begins at folio 144.
(m.) The Munich MS., Lat. 14,083. This Ms. is of the 11th cent,, and was evidently written in the mon-astery of St. Emmeram, at Regensburg. The L. S. N. Is at folios 7-38.

(n.) The Munich MS., Lat. 14,322. This MS. Was also (N.) The Munica Mas, Lat. 18,222. This six, who sate ordiently written at Regensburg, about 1930. The L.S. N. is at folios 16-43; and the sequences found there are printed by Bernbard Pez, in his Thesaurus Anecdotorum, vol. i., Augsburg, 1721, cois. 16 ff., and repeated in Migne's P. P. Lat. cxxxi. 1003. The Ms. was still at Regensburg when Pez consulted it.

In analysing the contents of these was, it will be on the whole best to divide the sequences given in the L. S. N. in each case into two series. The First series contains those sequences which Wilmanns (who in deciding, gives special weight to the evidence of the St. Gall Ms., No. 484, and to their relation to the melodies ascribed to Notker) accepts as genuine. The Second series includes the remainder of the sequences in question

v. Table of Notkerian Sequences.—In this table we have the following divisions :-

(1) The first column gives the running numbers;
(2) the second the number of the Sequence in J. Kehrein's Lateinische Sequenzen des Mittelalters, Mainz, 1873;
(3) the third the first lines of the individual Sequences;

(3) he carra the first lines of the individual Sequences; (4) the fourth references to the was where found; (5) and the fifth states the subject or use of the sequence. The reference c-n, in column 4, means that the sequence is found in all the MSS, and the reference c-m, that it is in all the MSS, except s. Additional references to many of these sequences will be found in the MSS of the sequences. to many of these sequences will be found in the lists in the article Sequences, showing e.g. which of them have passed into the English Uses.

vi. Analysis of the Table.—In classifying the above 115 Sequences (including 70 b) we may first of all eliminate those which are certainly not by Notker, viz.:—

Nos. 48, 95, 97, 111, by Ekkehard I. (d. 973); No. 84, by Godescalous or Gottschalk (d. 1050); No. 106, by Waltram (fl. 899); No. 110, by Ekkehard II. (d. 990); No. 114, not inserted in the St. Gall was. before the 13th cent. No. 198 is sometimes secribed to Alcuin.

For the rest, taking the joint evidence of the two most important St. Gall MSS., Nos. 376 and 378, we find that the following are not contained in the L. S. N. of either, viz.:—

Nos. 3, 15, 20, 42, 44, 46, 49, 50, 51, 52, 60, 66, 67, 68, 69, 705, 71, 74, 77, 80, 86, 87, 88, 89, 92, 93, 94, 96, 98, 99, 100, 105, 107, 109, 112; and besides these Nos. 24, 57, 62, 64, 70, 104, while contained in No. 378 are not in the L. S. M.

To pursue the analysis further would exceed the limits of our space, and would require a mass of wearisome details. The conclusions the present writer, in view of all the evidence, has arrived at, may best be seen by his dividing the Sequences into four classes: I. Those which may be accepted as genuine. II. Those of which the ascription is probable. III. Those which may possibly be by Nother. IV. Those certainly not by Nother.

Nos. 1, 2, 4-14, 16, 17, 18, 21, 22, 23, 25-41, 43, 45, 47, 56, 58, 59, 65, 73, 82, 65: in all 48.

II.
Noc. 3, 19, 20, 24, 44, 46, 53, 54, 55, 61, 63, 72, 75, 78, 79, 81, 63, 88, 100, 101, 102, 103, 108, 113: in all 24.
III.

Nos. 15, 42, 49, 50, 51, 52, 57, 60, 63, 64, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 705, 71, 74, 76, 77, 80, 86, 87, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 96, 98, 99, 104, 105, 107, 109, 112: in all 37.

Nos. 46, 84, 95, 97, 106, 110, 111, 114: in all 8.

A more acute criticism may be able to discriminate the third class more accurately and eliminate from it those mistakenly acribed to Notker. One thing at least may be taken for granted, viz., that while the above lists probably contain various sequences not really composed by Notker, it is in the highest degree improbable that any here omitted can be his genuine compositions.

vii. Conclusion .-- Notker's Sequences are remarkable for their majesty and noble elevation of tone, their earnestness and their devoutness. They display a profound knowledge of Holy Scripture in its plainer and its more recondite interpretations, and a firm grasp and definite exposition of the eternal truths of the Christian Faith. The style is clear, and the language easily comprehensible, so that whether he is paraphrasing the Gospel for the day, or setting forth the leading ideas of the Church's festivals, or is engaged in vivid and sympathetic word-painting; he is at once pleasing and accurate. His sequences were speedily received with favour as a welcome change from sound to sense, and from the end of the 9th century to the middle of the 12th, they, together with sequences on the same model, were in universal use over Northern Europe. As they were written for the neumes of the Alleluia they were of course made to correspond thereto, and must be studied in connection with their melodies. The metrical rules governing their composition are intricate, suffice it to say here that they were written in rhythmical prose, somewhat in the form of the Hebrew Psalms, in irregular lines and without any attempt at rhyme. It is thus difficult to present a version in English which shall be at once exact and yet suited to modern congregational use. The only literal version which has attained any popularity in English is Dr Neale's tr. of No. 56, "Cantemus cuncti" (see p. 204, i.), and he complains bitterly (Med. Hys., ed. 1867, pp. viii., and 42) that hymnal compilers have ignored the ancient melody to which it was written, and that it has been "cramped, tortured, tamed down into a chant." Still the Notkerian sequences are worthy of greater attention than has been bestowed on them by English translators. If the endeavour to give a literal version is abandoned, they allow a wider choice of measures and greater freedom of rendering than the later rhyming Sequences. Those which have been attempted on these lines are Nos. 26, 43, 49, 56, 61, 65, 78, 87, the versions of which are noted under the first lines of the originals throughout this Dictionary; and besides these, there are various others worthy of and yet waiting for a good translation. The most famous of all the pieces ascribed to Notker is not in the lists given above, but is noted under "Media vita" (p. 721, I.). [J. M.]

Novalis [Hardenberg, G. F. P. von.]

Now are the days of humblest prayer. F. W. Faber. [Lent.] Pub. in the 2nd ed. of his Jesus and Mary, &c., 1852, in 8 st. of 7 l.; in his Oratory Hys., 1854, in 5 st., No. 12; and his Hymns, 1862, It is usually given in an abbreviated form, sometimes as in the Oratory Hys. as above, and again as in the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871, where st. iii., vi. and vii. are omitted. In the Hymnary, 1872, it begins, "Lord, in these days of humblest prayer." [J. J.]

Now begin the heavenly theme. [Redeeming Love.] The authorship of this hymn is unknown. The earliest form in which it is found differs widely from that followed in modern hymnals. In 1763 it appeared in the Appendix to M. Madan's Ps. and Hys., as No. claxii., thus:—

" REDEEDING LOVE.

- "Now begin the Heav'nly Theme, Sing aloud in Jesu's Name, Ye, who Jesu's Kindness prove Triumph in Repressing Love.
- "Ye, who fee the Fathor's Grace
 Reaming in the SAVIOUE's Face
 As to Cansan on ye move
 Praife and blefs REDERMING LOVE.
 iii.
- "Mourning Souls dry up your Tears, Banifh all your guity Fears, See your Guilt and Curfe remove, Cancell'd by REDERMING LOVE,
- "Ye, alas! who long have been Willing Slaves of Death and Sin, Now from Blifs no longer rove, Stop—and tate REDERNING LOVE.
- "Welcome all by Sin oppress,
 Welcome, to his facred Ress,
 Nothing brought Him from above,
 Nothing but Redeming Love.
- "He fubdu'd th' Infernal Pow'rs,
 His tremendous Foes and ours
 From their curied Empire drove,
 Mighty in Redeeming Love.
- vil.

 "Hither then your Mufick bring,
 Strike aloud each joyful String,
 Mortals join the Hofts above,
 Join to praife REDERMING LOVE."

In this form, or with alterations, the hymn appeared in about fifty collections between 1763 and 1833, and in all it was given anoromously, except in that of Dobell, 1806, who quoted it as from "Langford's Coll." This reference is to the Hymns and Spiritual Songs pub by John Langford (p. 639, ii.) in 1776, and in which the hymn appeared. In Langford's 2nd ed. he marked all his own hymns with an asterisk, but this hymn is unmarked. This is clear evidence against his authorabip. The error of ascribing the hymn to Langford arose through the careless editing of E. Bickersteth, who in the Index of his Christian

Psalmody, 1833, gave the hymn as "Now begin the, Langford." This was copied by later compilers, some expanding the name into "John Langford," and others into "William Langford," and all basing their guesses on an error. The earliest date to which it has been traced is Madan's Appendix, 1763. Failing evidence that it was written by Madan, we must give it as Anon. No. 982, in Kennedy, 1863, "Now the heavenly joy proclaim," is an altered form of this hymn. [J. J.]

Now, from the altar of our hearts. J. Mason. [Evening.] Appeared in his Spiritual Songs, or Songs of Praise, 1683, pp. 25-6, in 3 st. of 8 l., and a half stanza of 4 l., and entitled "A Song of Praise for the Evening." (Orig. text, Lyra Brit. p. 396.) The third stanza, which is usually omitted in the hymnals, and reads:—

"Man's life's a book of history;
The leaves thereof are days;
The letters, mercies closely join'd;
The title is Thy praise," is usually thought to have suggested Dr. Franklin's well-known epitaph upon himself, wherein he compares his body to "the cover of an old book, the contents torn out, and stripped of its lettering and gilding." The whole hymn is cometimes quoted, and not without reason, as Mason's finest production. [J. J.]

Now from the world withdrawn. J. Bulmer. [Evening.] 1st pub. in his Hys., Original and Select, &c., 1835, Bk. i., No. 157, in 4. st. of 4 I., and entitled "The Spirit of Prayer and Holiness implored." It is one of the very few hymns by the author which have come into general use. It is found in its original form in Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bk., 1866, No. 975, with, in st. i., l. 3, "O Lord" for "dear Lord."

Now gracious Lord, Thine arm reveal. J. Newton. [The New Year.] The first of thirteen hymns to be sung "Before Annual Sermons to Young People, on New Years' Evenings," 1st pub. in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. ii., No. 7., in 5 st. of 4 l., and headed "Prayer for a Blessing." (Orig. text, Hy. Comp., No. 90.) Its use is very extensive in all English-speaking countries; it has also been translated into several languages. [J. J.]

Now let a spacious world arise. I. Watts. [Creation.] Ist pub. in his Hymns, &c., 1709, Bk. ii., No. 147, in 11 st. of 4 l. Its use is limited. In the 1745 Draft of the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, No. xxxvii., it was given with the omission of st. xi., and the change, in st. ii., 1. 3, of "He call'd the Night," into "He call'd the Light," a change which evidently suggested the form of st. ii. in the recast of 1781. This recast, which opens, "Let heav'n arise, let earth appear," was given as No. i. (Gen. i. 1) in the authorized Trans. and Paraphs. of 1781, and has been in use in the Church of Scotland for more than 100 years. In the markings of authors and revisers by W. Cameron's daughter, this recast is claimed for him (see p. 200, ii.).

Now let a true ambition rise. P. Doddridge. [Seek first the Kingdom of God.] Written January 1, 1733 [D. MSA.], and pub. by Job Orton in his posthumous ed. of Doddridge's Hymns, 1755, No. 178, in 4 st. of 4 l., and headed, "Seeking first the Kingdom of God." It was also given in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the same, 1839, No. 199.

[J. J.]

Now let our cheerful eyes survey. P. Doddridge. [Jesus, the High Priest.] This hymn is No. 67 in the D. MSS., but undated. It is placed between hymns which are dated respectively "April 10, 1735," and "January 1, 1733." The heading reads "Christ bearing the names of His people on His breastplate, from Exodus xxviii. 29." When included by Job Orton in his posthumous ed. of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., 1755, No. 8, in 5 st. of 4 l., the heading was altered to "Christ's intercession typified by Aaron's Breastplate," and st. i., l. 4, was changed from "With correspondent love," to "And sympathetic love." In J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the Hymns, 1839, No. 9, the line reads, "His sympathy and love." He has also "And high o'er all the heavenly host," for "And high o'er all the shining train," in st. ii. This hymn is in C. U. both in G. Britain and America, Orton's text being that commonly adopted. Sometimes, however, it reads, " Now let our trustful eyes survey.* [J. J.]

Now let our mourning hearts revive. P. Doddridge. [Death of a Minister.] Written on the death of a Minister, at Kettering, August 22, 1736, and headed, "Comfort in God under the Removal of Ministers; or, other Useful Persons by Death, Joshua, i. 2, 4, 5" (D. MSS.) It was given in Job Orton's posthumous ed. of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., 1753, No. 17, in 6 st. of 4 l., with the heading changed to, "Support in the gracious presence of God under the Loss of Ministers, and other useful Friends"; and repeated in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the same, in 1839, with the same heading. It is in C. U. in G. Britain and America. Another form of the text, beginning with st. ii., "What though the arm of conquering death" is also in several collec-[J. J.]

Now let our souls ascend above, [Christian Confidence.] In the Draft Translations and Paraphrases of the Church of Scotland, 1745, this vigorous paraphrase of Rom. viii. 31-39, was given as No. xxxv., in 9 at. of 4 l. The authorship is unknown. The first stanza reads:-

" Now let our Souls ascend above the Fears of Guilt and Woe: Gop is for us, our Friend declared: who then can be our Foe?'

In the Draft of 1751, it remained unaltered; but in that of 1781 it assumed the form which was authorized in the Trans. and Paraphs. (No. xlviii.) of the same year. W. Cameron's daughter (p. 200, ii.) gives, in her markings of authors and revisers, J. Logan as the author of this arrangement of the text of 1745; and, as stated in the memoir of Bruce (p. 187, 1) in this work, we see no reason to doubt its accuracy. As this arrangement has been in authorized use in the Church of Scotland for more than 100 years, and some centos have also been compiled therefrom for use in English hymnals, we give the full text of 1781. with those portions taken from the Draft of 1745 printed in italics:— " Let Christian faith and hope dispel the feart of guilt and tooe; The Lord Almighty is our friend, and who can prove a foe?

2. " He who his Son most dear and lov'd gave up for us to dic, Shall he not all things freely give that goodness can supply?

3. "Behold the best, the greatest gift, of everlasting love!
Behold the pledge of peace below, and perfect bliss above!

Where is the judge, who can condemn, since God halk justified?
 Who shall charge those with guilt or crime for whom the Saviour died?

 "The Saviour dled, but rose again triumphant from the grave;
 And pleads our cause at God's right hand, omnipotent to save.

6. " Who, then, can e'er divide us more from Jesus and his love Or break the sacred chain that blads the earth to heav'n above?

Let troubles rise, and terrors frown, and days of darkness fall;
 Through him all dangers we'll defy, and more than conquer all.

B. " Nor death nor life, nor earth nor hell, nor time's destroying sway. Can e'er efface us from his heart, or make his love decoy.

9, "Each future period that will bless as it has bless'd the past; He lov'd us from the first of time; he loves us to the last."

The designation of this full text must thus be Scottish Tr. & Par., 1745, Anon., and J. Logan, 1781. In addition to the full text there are also the following centes in C. U.:-

Linere are also the following centos in C. U.:—

1. O let triumphant faith [hops] dispel. This form appeared in the American Prayer Bk. Coll., 1828, and has passed into several American collections.

2. The Saviour died, but rose again, This, in W. F. Stevenson's Hys. for Ch. and Home, 1873, is composed of st. v.-viii.

3. Who from the love of Christ our Head. This appeared in Mise Leeson's Paraphrases and Hys., 1853, It is based on st. vii.—ix. To this Miss Leeson added a second part in 4 st. as, "Let followers of the Apostics' fatth."

[J. J.]

Now let our souls on wings sublime. T. Gibbons. [Death anticipated.] Appended to Sermon iv. of his Sermons on Various Subjects, with a Hymn adapted to each Subject, 1762, p. 97, in 5 st. of 4 l., the text of the Sermon being Eccles. xii. 7, and the title "The Return of the Body to Earth, and the Return of the Soul to God." In 1769 it was included in the Bristol Bapt. Coll. of Ash & Evans, No. 206; in 1787, in Rippon's Sel., No. 223; and later in a large number of col-lections in G. Britain and America. The American Meth. Episco. Ch. Hymns, 1849, gives it in 4 at. as "Arise my soul on wings sublime." In the American Church Praise Bk., N. Y., 1882, No. 718, is a cento of which st. i., ii. are st. i. and iii. of this hymn, and st. iii., iv. are st. i. and iii. of J. Newton's "As when the weary traveller gains" (see p. 85, ii.). In its various forms this is one of the most widely known of the author's hymns.

Now let the feeble all be strong. P. Doddridge. [Help in Temptation.] Written June 24, 1739, on 1 Cor. x. 13, in 4 st. of 4 l. [p. mss.], and pub. by Job Orton in his posthumous ed. of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., 1785, No. 269, and again in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the same, 1839, No. 294, with the original heading, "Temptation moderated by the Divine Fidelity, Power, and Love," changed, "Temptation moderated by the as in the Hymns, 1755, to "God's fidelity in moderating Temptations." [J. J.] moderating Temptations."

Now let Thy servant die in peace. [Nunc Dimittis.] In the 1745 Draft of the Translations and Paraphrases of the Church of Scotland, the following paraphrase of Simeon's Song appeared :-

- " Now let thy Servant die in Peace, from this vain World dismist: I've seen thy great salvation, Lord: and hasten to my Rest.
- "Thy long-expected Grace, disclos'd before the People's View, Hath prov'd thy Love was constant still, and promises were true.
- "This is the Sun, whose cheering Rays, through Gentile Darkness spread, Pour Glory round thy chosen Race, and Blessings on their Head."

The author of this paraphrase is unknown. A second Paraphrase of the same passage, beginning, "When Jesus, by the Virgin brought," appeared in John Logan's Poems, 1781, in 7 st. of 4 l. This text is given in full in Dr. Grosart's Works of M. Bruce, 1865, рр. 135-6. For reasons assigned in the memoir of M. Bruce in this work (p. 187, i.), we regard this paraphrase as the work of Bruce, possibly with a few alterations by Logan. During the same year, 1781, the authorized Translations and Paraphrases of the Church of Scotland were published. In them, as No. 38, is a paraphrase of Simeon's Song, in 11 st. of 4 l., "Just and devout old Simeon liv'd." This is thus composed:—

St. i.-iii. First given in the Draft of 1781. St. iv.-vi. From the paraphrase as given in Logan's Poems.

St. vii. New, in Draft of 1781. St. viii. Based on 1745 text as above. St. ix. From the paraphrase in Logau's Poems. St. x., xl. Based on 1745 text as above.

This arrangement was made, according to the markings by the daughter of W. Cameron (p. 200, ii.), by J. Logan. In Miss J. E. Leeson's Par. & Hys., &c., 1853, No. lxviii., the hymn beginning, "Now lettest Thou Thy servant, Lord," in 16 l., is based upon st. viii., ix., and xi. of the 1781 text as above. It is by Miss Leeson, as is also the second hymn on the same subject, "Behold, according to Thy word."

[J. J.]

Now let us join with hearts and tongues. J. Newton. [Man honoured above Angels.) Appeared in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. ii., No. 39, in 7 st. of 4 l., and headed, "Man honoured above Angels." From this hymn "Jesus, Who passed the angels by," is taken. It is composed of st. iv.-vii. more widely used than the full hymn. [J. J.]

Now, Lord, we part in Thy great [blest] Name. J. Dracup. [Dismissal.] This hymn, which has undergone various modifications, first appeared in Dracup's Hys. and Spiritual Songs, Bolton, 1787, No. 62, entitled "At Parting," and reads:—

f. " Now, Lord, we part in Thy great Name, In which we here together came; Help us our few remaining days To live unto Jehovah's praise.

II. "Help us in life and death to bless, The Lord our strength and righteousness; And bring us all to meet above, Then shall we better sing Thy love."

In one or two instances the opening line is given as, "Now, Lord, we part in Thy blest Name." The most popular form of the hymn is that given to it by Bp. Heber, "Lord, now we part in Thy blest Name," and pub. in his poethumous Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 142, as a "Hymn after Sermon," and given as " Anon.," Bp. Heber's alterations are: st. l. l., "Lord, now" for "Now, Lord," "blest" for "great;" l. 3, "Grant" for "Help;" st. ii., l. 1, "Teach" for "Help;" l. 3, "And Grant" for "And bring" to this form it forms. bring." In this form it is found in several collections, including Kemble's Ps. & Hys.; the Irish Church Hymnal, 1873, &c. [W. T. B.]

Now may fervent prayer arise. J. Newton. [New Year.] The third of thirteen "Hymns before Annual Sermons to Young People on New Years' Evenings," pub. in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. ii., No. 9, in 7 st. of 61. It is in C. U. both in the original and in the following forms:-

- Bless, O bless the opening year.
 Bless, O Lord the opening year.
 Bless O Lord this opening year.
- Bless O Lord each opening year.

These forms of the text generally embrace st. ii., iii., vi., vii., and are in use in G. Britain and America. [J, J]

Now one day's journey less divides. Charlotte Elliott. [Evening.] 1st pub. in her brother's Ps. & Hys., 2nd thousand, 1836-7, in 6 st. of 4 l., as an Evening Hymn. In 1839 Miss Elliott rewrote the original stanzas, added four thereto, and included the 10 st. as the hymn for Tuesday evening in her Hys. for a Week, which were pub. in 1842. This full text is given in Snepp's Songs of G. & G., 1872. The 1836-7 st. are i., ii., iv., v., vi., x., and the 1839 st., iii., vii., viii., ix. No. 437 in the Presbyterian Sel. of Hys., Philadelphia, 1861, is from this revised text, but slightly altered.

Now shall my inward joy arise.

I. Watts. [God's care of His Church.] Pub. in his Hys. and Spiritual S., 1707, Bk. i., No. 39, in 6 st. of 4 l., as a paraphrase of Isaiah xlix. 13, &c. In this form its use is limited. In the Draft of the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, 1745, No. xvii., is a hymn on the same passage beginning, "Ye heav'ns, send forth your praising song." Of this hymn st. i.-iii. are by an unknown hand, and have little or no resemblance to the corresponding stanzes in Watts, whilst st. iv.-vi. are from his hymn, as above, with the alteration of a "kind woman," in st. iv., l. 1, to a "fond mother." In the authorized issue of the Trs. and Paraphs, of 1781 the opening line reads, "Ye heav'ns, send forth your song of praise;" and the text is a recast of the Draft of 1745 throughout. As Watta's text of st. iv.-vi. is easily attainable for comparison we add hereto only the text of st. i.-iii. from the 1745 Draft:-

"Ye heav'ns, send forth your praising song! Earth, raise thy Voice below! Let Hills and Mountains join the Choir, and joy thro' Nature flow !

 Behold, how gracious is our God! with what comforting Strains He cheers the Sorrows of our Heart, and banishes our Pains.
 Cease ye, when Days of Darkness fail, with troubled Hearts to mourn; As if the Lord could leave a Saint forsaken or forlorn."

The final recast of this hymn in the authorized issue of the Scottish Trs. & Paraphraes of 1781 is claimed for W. Cameron (p. 200, it.) by his daughter in her makings of authors and revisers of that issue. In Miss J. E. Leeson's Paraphs. & Hys., 1853, No. li., on the same passage is a hymn of 8 st. in two parts: (1) "Sing, O ye heavens! Be joyful, earth," and (2) "O Zion, from the stranger's land." This arrangement by Miss Leeson is based on the Scottish Trs. & Paraphs. of 1781, as above.

Now that my journey's just begun. Jane Taylor. [Early Piety.] Appeared in Hys. for Infant Minds, by A. & J. Taylor, 1810, in 9 st. of 4 l., with the motto, "Early will I seek Thee" (ed. 1886, p. 11). It is found in a few of the older hymn-books in an abbreviated form. With later compilers it is more popular, and is given in a great many collections for children. In a few hymnels, as the Meth. S. S. H. Bk., 1879, it begins, "Lord, now my journey's just begun."

Now the day is over. S. Baring-Gould. [Evening.] Written in 1865, and printed in the Church Times the same year. In 1868 it was given in the Appendix to H. A. & M., and from that date it has gradually increased in popularity until its use has become common in all English-speaking countries. [J. J.]

Now the labourer's task is o'er. J. Ellerton. [Burial.] Written for and 1st pub. in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871, in 6 st. of 61. Mr. Ellerton says:—

"The whole hymn, especially the third, fifth, and sixth verses, owes many thoughts, and some expressions, to a beautiful poem of the Rev. Gerard Moultrie's, beginning, Brother, now thy toils are o'er,' which will be found in the People's Hymnat, 380" (Notes on Church Hymna, p. iiii.).

From Church Hymns this hymn has passed into H. A. & M., Hy. Comp., Thring's Coll., and many other collections, and sometimes, as in the last-named, with the omission of at, iil. In R. Brown-Borthwick's Select Hys. for Church and Home, 2nd ed., 1885, the original text as it appeared in the 1st ed. of that work in 1871 is given as No. 72; and the revised and authorized text as in Church Hys., as No. 185. The latter is also in Mr. Ellerton's Hymns, &c., 1888, and may be at once known by the refrain:—

" Father, in Thy gracious keeping Leave we now Thy servant sleeping."

[J. J.]

Now the stars are lit in heaven. J. Keble. [Evening.] Appeared in the British Magazine, March, 1834, as one of five hymns entitled, "Lighting of Lamps." It was republished in Lyra Apostolica, 1836, in 5 st. of 6 l., and again in the author's posthumous Miscellaneous Poems, 1869, p. 19. In the Wellington College H. Bk., 1860, and later eds., st. iii. is omitted. [J. J.]

Now to our Saviour let us raise. J. M. Neals. [Ascension.] Appeared in his Hys. for Children, 1st Ser., 1842, in 7 st. of 1, No. xxviii., as a hynn for Ascension Day, and has been included in all later editions of the same. The hynn, "Christ is gone up, yet ere He passed," is compiled from the text of 1842. It appeared in Murray's Hymnal, 1852, being composed of st. ii.-vi. and the doxology. This form has been repeated in numerous collections, sometimes with the omission of the doxology as in H. A. & M., No. 352. The alterations which are found in most hymnals, in st. iv., where in 1.2 "to it is cold" is changed to "to her is cold;" and and 1.3, "And bring them in" to "Bring conderers in," date from Murray, 1852. Dr. Neale, having contemplated the use of the hymn at daily service, supplied an additional st. for use in such cases before the doxology. It reads:—

"And now we haste with thankful feet, To seek our Saviour's Face; And in the Hely Church to meet, His chosen dwelling-place."

In the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871, No. 170, the hymn for St. Matthias is thus composed: st. i.-ii., Dr. Neale, unaltered, as above; st. iii., Compilers of Church Hymns to adapt it to St. Matthias' Day; st. iv.-v., Neale altered.

Now to the Lord that makes us know. I. Watts. [Advent—Praise.] First pub. in his Hymns, &c., 1st ed., 1707, in 5 st. of 4 L, and entitled "Christ our High Priest and King: and Christ coming to Judgment." Its use outside the Nonconformist bodies has been limited. Orig. text in modern editions of Watts. It has been said that John Mason's Song of Praise, No. 33, on Rev. i., 1-12, suggested this hymn to Watts. The resemblance, however, is confined to the subject alone. In the Scottish Draft Translations and Paraphrases of 1745, No. xlv. is thus composed :- st. i.-iii., based on the above, by Watts, and st. iv. original, the opening line being, "To Him that lov'd the Souls of Men." In the Drafts of 1751 and 1781 it was repeated without alteration, and was finally authorized as No. lxiv. in the Trans. and Paraphs. of 1781, again without change. It thus holds the unique position of being the only para-phrase of the Draft of 1745 which passed without alteration into the authorized work of 1781. It has been in use in the Church of Scotland for more than 100 years, and is also included in a limited number of modern hymnals both in G. Britain and America. Its authorship, as distinct from Watts, is un-known. The statement that it is due to known. J. Morison has been made in ignorance of the fact that it was in print in its present form some four years before his birth. [J. J.]

Now, when the dusky shades of night retreating. [Morning.] This cento was given in Hedge and Huntington's Hys. for the Church of Christ, Boston, U.S. A., 1853, No. 404, in 6 st. of 4 l. The first stanza is an altered form of st. i. of W. J. Copeland's tr. of "Ecce jam noctis" (p. 330, i.). It is suggested in the Index of Latin first lines in Thring's Coll., 1882, that st. iii. ("Look from the tower of heaven") is also from the same Latin hymn; st. ii. ("To Thee Whose word, &c.") is from "Lucis Creator optime," and st. vi. ("So when the morn, &c.") is from "Nocte surgentes, &c." Possibly this may be so, but the resemblance is remote. The hymn as in the Hys. for the Church of Christ, either in full or in part, is in a great many hymn-books in G. Britain and America, including the Plymouth Coll., 1855; Kennedy, 1863; the Hymnary, 1872 : Thring's Coll., 1882, &c. In most collections st. iv and v. of the 1853 text are omitted, and sometimes a doxology is added. $[J, \hat{J}]$

Nox atra rerum contegit. St. Gregory the Great (?). [Thursday. Morning.] Mone, No. 278, gives this as probably by St. Gregory the Great (it is not assigned to him by the Benedictine editors), and at i. p. 372, cites it as appointed for Nocturns on Thursday in an 8th cent. Ms. at Trier. Daniel i. No. 45, gives the text, and at iv. p. 37, cites it as in a Rheinau Ms. of the 10th cent. Among the British Museum MSs. it is found in three 11th cent. Hymnaries of the English Church (Vesp. D. xii. f. 19b; Jul. A. vi. f. 27b; Harl. 2961, f. 223), and in an 11th cent. Breviary of the Spanish Church (Add. 30848, f. 77b). It is in an 11th cent. Ms. at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge (391, p. 235), and in the Latin Hys. of the Anglo-Sazon Ch. (Surtees Society), 1851, is printed from an 11th cent. Ms. at Durham (B. iii. 32 f. 7b). Also in three Mss. of the 11th cent. at St. Gall, Nos. 387, 413, 414. It is included in the Roman (Venice, 1478, and the revision of 1632), Sarum, York, Aberdeen, and other Breviaries, the universal use being for Thursdays at Nocturns or Matins. The text is also in Wackernagel, i. No. 94; Hymnarium Sarisb., 1851, p. 51; Königsfeld, i. p. 12; and Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. {J. M.]

Nox, et tenebrae, et nubila. Prudentius. [Wednesday and Thursday.] This hymn is found in a Ms. of the 5th cent. in the Bibliotheque Nationale, Paris (8084 f. 3 b.), and is given in all editions of Prudentius's works, including Aurelii Prudentii Clementis V. C., Opera Omnia, London, 1824, vol. i. p. 61, where it is given with notes. It is No. ii. of the Cathemerinon, and extends to 72 lines. At a very early date it was divided into two hymns, the first beginning as above, and the second, "Lux ecce surgit aurea.' Each of these must be taken in detail.

1. Nox. et tenebrae, et nubils. [Wednesday Morning.] This is found in four was, of the 11th cent, in the British Museum (Jul. A. vi. f. 26b; Vesp. D. xii., f. 18; Harl. 2961, f. 222b; Add. 30848 f. 77), and is printed in the Latin Hys. of the Anglo-Saxon Church, 1851, from an 11th cent. ms. at Durham (B. iii, 32, f. 7). It is found in most of the older Breviaries, as the Sarum, Roman, York, Aberdeen, &c. The text is also in Mone, No. 276; Daniel i, No. 104; in Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae 1838 and 1865, &c.

Translations in C. U.:-

1. Lo, night and clouds and darkness wrapp'd. By Bp. Mant, in his Ancient Hys. from the Rom. Brev., 1837, p. 15 (ed. 1871, p. 29). This is given with alterations in the Hymnary, 1872.

2. The pall of night o'ershades the earth. By E. Caswall, in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 26, and again in his Hymns, &c., 1873, p. 16.

3. Ye glooms of night, ye clouds and shade. By J. D. Chambers, in his Psalter, 1852, p. 208, and his Lauda Syon, 1857, p. 21. This is repeated in the People's H., 1867.

4. Hence, night and clouds that night-time brings. By J. M. Neale, in the enlarged ed. of the H. Noted, 1854; and the Hymner, 1882. In Skinner's Daily Service Hyl., 1864, the hymn "O gloom of night and clouds and shade," is an altered form of this tr. with portions borrowed from the tr. by J. D. Chambers.

5. Night and darkness cover all. By H. Bonar. in the 2nd Series of his Hys. of Faith & Hope, 1864. This is in Nicholson's Appendix Hyl., 1866.

1. Behold, it shines, the golden light. By Bp. Mant, in his Ancient Hys. from the Rom. Brev. 1837, p. 25 (ed. 1873, p. 47). This is given in Konnedy, 1863, with the omission of st. v.

2. Lo, the golden light is peering. By W. J. Copeland, in his Hys. for the Week, &c., 1848, p. 36. In Kennedy, 1863, No. 1446, st. v. is new. In the Hymnary, 1872, it begins, "Lo, the golden sun is shining," Kennedy's st. v. being repeated, and Copeland's st. v. is given as st. vi.

3. Now with the rising golden dawn. By E. Caswall, in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 27, and his Hymns, &c., 1873, p. 16. It is given in the People's H., 1867; Thring's Coll., 1882, and others. In the American Unitarian Hys. of the Spirit, 1864, it reads, "Now with creation's morning song." The alterations were made by S. Longfellow, one of the editors. This arrangement of the text is repeated in Martineau's Hymns, 1873.

4. Behold the golden dawn arise. By J. M. Neale, in the enlarged ed. of the H. Noted, 1854; and the Hymner, 1882.

Nu biten wir den heiligen Geist. [Whitsuntide.] Wackernagel, ii. p. 44, gives two versions, both in 5 lines; the one from a Ms. sermon [now at Heidelberg] of "Bruder Bertholt von Regensburg," who d. 1272, and the other from the Psaltes Ecclesiasticus, Mainz, 1550. It is one of the very few examples of popular vernacular hymna used in church in pre-Reformation times. According to Koch, i. p. 208, it was sung at Whitsuntide by the people "during the ceremony in which a wooden dove was lowered by a cord from the roof of the chancel, or a living dove was thence let fly down." It was adopted by Martin Luther. (See Nun bitten, as below.) Tr. as " Now let us pray the Holy Ghost," by Miss Winkworth, 1869, p. 38,

Nun bitten wir den heiligen Geist. M. Luther. [Whitsuntide.] The first stanza of this hymn is old (see Nu biten wir as above). To this stanza Luther added a second, invoking the Holy Spirit as the true Light, a third as the blessed Love, and a fourth as the great Comforter. The full form in 4 st. of 4 l., with Kyrloleis, appeared in the Geystliche gesangh Buchleyn, Wittenberg, 1524. Thence in Wackernagel, iii. p. 18, in Schircks's ed. of Luther's Geiell. Lieder, 1854, p. 29, and in the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 177. The hymn has been generally appointed for Whitsuntide, but has also been used in the Lutheran Church as a hynn for Holy Communion, at the ordination of ministers, or, as in the Strassburg Kirchen Ampt, 1525, before the sermon. Tr. as:—

Now pray we all God the Comforter. In full by A. T. Russell, as No. 18 in his Ps. & Hys., 1851, repeated by Dr. Bacon, 1884, p. 40.

Nun freut euch lieben Christengemein. M. Luther. [Advent. Redemption by Christ.] This is Luther's first congregational hymn. It was written in 1523, immediately after, and is a companion to, his "Ein neues Lied" (p. 225, i.). It appeared in the Etlich cristlich lider, Wittenberg, 1524, in 10 st. of 7 l., entitled "A Christian hymn of Dr. Martin Luther, setting forth the unspeakable grace of God, and the true faith" (in Klud's G. R. 1541 and most later backs. (in Klug's G. B., 1544, and most later books, entitled "A hymn of thanksgiving for the great bleasings which God has b stowed on us in Christ"). Thence in Wackernagel, iii. p. 5, in Schircks's ed. of Luther's Geistl. Lieder, 1854, p. 31, and in the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 235. By its clear and full doctrinal statements in flowing verse it soon became popular in Germany. Tileman Hesshusius, in his preface to Johannes Magdeburg's Psaiter, 1565, thus speaks of it:-

"I do not doubt that through this one hymn of Luther many hundreds of Christians have been brought to the true faith, who before could not endure the name of Luther; but the noble, precious words of the hymn have won their hearts, so that they are constrained to em-brace the truth: so that in my-ophion the hymns have helped the spread of the Gospel not a little."

We may note that

We may note that the original melody of 1524 is in H. A. & M., No. 293, called Erk. The melody, which appeared in Klug's G. B., 1535 (and possibly in the lost ed. of 1529), is said to have been written down by Luther from hearing it sut on have been written down by Luther from hearing it sut on bare bear and in the property of the series of the property of the series of the ser

Owing to the structure of this hymn forbidding selection, and to its length, it has come very little into English C. U. Tr. as:-

Nun lasst uns den Leib begraben. M. Weisse. [Burial of the Dead.] 1st pub. in Ein New Geeeng buchlen, Jung Bunzlau, 1531, in 7 st. of 4 l., and thence in Wachernagel, iii. p. 332. This has been called a tr. from the Latin of A. C. Prudentius (see under Deus ignes, p. 893, i.), but has really very little resemblance to it. Mr. Müller (see Bohamian Hymnedy, p. 157) is of opinion that it is an expansion of a Bohemian hymn by Lucas of Prag which seems to have been included in the lost Brethren's H. Bk. of 1519, and is in the Utraquist H. Bk. of 1559. The hymn by Lucas has only 4 st., but is of the same tenor as Weisse's, has the same title, and is in the same metre. In the Magdeburg G. B. of 1540 it is considerably altered, and an 8th st. added. This form (sometimes ascribed to M. Luther) passed, with alterations, into V. Babst's G. B., Leipzig, 1545, and is found in Porst's G. B., ed. 1855, No. 874.

In L. Erk's Choral-Buch, 1863, No. 199, the tune generally set to it is given from G. Rhan's New Deudsche seistliche Gesenge, Wittenberg, 1544. This tune is in the Bohamian H. Bk. of 1560, but not in the ed. of 1541, nor in the New Geseng buchlen of 1531. In Allon's Cong. Psalmist it is named Bohemia. The hymn is not in the Riga G. B. of 1530, but is added in the ed. of 1548.

Nun ruhen alle Wälder. P. Gerhardt. [Evening.] 1st pub, in the 3rd ed., 1648, of Crüger's Praxis Pictatis Melica, No. 15, in 9 st. of 6 l.: reprinted in Wackernagel's ed. of his Geistliche Lieder, No. 102, and Bachmann's ed., No. 2; and included as No. 529 in the Unv. L. S., 1851. It is one of the finest of Gerhardt's hymns. Simple and homely in its style it took great hold of the hearts of the German people. Baron Bunsen (quoted by Fischer, ii. 126) says of it in the Evangelische Kirchenzeitung, Berlin, 1830 :-

"Ever since its publication this hymn has been one of The most beloved and best known hymns of devout meditation over the whole of Germany. Experienced and conceived in a truly childlike popular spirit, it unites with a rare naïve simplicity of expression, a loftiness of thought, a depth of Christian experience, a grace of poetry, so that for this autom of qualities it must rank as an enduring mesterpiece angung hymns. as an enduring masterpiece among hymns

This hymn was a special favourite of Schiller's mother, and of the poet himself. In the time of Flat Rationalism at. i. became the object of much shallow wit. But as Richter points out (Biog. Lexicon, 1804, p. 95), if to represent the earth as tired, and woods and trees as sleeping is not true poetry, then Virgil | or 1702 opens thus:-

(Aeneid iv., 11. 522-28) was in the wrong. St. viii., "Breit aus die Flügel beide," has been a special favourite in Germany, and Lauxmann, in Koch viii. 194, says of it:

"How many a Christian soul, children mostly, but also God's children in general, does this verse serve as their last evening prayer. It has often been the last prayer uttered on earth, and in many districts of Ger-many is used at the close of the haptismal service to commend the dear little ones to the protection of their Lord Jeans,

Although in limited use in a translated form in the English hymn-books, the Trs. are numerous, and are as follows :-

- 1. Quietly rest the woods and dales, omitting st. viii., by Mrs. Findlater, in H. L. L., 1st Ser., 1854, p. 36 (1884, p. 38), included in Cantate Domino, Boston, U.S., 1859.
- 2. Now all the woods are sleeping. A full and good tr. by Miss Winkworth, in the 2nd ed. 1856, of the 1st Ser. of her Lyra Ger., 1855, p. 228 (see below for first version). Included in full in her C. B. for England, 1863, and the Ohio Luth. Hyl., 1880; and abridged in Dr. W. F. Stevenson's Hys. for Church & Home, 1873.
- 8. Now woods their rest are keeping. A good tr. of st. i., iii., vii., ix., contributed by Edward Thring, as No. 18 to the Uppingham and Sherborne School H. Bk., 1874.

borne School H. Bh., 1874.

Gulhrie, 1869.

The hymn, "Tho' now no creature's sleeping," No. 356, in pt. ii. of the Moravian H. Bk., 1754, is a tr. of "Jetzt schlafen weder Wälder." This is No. 2338 in the final Zugabe to the Herrnhut G. B., 1735. It is a parody in the "spiritual fleshy" style of st. i.-iii, vi., vii., of Gerhardt. It is marked as "On Aug. 13, 1748, after Holy Communion at Herrnhut."

Nunc Dimittis. Metrical paraphrases of the Song of Simeon (St. Luke ii. 29-32) are more numerous than those of the Magnificat or the Benedictus. The versions which appeared in the early Psalters are noted in the article on the Old Version, § ii.-vi. Of these the opening lines of the form of the Old Version given in comparatively modern eds. read :-

"O Lord my God, because my heart Have longed earnestly, My Lord and Saviour to behold, And see before I die; The joy and health of all mankind, Desired long before; Who now is come into the world Lost man for to restore.

2. The New Version paraphrase which appeared in the Supplement thereto in 1701

"Lord let Thy servant now depart Into Thy promis'd rest, Since my expecting eyes have been With Thy Salvation blest."

- 3. Amongst the old paraphrasers of the Psalme Dr. John Patrick is one of the few who appended versions of the Canticles to their paraphrases. In his Psalms of David in Metre, 1691, the Nunc Dimittis begins :-
 - "I now can leave this world and die In peace and quiet rest; Since that mine eyes, O Lord, have been With Thy salvation blest."

4. The rendering in the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, 1781, has a somewhat complicated history which is given under, "Now let Thy servant die in peace" (p. 818, L).

5. Dr. Irons's version in his Ps. & Hys. for the Church, 1875-83, which begins: "Enough enough, Thy saint had lived," is worthy of attention, and, with a alight change in the opening lines, would make an useful hymn.

Other paraphrases, some of much excellence, are annotated in this Dictionary under their respective first lines, or their authors' names. For these, see the Index of Seasons and Subjects at the end. [J. J.]

Nunc Sancte nobis Spiritus. St. Ambrose ? [The Third Hour.] This bymn is ascribed to St. Ambrose by Hincmar in h. "De una et nou trina Deitate," 857; and is included by L. Biraghi, 1862, as one of the Inni sinceri of St. Ambrose. It is not, however, mentioned in the Rule of Caesarius of Arles (d. 543), nor in that of Aurelianus of Arles (d. 555); nor is it received as genuine by the Benedictine editors of St. Ambrose. The text is given by Daniel i., No. 40; with further notes at iv. p. 43, in which he cites it as in a 10th cent. Rheinau Ms., classes it as of the 7th or 8th cent., and remarks that St. Ambrose is more probably the author of the longer hymn for Terce, which begins "Jam surgit hora tertia." Mone, i. p. 372, cites it as in MSS. of the 8th cent at Darmstudt, and at Trier. Among the British Museum MSS. it is found in three 11th cent. Hymnaries of the English Church (Vesp. D. xii. f. 8b; Jul. A. vi. f. 21b; Harl. 2961 f. 220), an 11th cent. Breviary of the Spanish Church (Add. 30,848, f. 71 b), &c. It is in a as, of the 11th cent. at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge (391, p. 230); in a ms. of the 11th cent at St. Gall, No. 413; and in the Latin Hys. of the Anglo-Saxon Ch. (Surtees Society), 1851, is printed from an 11th cent. MS. at Durham (B. iii. 32 f. 4). It is given in almost all Mediaeval Breviaries, including the Mozarabic of 1502, Roman (Venice, 1478 and the revision of 1632), Sarum, York, Aberdeen, Paris of 1643, &c. The universal use was as a hymn for Terce; the reference to the outpouring of the Holy Spirit which took place at the Third Hour on the Day of Pentecost being doubtless the reason for this use. The text is also in Wackernagel, i. No. 7; Hymna-rium Sarisb., 1851, p. 39; J. Chandler's Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1837, No. 5; Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865; and L. C. Biggs's annotated ed. of H. A. & M., 1867. [J. M.]

Translations in C. U.:-

the Times, No. 75, 1836, p. 64; and his Verses, 1853. In his Verses, 1868, p. 236, it begins, "Come, Holy Ghost, who ever One, Reignest with Father, &c." It was repeated in the English Hyl., 1856; the Salisbury H. Bk., 1857; H. A. & M., 1861; and very many others, but in most instances with slight alterations. It is by far the most extensively adopted of the trs. of the " Nunc Sancte."

2. Blest Spirit, One with God above. By J. Chandler, in his Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1837, p. 5, and his Hys. of the Ch. 1841, No. 4. 3. Come, Holy Ghost, and through each heart.

By E. Caswall, in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 10, and his Hys. and Poems, 1873, p. 7. It was repeated in Murray's Hyl., 1852; the People's H., 1867; and several others. It ranks next to Card. Newman's tr. in popularity.

4. Come, Holy Chest, with God the Son. By J. M. Neale, in the H. Noted, 1852, No. 5, the Hymnary, 1872, &c.

Nunn, John, M.A., s. of John Nunn, of Colchester, was b. at Colchester in 1781, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge. After holding various curacies he became Domestic Chaplain to the Earl of Galloway in 1849, and Rector of Thorndon, Suffolk, in 1854. He d. there April 15, 1861. He pub. in 1817 Psalms & Hymns from the most approved Authors, &c. This collection contained hymns by himself and by his sister, Miss Marianne Nunn. It was reprinted several times, the last edition being 1861. His hymns have passed out of use. [J. J.]

Nunn, Marianne, sister of the above, was b. May 17, 1778, and d. unmarried, in 1847. She published The Benevolent Merchant, and wrote a few hymns, including the following:-

1. Come, Holy Ghost, Who ever One, Art with low of Jesus.] This was written to adapt John Newthe Father, &c. By Card. Newman, in Tracts for ton's hym., "One there is above all others, Well deserves the name of friend," to the Welsh air, Ar ky-d y not, and consisted of one stanza of 5 lines, with the refrain "Oh how He loves!" at the end of lines 1, 2 and 5, rain on now ne noves! at the end of lines 1, 2 and 5, and the remaining 3 st. in 5 i. without the refrain, it being understood that the refrain was to be repeated. (Original text in Lyra Brit., 1867, p. 449.) It was first pub. in her brother's, the Rev. J. Num's, Pr. & Hys. (see above), 1817. It has undergone several changes at various hands. In Communic the Name Child's Communication of the Name Child's Communication. above, 1817. It has undergone several changes at various hands. In Curwen's The New Child's Own H. Bk., 1874, it begins, "There's a Friend above all others," which is adopted from the American collections. It also sometimes begins, "One is kind above all others." In addition, where the original first line is given the rest of the bymn is considerably altered. Its use as a hymn for children is very extensive.

Nunn, William, M.A., a younger brother of the above J. and M. Nunn, was b. May 13, 1786, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1814, M.A. 1817). He became Incumbent of St. Clement's Episcopal Chapel, Manchester, in 1818; d. there March 9, 1840; and was buried at All Saints, Manchester. He pub. the following :-

(1 A Selection of Psalms & Hymns, Extracted from Various Collections, and principally designed for Public Worthip. Manchester, 1827 (3rd ed., 1835). (2) A Selection of Hymns from Various Authors, Compiled especially for Children of Sunday Schools, Manchester, 1836. (3) Voce di Melodia, London, 1836.

To the first of these he contributed :-

 O could we touch the sacred lyre. Praise to Jesus.
 The Gospel comes, ordained of God. The Gospel. [J. J.] These hymns are still in C. U.

O., in Bristol Bap. Coll. of Ash & Evans, 1st ed., 1769, i.e. Thomas Olivers.

O. A. E., in the Ecclesiologist, 1843-1853, i.e. J. M. Neale.

O all-atoning Lamb. C. Wesley. [Spiritual Conflict.] Written during the heated controversy on Antinomianism, Arminianism, and Calvinism, which was carried on by the Wesleys, Whitefield, Toplady, and others. It was pub. in Hys. on God's Everlasting Love, 1741, in 26 st. of 8 l. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. iii. p. 78). Two centos therefrom are in C. U.:—(1) "Equip me for the war," in the Wes. H. Bh., 1780, No. 262 (ed. 1875, No. 272). 270); and "O, arm me with the mind," which is found in the American Unitarian Hys. for ŗJ, J.j the Church of Christ, 1853, &c.

O be joyful every nation. J. Montgomery. [Missions.] Written Feb. 8, 1842 (m. mss.), for the Baptist Missionary Society, and printed in their Jubilee Hymns, 1842, No. 1, in two parts, Pt. ii., beginning with st. vi., "On Thy holy hill of Zion." In 1853, it was included as No. 269, in 9 st. of 6 l., in Montgomery's Original Hymns. A cento therefrom, beginning with st. iv., was given in the Bap. Ps. & Hys., 1858, as "O Thou everlasting Father." [J. J.]

O beata beatorum. [Common of Martyrs.] Dr. Neale in his Med. Hys., 1851, says, "This very elegant sequence is of German origin." It is found in a 13th cent. Ms. in the British Museum (Arondel, 156), written at f. 90 in a hand of the beginning of the 14th cent.; and in a 14th cent. Ms. at St. Gall, No. Mone, No. 731, quotes it from Mss. of the 14th cent at Admont, Salzburg, and Karlsruhe. It is in the Magdeburg, 1480, and many later German Missals. Also in Daniel ii. p. 204; Kehrein, No. 445, and others. [J. M.]

Translations in C. U.:-

1. Blossed Feasts of blossed martyrs. By J. M. Neale in his Mediseval Hys., 1851, p. 144, in 8 st. of 4 l., and again, greatly altered, in the H. Noted, enlarged ed., 1854. In the 1868 Appendix to H, A, & M. it was given in a revised form (by the Compilers). This is repeated in the revised ed., 1875, and others. Also, with slight alterations, in the Hymnary, 1872.

2. Blessed acts of blessed martyrs. By J. D. Chambers in his Lauda Syon, 1866, and again in the People's H., 1867.

O beata Hierusalem, praedicanda civitas. [Restoration of a Church.] This is found in a Mozarabic Hymnarium of the 11th cent. in the British Museum (Add. 30851 f. 156 b). It is repeated in the Lorenzana, 1775, and later eds. of the Mozarabic Breviary; also in Neale's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1851, p. 216, and Daniel, iv. p. 110. Tr. as:-

Blessed city, Heavinly Salem, Land of glory, &c. By J. M. Neale in the enlarged ed. of the H. Noted, 1854, No. 104. In some copies the Latin is given as "Urbs beata Jerusalem," and this is repeated in the People's H., 1867. The first stanza of Neale's tr. reads :-

Rlessed city, Heav'nly Salem,
Land of glory, land of rest;
Joyous ever and triumphant
In the armies of the blest;
Where the King, thy grace renewing,
Doth His glory manifest."

The full text is repeated in several collections, including the People's H., as above, the Sarum, and others. In the Philadelphia Presbyterian Sel, of Hys., 1861, it begins with st. iii., "Come Thou now, and be among us." [J. M.]

O blest were the accents of early creation. Bp. R. Heber. [Gospel for 19th Sunday after Trinity.] Appeared in his posthumous Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 120, in 6 st. of 4 l. It is not in C. U. in its original form, but as "How blest were the accents of early creation," it is given in Kennedy, 1863. [J. J.]

O brothers, lift [tune] your voices. Bp. E. H. Bickersteih. [Missions.] Written for the Jubilee of the Church Missionary Society, 1848, and first printed in the Jubilee Tract of that year. It was given in the author's Poems, 1849; his Ps. & Hys., 1858; and his Hy. Comp., 1870 and 1876. In Kennedy, 1863, it reads, "O brothers, tune your voices," but the hymn is not improved by the change. [J. J.]

O Captain of God's host, whose dreadful might. Bp. R. Heber. [St. Michael and all Angels.] Appeared in his posthumous Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 183, in 6 st. of 5 l., as the second hymn for "Michaelmas Day." It is based on Rev. xii. 7-9, "And there was war in heaven; Michael and his angels fought against the dragon," &c. Heber, adopting the view that the Michael of this passage was really our Blessed Lord, wrote:-

" Oh Captain of God's bost, whose dreadful might

Led forth to war the armed scraphim,
And from the starry height,
Subdued in burning fight
Cast down that ancient Dragon, dark and grim!

O CHRISTE MORGENSTERNE

"Thine angels, Christ? we land in schemn lays, Our elder brethren of the crystal aky, Who, 'mid Thy glory's blaze, The ceaseless anthem raise, And gird Thy throne in faithful ministry!"

In this, its original, form it never appeared in a collection for congregational use, but as altered to embody the generally accepted meaning of the passage from the Revelation, it has had a fair degree of popularity. This altered form reads :-

" O God the Son Eternal, Thy dread might

Sent forth St. Michael and the hosts of heaven. It was made by the Rev. J. Keble for, and was first published in, the Salisbury H. Bk., 1857, No. 165. In 1861 the same text was given, with the omission of st. v., in Pott's Hymns fitted to the Order of C. P., from whence it passed into the S. P. C. K. Appendix, 1869, and Church Hymns, 1871. The same stanzas, but with further alterations, were included in the Parish H. Bk., 1863, and repeated in the Sarum, 1868, and the Parish, 1875. In the H. Bk. for the use of Wellington College, 1860, it begins with st. ii. "Thine angels, Christ! we laud in solemn lays." [J. J.]

[Holy Com-O Christe Morgensterne. munion.] This is one of Zwey Schone news Lieder, printed in broadsheet form at Leipzig, 1579, and thence in Wackernagel v. p. 11, in 10 st. of 6 l. The text in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 1124, is from the Leipzig G. B., 1586, omitting st. x. Sometimes ascribed. but without proof, to Basilius Förtsch, or to Mickael Walther. Tr. as

6 Christ, Thou bright and Marning Star. A ir. of st.i.-ill., v., tx. by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger. 2nd Ser., 1858, p. 179, and her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 144. Repeated in the Fennsylvania Luth. Ch. Bk., No. 144. Repeated in the Pennsylvania Luth. Ch. Bit 1868, reduced to C.M., and omitting st. fil. [J. M.]

O Christe qui noster poli. Archbishop Charles de Vintimille. (?) [Vigil of Whitsunday.] Appeared in the Cluniac Breviary, 1686, p. 506; again in the Paris Breviary, 1736, and in later French Breviaries. It is also in J. Chandier's Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1837, No. 77; Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865, &c. Tr. as:-

1. 0 Jesu, Who art gone before. By J. Chandler, in his Hys. of the Prin. Church, 1837, No. 77, into Oldknow's Hymns, &c., 1850; Schaff's Christ in Song, 1869, &c. In Martineau's Hymns, &c., 1840, it is altered to " Messiah now is gone before."

2. C Christ, Who dost, our herald, rise. By C. S. Calverley, made for and pub. in the Hymnary, 1872.

Translations not in C. U. :

1. O Thou, gone up, our Harbinger. I. Williams. 2. Our Forerunner, why forsake us? W. J. Blew.

O Christe splendor gloriae. [C. ofConfessors.] This hymn is found in three Mss. of the 11th cent. in the British Museum (Vesp. D. xii. f. 102b; Jul. A. vi. f. 62b; Harl. 2961 f. 247); and in the Lat. Hys. of the Anglo-Saxon Ch., 1851, it is printed from an 11th cent. ms. at Durham (B. iii. 32, f. 39b). It is also in a Ms. of the 11th cent. at Corpus Christi, Cambridge (391, p. 270). In some of the mas, the initial "O" has dropped out, Morel, No. 236, gives it as a hymn for the Common of Apostles (beginning "Christe, tu splendor gloriae"), from an 11th cent. Rheinau MS. Tr. BB :-

O Sun of glory! Christ our King. By J. D. Chambers, in his Lauda Syon, 1866, p. 6; and in the 2nd ed., 1863, of the Appendix to the H. Noted, No. 200. [J. M.]

O come and dwell in me. C. Wesley. [Holiness desired.] This is a cento compiled from his Short Hymns, &c., 1762 (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. xiii.), as follows: st. i. from vol. ii., No. 569, on 2 Cor. iii. 17; st. ii. from vol. ii., No. 578, on 2 Cor. v. 17; and st. iii. from vol. ii., No. 713, on Heb. xi. 5. This cento was given in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, No. 356, and has passed into several collections in G. Britain and America. G. J. Stevenson has an interesting account in his Methodist H. Bk. Notes, 1883, p. 258, of the spiritual use of this cento. [J. J.]

O come and mourn with me awhile, F. W. Faber. [Good Friday.] Pub. in his Jesus and Mary, 1849, in 12 st of 4 l., and headed "Jesus Crucified;" and again, after revision, in his Hymns, 1862. It was brought into special notice by being included in an abbreviated and altered form in H. A. & M., 1861. The original refrain reads, "Jesus, our Love, is crucified." This was changed in H. A. & M. to "Jesus, our Lord, is crucified." and has been almost universally adopted. The history of this refrain, which is somewhat interesting, is given under "My Lord, my Love was crucified" (p. 781, ii.). In addition to the H. A. & M. arrangement there are others, including, "Ye faithful, come and mourn awhile" in Skinner's Daily Service Hymnal, 1864, "O come, and look awhile on Him," in the 1874 Supplement to the N. Cong.; "O come, and mourn beside the Cross," in the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871; "Have we no tears to shed for Him," in Beecher's Plymouth Coll., 1855; and others. The H. A. & M. version of the text is translated into Latin in Biggs's annotated H. A. & M., 1867, by the Rev. C. B. Pearson, as "Adeste fideles, mecum complorantes." [J. J.]

O come, Creator Spirit, Inspire the souls. W. J. Blew. [Annunciation of B. V. M.] This hymn, which, as given in his Church Hy. and Tune Bk., 1852-55, is a cento as follows:—st. i. is original; st. ii. is a fr. of "Memento rerum conditor" (p. 289. i.); and st. iii.-vii., a fr. of "Haec illa solemnis dies" (p. 477. i.). This cento is repeated in Rice's Sel. from Mr. Blew's Church H. & Tune Bk., 1870. [J. J.]

O comfort to the dreary. J. Conder. [Christ the Comforter.] Given as No. 428 in the Cong. H. Bk., 1836, in 5 st. of 8 l., again in his Choir and Oratory, 1887, p. 45; and again, with the omission of st. v. in his Hys. of Praise, Prayer, &c., 1856. It is usually given with the omission of st. iii. [J. J.]

O comfort to [of] the weary! O balm to the distressed! T. R. Birks. [Ps. laxxiz.] Appeared in his Companion Psalter, 1874, in 4 st. of 8 l. It is repeated in the Universal H. Bk., 1885, and others, and sometimes as "O comfort of the weary."

good specimen of the author's paraphrases. [Paulters, English, § XX. 7.] [J. J.]

O! day of days! shall hearts set free? J. Keble. [Easter.] Written April 18, 1822, and 1st pub. in his Christian Year, 1827, as the poem for Easter Day. It is in 15 st. of 4 l., and headed with the text from St. Luke xxiv. 5, 6. It has been repeated in all later editions of the Christian Year. As a whole it is not in C. U.; but st. ix., xi. and xii., slightly altered, are given as, "As even the lifeless stone was dear," in the H. Bk. for the Use of Wellington Coll., 1860, where it is appointed for the evening of the 4th Sunday after Easter.

O day of rest and gladness. Bp. C. Wordsworth, of Lincoln. [Sunday.] This is the opening hymn of his Holy Year, 1862, p. i., in 6 st. of 8 l. It is a fine hymn, somewhat in the style of an Ode from a Greek Canon, and is in extensive use. Sometimes st. v. and vi. are given as a separate hymn, beginning, "To day on weary nations." In the 3rd ed. of the Holy Year, 1863, the full hymn was given as No. 3. In the 1874 Supplement to the New Cong. H. Bk., it is reduced to 4 st. of 8 l., and is also somewhat altered.

[J. J.]

O Del sapientia. [Presentation of the B. V. M.] This hymn does not appear to be earlier than the 15th cent. Mone, No. 342, gives it from Mas. of the 15th cent. at Bamberg, and at St. Paulin Carinthia; and Morel, p. 82, cites it as in an Einsiedeln ms. of 1470. It is in three St. Gall mss. of the 15th cent., Nos. 408, 438, 440. The printed text is also in the Sarum Brev., Paris, 1531; the Aberdeen Brev. of 1509; in Daniel, iv. p. 283, &c. Tr. as :--

O wisdom of the God of Grace. By J. D. Chambers, in his Landa Syon, 1866, p. 64, and, with slight alterations and another doxology, in the Hymnary,

O Deus ego amo Te, Nam prior Tu amasti me. [Love to Christ, or Passiontide.] This hymn is found in the Psalteriolum Cantionum Catholicarum, Cologne, 1722, p. 328, and is probably by some German Jesuit of the 17th cent. In J. C. Zabuesnig's Katholische Kirchengesänge, Augeburg, 1822, vol. i., p. 150, it is entitled, "The Desire of St. Ignatius," which probably is meant to refer to St. Ignatius Loyela (b. 1491, d. 1556; founder of the Society of Jesus, i.e. the Order of the Jesuits). The Latin text is also in the Hymnodia Sacra, Münster, 1753, p. 268; Daniel, ii., p. 335; H. M. Macgill's Songs of the Christian Creed and Life, 1876, &c. [J. M.]

Translations in C. U. :--

I love, I love Thee, Lord most high. By E. Caswall, in his Masque of Mary, &c., 1858, 357; and his Hys. and Poems, 1873, p. 221. It is in C. U. in its original form, and also as :-

1. Do I not love Thee, Lord most High? In Martineau's Hymns, &c. 1873.
2. I love Thee, O Thou Lord most High. In Dale's English H. Bk. 1874.

Translations not in C. U. :-

4. O God, my love goes forth to Thee. H. M. Macgill. [J. J.]

O Deus ego amo Te, Nec amo Te ut salves me. St. Francis Xavier? [Love to Christ, or Passiontide.] The original of this hymn is supposed to be a Spanish sonnet which begins "No me mueve, mi Dios, para quererte," and which in Diepenbrock's Geistlicher Blumenstrauss, 1829, p. 199, is ascribed to St. Francis Xavier. In the Poesias of St. Teresa of Spain (Teresa de Jesus, b. 1515, d. 1582), pub. at Münster, in 1854, it is included as by her; but we have been unable to find it in her Libros, Lisbon, 1616, her Obras, Lisbon, 1654, or her Opera, Cologne, 1686. The Latin form is probably by Xavier or by some German Jesuit. It is at least as early as 1668, for in that year a tr. was pub. by J. Scheffler, in his Heilige Seelenlust, Bk. v., No. 194, entitled, "She [the Soul] loves God simply for Himself, with the Holy Xavier. Also from the Latin" (see below). In the same year it also appeared with Xavier's name in W. Nakatenus's Coeleste palmetum (ed. 1701, p. 491, entitled, "The desire of a loving soul towards the God-Man crucified for us. S. P. Francis Xavier"). The Latin text is also found in the Psalteriolum Cantionum Catholicarum, Cologne, 1722, p. 328; the Hymnodia Sacra, Münster, 1753, p. 270; Daniel ii. p. 335; Königsfeld, ii. p. 280; F. A. March's Lat. Hys., 1875, p. 190, &c. It has been tr. into German, and through the German into English, viz.:

Ich liebe Gott, und Twar umsonst. By J. Scheffler in his Heilige Scalenlust, 1668, Bk. v., No. 194 (Werke, 1862, p. 322). A free tr. in 10 st. of 4 l. In the Herrnhut G. B., 1735, No. 738. Tr. as "My dear Redeemer! Thou art He," as No. 624 in pt. l. of the Moratian H. Ek., 1754. In the 1759 and later ed. (1896, No. 454) it begins "Gracious Redeemer, Thou hast me." [J. M.]

The tra. directly from the Latin are:-

- 1. My God, I love Thee, not because. By E. Caswall, in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 295; and his Hys. & Poems, 1873, p. 152. It has been included, with slight alterations, in most of the prominent hymn-books pub. since 1850, and is very popular in G. Britain and America, It is also found in the following forms :-
- (1) I love Thes. O my God, but not. In the Reformed Lutch Hys. of the Church, N. Y., 1869, much altered. In the Bap. Praise Bk., N. Y., 1871, this form is again altered as "I love Thee, O my God, and still."

(2) Jesus, I love Thee; not because. In Schaff's Christ in Song. 1869.

(3) Lord, may we love Thee, not because. In Kennedy. 1863.

(4) O God, we love Thee: not because. It Irvinglie Hys. for the Use of the Churches. 1871. In the (5) Saviour, I love Thee, not because. In Dale's English H. Bk. 1874.

(6) Thou, O my Jesus (Saviour) Thou didst me. In the Unitarian Hys. for the Church of Christ. Boston, U.S.A. 1853; T. Darling's Hys. for the Church of England, 1887, &c.

2. I love Thee, 0 my God and [my] Lord. Given anonymously in Kennedy, 1863, No. 661, in 4 st. of 6 l. In the Sarum Hyl., 1868, and Porter's Churchman's Hyl., 1876, it is abbreviated to 3 st. 3. My God, I love Thee, yet my love. By R. C.

Singleton, in his Anglican H. Bk., 1868.

Thee, O God, alone I love. By G. E. Dartnell, in Thring's Coll., 1880 and 1882.

Other tra. are :--

1. My God, I love Thee, not because I covet Thy sulvation. Anon, in The Old Church Porch, 1857.

2. O God, my heart is fixed on Thee. Elizabeth Charles. 1888.
3. O God, I love Thee; not with hope. J. W. Hewett.

4. I do not love Thee, Lord. To win Thy, &c. H. Kynaston, 1862. 5. O God, let not my love to Thee. H. M. Macgill. [J. J.]

O disclose Thy levely face. C. Wesley. [Pardon desired.] There are two centos in C. U., each beginning with this line, as follows: --(1) The first is No. 156 of the Wes. H. Bk., prior to (1) The first is No. 156 of the Wes. H. Bk., prior to the 1875 revision. It is thus composed: St. 1. is st. it. of C. Wesley's hymn, "Lord, how long, how long shall I," which appeared in the Hys. & Sucred Poens, 1740; and st. it., and st. are st. it., iii. of "Christ, Whose glory fills, the skies" (p. 256, i.). In this form the cento was given in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, and is found in several Methodist collections. (2) The second form of the hymn is No. 156°, in the revised Wes. H. Bk., 1875. It is composed of st. it., iii., and v. of "Lord, how long, how long shall I?" as above.

O du allersüsste Freude. P. Gerhardt. [Whiteuntide.] This beautiful hymn of sup-plication to the Holy Spirit for His gifts and graces was 1st pub. in the 3rd. ed., 1648, of Crūger's Praxis pietatis melica, No. 155, in 10 st. of 8 L, reprinted in Wackernagel's od. of his Geistliche Lieder, No. 30, and in Bachmann's ed., No. 10. It has attained a wide popularity in Germany, and is included in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 366. Through J. C. Jacobi's version it has also been very largely used, in various forms, in Great Britain and America. Tr. as:-

1. O Then sweetest Source of gladness. A full and good tr. by J. C. Jacobi, in Part ii., 1725, of his Paul. Ger. p. 6 (ed. 1732, p. 43, greatly altered). His st. i.-iv., ix., x. were considerably altered, as "Holy Ghost, dispel our sadness," by A. M. Toplady, and were given in the Gospel Magazine, June, 1776, and repeated in the same year in Toplady's Ps. & Hys., No. 155. They are thus included in Sedgwick's ed. of Toplady's Hys. & Sacred Poems, 1860, p. 169. These st. are, (i.) "Holy Ghost, dispel our sadness." (ii.) "From that height which knows no measure." (iii.) "Come, Thou best of all donations." (iv.) "Known to Thee are all recesses." (v.) " Manifest Thy love for ever." (vi.) " Re our Friend on each occasion." While appearing in many centos, it usually begins with the first stanza of the Jacobi-Toplady text of 1776, "Holy Ghost, dispel our sadness." These centos may be thus grouped:-

(1) In the original metre. There are about a dazen of centos in C. U. in this metre, and all beginning with st. 1., given in hymn-books from the Lady Huntingdon Coll., 1789, in 5 st., to the Irish Charter Hyman, 1879, in 2 st. The construction of all these centos may 16'(3) 11' 28. The construction of all tarest centors may be ascertained by comparing them with the first lines of the Jacobi-Toplady text as above.

(2) In 8.7.8.7.4.7. metre. This, composed of st. I., iii. greatly altered, is in Bickersteth's Christian Psulmody, greatly altered, is in Bickersteth's Christian Psalmody, 1833; Kennedy, 1863; Com. Praise, 1879. &c.

(3) In 8.7.8.7. metre. There are nearly ten centos in this metre from the Comg. H. Bk., 1836, in 2 st. to the Pennsylvania Lutheran Ch. Bk., 1836, in 3 st. of 81.

(4) In addition to these centos there are also (1) "Holy Spirit, Source of gladness," in the American Unitarian Bk. of Hymns, 1848, and other collections; (2) "Come, Thou Source of sweetest gladness," in Stopford Brookes's Christian Hys., 1831, both being altered forms of the Jacobi-Toplady text.

2. Sweetest joy the soul can know. A good fr., omitting st. viii. and ix., by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger., 2nd series, 1858, p. 55, and again, altered in metre, as "Sweetest Fount of holy gladness," in her C. B. for England, 1863. No. 73. In this st. ii, and iv., as in Lyra Ger., are omitted. From the Lyra Ger. text, No. 408 of the American Hys. of the Spirit, 1864, is derived; and from the C. B. for England text, No. 108, in Stryker's Christian Chorals, N. Y., [J. M.]

O du Liebe meiner Liebe. [Passiontide.] Included in the Geistreiches G. B., Halle, 1697, p. 203, in 7 st. of 8 l., and in Wagner's G. B., Leipzig, 1697, vol. ii. p. 870. Repeated in Freylinghausen's G. B., 1704, and recently in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863.

It has been erroneously ascribed to J. Scheffler, to whose " Liebe, die du mich zum Bilde," it is a companion whose "Liese, the all micraum blice," it is sompation by mir sometimes to A. Bress, equally without proof. In the Bilities für Hymnologie, 1883, p. 11, it is claimed for Esisabethe ros Senits (b. 1629 at Rankau, Brieg, Silesia; d. 1679, at Oels in Silesia). (See Variaua.)

Translations in C. U.:-

Thou Holiest Love, whom most I love. A good tr., omitting st. iv., by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger., 1st Ser., 1855, p. 83 (2nd ed., 1856, altered, and with a new ir. of st. ii.). It was repeated in full in Schaff's Christ in Song, 1869, p. 185. Abridged in Flett's Coll., Paieley, 1871; Whiting's Hys. for the Ch. Catholic, 1882, the latter reading "most I prize." Two American hymn-books, the Dutch Ref., 1869, and the Bapt. Praise Bk., 1871, give centos beginning with the tr. of st. vi., "O Love! who gav'st Thy life for me.

Other trs. are, (1) "O the love wherewith I'm loved," as No. 527 in pt. i. of the Horavian B. Bk., 1754 (1886, No. 99). (2) "Love divine: my love commanding," by Miss Burlingham in the Brilish Herald, Oct., 1865, p. 152, and Reid's Praise Bk., 1872, No. 375. [J. M.]

Durchbrecher aller Bande. Arnold. [Sanctification.] 1st pub. in his Göttliche Liebes-Funcken. Frankfurt am Main, 1698, No. 169, in 11 st. of 8 l., entitled ' The Sigh of the Captive." Included in the Geistreiches G. B., Darmstadt, 1698, p. 498, in Freylinghausen's G. B., 1704, and many later collections, as the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 326. Also in Ehmann's ed. of Arnold's Geistl. Lieder, 1856, p. 81, and Knapp's ed., 1845, p. 202. It is Arnold's finest church hymn, and is a very characteristic expression of the Pietistic views regarding the conflict between the old and the new man. Lauxmann, in Koch, viii., 432-434, says of it:-

"In this hymn the poet powerfully expresses his immost emotions under the many conflicts he had with his heart. . It is a true daily hymn of supplication for earnest Christians who have taken the words of the Apostle 'Follow. . . the sanctification without which no man shall see the Lord '(Heb. xii. 14) as the rule and standard of their lives. Many such might often rather sigh it out than sing it."

Translations in C. U.:-

1. Thou who breakest every chain. good tr., omitting st. v., vi., by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger., 2nd Ser., 1858, p. 140 (C. B. for England, 1863, No. 111, omitting the trs. of st. iii., viii.). Included in the Harrow School H. Bk., 1866; Brown-Borthwick's Select Hys., 1871, and the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871, &c. In Church Hys. the cento is: st. i. is from i., ll. 1-4, and iv., ll. 1-4 of the German; ii. from iv., ll. 5-8, and vii., ll. 5-8; iii. from ix.; iv. from x., 11. 1-4, and xi. 5-8.

2. Thou who breakest every fetter, Thou who art. Omitting st. v., vi., by Mrs. Bevan, in her Songe of Eternal Life, 1858, p. 51. Her trs. of st. i., vili., x., xi., are No. 188 in Dr. Pagenstecher's Coll, 1864.

Another tr. 18, "Then who breakest every fetter, Who art ever," by N. L. Frothingham, 1870. [J. M.]

O esca viatorum. [Holy Communion.] This hymn was probably composed by some German Jesuit of the 17th cent., though it has been by some ascribed to St. Thomas of Aquino. It has not been traced earlier than the Mainz G. B., (R. C.) 1661, where it is given at p. 367 in 3 st., entitled "Hymn on the true Bread of Heaven." It is also in the Hymnodia Sacra, Mainz, 1671, p. 86; in Daniel ii. p. 369, and others. [J. M.]

Translations in C. U.:-

- 1. 0 Bread to pilgrims given. By R. Palmer, 1st pub. in the American Sabbath H. Bh., 1858, No. 1051; again in his Hys. & Sac. Poems, 1865; and then in the Lyra Sac. Americana, 1868. In 1867 it was given with alterations in Alford's Fear of Praise, and subsequently in other collections.
- 8. 0 Food that weary pilgrims love. By the Compilers of H. A. & M., in the 2nd ed. of Introits prefixed to H. A. & M., 1861, and then in the 1868 Appendix to the same, and in other hymnals.

3. 0 Food of men wayfaring. By R. F. Littledale, in the Altar Manual, 1863; the People's H., 1867; and the Altar Hymnal, 1884.

4. 0 Bread of Life from heaven. By Philip Schaff, in his Christ in Song, N. Y., 1869, Lond., 1870. This is repeated in the Scottish Presb. Hymnal, 1876, and altered as "O Food, the pilgrim needeth," in the Hymnary, 1872.

Translations not in C. U.:-

 O living Bread from Heaven. H. Trend, in Lyra Eucharistica. 1863.

2. O Meat the pligrim needeth. J. D. Chambert. 1866.

3. Behold the traveller fed. D. T. Morgan. 1880. [J. J.]

O Everlasting Light. H. Bonar. [Christ in All.] Pub. in the 2nd Series of his Hys. of Faith and Hope, 1861, in 10 st. of 4 l., and headed, "Christ in All." It deals with Christ as the Everlasting "Light," "Rock," "Fount," "Health," "Truth," "Strength," "Love," and "Rest" of His people. It is in extensive use, and sometimes as "Jesus, my Everlasting Light."

O Ewigkeit, du Donnerwort. J. Rist. [Eternal Life.] 1st pub. in the Viertes Zehen of his Himlische Lieder, Lüneburg, 1642, p. 51, in 16 st. of 8 l., entitled "An earnest contemplation of the unending Eternity." It is given in full in Burg's G. B., Breslau, 1746, No. 142, and still holds its place as a standard hymn, but is frequently abridged; st. iv., vii., viii., xii. being generally omitted, as in the Berlin G. L. S. ed., 1863, No. 1608. It is an impressive and strongly coloured hymn, and has proved a powerful appeal to many German hearts. Tr. as:—

1. Eternity! terrific word. A version of st. i., iii.. xii., xvi., based on Jacobi, 1722; and probably by W. M. Reynolds, as No. 245 in the American Luth. Gen. Synod's Coll., 1850-52. Repeated in the Ohio Luth. Hul., 1880.

Repeated in the Ohio Luth. Hyl., 1880.

2. Eternity! most awful word. By A. T. Rusell, as No. 258 in his Ps. & Hys., 1851. It is in 4 st., founded on st. i., ii., ix., xvi. Repeated, altered and beginning "Eternity, tremendous word, The womb of mysteries yet unheard," in Kennedy, 1863.

3. Elernity, theu word of fear. A good tr. of st. i., ix., xiii., xvi., by E. Thring, as No. 47 in the Uppingham and Sherborne School H. Bk., 1874.

Another tr. is "Eternity! tremendous Word, Hotnestriking Point, Heart-piercing Sword," by J. C. Jacobi, 1722, p. 97. [J. M.]

O Ewigkeit! O Ewigkeit. [Eternity.] Wackernagel v. p. 1258, gives this as an anonymous hyunn (in 18 st. of 6.1. and the refrain, "Betracht o Mensch die Ewigkeit"), from the Catholische Kirchen-Gesäng, Cologne. 1625 (Bäumker, ii. p. 301, says it is in the Ausserlesene Catholische geistliche Kirchengesäng, Cologne, 1623). In Daniel Wülffer's Zwölff Andachten, Nürnberg, 1648. p. 536, in 16 st. considerably altered. Wülffer's text is in the Nürnberg G. B., 1690; Schöber's Liedersegen, 1769, and others; and is followed by Bunsen in his Versuch, 1833, No. 839. Bunsen's sts. correspond to st. i.—iv., viii., xi., xii., xiv.—xviii. of the 1625 text, some being considerably altered. As in almost all the tra. the second line is "How long art thou, Eternity," we employ in the following notes—, to show this. Tr. as:—

1. Eternity! Eternity!—Yet onward. In full from Bunsen, by Miss Cox, in her Sac. Hys. from the German, 1841, p. 187 (1864, p. 139). Included, more or less altered and abridged, in Alford's Ps. & Hys., 1844, and his Year of Praise, 1867; Holy Song, 1869; the American Hys. for the Church of Christ, 1853; Plymouth Coll., 1855; Dutch Reformed, 1869; and others.

2. Eternity! Eternity!—And yet. A good and full tr. from Bunsen by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger., 1st Ser., 1855, p. 24. It is repeated abridged in the Cumbrae H. Bk., 1863; and in America in the Hys. for Ch. & Home, 1860; Robinson's Songs for the Sanctuary, 1865, and the Church Praiss Bk., 1882.

and the Uhurch Praise Bh., 1882.

Other trs. are, (1) "Eternity! Eternity!—For still," by C. T. Brooks, in his Schiller's Homage of the Arts, &c., 1847 (Boston, U. S.), p. 146. (2) "Eternity! Eternity!—Yet hasteth," by Dr. H. W. Dulcken, in his Bh. of Ger. Songs, 1856, p. 285. (3) "Eternity, his Bk. of Ger. Songs, 1856, p. 285. (3) "Eternity, his Br. of Ger. Songs, 1856, p. 285. (3) "Eternity how long art thou," by Dr. J. Gethrie, 1869. p. 128. (6) "Eternity! Eternity!—Life hasteth," signed "M. M." in the Monthly Packet, vol. xil., 1871, 413. (6) "Eternity!—Swiftly," dated 1866, by J. H. Hopkius, in his Carole, Hys. & Songs, 3rd ed., 1882, p. 90.

O Faith! thou workest miracles. F. W. Faber. [Fuith.] Appeared in his Jesus and Mary, 1849, in 12 st. of 4 l., and entitled "Conversion." It was also included in his Hymns, 1862. The hymn "O Gift of gifts! O grace of Fuith," in the Hymnary, 1872, and others, is composed of st. v. vii.-x. and xii. of this hymn slightly altered. [J. J.]

O filii et filiae, Rex coelestis, Rex gloriae. [Easter.] Neale in his Med. Hys., 1851, classes this with others as belonging to the 13th cent; but it is more probably not earlier than the 17th, and is apparently of French origin. The Latin text, for the Salut on Easter Day, is in the Office de la Semaine Sainte, Paris, 1674, p. 478. Bäumker, i. p. 569, cites a German tr. as in the Nord-

Sterns Führers zur Seeligkeit, a German Jesuit collection pub. in 1671. The hymn is introduced by "Aileluia, Alleluia, Alleluia.' It is used in many French dioceses in the Salut, or solemn salutation of the Blessed Sacrament, on the evening of Easter Day. The text will be found in the Paroissiens pub. for use in the Paris and other dioceses in France. [J. M.]

 O fons amoris, Spiritus. C. Coffin.
 [Sunday Morning.] Appeared in the Paris
 Breviary, 1736, as the Ferial hymn at Terce, in 3 st. of 4 l., and again in Coffin's Hymni Sacri, 1736, p. 92. It is also in J. Chandler's Hys. of the Prim. Church, 1837, p. 4; and Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. It is a recast of the "Nunc sancte nobis." It is tr. as:—
- 1. C Spirit, Fount of love, Unlock Thy temple door. By I. Williams, in the British Magazine, Jan., 1834, vol. v. p. 30, and again in his Hys. tr. from the Parisian Brev., 1839, p. 7. In the English Hymnal, 1856 and 1861. No. 9 is the same tr. rewritten in C.M. as "O Holy Spirit, Fount of love, Unlock," &c.
- 2. O Holy Spirit, Lord of grace. By J. Chandler, in his Hys. of the Prim. Church, 1837, p. 4. This is repeated with slight changes in several collections. In H. A. & M. another doxology is substituted for that in Chandler.
- 3. O Holy Spirit, Fount of love. Blest Source, By Jane E. Leeson, and pub. in her Paraphrases [of the Scottish Trs. and Paraphs.] & Hys., &c., 1853, in 4 st. of 4 l., and again in the Irvingite Hys. for the Churches, 1864 and 1871.
- 4. O Spirit, Fount of Roly Love. In the 2nd ed. 1863, of the Appendix to the H. Noted, No. 280. | the Edinburgh Diocesan Sel. of 1830, No. 23,

Other trs. are :-1. O Fount of love! blest Spirit. W. J. Blew. 1852 and 1855.

2. O Fount of love! Thou Spirit blest. J. D. Chamberg.

- 3. All-gracious Spirit, Fount of love. D. T. Morgan. 1880. [J. J.]
- O for a closer walk with God. W. Comper. [Walking with God.] This is one of the most beautiful, tender, and popular of Cowper's hymus. It appeared in the 2nd ed. of R. Conyers's Coll. of Ps. & Hys., 1772, in 6 st. of 4 l., and again in A. M. Toplady's Ps. & Hys., 1776, and in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. i., No. 3, and headed, "Walking with God." It is based on Gen. v. 24, "And Enoch walked with God." It is in extensive use in all English-speaking countries, and usually in its original form. [J. J.]
- O for a faith that will not shrink. W. H. Bathurst. [Faith.] 1st pub. in his Ps. and Hys., &c., 1831, Hy. 86, in 6 st. of 4 l., and entitled, "The Power of Faith." found in H. A. & M., the Hy. Comp., and others, st. iv. is omitted. Its omission is a great gain to the hymn, as it mare its simplicity and tenderness. It reads :-

" That bears unmov'd the world's dread frown, Nor heeds its scornful smile; That sin's wild ocean cannot drown, Nor its soft arts beguile."

The use of this hymn is great, and more especially in America, where it is given in most of the leading collections.

O for a heart to praise my God. C. Wesley. [Holiness desired.] Appeared in Hys. and Sac. Poems, 1742, p. 80, in 8 st. of 4 l. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. ii. p. 77). It is based on the Prayer Book version of Ps. li. 10. From its appearance in M. Madan's Ps. & Hys., 1760, No. 3, to the present time, it has been one of the most widely used of C. Wesley's hymns. It was given in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, No. 334. G. J. Stevenson's note in his Methodist H. Bk. Notes, 1883, p. 245, is of more than usual interest. [J. J.]

O for an overcoming faith. I. Watts. [Second Advent.] 1st pub. in his Hys. and Spiritual S., 1707 (2nd ed. 1709, Bk. i. 17), in 4 st. of 4 l. It is based on 1 Cor. xv. 55-58, and is included in several hymn-books in G. Britain and America.

Another form is that given to it as No. 41 in the Draft Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, 1745, beginning, "When the last trumpet's awful voice." It is in 7 st. of 4 of which i.-iii. and vii. are new, and st. iv.vi. are st. ii.-iv. of this hymn by Watts. It was rewritten in the public worship ed. of the Trs. and Paraphs, issued by the Church of Scot-land in 1781 and still in C. U.; st. iii., Il. 3, 4, being altered from the 1745 text, and st. vii. rewritten as st. vii. and viii. The text of 1745 is ascribed by the eldest daughter of W. Cameron (p. 200, ii.) to Thomas Randali (an opinion not shared in by the other authoritics); and the alterations in 1781 to W. Cameron. This form of the text is in C. U. outside of the Trs. and Paraphs., both in G. Britain and America. Sometimes st. iii.vi. are slightly altered as, "Behold what heavenly prophets sung." This form is in and again in the Scottish Episcopal Coll., 1858, No. 126. [J. M.]

O for one celestial ray. Anne Steele and A. M. Toplady. [Prayer for the Holy Spirit.] This hymn is based on the 12 concluding lines of Miss Steele's pocm on "Captivity," pub. in her Poems, &c., 1760, vol. ii. p. 46 (Sedgwick's reprint, 1863, p. 227), and appeared in A. M. Toplady's Ps. & Hys., 1776, No. 194, in 5 st. of 4 l. This form of the text is in a few modern collections, including the Bap. Ps. & Hys., 1858, and others. [J. J.]

O for the death of those. The opening line of this hymn is the first line of J. Montgomery's "Ode to the Volunteers of Britain, On the Prospect of Invasion," pub, in his Wanderer of Switzerland and Other Poems, 1819; and the third line of st. i. is partly from the last stanza but one of the same "Ode." From these extracts, and the whole tone and swing of the hymn, it is clear that it was suggested by the "Ode." It appeared anonymously in Mason and Greene's American Church Psalmody, Boston, 1831, No. 616, in 5 st. of 4 l. It is given in several modern American collections, including Hatfield's Church H. Bk., 1872, and others. It is sometimes ascribed to J. Montgomery, and at other times to S. F. Smith, but in each case in error, Its authorship is unknown. [F. M. B.]

O for the happy days gone by. F. W. Faber. [Dryness in Prayer.] Appeared in his Jesus and Mary, &c., 1849, in 18 st. of 4 l., and again in his Hymns, 1862. In the American Bapt. Praise Book, N. Y., 1871, No. 937, beginning, "One thing alone, dear Lord, I dread," is a cento compiled from this hymn. [J. J.]

O for the peace which floweth as a river. Jane Crowdson, nee Fox. [Hoping and Trusting to the end.] Pub. in her post-humous work, A Little While, and Other Poems, 1864, as the opening hymn of the volume, in 6 st. of 41. It is found in full or in part in a large number of hymn books in G. Britain and America, and is much esteemed as a hymn for private use. [J. J.]

O fortis, O clemens Deus. C. Cofin. [Evening.] Included in the Paris Breviary, 1736, as the Ferial hymn at Vespers on Thursdays from Trinity to Advent; and again in Coffin's Hymni Sacri, 1736, p. 24. Also in J. Chandler's Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1837, No. 28; and Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. Tr. as:—

1. O God of our salvation, Lord. J. Chandler, in his Hys. of the Prim. Church, 1837, p. 25, and Oldknow's Hymns, &c., 1850, &c.

2. Meroiful and mighty Lord, Author of redeeming love. By R. Campbell, in his Hys. and Anthons, 1850. This is repeated in the 1860 Appendix to the Hymnal Noted.

Other trs. are :---

 Merciful and mighty Lord, Author of the saving word. I. Williams. 1839.
 O God of mercy, God of might. J. D. Chambers. 1857.

3. Unto Thee, O Father, merciful and mighty. D. T. Morgan. 1880. [J. J.]

O frommer und getreuer Gott. [Penitence.] Based on a hymn, "Ich armer Mensch, mein Herr und Gott," by Johann Leon in his Trostbüchlein, 1611, and thence in Wackernagel iv. p. 507, in 14 lines. It is included in 6 st. of 4 l. in the Königsberg G. B., 1650, p. 297, and probably in an earlier ed. c. 1643; also in J. Crüger's Praxis pietatis, 1648, No. 47, in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 527, &c. Sometimes erroneously ascribed to Bartholomäus Ringwaldt, whose hymn with the same first line (Porst's G. B., ed. 1855, No. 318) is entirely different. Tr. as:—

O God, Thou righteous, faithful Lord. In full, by A. Crull, in the Ohio Luth. Hyl., 1880. [J. M.]

O God, before Whose radiant throne. [Opening of a Place of Worship.] This hymn appeared anonymously in the 1810 ed. of Rippon's Bap. Sel., No. 338, Pt. ii., in 7. st. of 4 l. It was rewritten by the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon in 1866 in 5 st., and included in his O. O. H. Bk., 1866, as by "John Rippon, 1810; Charles H. Spurgeon, 1866." This text and ascription of authorship were repeated in Dale's English H. Bk., 1874. We have seen no authority for attributing the original to Dr. Rippon. Its anonymous appearance in his Sel., in which the authors' names are usually given with the hymns, is no proof that he was the author.

O God, for ever near. Abner W. Brown. [Public Worship.] Written in 1844, and 1st pub. in his Introits, 1845, in 4 st. of 4 l.; again in his Hys. and Scriptural Chants, 1848; and again in his Sel. of Ps. & Hys., 1865. In this last it was increased to 5 stanzas, the addition being st. iv. Iu the Bap. Ps. & Hys., 1858, No. 883, st. i.-iii. are from this lymn, and st. iv. is st. i. in a rewritten form. The bymn in whole or in part is also in other collections, as Alford's Year of Praise, 1867. [J. J.]

O God, my God, my all Thou art. [Ps. lxiii.] This translation, by John Wesley, of a version of the 63rd Psalm, by an unknown Spanish author, was first pub. in J. Wesley's Coll. of Psalms and Hymns, 1738. This was an enlarged edition of the Ps. and Hys. previously pub. by him at Charles-Town, printed by Lewis Timothy, 1737. [See Methodist Hymnody, § i.] The tr. was again pub. in the Wesley Hys. and Sacred Poems, 1739, p. 196, in 10 st. of 4 l. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. i., p. 174.) In 1780 it was included in the Wes. H. Bk., No. 425, with the omission of st. iv., "In holiness within Thy gates." Curiously enough, this stanza, as "O Lord, within Thy sacred gates," is the opening stanza of a cento rom this hymn given in several modern collections, including the Hymnary, 1872, the H. Comp., 1870 and 1876, and others, together with many American collections. This cento is in Elliott's Ps. and Hys., 1835, and is pro-bably much earlier. Dr. Osborn says, in his note on this hymn (P. Works, vol. i., p. 174.) "This noble version of Ps. lxiii. was inserted in the book of 1738, and therefore probably translated in America. The Spanish author is unknown."

Mr. G. J. Stevenson, in his Methodist Hymn Book Notes, 1883, p. 294, says positively:—

"This hymn is from the Spanish, translated by John Wesley when he was in America in 1735."

Although there is much to strengthen Dr. Geborn's suggestion, that the tr. was made in America, we have seen no proof that it was made there in 1735; and somewhat against it | is the fact that the hymn is not in the Charles-Town Coll. of Ps. & Hys., 1736-37. Bishop Bickersteth's note on the cento, in his H. Comp. (annotated ed., 1880), is well deвегvéd :--

"This very beautiful version of part of the 63rd Psalm is varied from the translation of a Spanish version by J. Wesley. It seems to the Editor one of the most melodious and perfect hymns we possess for public worship."

The use, both of the Wes. H. Bk. text, and of the cento, "O Lord, within Thy sacred gates, is extensive, especially of the latter.

O God, my Refuge, hear my cries. I. Watts. [Ps. lv.] Appeared in his Psalms of David, &c., 1719, p. 147 (misprinted 947), in 10 st. of 4 l., and headed, "Support for the afflicted and tempted Soul." In explanation of some portions of the Psalm which are not paraphased, the following note is added:—

"I have left out some whole Pashus, and several parts of others that tend to fill the mind with overshelming sorrows, or sharp resentment; neither of which are so well suited to the spirit of the Gospel, and therefore the particular complaints of David against Achtophel here are entirely omitted."

This paraphrase is given in some collections in full, and in others in an abbreviated form. In the Leeds Hy. Bk., 1853, and others, it begins with st. viii. as "God shall preserve my soul from fear." [J. J.]

- O God of Bethel, by Whose hand. P. Doddridge. [Jacob's Vow.] This wellknown and much-appreciated hymn has more than usual interest attached to it from its historical association with the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases of 1745 and 1781, and the numerous forms it has undergone. facts cannot be grasped without much difficulty unless they are set forth in chronological order, and with more than usual detail.
 - i. The English form of the Text.
- 1. The earliest form of the hymn is that in the handwriting of Doddridge, now in the possession of the Rocker family, and quoted in this Dictionary as the D. MSS. (see Doddridge). Doddridge's Ms. hymns number 100. This is as follows:-
 - " No. xxxli.

JACOB'S VOW. From Gen. xxxiii. 20, 22.

- "Oh God of Bethel, by whose Hand Thine Israel attli is fed Who thro' this weary Pilgrimage Hast all our Fathers led
- "To thee our humble Vows we raise To thee address our Prayer And in thy kind and faithful Breast Deposite all our Care
- "If thou thro' each perplexing Path Wilt be our constant Guide If thou wilt daily Bread supply And Raiment wilt provide
- "If thou wilt spread thy Shield around Till these our wandrings cease And at our Father's lov'd Abode Our Souls arrive in Peace
- "To thee as to our Covenant God We'll our whole selves resign nd count that no.
 But all we have is thine.
 Jan. 16 1739," And count that not our tenth alone

2. In 1755, Job Orton published 370 hymns | st. v. is new.

from another Ms. (written in shorthand, Humphreys's ed., Preface, p. viii.) by Doddridge as Hymns founded on Various Texts in the Holy Scriptures, &c. This hymn is given as No. iv., and begins :-

"O God of Jacob, by whose hand," this being the only variation from the Rooker MS. as above. In 1839, J. D. Humphreys reprinted the hymn in his edition of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., No. iv., from the same Ms. as J. Orton had used, but with these variations: st. i., l. 4, Hath for "Hast"; and st. v., l. 2, We will ourselves for "We'll our whole selves." Of Humphreys's text editors have taken no notice.

From Orton's text there are the following hymns in C. U.:—

1. O God of Jacob, by Whose hand. In several collections.

 O Thou, by Whose all bountsous hand. This was given in J. Belknap's Sacred Poetry consisting of Psalms and Hymns, &c., Boston, U. S. A., 1795; and again in later American collections.

ii. The Scottish form of the Text.
1. It is through the Scottish text that the hymn is most widely known. Its history, which is somewhat singular, is as follows:—

- 2. A copy of the Rooker MS. noticed above, and in Doddridge's handwriting, is in the possession of the descendants of Col. Gardiner's family. It formerly belonged to Lady Frances Erskine (an intimate friend of Doddridge's), who became the wife of Col. Gardiner, and her name is written therein. It is a complete copy of the Rooker MS., with the exception that the corrections of the text made by Doddridge in the margin of the Rooker MS. are given in the body of the hymn instead of the original words, and the dates are An Index of first lines, not in the omitted. Rooker MS., is added in Doddridge's hand-writing. From this as. R. Blair (p. 145, i.) secured this hymn from Lady Frances Gardiner, and presented it to the Committee engaged in compiling the Scottish Transla-tions and Paraphrases, and in the issue of 1745 it was given therein as No. xliv., with the single alteration of "shield" to "wings" in et. iv., l. 1.
- 3. Doddridge wrote the hymn on "Jany. 16, 1735;" it was included in the Scottish Trs. and Paraphrases in 1745; and J. Logan was born in 1748. Notwithstanding this, Logan gave it in his Poems, 1781, in the following form, and as his own :-
 - "O God of Abraham, by Whose band Thy people still are fed; Who through this weary pilgrimage, Hast all our fathers led.
 - 2. "Our woos, our prayers, we now present Before Thy throne of grace God of our fathers! be the God Of their succeeding race.
 - "Thro' each perplexing path of life Our wand ring footsteps guide; Give us each day our daily bread, And raiment fit provide!
 - 4, "O spread Thy cov'ring wings around,
 Till all our wanderings cease;
 And at our Father's lov'd abode Our souls arrive in peace !
 - 5. " Now with the humble voice of prayer, The mercy we implore:
 Then with the grateful voice of praise,
 Thy goodness we'll adore."

Here st. i.-iv. are a revise of Doddridge, and

4. During the same year (1781) the Scottish | Translations and Paraphrases were published in their new and revised form (see Scottish Hymnedy). The text as in Logan's Poems is included as No. ii., with the following variations:-

St. I. "O God of Bethel! by whose hand." St. ii., ill. and iv. as in Logan's Poems.
St. v. "Such blessings from Thy gracious hand
Our humble pray'rs implore;
And Thou shall be our chosen God, And portion evermore.

5. This arrangement is evidently by the same hand as the text in the Poems. text as in the Poems has been claimed for M. Bruce (p. 187, i.), but we think on insufficient evidence. Its designation is "P. Doddridge, Jan. 1734; Scottish Trs. & Paraphs., 1745; J. Logan, 1781; and Scottish Paraphs., 1781." 6. From the Scottish Trs. & Paraphs., 1781, the following arrangements are in C. U.:—

1. O God of Bethel, by Whose hand. In numerous collections, in full or in part, in G. Britain and America.
2. O God of Abraham, by Whose hand. In the S. P. C. K. Hymns, 1852.
3. O God of ages, by Whose hand. In Martineau's Hymns, 1840 and 1873.

4. 0 God of Israel, by Whose hand. In the Hys. for use in the Chapet of Mariborough College, 1869.

5. 0 God, by Whose Almighty hand. In the Cooke and Denton Hymnal, 1863.

8. God of our Fathers, by Whose hand. Very much altered in the American Prayer Book Coll., 1826, and a great many later American hymnals.

7. O God of Jacob, by Whose hand. In the 1889
Supplemental Hys. to H. A. & M.

iii. Claim on behalf of Risdon Darracott. Doddridge's original has been claimed for Risdon Darracott, sometime pupil with Doddridge, and subsequently a Presbyterian minister at Wellington, Somerset. The earliest date given to Darracott's version is his marriage, after 1741. Doddridge, as we have seen, actually wrote the hymn on Jan. 16, 1739. Darracott may have adapted it for his own marriage, or Doddridge may have done it for him; in either case the [J. J.] hymn is by Doddridge.

O God of God, O Light of Light. J. Julian. [Praise of Jesus.] Written to Sir John Goss's tone Peterborough in Mercer's Ch. Psalter and H. Bk. for the Sheffleld Church Choirs Union Festival, April 16, 1883, and first printed in the Festival book. In 1884 it was included in Horder's Cong. Hymns, and subsequently in other collections. [J. J.]

O God of hosts, the mighty Lord. Tate & Brady. [Ps. lazziv.] This is a more than usually good example of Tate and Brady's C. M. renderings of the Psalms. It appeared in the New Version, 1696, and when that work yielded to the modern hymn-book, it was adopted, usually in an abbreviated form, in many collections. The centos vary in their length, and in the stanzas chosen, and when a doxology is added, as in H. A. & M., Thring's Coll. and others, that of Tate and Brady is chosen. In Biggs's Annotated H. A. & M., a translation into Latin by George Buchanan, c. 1550, of the corresponding verses in the Psalm, is given, together with a Latin doxology from the Paris Breviary. [Psalters, Eng. § 18, γ.] [J. J.]

O God of love, O King of Peace, Sir H. W. Baker. [In Time of Trouble.] Written for and first published in H. A. & M.,

1861. It has been repeated in several collections. In Alford's Year of Praise, 1867, it is attributed to "Cowper" in error. [J. J.] [J. J.]

O God of our forefathers, hear. C. Wesley. [Holy Communion.] 1st pub. in Hymns on the Lord's Supper, 1745, No. 125, in 4 st. of 6 l. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. iii. p. 309), from whence it passed into the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, No. 382, and the collections of other Methodist bodies. In those works it is usually given in Section vii., entitled "Seeking for full Redemption." Its strictly Eucharistic character is thus lost. St. ii. :--

" With solomn faith we offer up And spread before Thy giorious eyes, That only ground of all our hope,
That precious, bleeding sacrifice,
Which brings Thy grace on sinners down,
And perfects all our souls in one:"

certainly suggests most strongly, if it does not actually teach, the doctrine of the "Real Presence," and would have been so regarded if the hymn had been appropriated to its original use, or had appeared anonymously in a modern hymn-book. [J. J.]

O God of Zion, from Thy throne. [Prayer on behalf of the Church.] This hymn appeared anonymously in the 1800 ed. of Rippon's Bap. Sel., No. 427, Pt. ii., in 7 st. of 4 l. In Beddome's posthumous Hymns, 1817, No. 654, there is a hymn in 4 st. of 4 l. beginning, "Look with an eye of pity down," which is probably the original of that in Rippon's Sci. If this is so Dr. Rippon must have had a Ms. copy of the hymn from Beddome. No. 289 in the Presbyterian Sel. of Hys., Philadelphia, 1861, is Rippon's text with the omission of st. ii. and vii.

O God[that] Who madest earth and sky. Bp. R. Heber. [Patience.] First pub. in the Christian Observer, Jan. 1816, p. 27, Heber's posthumous Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 138, it was given in 2 st. of 4 l, as "O God that madest earth and sky, the darkness and the day," and appointed for use "In Times of Distress and Danger," the only alteration being the change of "Who" to that in the first line. It is in C. U. in Great Britain and America. [J. J.]

O God, the Rock of Ages. Bp. E. H.Bickersteth. [Sunday ofter Christmas.] In his note to this hymn in his annotated ed. of his H. Comp., 1880, Bp. Bickersteth says that "this hymn was written by the Editor (1860)," but in his work, The Two Brothers, &c., 1871, p. 226, it is dated "1862." It was included in the Eng. Presb. Ps. & Hys., 1867; the H. Comp., 1870 and 1876; and the author's From Year to Year, 1883. Its use has extended to America and other English-speaking countries.

O God! to Whom the happy dead. J. Conder. [All Saints' Day.] Appeared in the Cong. H. Bk., 1836, No. 171, in 2 st. of 6 l., and headed, "Whose faith follow" In his work The Choir and the Oratory, 1837, p. 230, it was republished as a "Collect," in metre. It is a paraphrese of the words in the prayer "For the whole state of Christ's Church Militant here on carth," in the Office for Holy Communion in the Book of Common Prayer :-

"And we also bless Thy Holy Name, for all Thy servants departed this like in Thy faith and fear; beseeching Thee to give us grace so to follow their good examples, that with them we may be partakers of Thy heavenly kingdom: Grant this, O Father, for Jesus Christ's sake, our only Mediator and Advocate."

This hymn was repeated in the author's Hys. of Praise, Prayer, &c., 1856, p. 106, and is given in several modern hymn-books. In some it reads, "O God, in Whom the happy dead"; in others, "O God with Whom the happy dead"; and in others, "O God, to Whom the faithful dead." With these exceptions the text is usually given in its original form.

[J. J.]

- O God unseen, but not unknown. J. Montgomery. [Omniscience of the Father.] Written "Sep. 22, 1828" (M. MSS.). A copy, dated "The Mount, n. Sheffield, Dec. 16, 1845," appeared in the Christian Treasury, 1847, p. 7. It had previously appeared in the Evangelical Magazine, 1846, p. 187. In 1853 it was included in Montgomery's Original Hymns, No. 30, in 9 st. of 12 l., and headed, "Thou, God, seest me." It is in C. U. in an abbreviated form, and also as "The moment comes, when attempth shall fail," in the American Sabbath H. Bk., 1858.
- O God unseen, yet ever near. E. Osler. [Holy Communion.] Ist pub. in Hall's Mitre H. Bk., 1836, No. 270, in 4 st. of 4 l., and entitled, "Spiritual Food." In the March number of Osler's Church and King, 1857, it was repeated with the single change of st. iv., l. 1., from "Thus may we sll" to "Thus would we all," &c. In some collections, as the English Hymnal, 1856 and 1861, it is given as, "O Christ unseen, yet ever near"; and in others as, "O God unseen, yet truly near." Other corruptions of the text are also found in Darling's Hymns, 1887, and other collections. H. A. & M. is an exception in favour of the original, with the single change in st. iv., l. 1, of "Thy words" to "Thy word." The use of this hymn in a more or less correct form is very extensive in all English-speaking countries.
- O God, Who gav'st Thy servant grace. Bp. R. Heber. [St. John the Evangelist.] Pub. in his posthumous Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 19, in 4 st. of 4 l. In Thring's Coll. 1882, and some others, it begins, "O Thou! Who gav'st Thy servant grace." In this form of the text st. ii. is omitted, and a new stanza is added as st. iv. from another source. [J. J.]
- O God, Who hear'st the prayer. C. Weeley. [In Time of National Trouble.] This is the first of three hymns "For His Majesty King George," which appeared in the Wesley tract of Hys. for Times of Trouble, for the Year 1745, the remaining two being (2) "The Lord is King, ye saints rejoice;" and (3) "Head of Thy Church triumphant." Concerning the hymn-tracts issued by the Wesleys at that time, Dr. Osborn says in his Advertisement to the P. Works, 1868-72, vol. iv., that they "relate chiefly to the Rebellion of 1745, and exhibit the patriotism and loyalty of the Wesleys, unshaken by persecution, and sustained as it was by a sense of duty to God, and by an unfaltering hatred of Rome." [J. J.]
 - O Gott, du frommer Gott. J. Heer-

mann. [Supplication.] 1st pub. in his Devoti musica cordis, Breslau, 1630, p. 187, in 8 st. of 8 l., entitled "A daily prayer." It is in the section which contains "Some Prayers and Meditations. Many Christian people are accustomed at their family prayers to sing the following prayers to the melodies to which they are set:" and these were evidently written (1623-80) during the time of Heermann's greatest sufferings. Thence in Mützell, 1858, No. 54; in Wackernagel's ed. of his Geistlichs Lieder, No. 42, and the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 568. Of this hymn Fischer, ii. 150, says:

"It is one of the poet's most widely used and signally blessed hynnas, and has been not unjustly called his Master Song. If it is somewhat 'home-baked yet it is excellent, nourishing bread. It gives a training in practical Christianity, and specially strikes three noies godly living, patient suffering, and happy dying."

Lauxmann, in Koch, viii. 324-329, says it has been called the "Priest's Concordance," and relates many interesting incidents regarding it.

Thus at Lenthen, in Silesia, Dec. 5., 1767, the Prussians under Frederick the Great stood face to face with an Austrian army thrice their number. Just as they were about to engage, some of the suldiers began to sing at ii., and the regimental bands joined in. One of the commanders asked Frederick if it should be silened, but he replied, "No, let it be; with such men God will to-day certainly give me the victory." And when the bloody battle ended in his favour he was constrained to say "My God, what a power has religion." St. iii., adda Lauxmann, has been a special favourite with preachers, e.g. J. C. Schade, of Berlin; Dg. Hedinger, Court preacher at Stuttgart, &c.

Various melodies have been set to it. The best known in England (in the Irish Church Hyl. called Munich) appeared in the Meiningen G. B., 1693 (Dr. J. Zahn's Psalter und Harfe, 1886, No. 243). The hymn is tr. as:—

- 1. 0 God, Thou faithful God. A full and good tr. by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger., 2nd Ser., 1858, p. 138; repeated in her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 115; and the Ohio Lutheran Hyl., 1830.
- 2. 0 great and gracious God. A tr. of st. i., ii., iv., vii., viii., by Miss Borthwick, in Dr. Pagenstecher's Coll., 1864, No. 198, repeated in H. L. L., 1884.

Other trs. are, (1) "Lord, grant Thy servants grace," of st. ii. as at i. of No. 685, in the Moranian H. Bk., 1801 (1886, No. 345). (2) "Our blessings come. OGod," by Dr. H. Mills, 1845 (1856, p. 135). (3) Thou good and gracious God," by Miss Coz., 1884, p. 179. (4) "O God, Thou faithful God! Thou well-spring," by N. L. Frothingham, 1876, p. 217.

- O Gott! O Geist! O Licht des Lebens. G. Tersteegen. [Whitsuntide.] This beantiful hymn is one of the finest breathings of Tersteegen's mysticism. 1st pub. in the 4th ed., 1745, of his Geistliches Blumengärtlein, Bk. iii., No. 76, in 8 st. of 6 l., and entitled "Prayer for the inward working of the Holy Spirit." Included in Knapp's Ev. L. S., 1837, No. 749 (1865, No. 763). Tr. as:—
- 1. 0 God, O Spirit, Light of all that live, A good tr., omitting st. vii., by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger., Ist Ser., 1855, p. 140. Her trs. of st. i., iv., vi. altered to four 10's are included in the Hys. of the Spirit, Boston, U.S., 1864, No. 10. Another cento is No. 105, in M. W. Stryker's Christian Chorals, 1885.
- 2. 0 God, 0 Spirit, Light of life. A spirited but free tr., omitting st. vii., by Mrs. Bevan, in her Songs of Eternal Life, 1858, p. 7. From 3 H this st. i.-v. considerably altered and beginning "Spirit of Grace, Thou Light of life," were included as No. 1182 in Kennady, 1863; and repeated in this form, abridged, in the Ibrax Hyl., 1871; Dr. Martineau's Hys. of Praise & Prayer, 1873; Thring's Coll., 1880-82, &c. [J. M.]

O happy band of pilgrims. [Pilgrims of Jesus.] Appeared in Dr. Neale's Hys. of the Eastern Church, 1862, in 8 st. of 4 l., with the note by Dr. Neale, "This is merely a cento from the Canon on SS. Chrysanthus and Daria (March 19)." In his Preface to the 3rd ed., 1866, he is more explicit, and says concerning this hynn, "Safe home, safe home in port," and "Art thou weary?" they "contain so little that is from the Greek, that they ought not to have been included in this collection; in any future edition they shall appear as an Appendix."
Dr. Neale did not live to publish another edition: but in 1882 the 4th ed. with notes, was issued under the editorship of S. G. Hatherly, and in it the three hymns named were "removed from the body of the work at Dr. Neale's suggestion," and included in an Appendix. Its proper designation, therefore, in By Dr. Neale, based on the Greek Canon on SS. Chrysanthus and Daria by St. Joseph the Hymnographer. It must be added that no Greek lines corresponding to those in the English hymn can be found in that Canon. Dr. Neale never heless found what he wanted there, that is the inspiration to write the hymn as it now stands. The use of this hymn is very extensive in all English-speaking [J. J.] countries.

O happy day that fix'd my choice. P. Doddridge. [Joy in Personal Dedication to God.] Appeared in J. Orton's posthumous edition of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., 1755. No. 23, in 5 st. of 4 l., and entitled, "Rejoicing in our Covenant Engagements to God," 2 Chron. xv. 15; and again, with changes in the text of st. iv., in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the same, 1839, No. 29. Its use in its fall, in an abbreviated, and in a translated form, is extensive. The third stanza,

"'Tis done; the great transaction's done; I am the Lord's, and He is mine: He drew me, and I followed on, Charmed to confess the voice divine," although often omitted from the hymn is frequently found as a quotation. In the American Prayer Bk. Coll., 1826, the hymn was altered throughout, and began, "O happy day, that stays my choice." This form is in several modern American collections. In the American Unitarian Hys. for the Church of Christ, 1853, st. iv., v. are given as No. 381, and begin "Now rest, my long-divided heart." The alterations which have been made in Doddridge's text are too numerous to be given in detail. At the present time two texts are quoted as the original, the first that in J. Orton's ed. of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., 1755; and the second that in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the same, 1839. These are the same, except in st. iv. The readings are:—

1755. "Now rest my long divided Heart, Fix'd on this blissful Centre, rest; With Ashes who would grudge to part When call'd on Angels bread to feast?" 1839. " Now rest, my long-divided heart, Fix'd on this blissful centre, rest; O who with earth would grudge to part When call'd with angels to be bless'd!"

As this hymn is not found in any Doddridge as, with which we are acquainted, we cannot determine which of these two readings was written by Doddridge. Orton admits in his preface that he tampered in some instances (not named) with Doddridge's text [see Doddridge, P.], whilst Humphreys contends that he was faithful thereto. We can only add that Orton's reading has more in common with Doddridge's usual style and mode of expression than that of Humphreys, but the weight of evidence is in favour of the latter.

O happy is the man who hears.
[Wisdom.] From evidence set M. Bruce. forth in our biographical sketch of M. Bruce (p. 187, i.), we believe the original of this hymn to have been written by M. Bruce about 1764, and that the Ms. of the same was handed to J. Logan by Bruce's father a short time after Bruce's death in 1767. It was published by Logan as his own in his Poems, 1781, p. 104, No. 4, in 5 st. of 4 l. In the same year, a slightly altered version of the text was given in the new and revised edition of the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, as No. xi., and this has been in authorised use in the Church of Scotland for more than 100 years. It is also found in many English and American collections. The nearest approach to the original text is given in Dr. Mack-elvie's Lochleven and other Poems, &c., 1837, p. 258; and Dr. Grosart's Works of M. Bruce, 1865, p. 133. The text of the Scottish Tra. and Paraphs., 1781, has been altered in several modern collections to (1) "How blest the man that bends the ear;" (2) "How happy is the child who hears;" (3) "How happy is the youth who hears;" and (4) "Wisdom has treasures greater far."

O happy land, O happy land. E. Parson, née Rooker. [Heaven.] Contributed to J. Curwen's Child's Own H. Bk., 1840, in 2 st. of 8 l., the first beginning as above, and the second, "Thou heavenly Friend," &c. This was repeated in the Bap. Ps. & Hys., 1858, and several other collections. Another text, also by Mrs. Parson, in 3 st. of 4 l. was published in her Willing Class Hymns some time after her death. It consists of the two stanzas as above, somewhat altered, and another stanza, beginning, "The saints in light," &c. These three stanzas are given in W. F. Stevenson's Hymns for Ch. & Home, 1873.

O happy saints [that] who dwell in light, And walk with Jesus, &c. J. Berridge. [Saints in Glory.] Pub. in his Zion's Songs, &c., 1785, No. 143, in 6 st. of 4 l., and headed, "At Thy right hand are pleasures for evermore." Ps. xvi. 11 (cd. 1842, p. 139). Although seldom found in English collections, its use in Amorica, sometimes abbreviated as in the Bap. Service of Song, Boston, 1871, is somewhat extensive. It is based upon Ralph Erskine's "Aurora veils her rosy face" (p. 96, 1.) The second stanza in Berridge reads:—

"Releas'd from sin, and toll, and grief, Death was their gate to endless life;

An open'd cage to let them fly, And build their happy nest on high." This reads in Erskine's original :-

" Death is to us a sweet repose The bud was ope'd to show the rose; The cage was broke to let us fly And build our happy nest on high."

The rest of the hymn follows Erskine's line of thought, but there is no repetition of his actual words.

O Haupt voll Blut und Wunden, This is a P. Gerhardt. P. Gerhardt. [Passiontide.] This is a beautiful but free tr. of the "Salve caput cruentatum," which is pt. vii. of the Rhythmica Oratio, ascribed to St. Bernard of Clairvaux. The Latin text is noted under Salve mundi salutare; the present note is given here on account of the length of that article. Gerhardt's version appeared as No. 156 in the Frankfurt ed., 1656, of Crüger's Praxis, in 10 st. of 8 l., entitled, "To the suffering Face of Jesus Christ." It is repeated in Wackernagel's ed. of Gerhardt's Geistl. Lieder, No. 22; Bachmann's ed., No. 54; the Unv. L.S., 1851, No. 109; and almost all recent German hymnbooks. Lauxmann in Koch. viii., 47, thus characterises it :-

"Bernard's original is powerful and searching, but Gerhard's original is powerful and searching, but Gerhard's hymn is still more powerful and more profound, as redrawn from the deeper spring of evangelical Lutheran, Scriptural, knowledge, and fervency of faith." Stanza z. Lauxmann would trace not only to Bernard but to st. iti. of "Vaiet will ich dir geben" (see Herberger); and to Luther's words on the death of his daughter Magdalen "Who dies thus, dies well." He adde many betterner of its use. Thus A G. Spargonberg when you maggaten "Who dies thus, dies well." He adds many instances of its use. Thus A. G. Spangenberg, when on the celebration of his jubilee he received many flattering testimonies, replied in humility with the words of stanzs iv. In 1798, while C. F. Schwartz lay a-dying, his Malabar pupils gathered round him and sang in their own language the last verses of this hymn, he himself indiving till his breath fulled in death joining till his breath failed in death.

The beautiful melody (in H. A. & M., called Passion Chorale) first appeared in Hans Leo Hassler's Lustgarten, Nürnberg, 1601, set to a love song, beginning "Mein G'muth ist mir verwirret." In the Harmoniae Sacrae, Görlitz, 1613, it is set to "Herzlich thut mich verlaugen" (see Knoll), and then in the Praxis, 1656, to Gerhardt's hymn. The original forms are in L. Erk's Choral Buch, 1863, Nos. 117, 118. It is used several times by J. S. Bach, in his Passion Music according to St. Matthew. The hymn is tr. as:—

1. O Head so full of bruises. In full, by J. Gambold, in Some other Hys. and Poems, London, 1752, p. 12. Repeated in the Moravian H. Bh., 1754, pt. i., No. 222; and pt. ii. pp. 389, 391. In the ed. of 1789 it was greatly altered (1886, No. 88), and a new tr. of st. ix. substituted for Gambold's version; the Gambold tr. of st. ix., "When I shall gain permission," being given as a separate hymn (1886, No. 1247). Centos from the text of 1789 are found under the original first line in Walker's Cheltenham Ps. & Hys., 1855; Reid's Praise Bk., 1872, &c. Other forms

(1) O Head, so pierced and wounded (st. i. alt.) in Dr. Pagenstecher's Coll., 1884.
(2) O Christ! what consolation (at. vi. alt.) in the Amer. Royt. H. Bk., 1871.
(3) I yield Thee thanks unfeigned (st. viii.), in E. Bickersteth's Christian Psalmody, 1833, and others.
(4) I give thee thanks unfeigned (st. viii. alt.), in Bp. Ryle's Coll., 1860.

2. O Sacred Head! now wounded. A very beautiful tr. by Dr. J. W. Alexander. The tre, of st.

i., il., iv., v., vii.-x. were first pub. in the Christian Lyre, N. York, 1830, No. 136. These were revised, and trs. of st. iii., vi., added, by Dr. Alexander for Schaff's Deutsche Kirchenfreund, 1849, p. 91. The full text is in Dr. Alexander's Breaking Crucible, N. Y., 1861, p. 7; in Schaff's Christ in Song, 1869, p. 178; and the Cantate Domino, Boston, U. S., 1859. In his note Dr. Schaff says :-

"This classical hymn has shown an imperishable vitality in passing from the Latin into the German, and from the German into the English, and proclaiming in three tongues, and in the name of three Confessions—the Catholic, the Lutheran, and the Reformed—with equal effect, the dying love of our Saviour, and our boundless indebtedness to Him."

This version has passed into very many English and American hymnals, and in very varying centes. A comparison with the Christ in Song text will show how these centos are arranged. We can only note the following forms:-

(1) O sacred Head! new wounded (st. i.), People's H. 1867; Hymndry, 1872; and in America in Hatfield's Church H. Bk., 1872; Hys. & Songs of Praise, N. Y.,

(8) O Sacred Head! once wounded (i. alt.), Leeds H.
Bk., 1853; Bapt. Ps. & Hys., 1858; New Cong., 1859.
(3) O Sacred Head, sore wounded (i. alt.), in the Stoke H. Bk., 1878.

(4) O Scored Head, so wounded (i. alt.), J. L. Porter's Coll., 1876.
(5) O blessed Christ, once wounded (i. alt.), Dr. Thomas's Augustine H. Bk., 1866.
(6) O Lamb of God, once wounded (i. alt.), Scottish Prest. Hyl., 1876.

[7] O Lamb of God, sore wounded (i. alt.), in the Torox Hys., 1871.

3. Ah! Head, so pierced and wounded. A good tr. by R. Massie, omitting st. vi., contributed as No. 92 to the 1857 ed. of Mercer's C. P. & H. Bk., and reprinted in his own Lyra Domestica, 1864, p. 114. Abridged in Mercer's Oxford ed., 1864, and in Kennedy, 1863. A cento beginning with st. viii., 1. 5, "Oh! that Thy cross may ever," is in J. H. Wilson's Ser. of Praise, 1865.

4. Ah wounded Head, that bearest. By Miss Winkworth, omitting st. vi., as No. 51 in her C. B. for England, 1863. Abridged in the Uppingham and Sherborne School H. Bk., 1874, and the Free Ch. H. Bk., 1882.

5. Oh! bleeding head, and wounded. In full, by J. Kelly, in his P. Gorhardt's Spir. Songs, 1867, p. 59, repeated in the Ohio Luth. Hyl., 1880.

Other trs. are:—(1) "Ah wounded Head! must Thou." By Miss Winkworth, 1855, p. 80. (2) "Thou pierced and wounded brow." By Miss Dunn, 1857, p. 39. (3) "O Head, blood-stained and wounded," in the Schaff-Gilman Lib. of Religious Poetry, ed. 1883, p. 745, marked as tr. by Samuel M. Jackson, 1873, 1880. [J. M.]

O heavenly love, arise, arise. [Lore as a Guide.] This is part of a song which Wolfram von Eschenbach (q.v.) is supposed to sing at a contest for a prize at the hands of a German princess. The work in which this song is found is Tannhauser; or, The Battle of the Bards. A Poem by Neville Temple and Edward Trevor, Lond., Chapman & Hall, 1861, p. 54, in 5 st. of 4 l. The hymn in Kennedy, 1863, No. 195, is composed of st. iii.-v., and a closing stanza by Dr. Kennedy. It is a beautiful hymn and suited for the Epiphany. We may add that Neville Temple was the Hon, Julian Charles Henry Fane; and Edward Trevor was Edward Robert Bulwer, afterwards Lord Lytton. [J. J.]

O help us, Lord; each hour of need. H. H. Milman. [Lent.] 1st pub. in Bp. Heber's posthumous Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 52, in 6 st. of 4 l. and appointed for second Sunday in Lent, being based on the Gospel of that day. In his Sel. of Ps. & Hys., 1837, Milmau omitted st. iv. and v., thus reducing it to 4 st. of 4 1, and each stanza beginning with the words, "Oh! help us." In this form it has come into extensive use in all English-speaking countries. In the Mitre H. Bk., 1836, No. 190, it is partly rewritten by E. Osler as, "O help us, Lord! in all our need." This is repeated in Osler's Church and King, June 1, 1837, but it has failed to attract attention. Another arrangement, beginning with at. ii., "O help us, when our spirits bleed," is sometimes found in modern hymnals. [J. J.]

O Herre Gott, dein göttlich Wort. [Holy Scripture.] Appeared in the Erfurt Exchiridion of 1527, and thence in Wackernagel, iii. p. 123, in 8 st. of 12 l. Included in Klug's G. B., 1529, and became very popular in Reformation times. Recently it is found as No. 434 in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863.

as No. 454 in the Defili G. L. S., cu. 1003.

In the 1527 and many later books it bears the initials

"A. H. Z. W." Lauxmann, in a long note in Kock, viii. 687-706, tries to vindicate its authorship as by Ulrich (Alaricus) Hersog zu Württemberg, who d. at Tübingen,
Nov. 6, 1550. In the Blätter für Hymmologie, 1883,
p. 79, 1887, p. 11, it is noted that in the Licäter Krone of 1734 to the Ratzeburg G. B., these initials are resolved to mean Anark Herr zu Wildenfels (near Zwickau), who was known as one of the principal supporters of the Reformation at the court of the Elector John of Saxony, was one of the signatories to the Augsburg Confession (subscribing it as Anark dominus de Vuldenfels), and d. at Altenburg, June 1, 1539. The ascription to Anark of Wildenfels essens to us much the more probable. Tr. as:—

1. How long, Oh God, Thy word of life. A very free tr. in 16 st. of 4 l. by Miss Fry, in her Hys. of the Reformation, 1845, p. 122. Her trs. of st. i., vii., viii. are No. 48, in Whittemore's Suppl. to all H. Bks., 1860.

Supple, to all H. Bas., 1800.
Other tra. are, (1) "O hevenly Lorde, Thy godly Worde," by Bp. Coverdale, 1538 (Remains, 1846, p. 584).
(2) "Lord God. Thy face and word of grace," in the Gude & Godly Bullates, ed. 1588, fol. 29 (1868, p. 48).
(3) "O God our Lord, Thy divine Word," as No. 307 in pt. i. of the Moravian H. Bk., 1754. (4) "We give Thee thanks, most gracious Lord," by Dr. J. Hunt, in his Spir. Sonys of Martin Luther, 1853, p. 73. [J. M.]

O himmlische Liebe! du hast mich besessen. [Love to Christ.] Included in Wagner's G. B., Leipzig, 1697, vol. iii. p. 713, in 6 st. of 6 l. Repeated in the Trier G. B. (Rom. Catholic), 1846, p. 227, reading, du hast mich ergriffen. It is tr. as:—

O Heavenly Love, Thou hast made me Thy dwelling. By Dr. Littledale, in full, as No. 899 in the People's Hyl., 1867, and eigned "F. R." [J. M.]

O hochbeglückte Seele. C. J. P. Spitta. [Christian Service.] A fine hymn for Lay Helpers and all workers in Christ's service. 1st pub. in his Pealter und Harfe, Pirna. 1833, p. 78, in 7 st. of 8 l., entitled "The Servant of the Lord." Included in the Leipzig G. B., 1844, No. 395. Tr. as:—

1. How blessed, from the bends of sin. A free tr. of st. i., ii., vi., vii., by Miss Borthwick, in H. L. L., 1st Ser., 1854, p. 66 (1884, p. 67). This version has attained considerable popularity, and is found in a number of the leading hymnals of Great Britain, e.g. H. A. & M., 1875; the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871; Free Ch. H. Bk.

1882, &c.; and in America in the Epis. Hys. for Ch. & Home, 1860; Boardman's Sel., 1861, &c.
2. The man is highly blessed. In full, by R.

2. The man is highly blessed. In full, by R. Massie, in his Lyra Domesticu, 1860, p. 76. His trs. of st. iii., iv., vi., vii. beginning "God sanctifies and blesses," are included in the Bk. of Common Praise, 1863, and G. S. Jellicoe's Coll., 1867.

Other trs. are. (1) "O Soul, how blest (blest truly,") by the Hon. S. R. Mazwell, 1857; p. 101. (2) "Thrice happy be who serveth," by Miss Burlingham, in the British Herald, Aug. 1865, p. 119. (3) "O highly blessed servant," by Lady Durand, 1873. [J. M.]

O Holy Ghost, Thou God of peace, I. Williams. [Communica of Saints; and For Unity.] 1st pub. in his Hys. on the Catchism, 1842, No. 28, in 4 st. of 4 l., and again in later editions of the same work. In its original form it is not much used. In 1854 it appeared in an altered form in Morrell & How's Ps. & Hys., st. i.—iii. being from I. Williams with alterations, and st. iv. being new by Bp. W. How. I. Williams's omitted stanza reads:—

"For love is life, and life is love, And Thou Thyself art love and life; And we in Thee shall live and move, If Thou wilt keep us free from strife."

The Williams-How text has been repeated in the S.P.C.K. Church Hymns, 1871, Thring's Coll., 1882, and others. [J. J.]

O Holy Ghost, Thy people bless. Sir H. W. Baker. [Whitsuntide.] Written for use in the Loudon Mission of 1874, and printed in Hys. for the London Mission (No. 2), which were published by the compilers of H. A. & M., 1874. In 1875 it was included in the revised ed. of H. A. & M. [J. J.]

O Holy Jesu, Prince of Peace. R. Brown-Borthwick. [Holy Communion.]. Written in 1870, and 1st pub. in his Sixteen Hys. with Tunes, &c., the same year, in 6 st. of 6 l., and again in his Select Hys. for Church and Home, 1871, No. 58. In 1871 it appeared in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, with the omission of st. iv. In the author's 2nd ed. with Appendix of his Select Hymns, &c., 1885, st. iv. is bracketed for omission, a slight alteration in st. i., 1. 3, is introduced, and the following note is added:—

"This is not a congregational hymn, but a meditation, to be read while non-communicants are retiring, or to be sung by the choir alone, anthem-wise, kneeling." [J. J.]

O Holy Lord, content to live [dwell—fill]. Bp. W. W. How. [A Child's Hymn.] Written in 1850, and 1st pub. in The Parish Choir in 1851. In 1854 it was repeated in Morrell & How's Ps. & Hys., No. 65, in 5 st. of 4 l. When included in H. A. & M, in 1861, considerable alterations were made in the text, and it began, "O Holy Lord, content to dwell." This first line, but not the alterations in detail, was adopted in the enlarged ed. of Morrell & How's Ps. & Hys., 1864. For the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871, it was again rewritten, this time by Bp. How, as "O Holy Lord, content to fill." This is the author's authorised text, and is repeated in his Hymns, 1886. All these texts are in C. U. [J. J.]

O Holy Saviour, Friend unseen. Charlotte Elliott. [In Affliction.] This hymn is found in two forms, and both by Miss Elliott. The first appeared in the Invalid's Hyma Book, 1834, in 9 st. of 4 L, and began:—

"O Holy Saviour! Friend unseen, Since on Thine arm Thou bid'st me lean, Help me, throughout life's varying scene, By faith to cling to Thee."

The second version was given in her Hours of Sorrow, &c., 1836, p. 132, also in 9 st. of 41. It began :—

"O Holy Saviour! Friend nuseen! The faint, the weak, on Thee may lean: Help me, throughout life's varying scene, By faith to cling to Thee."

The full text of this revision is given in Lord Selborne's Book of Praise, 1862, and in the Lyra Brit., 1867, as the original, in error. The hymn-books have generally followed this text, but (in an abbreviated form) Snepp's Songs of G. & G., 1872, and a few others, are exceptions in favour of the older text. In. Beecher's Plymouth Coll., 1855, No. 759, is a cento from the older text, and begins, "Holy Saviour, Friend unseen." Dr. Martineau's "O Holy Father, Friend unseen," in his Hymns, 1873, is also from the same text. This altered form is also in other Unitarian hymn-books. In Kennedy, 1863, No. 517, begins "O gentle Saviour, Guide unseen." These various texts and centos are all in O. U. in G. Britain, and America.

- O Holy Spirit, come, And Jesu's love declare. O. Allen. [Whitsuntide.] Appeared in his Hys. of the Christian Life, 1862, p. 53, in 8 st. of 4 l. It is based upon the words "The Holy Ghost shall teach you all things," St. John xiv. 26. In an abridged form it is in C. U. in G. Britain and America.
- O how I love Thy holy word. W. Corper. [Holy Scripture in Affiction.] This is No. 17 of Book iii, in the Olney Hymns, 1779. It is in 6 st. of 4 l., and headed, "Affictions sanctified by the Word." It is in C. U. in its original form, but a cento therefrom, beginning with st. iii., "Long unsafflicted, undismayed," is much more popular than the complete hymn. [J. J.]
- O how the thought that we shall know. E. Swaine. [Heaven Anticipated.] The original publication of this hymn we are unable to determine. It probably appeared in a religious magazine, circa 1830: for st. ii.-v. were given in Bickersteth's Christian Psalmody. 1833, No. 575: as "For ever to behold Him shine." The original was republished in Swaine's The Hand of God, a Fragment, with Poems, Hymns, and Versions of Psalms, 1839: Bickersteth's arrangement was also repeated in several collections. In 1876 Bp. E. H. Bickersteth wrote a new stanza, substituted it for Swaine's original, and gave the hymn in his Hy. Comp. as "For ever' beatific word," together with an elaborate note in which he says it was strange to begin the hymn as his father had done, with the second stanza of the original, "For ever to behold Him shine,"

"without the sacred name of Jesus being previously expressed, and without the key-note, 'For ever,' being elearly struck, as in the original, at the close of the first verse. It is probably owing to this fact that so beautiful a bymn has been omitted from many of the standard bymnals of the Church. The editor therefore ventured, though with much diffidence, to write the first verse given in the text [as in H. Comp.]: for the closing of the first and last stangas with the same word 'For ever,' as originally contrived by the author, seems almost essential to the full chord of eternity, which is struck again and again in this admirable hymm." (Notes, H. Comp., No. 240.)

This arrangement by Bp. Bickersteth has produced a very attractive and melodious hymn.

[J. J.]

- O ignis Spiritus Paracliti. St. Hildegarde. [Whiteuntide.] Mone, No. 179, gives this sequence from a Ms. of the 12th cent. at Wiesbaden. This Ms. contains the writings of St. Hildegart, Abbess of Rupertsberg, near Bingen (b. 1098, d. 1180), and Mone thinks the sequence is probably by her. His text is repeated by Daniel, v. p. 201. and Kehrein, No. 427. Tr. as:—
- O are of the Comferter, O Life of all that live. By R. F. Littledale in the Lyra Messianica, 1864, p. 377. In the People's H., 1867, and the Irvingite Hys. for the Churches, 1871, it is rewritten by Dr. Littledale as "O Fire of God, the Comforter."

Another tr. is:—
O Comforter, Thou uncreated Fire. T. G. Crippen, in his Anotent Hys. & Poems, &c., 1868. [W. A. S.]

- O it is hard to work for God. F. W. Faber. [Trial of Faith.] Appeared in his Jesus and Mary, &c., 1849, in 19 st. of 4 l., and headed, "The Right must Win;" also repeated in his Hymns, 1862. The following centos from this hymn are in C. U.:—(1) "O it is hard to work for God;" (2) "God's glory is a wondrous thing:" (3) "O blest is he to whom is given:" and (4) "Workman of God, O lose not heart."
- O it is joy in one to meet. Bp. R. Mant. [Divine Worship.] In his Ancient Hymns, &c., 1837, p. 89, is given an original "Hymn commemorative of the pleasure of Social Worship," in 6 st. of 4 l., beginning, "Glad is thy sound, O Sabbath bell" (ed. 1871, p. 153). From this sts. ii.-v. were taken, slightly altered, and given in Beecher's Plymouth Coll., 1855, No. 709, as, "O, it is joy in one to meet." In the Songs for the Sanctuary, N. Y., 1865, the same stanzas are given as "O, it is joy for those to meet." The use of both arrangements is limited. [J. J.]
- O Jesu Christ, mein schönstes Licht. P. Gerhardt. [Love to Christ.] Included in the 5th ed., Berlin, 1653, and the Frankfurt ed., 1656, of Crüger's Praxis, in 16 st. of 91., reprinted in Wackernagel's ed. of his Geistliche Lieder, No. 45; Bachmann's ed., No. 73; and included as No. 771 in the Unv. L. S., 1851. One of the finest hymns on the Love of Christ, it is founded on Prayer v. of Class ii. in J. Arndt's Paradiesgärliein, 1612. Lauxmann, in Koch, viii. 294, relates meny incidents regarding this hymn, mentioning that J. A. Bengel caused it to be sung at the celebration of Holy Communion at his death-bed, and that the wife of J. Lange (p. 636, i.) was greatly comforted by it in her last hours. Tr. as:—

Jesus, Thy boundless love to me. A full and very fine tr. by J. Wesley, in Hys. and Sacred Poems, 1739 (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. i. p. 138), and as No. 35 in Hys. & Spir. Songs, 1753. In

vi. O draw me, Father, after Thee (st. ix. alt.). Bk. of Hys., Boston, U.S., 1848, Amer. Unitarian H. Bk., 1869.

vii. Btill nigh me, O my Saviour stand. St. i. of this form is taken from "Peace, doubting heart, my God's I am" (q.v.). To this is added in Snepp's Songs of G. & G., St. xii., xiv., xvi., and in J. L. Porter's Coll., 1878, st. xii., xv., xvi. of this tr.

viii. Thou Friend of sinners! Who has bought viii. Thou Friend of sinners! Who hast bought. This is st. v., iv., xvi. rewritten by E. Osler, and pub. as No. 180 in the Mitre H. BE. 1836, and in his own Church and King, June, 1837, p. 140. Repeated in the Irish Church Hyk., 1869 and 1873.

Other tra. are, (1) "O Christ, my sweetest Life and Light," in the Suppl. to German Psal., ed. 1765, p. 29; in Select Hys. from German Fsal., Tranquebar, 1754, 47, and the Moravian H. Bl., 1754, pt. i., No. 444. St. v.—vii., beginning "Thou cam'et in love to my relief," are given at p. 802 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1784 (1849, No. 480), it begins, "O Christ, my only Life and Light." (2) "O Jesus Christ! my fairest Light," by J. Kelly, 1867, p. 122. (3) "O Christ, my Light, my gracious Saviour," in the Moravian H. Bk., 1886. [J. M.]

O Jesu Christe, wahres Licht. Heermann. [Christian Church.] 1st pub. in his Devoti musica cordis, Breslau, 1630, p. 120, in 6 st. of 4 l. as one of the "Songs of Tears" in the section entitled, "In the time of the persecution and distress of pious Christians." Thence in Mützell, 1858, No 49; in Wackernagel's ed. of his Geistliche Lieder, No. 37, and the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 242. It is a beautiful hymn on Christ as the Light and Centre of the world, and the most widely used through English trs. of any of Heermann's hymns, Tr. as:--

1. O Thou, the true and only Light, Direct, &c. A good tr. of st. i., ii., by W. Ball, as part of his book of words for the English ed. of Mendelssohn's St. Paul, 1836, and thence in Robinson's Church Psalter & H. Bh., 1860. To this in Allon's Suppl. Hys. and C. P. Hyl., 1886, Bapt. Hyl., 1879, &c., trs. of st. iv.-vi., from Chope (see below), were added; and in the Suppl. of 1874 to the New Cong., trs. of st. iii.-vi. from Miss Winkworth (see below). The version in the Anglican H. Bh., 1868, No. 275 (1871, No. 316), is st. i. by Ball, ii.-vi. by R. C. Singleton, 1867.

2. O Christ, the Light of heavenly day! A full and very good tr. by A. T. Russell, as No. 137 in his Ps. & Hys., 1851, and thence in Bosworth's Church Hys., 1865, and G. S. Jellicoe's Coll., 1867. In the Cooke-Denton Hymnal, 1853, No. 12 is composed of sts. i., iv., v., ii., yi., of Russell, in the order named. This form is repeated in Chope's Hyl., 1862, Thring's Coll., 1880-82, &c. The form beginning "O Jesu, Light of heavenly day," in Kennedy, 1863 (thence in Dr. Thomas's Augustine H. Bk., 1866), is Chope greatly altered.

3. O Thou, the true and only Light! Enlighten, &c. A somewhat free tr. in 5 s J. F. Thrupp's Ps. & Hys., 1853. A somewhat free tr. in 5 st., as No. 58 in

4. C Christ, our true and only Light. A good

2nd Ser., 1858, p. 21, repeated in her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 100. This is found in the App. of 1874 to the Leeds H. Bh., 1853; Psalmist, 1878; and in America in the Prest. Hyl., 1874; Baptist H. Bk., 1871; Bapt. Service of Song, 1871; Onio Luth. Hyl., 1880, &c.

5. O Jesu Christ, the world's true Light. A good but rather free version by E. Massie in his Sacred Odes, vol. ii., 1867, p. 175, and thence in J. L. Porter's Coll., 1876.

Another tr. is, "O Christ, Thou heavenly Light, illume," by Dr. G. Walker, 1860, p. 31. [J. M.]

C. J. P. Spitta, O Jesu, meine Sonne. [Love to Christ.] A beautiful hymn on Jesus as the daily help and life of His faithful people. 1st pub. in Spitta's Pealter and Harfe, Pirna, 1833, p. 69, in 8 st. of 8 l. entitled, "Life and full satisfaction in Jesus," Included in Knapp's Ev. L. S., 1850, No. 1445 (1865) No. 1877. (1865, No. 1507). Tr. as:--

O blessed Bun, whose splendour. A full and good tr. by R. Massie in his Lyra Domestica, 1860, p. 66, repeated in Reid's Praise Bk., 1872, and in Schaff's Christ in Song, 1869-70. Varying centos with the original first line are found in Flett's Coll., Paisley, 1871; Hatfield's Church H. Bk., N. Y., 1872; Harland's C. P. & Hyl., 1876; J. L. Porter's Coll., 1876, &c.; and (with the first line as "Blessed Sun") in the Bk. of Common Praise, 1863. Varying centos (generally iv.-vi.) beginning "I know no life divided" (st. iv.) are included in Kennedy, 1863; People's Hyl., 1867; and in America in the Prest. Hyl., 1874; Meth. Epis. Hyl., 1878; Dutch Reformed H. Bk., 1869; Laudes Domini, 1884, &c.

Other tre. are, 1): "Jesus, my sun! before Whose eye," by Miss Fry, 1869, p. 123. (2) "O Jesus Christ, my Sunshine," by Miss Hanington, 1864, p. 16. (3) "O Jesus, at Thy chiutng," by Miss Burlingham, in the British Herald, Aug. 1865, p. 124, repeated in Reid's Praise Bk., 1872. (4) "Jesus, my Sun, before Whose beams," by Lady Durand, 1873, p. 29. [J. M.]

O Jesu, my [our] beloved King. E. Caswall. [Grace and Merit.] Pub. in H. Formby's Catholic Hys., 1851, p. 45, in 7 st. of 41.; in Caswall's Masque of Mary, 1858, p. 248. In the Hymnary, 1872, it begins, "O Jesu, our beloved King." [J. J.]

O Jesu, Thou art standing. Bp. W. W.How. [Christ at the Door.] Written in 1867, and first pub. in the 1867 Supplement to Morrell & How's Ps. & Hymns, in 6 st. of 4 l. It has passed, and usually in an unaltered form, into the 1868 Appx. to H. A. & M., the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871, and other collections in G. Britain, and also into several American collections. It is one of the most popular of Bishop How's hymns. [J. J.]

O Jesus bruised and wounded more. Cecil F. Alexander. [Holy Communion.] Appeared in her work, The Legend of the Golden Prayers and other Poems, 1859, p. 143, in 5 st. of 4 l., and entitled "Communion Hymn." In the Lyra Anglicana, 1865, it was given as Pt. ii. of the hymn "He cometh, on you hallowed board," Pt. i. being an addition of 6 st. to the original hymn. Each of these "Parts" is in C. U. as a separate hymn, the second part being the more popular of the two. [J. J.]

O Jesus! God and man. F. W. Faber. and full tr. by Miss Winkworth in her Lyra Ger., [[Children's Hymn.] This popular children's hymn was given in his Jesus and Mary, &c., 1849, in 7 st. of 4 l., and headed "Ragged School Hymn." In C. U. it is found in two forms, first, the original, in Roman Catholic hymn-books for missions and schools, in which st. iii., iv., both of which are addressed to the B. V. M., are retained; and second, in other hymn-books, where they are omitted. Orig. text in Faber's Hymns, 1862. [J. J.]

O Jesus, I [we] have promised To serve Thee to the End. J. E. Bode. [Confirmation.] Contributed to the 1869 Appendiz to the S. P. C. K. Ps. & Hymns, No. 395. It has been repeated in a great number of hymn-books, and is very popular as a Confirmation hymn. [J. J.]

O Jesus, Jesus, dearest Lord. $F.\ W.$ Faber. [Love to Jesus.] 1st pub. in his Jesus and Mary, &c., 1849, in 10 st. of 4 l., headed "Jesus, my God, and my Ali"; and again in his Hymns, 1862. It is in C. U. in its full form, and also abbreviated to 5 st., as in Hatfield's Church H. Bk., N. Y., 1872. A cento therefrom, beginning with st. vii., "O Light in darkness, Joy in grief," is No. 580 in the Hymnary, 1872.

O Jesus, make Thyself to me. Charlotte Elliott. [The Presence of Jesus desired.] Under date of Jan. 26, 1872, the Rev. J. Babington, brother-in-law to Miss Elliott, wrote to the late D. Sedgwick concerning this hymn: -

this hymn:—

"The lines you refer to, "O Jesus, make Thyself to me," are Miss Charlotte Elliott's. They were for many years the private expression of her own dally prayers, and were so mush e, part of her own hidden life with her Saviour that they were rarely communicated by her to any one, and only to her most intimate friends. One of those had them printed on a eard by Taylor [Edinburgh, 1860], and at first she was rather disconcerted, till she was led to feel that this was her loved Saviour's way of leading others to the participation in her own sacred inner life."

The lines are:-

"O Jesus, make Thyself to me, A living, bright reality; More present to faith's vision keen Than any outward object seen; More dear, more intimately nigh, Than e'en the sweetest earthly tie!"

These lines are given in Snepp's Songs of G. & G., 1872, as No. 538.

O Jesus, Saviour of the lost. Bp. E. H. Bickersteth. [Jesus, the Rock.] Appeared in his Water from the Well-Spring, &c., 1852, p. 180, in 4 st. of 4 l., and headed, "Thou art my Rock." In 1858 it was repeated in his Ps. & Hys., No. 135; and again, as "O Jesu, Saviour, &c.," in his H. Companion, 1870 and 1876. It is also in use in America. Bp. Bickersteth dates its composition 1849, but it is not in his Poems of that Year. [J. J.]

O Jesus, still, still shall I groan. C. Wesley. [Lent.] This poem, in 4 parts, appeared in Hymns and Sacred Poems, 1742, in 36 st. of 6 l., and entitled, "Groaning for Redemption." (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. ii. p. 126.) In 1780 the following hymns were compiled therefrom, and included in the Wes. H. Bk:

1. Jeans, Thou knowest my simpleness [sinfulness].
St. i.-iii., vii., viii. of Pt. ii.
2. Lay to Thy hand, 0 God of grace. St. viii.-x.
of Pt. iii.
3. Baviour from sin, I wait to prove. St. i., ii., iv.vi. of Pt. iv.

These hymns are retained in the Wes. H. Bk., 1875, and are found in various collections. [J. J.]

O King of earth, and air, and sea. Bp. R. Heber. [Lent.] Appeared in his posthumous Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 55, in 6 st. of 4 l., and appointed for the 4th Sunday in Lent. Although apparently based upon the petition in the Lord's Prayer, "Give us this day our daily bread," it was doubtless suggested by the Gospel of the day, the feeding of the five thousand (John vi. 1). It is in C. U. in G. Britain and America. In the American Unitarian Bk. of Hymns, 1848, No. 492, it begins with st. iv., "Thy bounteous hand with food can bless."

O King of kings, Thy blessing shed. [National Hymn.] This hymn "For the King" appeared anonymously in the 8th ed. of Cotterill's Selection, 1819, No. 266, in 5 st. of 4 l. It is known in the following forms :-

1. Its full form as above, and in various hymn-books

2. In 4 st. of 4 l. in Bickersteth's Christian Psalmody, 1833. This is the text, with the necessary changes from king to Queen, &c., which was used in the S. P. C. K. Jubilee Hymne, 1887, and other Jubilee the S. P. C. K. Jubilee Hymns, 1887, and other Jubilee collections.

3. The same arrangement of stanzas altered to suit the changed circumstances occasioned by the accession of H. M. Gracions Majesty Queen Victoria. This was given in an early edition of Hall's Mitre H. Bk. (1st ed., 1836), and was made by Hall.

4. The Mitre H. Bk. text with the addition of Bp. Ken's doxology, "Praise God from Whom," &c.

5. The Mitre H. Bk. text, with a return in some instances to the original text on the one hand, and some new changes on the other, in Thring's Coll., 1882.

(This hymns is arguelly attaining the Coll., 1882.

This hymn is usually attributed to T. Cotterill. In the Julian and the Brooke marked copies of his Selection [see Cotterill, T.] it is blank. Snepp, in his Songs of G. & G., 1872, and others attribute it to "T. Cotterill." Their authority was the simple guess of D. Sedgwick, as his uss. testify. So far as we can discover it is "Anon. in Cotterill's Selection, [J. J.]

O let my Jesus teach me how. J. Berridge. [Abiding in Jesus.] Pub. in his Zion's Songs, &c., 1785, No. 99, in 6 st. of 4 1., with the heading "Little children, abide in Him, 1 John ii. 28" (ed. 1842, p. 99). In modern hymn-books it is usually abbreviated, as in Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bk., 1866. [J. J.]

O Lord, consider my distress. Whittingham. [Ps. li.] This rendering of the 51st Ps., which first appeared in the Anglo-Genevan Psalter, 1556 [Old Version, § III.], is the earliest known version of a Psalm in L. M. in the English language. A copy of the Psalter in which it appeared is preserved in the Bodleian, Oxford. Notwithstanding its historical value and some merit, it is unknown to modern collections. As a specimen we will quote the first stanza:-

"O Lord, consider my distresse, and now with speed some pity take: My sins deface, my faults redresse, good Lord, for thy great mercies sake."

The full text is difficult to find, except in the Psalter appended to many old copies of the Bible, and in the Old Version.

O Lord, how good, how great art Thou. H. F. Lyte. [Ps. viii.] This is Lyte's altered version of his paraphrase of Ps. viii., which first appeared as "How good, low faithful, Lord, art Thou" (p. 705, ii. 1), in his Poems, 1833. This altered form was given in his Spirit of the Pealms, 1834, and is found in the Wes. H. Bk., 1875, and other collec-[J. J.]

O Lord, how happy should we be. J. Anstice. [Rest and Peace in Jesus.] 1st pub. in his posthumous Hymns, 1836, No. 44, in 5 st. of 6 l. In 1841 it was included in the Child's Christian Year, and from thence has passed into numerous hymn-books in all English-speaking countries. It was probably suggested by the words of the Psalmist, "Cast thy burden upon the Lord, and He shall sustain thee;" but in the Hymns there is nothing to indicate its origin, as it is printed there without title or heading of any kind. Usually the text is slightly altered, that in the H. Companion, although claiming to be the original, being at fault in no less than four instances. This hymn is the best known and most widely used of Anstice's hymns. [J. J.]

O Lord, in all our trials here. Emma Toke, nee Leslie. [Saints' Days.] Written in 1851, and contributed anonymously to the S. P. C. K. Hymns for Public Worship, 1852, No. 114, in 3 st. of 4 l. This hymn is in use in the following forms:—

The original in S. P. C. K. Hymns, &c.
 Rewritten by Mrs. Toke, in 3 st. of 8 l. for the Rev.

2. Rewritten by Mrs. Toke, in 8s. to 8s. for the Rev. R. Judd's Sunday School Liturgy and II. Bir., Halifax, 1870, No. 11, and adapted for St. Stephen's Day.

3. In Hutton's Appendiz, Lincoln, n. d., composed of the original; st. iv. from J. Newton's Olmey Hymns, No. cxvl., st, vii.; and a doxology. This arrangement was given in Thring's Coll., 1st ed., 1880, but omitted in the 2nd ed., 1882, in favour of:—

4. The original with a fourth stanza added by Prebendary Thring, No. 385. [J. J.]

O Lord, incline Thy gracious ear. C. Wesley. [Ps. v.] Pub. in the Wesley Ps. & Hys., 1743, in 7 st. of 8 l. (P. Works, 1868-1872, vol. viii. p. 9.) From this paraphrase three centos are in C. U.:--

1. 0 Lord, incline Thy gracious ear. In Kennedy, 1863, No. 377.

2. Behold us, Lord, with humble fear. Composed of

2. Behold us. Lord, with humble fear. Composed of R. iv., v., and vil. rewritten and greatly altered, in A Sch. of Hys. designed as a Suppl. to the Ps. & Hys. of the Pretb. Church. Philadelphia, 1861.

3. On Thee, O God of purity. This, which begins with st. ii., was given in the revised ed. of the Wes. H. Bk., 1875. In Common Praise, 1879, this is again changed to "On Thee, Thou God of purity." [J. J.]

O Lord, my best desire fulfil. Cowper. [Resignation.] 1st pub. in the Olacy Hymns, 1779, Bk. iii., No. 29, in 6 st. of 4 l., and entitled "Submission." It was somewhat widely used in the older hymn-books, and is still given in several collections in G. Britain and America. Usually it is abbreviated, and sometimes it is attributed to J. Newton, but [J. J.]

O Lord of heaven, and earth, and sea. Bp. C. Wordsworth of Lincoln. [Offertory.] Ist pub. in the 3rd ed. of his Holy Year, 1863, in 9 st. of 4 l., and headed, "Charitable Collections." It is in extensive use in G. Britain and America, sometimes in its original form, as in the 1869 Appendix to the S.P.C.K. Ps. & Hys., and again as altered in H. A. & M., or the S.P.C.K. Church Hymns, and others. The changes in the text of the Church Hys. were approved by the author. His authorised text is in the 6th ed. of his Holy Year, 1872. [J, J.]

O Lord of hosts, Whose glory fills. J. M. Neale. [Laying Foundation Stone of a Church.] Appeared in his Hys. for the Young (being the 2nd series of his Hys. for Children) in 1844, No. 27, in 6 st. of 4 l., and headed, "Laying the First Stone of a Church." It is given in numerous hymnals, as H. A. & M., the People's H., Thring's Coll., &c. The alteration of st. v., ll. 1-2, from :-

"Endue the hearts that guide with skill; Preserve the hands that work from ill;"

"The heads that guide endue with skill, The bands that work preserve from ill," given in H. A. & M. in 1861, has been adopted [J. J.] with almost common consent.

O Lord, our fathers oft have told.

Tate & Brady. [Ps. xliv. Thanksgiving for Victory.] 1st pub. in three parts in the New Version, 1696. From this rendering, centos of varying length have been compiled from time to time, and have come into common use. In 1836, Edward Osler rewrote various lines from the N. V. and formed them into a hymn of 4 st. of 4 1. beginning:-"Great God of hosts, our ears have heard." This was included in Hall's Mitre H. Bk., as a version of Ps. xliv. and entitled " For Succour against our Foes." From thence it passed into various collections, including Poit's Hymns, &c., 1861, where it was given with slight alterations, and a doxology. This text was repeated in the S.P.C.K. Church Hymns, 1871, with the change in the doxology of "One co-eternal Three" to "One God in Persons Three.'

O Lord our God, with earnest care. [Fast Day.] This cento, in 5 st. of 4 l. in A Selection of Hys. Designed as a Supp. to the Ps. & Hys. of the Press. Church, Philudelphia, 1861, No. 356, and the Songs for the Sanctuary, N. Y., 1865, No. 1333, is from tre. of Latin hymns pub. in the H. Noted; st. i. being st. iii. of "Ecce tempus ideneum;" st. ii., iti, being st. iii., iv. of "Jesu quadragenariae;" st. iv. being st. iv. of "Audi benigne Conditor;" and st. v. of "Plasmator hominis Deus." (For history of the Latin texts see under their respective first lines.) Of these trs. st. i,-iv. are by Dr. Neale, and st. v. by another hand. The result is a most successful hymn for a Fast Day service, or for Lent.

O Lord, our languid souls inspire. J. Newton. [Opening of a Place of Worship.] This hymn was written at the same time and under the same circumstances as Cowper's "Jesus, where'er Thy people meet." Full details are given in the note on that hymn. "O Lord, our languid souls," &c., was pub. in the Olney Hymns. 1779, Bk. ii., No. 43, in 7 st of 4 l., and headed, "On opening a Place for Social Prayer." It is rarely found in its full form. The abbreviated texts sometimes begin with the first stanza, but the most popular arrangements are :-

1. Dear Shepherd of Thy people, hear. This is usually composed of four stauras of the original, beginning with st. ii.

3. Great Shepherd of Thy people, hear. This is the most popular form of the hymn. Bickersteth included it in his Christian Psalmody, 1833.

Kind Shepherd Patentsy, 1995.
 Kind Shepherd of Thy people, hear. This arrangement appeared in J. H. Gurney's Coll. of Hymns, &c., 1838, and is repeated in later hymn-books.

The use of this hymn in these various forms is extensive.

O Lord, our Strength in weakness. Bishop C. Wordmorth of Lincoln. [For a Girls' Friendly Society.] Written in 1881 for The Lincoln Diocesan Manual of the Girls' Friendly Society, and first printed therein, 1881, in 6 st. of 8 l. (Lincoln: Williamson). It is an admirable lyric on Temperance, and is one of the most beautiful of Bp. Wordsworth's hymns. [J. J.]

O Lord, refresh Thy flock. J. Anstice. [Passiontide.] Appeared in his posthumous Hymns, 1836, No. 27, in 5 st. of 4 l., and again, with alterations, in the Child's Christian Year, 1841. In the former it is without title or heading of any kind: in the latter it is appointed for "Thursday in Passion Week." It is in several hymn-books, the text being usually that of the Child's Ch. Your. [J. J.]

O Lord, Thou knowest all the snares. Emma Toke, nee Leslie. [Lent.] Written in 1851, and contributed anonymously to the S. P. C. K. Hys. for Public Worship, 1852, No. 34, in 2 st. of 8 l. From thence it has passed into later eds. of the same collection, the Irish Church Hymnul, and others. In 1870 Mrs. Toke altered it (for the worse) for the Rev. R. Judd's S. S. Liturgy and H. Bk., Halifax, 1870, No. 24, as "O God! Thou knowest all the sources," but in this form it has failed to attract attention.

O Lord, turn not Thy face away.

J. Marckant. [Lent.] This hymn, known

The Lorentell of School as The Lamentation of a Sinner, is first found in J. Daye's ed. of Sternhold and Hopkins, 1560-61 [Old Version, § v.] but without signature. In the edition of 1565, the authorship is given to Marchant. This name, sometimes written Market, appears also in the editions of 1595 and 1606 [Old Version, § 1x. 10]. The first stanza is :--

"O Lord, turn not Thy face away From him that lies prostrate, Lamenting sore his sinful life Before Thy mercy gate."

In The Whole Book of Psalms, &c., by J. Playford, 1877, p. 285, it begins "O Lord, turn not away Thy face."

The authorship of this hymn is given by Miller (Singers and Songs, 1869, p. 46) and by Lord Selborne (Book of Praise, 1862, p. 239, and note) to John Mardley, although Miller adds a "?" in his Index [Old Version, § IX. 10]. These conclusions are based upon Farr's note in his Select Poetry Chiefly Devotional of the Reign of Queen Elizabeth, &c., 1845, vol. i. p. l., where the signature "m" in the Old Version is thought to represent John Mardley.

A second rendering of The Lamentation is that by Tate and Brady, in the 6th ed. of the Supplement of the New Version, 1708. It is the Old Version text rewritten in 9 st. of 4 l.

The first stanza reads:--

"O Lord, turn not Thy face from me, Who lie in worful state, Lamenting all my sinful life Before Thy mercy gate."

This text continued in use as a part of Tate and Brady until that work was superseded by modern hymn-books. It is also found in a considerable number of the latter, but usually in an abridged form.

A third rendering of The Lamentation, by Bp. R. Heber, was given in his posthumous Hymns, 1827, p. 104, in 12 double lines. The opening lines are :-

"Oh Lord, turn not Thy face away From them that lowly lie, Lamenting sore their siuful life With tears and bitter cry,"

This rendering, signed in Heber's Hymns "Sternhold" in error, is given in full in Lord Selborne's Book of Praise, 1862, p. 239. It is considerably altered from the Old Version original. In several modern hymn-books, including the Scottish Presbyterian Hymnal, 1876, it is slightly altered, as "O Lord, turn not Thy face from us." Other altered forms of the text are (1) "Turn not Thy face away, O Lord," in the American Sabbath H. Bk., 1858, and others; and (2) "Turn not, O Lord, Thy face from me," in Alford's Ps. & Hys., 1844, and his Year of Praise, 1867. The original texts of the O. and the N. Versions may be found bound up with old copies of the Book of Common Prayer. [J. J.]

O Lord, upon Thine heritage. [Ember Days.] This hymn, in W. J. Blew's Church Hymn and Tune Bk., 1852-55, in 5 st. of 4 l. is based upon F. Rous's version of Ps. 68, st. ix.-xii as pub. in the Scottish Patter, 1650. In the H. Bk. for the use of Wellington College, 1860, and in Kennedy, 1863, st. i.-iv., are repeated, together with the substitution of a doxology for Blew's st. v.

O Lord, when dangers press me round. W. H. Bathurst. [Ps. czl.] 1st pub. in his Ps. & Hys., 1831, as a version of Ps. exl. in 3 st. of 6 l. with the heading, "God a sure Defence." In its original form it is not in C. U., but as "My God, when dangers press me round," it is in a few modern collections, including the New Cong., 1859, No. 285. This altered form of the hymn appeared in Hall's Mitre H. Bk., 1836. The changes introduced by Hall are very slight.

O Lord, Who in Thy love divine. Bp. C. Wordsworth of Lincoln. [Ember Days and Ordinations.] 1st pub. in his Holy Year, 1862, p. 200, in 9 st. of 6 l. and headed "For Ember Weeks; and at the Ordination of Bishops, Priests, and Deacons." In 1865 a Bisnops, Priests, and Deacons." In 1865 a new stanza was added, as st. ii. ("Thou Who the night in prayer didst spend"), and the hymn was divided into two parts, Pt. ii. beginning with st. v., "O may Thy pastors faithful be." In Snepp's Songs of G. & G., 1872, No. 759, begins with st. iv. of the 1865 text, "O Thou Who didst at Pentecost." [J. J.]

O Lord, wilt Thou teach me to pray? Jane Taylor. [A Child's Hymn.] 1st pub. in Orig. Hys. for Sunday Schools, 2nd ed., 1813, No. 21, in 6 st. of 41. In the 4th ed. of the Original Hys., 1816, the opening line was changed to "Lord, teach a sinful child to pray." In this form, and in the more pleasing reading given to it by some, "Lord teach a little child to pray," it is found in numerous collections for children. [J. J.]

O Love divine, how sweet Thou art. C. Wesley. [Desiring to Love.] Appeared in Hys. and Sac. Poems, 1749, vol. i., in 7 st. of 6 l. as No. 5 of six hymns on "Desiring to Love" (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. iv. p. 341). Three leading centos are in C. U.:-

Three leading centos are in U. U.:—

1. Composed of st. 1., iii., iv. and vil. This was given in G. Whitefield's Hymns, &c., 1753, No. 86, as the second of two hymns on "Longing for Christ." This cento was repeated by Madan, Toplady, and others in the older collections, and is that usually found in the Church of England hymn-books.

2. Composed of st. i.-iv. This was given in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, No. 141, and is in very extensive use in all English-speaking countries. In the revised ed. of the Wes. H. Bk., 1876, st. v., vi., of the original were added to the hymn.

added to the hymn.

3. Composed of st. iv., vi., and fil., in the order named. This cente, beginning "O that I could for ever sit," is in the American Songs for the Sanctuary, N. Y., 1865.

In addition to these other forms of the text beginning with st. i. are in limited use. G. J. Stevenson's associations in his Methodist H. Bls. Notes, 1883, are most interesting. [J. J.]

- O Love divine, what hast Thou done? C. Wesley. [Passiontide.] 1st pub. in Hys. & Sacred Poems, 1742, in 4 st. of 6 l., as the last of three hymns on "Desiring to Love" (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. ii. p. 74). It came into use in the Church of England through Toplady's Ps. & Hys., 1776, No. 25, and with the Methodist Societies and other nonconformists through the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, No. 27. The historical account of its beautiful refrain, "My Lord, my Love is crucified," is given under "My Lord, my Love was crucifled" (p. 781, ii.). [J. J.]
- O luce quae tuâ lates. Claude de Santeüil. [Trinity.] Appeared in the Paris Breviary, 1680; the Cluniac Breviary, 1686, p. 532; the Paris Brev., 1736; and again in other and later French Breviaries. It is also in J. Chandler's Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1837; Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865; and Biggs's annotated ed. of H. A. & M., 1867. Tr. as:-

1. O Thou Who dwellest bright on high. By J. Chandler in his Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1837, p. 93, and again in his Hys. of the Church, 1841, No. 54. This is given unaltered in some collections, and in others as "Thou ever blessed Trinity," as in Murray's Hymnal, 1852, No. 68.

2. Who, in Thy very light, self-shrouded art. W. J. Blew in his Church Hy. & Tune Bk., 1852-55, and again in Rice's Sel. from the same, 1870.

3. Blest Trinity, from mortal sight. By the Compilers of H. A. & M., given first in their trial edition, 1859, and then in their first ed., 1861, but omitted from the revised ed., 1875.

4. Great God, Who in Thy light dost rest. By R. C. Singleton, written in 1867, and included in his Anglican H. Rk., 1868 and 1871.

5. O Thou Who hidden art in Thine own light. By I. Williams in the British Magazine, Sept. 1837, vol. xii. p. 270, and his Hys. tr. from the Parisian Breviary, 1839, p. 163. [J. J.]

- 1. 0 Thou Who in the light dost dwell. By I. Williams in the British Magazine, Jan. 1834, vol. v. p. 31, and his Hys. tr. from the Parisian Breviary, 1839, p. 10. It was included with alterations in the Hymnary, 1872. It is also No. 104 (altered) in Korison's Hys. and Anthems, 1851.
- 2. 0 Thou, Whose throne is hid from men. By J. Chandler in his Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1837, p. 8, and his Hys. of the Church, &c., 1841, No. 7. It is in a few collections only.

2. Thou Who in light dost dwell. By W. J. Blew, in his Church Hy. & Tunc Bk., 1852-55, and Rice's Sol. from the same, 1870.

4. The splendours of Thy glory, Lord, By Archbishop E. W. Benson. 1st pub. in the H. Bk. for the Use of Wellington College, during his Head Mastership, 1860, and again in the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871

5. Great God, Who hid from mortal sight. By the Compilers of H. A. & M., 1861 (based on J. Chandler), omitted from the revised ed., 1875, but restored, with alterations, in 1889.

6. Father of glory, that dont dwell. By J. M. Neale in the East Grinstead St. Margaret's Hyl., 1875.

1. O Thou Who in the light dost dwell. R. Campbell. 1850. This is I. Williams's tr. as above, rewritten in L. M. The opening II. 1-3 are the same as Williams's.

2. O God, enshrined in heavenly might. J. D. Cham-3. God, who in the unapproached light. [J. J.]

O Lux beata Trinitas, Et principalis Unitas. St. Ambrose. [Evening.] This is one of the twelve hymns which the Benedictine editors regarded as undoubtedly the work of St. Ambrose. It is cited as by St. Ambrose by Hinemar of Rheims in his treatise De und et non trina Deitate, 857. The original con-sists of two sts. (ii. "Te mane laudum carmine") and a doxology. Its almost universal use was at Vespers on Saturday, as in the older Roman (Venice, 1478); Paris, 1643; Sarum, York, and Aberdeen Breviaries. It was sometimes also assigned to Vespers or Lauds on Trinity Sunday. Daniel, i., No. 26, gives the original, along with the revised text of the Roman Breviary of 1632, where it begins Jam sol recedit igness. In his notes Daniel gives the additional st. tr. in J. D. Chambers's Lauda Syan, 1857 (see below); (iii. "Jam noctis tempus advenit"; iv. "Tu Christe solve vincula"; v. "Oramus ut exaudias"), which are found only in the Mozarabio Breriary, where the hymn is given for Vespers on the 2nd S. after the Epiphany, and at other seasons. In his further notes at iv. pp. 47-48, Daniel refers to the original text as in a 10th cent. Rheinau Ms.; gives the statements of Hincmar; and also cites a passage from the 21st Epistic of St. Ambrose, which he thinks clearly refers to this hymn, and so decisively [W. A. S.]

Mose, 1. p. 372, cites this hymn as in an 8th cent. ; us. at Darmstadt, where it is assigned to daily Vespers. Dreves gives it in his Hymnarius Moissiacensis, 1888, from a luth cent. Me. It is also in three Mss. of the from a Juth cent. Me. It is also in three MSS. of the 11th cent. in the British Museum (Vesp. II. xii. f. 2b; Harl. 2061 f. 218; Add. 30848 [a Musrabic Breviary] f. 66 b). In the Lat. Hys. of the Anglo-Sazon Ch. (Surtees Society), 1831, p. 1., it is printed from an 11th cent. MS. at Durham (B. iii. 32, f. 2). Also in an 11th cent. MS. at Corpus Christi, Cambridge (391, page 227); in the St. Gell Ms., No. 387, of the 11th cent.; in Migue's Paitrox, rvi., col. 1407, and Ixxvi., cols. 220, 232, 699, 924; in Wackersagel, I. No. 60; in Card. Newman's Hymni Eccletice, 1838 and 1865, and others.

The original text has been frequently tr. into German, and through three of these versions has passed into English.

i. Der du bist drei in Rinigkeit. This is a full and faithful version by M. Luther, written in 1543, and 1st pub. in Klug's G. B., Wittenberg, 1544. Thence in Wachernagel, iii. p. 29; in Schircks's ed. of Luther's Geisti. Lieder, 1854, p. 42; and the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 186. Tr. as:—

ii. Jam sol recedit igneus. This revised version of the hymn appeared in the Roman Brev. in 1632. It is the hymn on Saturdays at Vespers from the Octave of the Epiphany to Lent; also at first and second Vespers of Trinity Sunday; and also on Saturdays at Vespers from the Octave of Corpus Christi until Advent. It is tr. as :-

1. Now sinks in night the flaming sun. By Bp. R. Mant. This paraphrase rather than translation appeared in his Ancient Hys. from the Hom. Brev., &c., 1837, p. 16, in 3 st. of 8 l. (ed. 1871, p. 31). The first stanza may be said to be the tr. of the Latin and the rest an expansion of the same line of thought, thus making the paraphrase. It is in several modern collections, including Kennedy, 1863; Thring's Coll., 1882, &c.; and altered as "Father of lights, Who dwell'st in light," in the 1874 Supplement to the New Cong.; and as "The flaming sun has sunk in night," in the Hymnary, 1872.

O Master, at Thy feet. Frances R. Havergal. [Adoration.] We have been furnished with the following interesting account of this hymn from Miss Havergal's private papers:-

"I felt that I had not written anything specially in praise to Christ. A longing to do so possessed me. I wanted to show forth His praise to Him, not to others, even if no mortal ever saw it, He would see every line, would have known the unwritten longing to praise Him even if words failed utterly. It describes, as most of my poems do, rather reminiscence than present feeling. my poems do, rather remainscence than precent recting. I cannot transcribe at the moment of strong feeling. I small it afterwards and write it down. 'O Master!' I cannot transcribe at the moment of strong feeling. I recall it afterwards and write it down. 'O Master!' It is perhaps my favourite title because it implies rule and submission; and this is what love craves. Men may feel differently, but a true woman's submission is inseparable from deep love. I wrote it ['O Master!'] in the cold and twilight in the little back room, uncarpeted, at Shareshill Parsonage, Dec. 31, 1866. I began my book [Ministry of Song] with the expression of its devotion to God's giory, I wished to close it with a distinctive ascription of praise to Jesus, and, therefore, without any hesitation, at once decided upon placing 'Adoration' (this hymn) where it stands."

The hymn were given in the Sunday Magnetic Control of the control of the surface of the control of the cont

The hymn was given in the Sunday Magazine, 1867; in her Ministry of Song, 1869; and in Life Mosaic, 1879, in 5 st. of 4 l. [J. J.]

O may the power which melts the rock. J. Newton. [National Fast.] This is one of his Fast-day hymns pub. in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. ii., No. 65, in 8 st. of 4 l. and headed, "Confession and Prayer, Dec. 13, 1778." In Cotterili's Sel., 1810, it was given in 6 st., and in this form it has come down to modern hymn-books. [J. J.]

O mean may seem this house of clay. T. H. Gill. [Divinity of, and Oneness with, Christ.] Written in 1850; 1st pub. in G. Dawson's Ps. & Hys., 1853; and again, after slight revision, in the author's Golden Chain, &c., 1869, No. 36, in 11 st. of 4 l. Concerning it the author says that it

Its production was a great spiritual event in my own life, as well as an exquisite and unspeakable delight. It wrought powerfully upon my ontward life, and introduced me to persons my connection with whom led to a change of residence, and furthered the publication of my work, 'The Papal Drama.'" [E. MSS.]

This hymn as a whole is too long for C.U., but in an abbreviated form it is in numerous hymn-books in G. Britain and America. No. 58 in Horder's Cong. Hymne, 1884, is an example of a choice selection of stanzas. [J. J.]

O mighty Mother! why that light? F. W. Faber. [Whitsuntide.] Pub. in his Jesus and Mary, &c., 1849, in 21 st. of 4 l. on "The Descent of the Holy Ghost." Also in his Hymns, 1862. The hymn, "He comes, He comes, the Holy One," in the Sarum Hyl., 1868, is compiled from the 1849 text. [J. J.]

O most compassionate High Priest. C. Wesley. [For Pardon.] "First published in 1743, as 'A Prayer for those who are Convinced of Sin, at the end of The Nature, Design, and General Rules of the United Societies, &c.; and to be found there in most if not all the editions of that tract published during Wesley's life" (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. v. p. 230). It was also included in Hymns and Sacred Poems, 1749, vol. ii., No. 63, in 18 st. of 4 l., as No. 3 of "Hymns of Intercession." In 1780, st. vi.-xiv. were given as: "O let the prisoners' mournful cries," in the Wes. H. Bk., No. 450, and from thence passed into other collections. The revised ed. of the Wes. H. Bk., 1875, omits the last two stanzas of the 1780 text. {J. J.)

O most delightful hour by man. W. Cowper. [Death and Burial.] These are the "Stanzas Subjoined to a Bill of Mortality for the Parish of All Saints, in the Town of Northampton, Anno Domini 1789," and subsequently pub. with Cowper's translations from the French of Madame Guion, as Poems Translated from the French of Mudame de la Mothe Guion, &c., Newport-Pagnel, 1801, p. 122. There are 9 st. of 4 l. in all. Of these st, i.-iv. with alterations, were given in Martineau's Hymns, &c., 1840 and 1873, and also in a few American collections. [J. J.]

O my distructful heart. W. Hammond. [Final Perseverance.] This hymn, on 2 Tim. i. 13. "If we believe not, yet He abideth faithful," appeared in his Ps. & Hys., &c., 1745, p. 165, in 4 st. of 61. In 1776, A. M. Toplady pub. it in a rewritten form, but because first line in his Ps. & ginning with the same first line, in his Ps. & Hys., &c., No. 252. This arrangement was repeated in various collections to Snepp's Songs of G. & G., 1872, No. 727, with the change in Snopp of st. iv. I. 1, from "The bowels of Thy grace," to "Thy rich and sovereign grace." It is also in other collections of the state tions, and should be given as " W. Hammond, 1745; A. M. Toplady, 1776."

O nata lux de lumine. [The Transfiguration.] The oldest text known of this hymn is in G. M. Dreves's Hymnarius Moissiacensis, 1888, from a 10th cent. Ms. ; and in two Rheinau mss. now in the University Library at Zürich, No. 91 of the 11th cent.; No. 82 of the 11th or 12th cent. It is also in an early 14th cent. Ms. in the Bodleian (Ashmole 1523 f. 247); in the Sarum Breviary, Venice, 1495; the Aberdeen Breviary of 1509, &c. The printed text is also in Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865; Daniel, iv. p. 161, &c. FJ. M.3

'Ο παΐδας ἐκ Καμίνου. 'Αναστάσεως ηωέρα.]

 Ω πάντων ἐπέκεινα. St Gregory of Nazianzus. [Praise.] This "Hymn to God" is found in various editions of St. Gregory's Opera; in Daniel, iii. 12, and in Anth. Greeca Carm. Christ., 1871, p. 24. It is an exceedingly fine hymn, and has been well rendered into English by Mr. Chatfield in his Songs and Hymne, &c., 1876, in 12 st. of 4 l., pp. 98-101, as, "O Thou, the One Supreme o'er all." [Greek Hymnody, § iv.]

O Paradise eternal. T. Davis. [Heaven.] Appeared in his Hys. Old and New, 1864, No. 192, in 6 st. of 4 l., and again in his Annus Sanctus, 1877. It has passed, in its full, or in an abbreviated form, into a large number of hymn-books in G. Britain and America. [J. J.]

O Paradise, O Paradise. F. W. Faber. [Heaven.] 1st pub. in his Hymns, 1862, in 7 st. of 8 l., and entitled "Paradise." In 1868 it was included in the Appendix to H. A. & M., with the omission of st. iii. and vii., and the addition of the stanza "Lord Jesus, King of Paradise," by the compilers. For some time after the hymn was included in H. A. & M. it was very popular, Dr. Dykes's tune therein being the chief cause of its success. Latterly, however, its unreality, and, in its original form, its longing for sudden death, has caused it to be omitted from several of the best collections. The rewritten version, in three stanzas, in Morrell & How's enlarged edition of their Ps. & Hys., 1864-67, No. 165, [J. J.] is a failure.

O Pater sancte, mitis atque pie. [Trinity Sunday.] This hyran is found in two mss. of the 11th cent. in the British Museum (Vesp. D. xii. f. 1185; Jul. A. vi. f. 70 b); and in the Lat. Hys. of the Anglo-Sazon Ch., 1851, it is printed from an 11th cent. Ms. at Durham (B. iii. 32, f. 43). It is included in the Sarum, York, Aberdeen, old Roman (Venice, 1478), and other Breviaries. The printed text is also in Mone. No. 12; Daniel, iv. p. 270; G. M. Dreves's Hymnarius Moissiacensis, 1888, from a 10th cent. Ms., and Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. [J. M.]

Translations in C. U. :-

 O Holy Father, merciful and loving. By. W.
 Blew, in his Church Hy. and Tune Bh., 1852-55; and again, with slight alterations, in the 1860 Appendix to the Hymnal N., No. 140.

2. O gracious Father, merciful and hely. By R. F. Littledale, in the Pcople's H., 1867, under the signature of "A. L. P."

3. Holiest Father, pitiful and loving [tender]. In the Antiphoner and Grail, 1880, and, altered, in the Hymner, 1882.

Translations not in C. U. :-

I. O Holy Father, gracious and benign. J. D. Chambers, 1852 and 1857.

2. Father most Holy, merciful and loving. J. Rewett. 1859.

[J. J.]

O perfect life of love. Sir H. W. Baker. [Passiontide.] Written for the revised edition of H. A. & M., and included therein in 1875, as one of the "Hymns of the Passion," in 7 st. of 4 l. It is a hymn of much merit. [J. J.]

'Ο πλάστης μου κύριος. St. Theophanes. [Quinquagesima.] Stichers from the Triodion at the Vespers of Tyrophagus, the Sunday before the commencement of the Great Fast, in which even cheese (allowed for the last time on this Sunday) is prohibited. [See Δεῦτε ἄπαντες, p. 292, ii.] The original is in 5 st. of unequal length, as in Dr. Neale's tr. Adam's expulsion from Paradise is the subject of Tyrophagus, and the first three stanzas are spoken in the person of Adam. Dr. Neele's tr.: "The Lord my Maker, forming me of clay," is of st. i., ii., iii. and v., and appeared in his Hys. of the Eastern Church, 1862. He introduces it with the following note:-

"The reader can hardly fall to be struck with the beautiful idea in the third stanza, where the foliage of Paradise is asked to make intercession for Adam's recall. The last stanza, Milton, as an universal scholar, doubtless had in his eye, in Eve's lamentation." [J. J.] [J. J.]

O praise our God to-day. Sir H. W. Baker. [Friendly Societies.] Written in 1861, and pub. in H. A. & M. the same year, in 5 st. of 4 l. It has passed into several hymn-books in G. Britain and America, and is admirably suited for the purpose of Friendly Societies, &c., for which it was written. [J. J.]

O praise ye the Lord, Praise Him in the height. Sir H. W. Baker. [Ps. cl.] Written for and 1st pub. in H. A. & M., 1875. One of the author's most spirited productions. It is in 4 st. of 8 l.

O qualis quantaque laetitia. Thomas à Kempts. [Eternal Life.] In his Opera, Nürnberg, 1494, f. 130, entitled "Hymn on the joys of Heaven and the nine angelic choirs." The full text is in Wackernagel, i., No. 374. Trench, ed. 1864, p. 321, gives a beautiful fragment beginning with 1.9, "Astant (Adstant) angelorum chori." This portion has been tr. as :-

In the far celestial land. By Harriet M. Chester, made for and pub. in the Hymnary, 1872, under the eignature of "H. M. C."

[J. M.]

O quam glorifica luce coruscas. V. M.] This hymn is found in four MSS. of the 11th cent. in the British Museum (Vesp. D. xii. f. 87; Jul. A. vi. f. 55 b; Harl. 2961 f. 241; Add. 30848 f. 179 b); in a ms. of the 11th cent. at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge (391, p. 263); and in the Lat. Hys. of the Anglo-Sazon Ch., 1851, it is printed from a Ms. of the 11th cent. at Durham (B. iii. 32 f. 32 b). Among the St. Gall Mss. it is found in No. 92 of the 9th cent.; and in Nos. 387 and 413 of the 11th cent. It was included in the Sarum, York, and various German Breviaries, as a hymn for the Assumption of the B. V. M. The printed text is also in Daniel, iv. p. 188; and G. M. Dreves's Hymnarius Moissiacensis, 1888, from a 10th cent. MS. Tr. as:--

- 1. 0 with what glorious lustre resplendent. By J. D. Chambers, in his Landa Syon, 1866, p. 87.
- 2. 0 what light and glory. By T. I. Ball, in the 1863 ed. of the Appendix to the H. Noted.
- 8, 0 with what glorious lustre thou shinest. In the Antiphoner & Grail, 1880, and the Hymner, [J. M.]
- O quam juvat fratres, Deus. C. Coffin. [Unity.] Appeared in the Paris Breviary, 1736, as the hymn for Tuesdays at Vespers; and again in Coffin's Hymni Sacri, 1736, p. 17. It is also in J. Chandler's Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1837, and Card. Newman's Hynni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. Tr. as:—
- O Lord, how joyful 'tis to see. J. Chandler, in his Hys. of the Prim. Church, 1837, p. 19. It is given, generally without alteration, in a large number of hymn-books, including H. A. & M., 1875; the Hymnury, 1872; Thring's Coll., 1882, &c. It ranks with the most popular of Chandler's translations.
- 2. How sweet the days, O Lord, are sped. Given anonymously in the Wellington College H. Bk., 1860, and later editions.

Other trs. are: --

1. How sweet it is to see, Brethren in Unity. J. Williams. 1839.

2. Father and God, how sweet to see. W. J. Blew.

3. O God, what joys around are shed. J. D. Chambers. 1857. 4. O God, our loving God, by whom Thy Church.

D. T. Morgan. 1890. [J. J.]

- O quanta qualia sunt illa Sabbata. Eternal Life.] Peter Abelard. [Sunday. Cousin, in his ed. of Abelard's Opera, Paris, 1849, vol. i. p. 306, gives this from a ms. in the Royal Library at Brussels. This Ms. is of the 12th cent., and is probably the collection of hymns which Abelard prepared for the use of the abbey of the Paraclete of which Heloïse was abless. Mone, No. 282, gives the text from the St. Gall Ms., No. 528, of the 14th cent.; and in the 1875 catalogue of the St. Gall MSS. it is also marked as being contained in No. 387 of the 11th cent. It is also in Migne's Patrologiae Cursus, vol. 178,
- O what their joy and their glory must be. By J. M. Neale, in the Hymnal N., 1854. It is in several hymn-books, including the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871; Thring's Coll., 1882; and others, the text most in use being Neale's tr. slightly altered by the compilers of H. A. & M., 1861.
- 2. O how fair and how great. By J. D. Chambers, in his Lauda Syon, 1857, p. 58. In the Scottish Epis. Coll. of Hys., 1858, it is given as "O how surpassing fair."

8. 0 what shall be, 0 when shall be? By S. W. Duffield. Mr. Duffield says in his English Hymns, &c., N. Y., 1886, p. 440, that he wrote this tr. in the Astor Library in 1883. He also says that he used the text as in Migne's Patrologiae. This tr. was given in the Laudes Domini, N. Y., 1884, in two parts. Pt. ii. begins "Oglorious King, O happy state."

Other trs. are:-

 O what must be their joy. J. W. Hewett. 1859.
 O what must be the sabbaths. D. T. Morgan. 18B0. [J. J.]

- O qui perpetuus nos monitor doces. Jean Baptiste de Santeüil. [Common of Doctors.] Given in the Cluniac Breviary, 1686, p. xlii.; in the author's Hymni Sacri et Novi, 1689, p. 207 (ed. 1698, p. 248); in the Paris Breviary, 1736, as the hymn for the Common of Doctors at first and second Vespers; and also in several modern French Breviaries. Card. Newman repeats the hymn from the Paris Brev. in his Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. Tr. as:-
- 0 Thou the eternal Father's Word. By E. Caswall, in his Masque of Mary, &c., 1858, p. 323; and in his Hys. and Poems, 1873, p. 185. In the Hymnary, 1872, it is altered as "O Jesu Christ, Incarnate Word."

Other tra. are :-

1. O Thou, our only Teacher and true Friend. I. Williams. 1839.

2. O Thou, Who every hour. J. D. Chambers, 1868. [J. J.]

- O qui tuo, dux martyrum. Jean Baptiste de Santeüil. [St. Stephen.] Appeared in the Cluniac Breviary, 1686, p. 176, and in the author's Hymni Sacri et Novi, 1689, p. 55 (ed. 1698, p. 26). In 1786 it was included in the Paris Breviary. It is also in modern French Breviaries, and in Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. Tr. as:-
- 1. Rightful Prince of Martyrs thou. This was given in I. Williams's Hys. tr. from the Parisian Breviary, 1839, p. 58. In his Preface Williams says that this tr. was "supplied by a Friend," but who this friend was we have not been able to determine to our satisfaction. The tr. is in C. U. in its original form and also altered as :---

(1) Prince of martyrs! whose own name. This was given in Murray's Hymnal, 1852, and is the 1839 text altered and with another doxology.
(2) Pirst of martyrs! whose own name. This in the Saliebury Hymnal, 1867, is another arrangement of the 1839 text, but has more in common with Murray than with it.

- with it.

 (3) First of martyrs! thou whose name Doth thy golden orown, &c. By the compilers of H. A. & M., based upon the 1839 fr., together with the doxology as in Murray. This is the most popular fr. of the hymn.

 (4) Prince of martyrs! thou whose name. This fr. in the 1860 Appendix to the H. Noted, and the People's H. is a cento, st. L. iii.—v. being Chambers's fr. (see below) altered; st. ii., the 1839 text as above; st. vi., added by the editor; and the doxology from Murray altered.

 (5) Chief of martyrs! then whose name. This is
- (5) Chief of martyre! thou whose name. This is given in the Anglican H. Bk., 1868, as by the editor, the Rev. R. C. Singleton. It is somewhat more musical than the 1839 text; but in other respects it is essentially the same
- (6) First of martyrs? then whose name, Answers to thy crown, &c. This, in the Hymnery, 1872, is an ingenious and successful cento from most of the foregoling translations.
 - 2, O Captain of the martyr host. By E. Caswall, in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 285, and his Hys. & Poems, 1873, p. 189. It is in use in some Roman Catholic hymn-books.

3. O Prince of martyrs! thou whose name. By J. D. Chambers, in his Lauda Syon, 1857, p. 83.
[J. J.]

O quickly come, dread Judge of all. L. Tuttiett. [Advent.] 1st pub. in bis Hys. for Churchmen, 1854, in 4 st. of 6 l. It was included in the 1868 Appendix to H. A. & M., in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871, and several other collections. In a few American hymn-books it begins — "Come quickly come, dread Judge of all." In the Guardian of Dec. 24, 1884, the H. A. & M. text is rendered into Latin by "A. C." as:— "Ipse veni, generia Judex sanctissime nostri." [J. J.]

[Virgins.] O rubentes coeli rosse. This hymn on St. Ursula and the 11,000 virgins, is given by Mone, No. 1187, from a 15th cent. Ms. at Basel. Daniel, iv. p. 281, repeats the text from Mone. The original was imitated by G. Moultrie, and printed in the Church Times, June 25, 1864; then in his Hys. and Lyrics, 1867; and the People's H. the same year as "Heavenly garland, rosy red." [J. J.]

O sacrum, sacrum convivium. [Holy Communion.] In the York Breviary of 1493 this is given as an antiphon to the Gospel on the Festival of Corpus Christi, as follows:— "O sacrum convivium in quo Christus sumitur, recolitur memoria passionis ejus, mens impletur gratia, et futurae gloriae nobis pignus datur, Alleluia." In this form it is found in other ancient Breviaries, and in a Sarum Processional of circa 1890, in the Brit. Mus. (Harl. 2942 f. 80 b). A hymn in metrical form, with this first line, we have been unable to find. The tr. in the Irvingite Hys. for the Use of the Churches, 1871, is by E. W. Eddis, and was written in 1869. It begins: "O holy, boly, Feast of life Divine." There is also a prose tr. in the 1863 ed. of the Appendix to the H. Noted. No. 228.

[J. M.]

O sator rerum, reparator aevi. [Transfiguration.] The festival of the Trans-Aguration of our Lord was authorised by Pope Callistus III. in 1457 (and adopted by the English Convocation in 1483), and there are few hymns on this subject older than the 15th cent. This hymn is in two Rheinau Mss. in the University Library, Zürich, No. 91 of the IIth cent., and No. 82 of the 11th or 12th cent. It is also in a 14th cent, as, in the Bodleian (Ashmole 1523 f. 247 b); in the Sarum Breviary, Venice, 1495 (Pars Estiv. pt. ii. f. 174 b, as the hymn at Matins for the Transfiguration); in the Aberdeen Breviary; and in some of the eds. of the York Breviary after 1493. It is given in Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865; and G. M. Dreves's Hymn. Moissia., 1888, from a 10th cent. Ms. Daniel, i., No. 280, gives only at. i. Tr. as :-

Author of all things, Christ, the world's Redeemer. In the Antiphoner and Grail, 1880, and the Hymner, 1882.

Other tre. are :-

1. The World's Restorer, Christ, of kings the King.
W. J. Bitso. 1852-55.
2. Framer of worlds! Restorer of our days. J. D.
Chambers. 1867. [J. M.]

O Saviour, is Thy promise fied? Bp. R. Heber. [Advent.] This is the third of the four hymns contributed by Heber to the October number of the Christian Observer, 1811. It was given for the 3rd Sun. in Advent, and consisted of 5 st. of 4 l. In Heber's postaltered and expanded to 6 st. of 4 l., the new stanza being "Yet, 'mid the wild and wintry gale." It is in C. U. in its full form as in Thring's Coll., 1882, and in an abbreviated form as in Common Praise, 1879. There are also two centos, both beginning "Come, Jesus, come, return again," the first, in the American Unitarian Hys. for the Church of Christ, Boston, 1853, and others, consisting of st. ii.-iv. of the 1827 text; and the second in the Islington Ps. & Hys., 1862, No. 270, where st. ii., v., vi. are given. The latter arrangement is also repeated in other collections. original hymn is based upon the Gospel for the 3rd S. in Advent, St. Matt. xi. 2-10. [J. J.]

O Saviour of the faithful dead. Bp. R. Heber. [On Recovery from Sickness.] 1st pub. in the Christian Observer, Jan., 1816, in 4 st. of 8 l., and headed, "View of Death." In Heber's posthumous Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 152, it is slightly altered, divided into 8 st. of 4 l., and the heading is changed to "On Recovery from Sickness." It is usually given Recovery from Sickness. in an abridged form of 2 st. of 8 l., or 4 st. of 4 1., but its use is not extensive. [J, J,]

O Saviour, Whom this holy morn. Bp. R. Heber. [Christmas.] Pub. in the Christian Observer, Nov., 1811 (p. 697), in 5 st. of 4 l. and headed, "Christmas Day." The opening stanza reads:-

> "Oh Saviour! Whom this holy morn Gave to our world below; To wandering and to labour born, To weakness and to woe,!"

In Heber's posthumous Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 13, it was given with alterations, the first stanza reading :-

" Oh Saviour, Whom this boly morn Gave to our world below; To mortal wont and labour born, And more than mortal woe!

Each stanza, except st. ii., is altered in like manner, the result being two distinct texts. Of these texts that of 1827 is almost absolutely followed by hymn-book compilers. Very few, however, give it in its complete form. The H. Comp. is an exception in favour of the full 1827 text, with the change of st. v. l. i., "Through fickle fortune's various scene," to "Through this world's fickle various scene." Other forms of the hymn are :-

1. O Saviour, Whom this joyful morn. This text is O Saviour, Whom this joynu morn. I has text is very much altered throughout. The opening stanza is the 1811 text with alterations; the rest are altered from the text of 1827. In this form it was given in Bickersteth's Christian Psatisnody, 1833, No. 301; Elliott's Ps. & Hys., 1835; and again in recent hymn-books.
 O God, Whose Hely Child this morn. This altered form of the 1827 text appeared in Martineau's Bynns, 1840.

3. Incarnate Word! by every grief. This, beginning with st. il. of the 1827 text, is No. 318 in the American Bap, Praise Bk., N. Y., 1871.

4. Jesus, Thou man of Borrews born. This is found in several modern collections, including Common Praise, 1870 and others and texts 1811 text slightly attered.

1879, and others, and is the 1811 text slightly altered.

When these various forms of the text are taken into account it is found that the use of this hymn is extensive. It is, however, far from being one of Heber's best productions.

[J. J.] O Saviour, Whose mercy severe in its kindness. Sir R. Grant. [Benefits of Affliction.] This poem is found in Sacred Rotery, 2nd Series, Edinburgh, W. Oliphant Son, circa 1824, No. 149, in 8 st. of 4 l., headed "Benefit of Affliction," and signed "Sir Robert Grant." In Grant's posthumous Sacred Poems, 1839, it was given unaltered as No. v., with the text "Blessed is the man whom thou chastenest. Psalm xliv. 12." It is given in full in H. W. Beecher's Plymouth Coll., 1855, and other American hymn-books. In the Boston Unitarian Hys. of the Spirit, 1864, No. 586, "I thought that the course of the pilgrim to heaven," is composed of st. v.-vil.

O say not thou art left of God. Card. J. H. Newman. [Faith.] 1st pub. in the British Magazine for July, 1834, in 5 st. of 4 l., and again in the Lyra Apostolica, 1836, No. 27, with the heading "Tokens. 'The Lord stood with me and strengthened me," and signed "8." It is also in his Verses on Religious Subjects, 1853, and his Verses on Various Occasions, 1868. In Kennedy, 1863, the text is slightly altered, and a doxology is added.

O see how Jesus trusts Himself. F. W. Faber. [True Love.] Pub. in the 1849 ed. of his Jesus and Mary, &c., p. 187, in 23 st. of 4 l., and headed "True Love." It is also in his Hymns, 1862. The cento usually found in C. U. was given in Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bk., 1866, No. 784, and is composed of st. i., iii., v. and vi. This is repeated in Laudes Domini, N. Y., 1884, and, with slight alterations, in Dale's English H. Bk., 1874. [J. J.]

O selig Haus, wo man dich aufgenommen. C. J. P. Spitta. [Private Use.]
A beautiful description of a true Christian household, taken from the happy home life of the author. 1st pub. in his Psalter und Harfe, Pirna, 1833, p. 97, in 5 st. of 8 l., entitled "Salvation is come to this house" (St. Luke xix. 9). Included in the Württemberg G. B., 1842, No. 500; Hannover G. B., 1883, No. 527, and many others. Tr. as :-

1. Oh happy house! where Theu art loved the best. A good but free fr. by Mrs. Findlater in H. L. L., 3rd Ser., 1858, p. 16 (1884, p. 142). In Schaff's Christ in Song, 1869-70. St. i.-iv. were also repeated in the 1869 Appendix to the

2. 0 happy house, 0 home supremely blest. A good tr. by R. Massie in his Lyra Domestica, 1860, p. 81, repeated in Bp. Ryle's Coll., 1860, No. 216, and in Arthur Wolfe's Hymns, 1860.

Other trs. are, (1) "O blessed house, whose favoured inmates know," by S. A. Storrs, in her Thoughts and Sketches, 1857, p. 68. (2) "O happy house, where evry treast," by Dr. G. Walker, 1860, p. 67. (3) "O blessed house, where Thou, dear Lord," by Dr. R. Magaire, 1883, p. 103.

O show me not my Saviour dying. J. Conder. [Easter.] 1st pub, in the Cong. H. Bk., 1836, No. 160, in 4 st. of 8 l.; again Prayer, &c., 1856, p. 128. Although given for "The Lord's Supper" in The Cong. H. Bk., it is, strictly speaking, an Easter hymn, and is based on the words "He is not here; He is risen. Come, see the place where the Lord lay." In an abridged form of 3 st., together with alterations, it is given in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871, as " Show me not only Jesus dying." [J. J.]

O sight for angels to adore. Bp.W. W. How. [Baptism of Jesus.] Written for the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871, where it is given as one of the hymns for the Epiphany. In his Notes to the folio ed. of Church Hye., 1881, Mr. Ellerton explains this assignment of the hymn as follows:-

"The Baptism of our Lord was auciently the chief event commemorated in the feast of the Theophaneia ovent commemorated in the featers of the Incomments or Epiphany; and in the Eastern Church this is still the key-note of the featival. Hence it was thought very desirable to place amongst Epiphany hymns one specifically commemorating this great Manifestation of the Son of God."

In T. Darling's Hys. for the Ch. of England, 1887, st. iv. is omitted.

O Son of Man, Thyself once [crossed] crost. [St. Stephen's Day.] This hymn was given in the Rev. J. F. Thrupp's Ps. & Hys. for Pub. Worship, 1853, No. 120, in 4 st. of 41. In his Index of first lines Mr. Thrupp says that it was "rewritten," but does not give the source of the original. That original is evidently Mrs. C. F. Alexander's hymn for St. Stephen's Day, "Have you not seen the lily ride," which appeared in her Verses for Holy Seasons, 1846, p. 11, in 10 st. of 4 l.; the stanzas chosen being viii., iv., v., ix., x. Thropp's form of the hymn underwent another change when included in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871, as "O Son of Man, Thyself once crossed," when the compilers added their st. ii., "O Son of God, Whose glory cast," and altered Thrupp's st. iv. and v. This text of 1871 is also in Thring's Coll., 1882.

O speak that gravious word again. J. Newton. [Peace.] This is No. 53 of Bk. iii. in the Olney Hymns, 1779, in 7 st. of 4 l., and is headed "Peace restored." In its full or in an abridged form it is found in a few modern hymnals. In the American Meth. Epis. Hymns, 1849, No. 882, it is changed from C. M. to s. M., and reads, "O speak that word again:" but this form of the hymn has not met with favour. [J. J.]

O Spirit of the living God. J. Montgomery. [For Missions.] Written in 1823 "to be sung at the Public Meeting of the Auxiliary Missionary Society for the West Riding of Yorkshire, to be sung in Salem Chapel, Leeds, June 4, 1823." It was first printed on a fly-sheet for that meeting, and again in the Evangelical Magazine in the following August. After a careful and most successful revision it was pub, by Montgomery in his Christian Pealmist, 1825, No. 552, in 6 st. of 4 l., and headed "The Spirit accompanying the Word of God;" and again in his Original Hymns, 1858, No. 257. It is usually given in an abridged form; but the text is in Conder's Choir and Oratory, 1837, p. 65; seldom altered. As a hymn on behalf of and again in his posthumous Hys. of Praise, Missions it has great merit, and is in extensive use in all English-speaking countries. The original text is given in the Churchman's Skilling Magazine, 1877. [J. J.]

- O splendor aeterni Patris. C. Coffin. [Lent.] Given in the Paris Breviary, 1736, as the hymn on Sundays and Ferias at Compline throughout Lent till Wednesday in Holy Week. It is also in Coffin's Hymni Sacri, 1736, p. 95; J. Chandler's Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1837, No. 15; and Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. It is based upon the "Christe qui lux es et dies" (p. 997, i.). Tr. as:-
- 1. Thou Brightness of the Father's face. By J. Chandler, in his Hys. of the Prim. Ch., 1837, p. 12, and thence into a few collections.
- 2. Brightness of the Father's glory. By Bp. J. R. Woodford, in his Hys. arranged for the Sundays, &c., 1852; the Parish H. Bk., 1863, and several other collections.
- Other trs. are: O Christ, blest influence divine. I. Williams.
- 1839. 2. O Christ, the true and endless Day. R. Cumpbell. 1860.
- 3. O Brightness of Thy Father! Ray. J. D. Chambers. [J. J.]
- O take away this evil heart. Montgomery. [Lent.] Written Dec. 9, 1829 [M. MSS.], and pub. in his Original Hymns, 1853, No. 281, in 5 st. of 4 1, with the leading "O Lord, I beseech Thee, deliver my Soul." It is found in a few modern hymn-books.

O ter jucundas, o ter foecundas. [Christmas.] Included in the Mainz G. B. (R. C.), 1661, p. 108, in 5 st., entitled " Hymn on the holy birth-night of Christ." In later collections it begins, "O ter foecundas, o ter jucundas," and so in Daniel, ii. p. 339; Trench, ed. 1864, p. 116; and in H. M. Macgill's Songe of the Christian Creed and Life, 1876. "This pretty poem," as Trench terms it, does not seem to be carlier than the 17th cent. Tr. 08 :--O blessed night! O rich delight. By H. M. Macgill, contributed to the Draft of the Scottish Press. Hymnal, 1874, and pub. in that Hymnal in 1876. It is also in Dr. Macgill's Songs of the Christian Creed and Life, 1876, No. 34. Other tra. are:

1. Thrice joyful night. E. C. Leaton-Blenkinsopp, in Lyra Mexianica, 1884.
2. O night of nights, supreme delights. J. C. Earls, in O. Shipley's Annus Sanctus, 1884.

O that I was as heretofore. C. Wesley. [A Minister's Prayer.] Pub. in Hys. and Sac. Poems, 1749, vol. i., No. 188, in 8 st. of 61. (P. Works, vol. v., 1868-72, p. 105). Two centoe from this hymn are in C. U.:—

1. Give me the faith which can remove. Composed of st. iii.-vif, in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, No. 421, and later collections.

3. I would the precious time redeem. Composed of st. v.-vii. in the Bapt, Hyl., 1879. [J. J.]

O that Thou would'st the heavens rend. C. Wesley. [Prayer against the power of Evil.] Appeared in Hys. and Sac. Poems, process appeared in Hys. and Sac. Poems, 1749, p. 79, in 17 st. of 4 l. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. i. p. 269). It has been broken up into parts thus:—

1. 0 that Thou would'st the heavens rend. St. i.-lx. in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, No. 134. In the American Meth. Epis. Hymns, 1849, st. i.-iv. are given as No.

376.

S. Jesus, Redeemer, Saviour, Lord. St. x.-xvii. in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, No. 135. In the American Meth. Epis. Hymns, 1849, No. 426 is composed of st. x.-xii.

S. Almighty God, be Thou our Suide. St. iii., vi., vii., viii., lx., slightly altered, in Holy Song for all Seasons. Lond., 1889.

6. Is there a thing too hard for Thee. St. v.-ix. in the American Meth. Epis. Hymns, 1849, No. 377.

5. O Christ, Bedeemer, Saviour, Lord. In Kennedy, 1863, is composed of st. x., xiii.—xvii. slightly altered.

In addition to these arrangements from this hymn another in 8 st. is sometimes met with in the Church of England collections. It opens with the first stanza of the original, but is distinguished from the arrangement in the Wes. H. Bk. as above, by the second stanza, which reads, "What the I cannot break my chain." It first appeared in A. M. Toplady's Ps. & Hys., 1776, No. 352, and is composed of st. i., iv., vi., vii., ix., xii., xv., xiii. in the order named. A second cento in Toplady, 1776, No. 108, and beginning, "Jesus, Redeemer, Saviour, Lord," is composed of six stanzas from this hymn, and three (iv.-vi.) from C. Wesley's "Jesus, if still Thou art to-day." Also in later collections. [J. J.]

O the bitter shame and sorrow. T. Monod. [Gratitude.] Mr. J. Thin's annotation of this hymn (the substance of which was derived apparently direct from the author) as given in his Notes of 1887 to the Scottish Presbyterian Hymnal, reads:-

"By Rev. Theodore Monod, Paris. Written by him in English during a series of 'Consecration' meetings held at Broadlands, England, in July 1874. Given by the author to Lord Mount-Temple at the close of the meetings, and printed by his Lordship on the back of a pro-gramme card for another series of similar meetings held at Oxford in October, 1874. . . . The author writes (1887) that he now wishes line 4 of ver. 4 to read, 'Grant me now my supplication.'"

This hymn is given in several collections, including the Hy. Comp., 1876, where, in the annotated edition, it is accompanied by the following note by Bp. E. H. Bickersteth:—

"This touching hymn by Monod, with the exception of reading 'petition' for 'desire' [st. iv. l. 4] for the measure's sake, is without alteration. In one of the ast letters which the Editor received from the late Sir H. W. Baker, he expressed his great regret that it was not included in the revised edition of H. A. and M."

It is in the H. A. & M. Suppl. Hys., 1889. [J. J.]

- O the hour when this material. J. Conder. [The Invisible State.] Pub. in Collyer's Coll., 1812, No. 898, in 8 st. of 8 l., and headed "The Invisible State; or, 'absent from the Body present with the Lord.' Rev. vii. 15-17." It was repeated in the Cong. H. Bk., 1836, No. 620, and again in Conder's posthumous Hys. of Praise, Prayer, &c., 1856, p. 192. It is in C. U. in its full form, as in the Leeds H. Bk., 1853. A cento therefrom a also in use as "Jesus, blessed Mediator." This cento is popular in America.
- O the vastness, O the terror. J. M. eale. [All Souls.] This Sequence for All Neale. [All Souls.] This Sequence for All Souls appeared in his posthumous Sequences, Hys. and other Ecclesiastical Verses, 1866, p. 84, in 30 st. of 41 From it three centes liave come into C. U.:—(1) "O the vasiness, O the terror;" (2) "At length the Master calle;" and (3) "Now when prayer and toil have failed."

 [J. J.]

'Ο θεατής τῶν ἀρρήτων. [St. John Evangelist.] These are three prosomia (hymns of a similar structure) from the Vespers of St. John the Divine, May 8, in the Menza, and preceding others also in the Anth. Gracea Car. Christ., 1871, p. 65. The author and date are unknown. The tr. by Dr. Littledale, "O Saint permitted here to see," was written for, and first pub. in, the People's Hymnal, 1867, eigned "L.," and appointed for the festival of St. John the Divino. The fourth stanza in the People's H. is not in the original. $[J, J_{\cdot}]$ Thou, before Whose gracious throne. [During the dangerous illness of a Minister.] The carliest date to which we have traced this hymn is the 4th ed. of the Bristol Bap. Coll. of Ash & Evans, 1781, where it is given in 9 st. of 4 l., and is unsigned. In the 8th cd., 1801, it is signed " $J - \ddot{K} -$ It was included in full in Rippon's Bap. Sel., 1787, No. 413, but without signature. In Dobell's Sel., 1806, No. 592, it is signed "K.—Evans's Coll." In later editions it is "K." only. This uncertainty of authorship was increased by D. Sedgwick's guesses at the meaning of "K." In one of his books annotated in Ms. we find him giving it to "John Kentish," in another to "George Keith," and so on, but in each case confessing that it was a guess only. In the Primitive Meth. Hyl., 1887, it is given to "F. Kirkham," a signature which is evidently wrong. We must subscribe it "J. K. in Ash & Evans, 1781." In modern collections the text is usually in an abbreviated form.

O Thou Eternal Victim slain. Wesley. [Passiontide.] Pub. in the Hys. on the Lord's Supper, 1745, No. 5, in 3 st. of 6 l. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. iii. p. 219). It is found in its full and unaltered form in the Wes. H. Bk. and other collections, both old and new. In the Salisbury H. Bk., 1857; the Sarum, 1868; the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871, and others, it reads "O Thou before the world began." In addition this hymn has been entirely rewritten in two forms, the first by Dr. Kennedy in his Hymno. Christ., 1863, as, "O first in sorrow, first in pain"; and the second by T. Darling, in his Hymns, 1887, as, "Christ Jesus, ere the world began." Of these Dr. Kennedy's is the finer of the two. [J. J.]

O Thou from Whom all goodness flows. T. Haweis. [Christ our Hope in Affiction.] This hymn is given at the close of a tract the title of which is:—

In the account given in this tract of Browne's last illness, it is said he made this remark to a gentlemen who called upon him :--

" I have chosen my funeral text and hymn Remember see. He bath remembered me with that favour which He beareth to His own people. The Lord will perfect that which concernct me. Thy mercy, O God, endureth for ever: fulfil the work of Thine own hands" (p. 8).

From this it is tolerably clear that the hymn appeared before 1791, in some book or magazine which we have failed to trace. On p. 12 of the tract the hymn is given as follows:--

" HYMN." Composed by the Rev. Mr. Haweis, Sung after his [Browne's] Funeral Sermon.

"O Thou from Whom all goodness flows

I lift my heart to The In all my sorrows, conflicts, woes, Dear Lord, 'Remember me!'

"While on my poor distressed heart My sins lie heavily, My pardon speak, new peace impart, In love 'Remember me!'

" Temptations sore obstruct my way, To shake my faith in Thee: O give me strength, Lord, as my day; For good 'Remember me!'

" When in desertion's dismal night, Then, Lord, arise with glorious light,
And still 'Remember me!'

" If on my face for Thy dear name, Shame and reproaches be, All hail, reproach, and welcome shame, If Thou 'Remember me!'

"The hour is near, consign'd to death
I own the just decree;
Saytour, with my last parting breath, I'll cry, 'Remember me!

In Haweis's Carmina Christo, 1792, No. 42, it is given in another form thus:-

St. 1. As above.
St. ii. "When groaning on my burden'd heart";
and as above.
St. iii. 1. 2. "And iils I cannot flee." Lines 1, 3, 4 as above.

St. Iv. "Distrest with pain, disease, and grief This feeble body see;

Grant patience, rest, and kind relief, Hear! and remember me."

St. v. As above. St. vi. As above.

This form of the hymn was repeated in several of the older collections. In Cotterill's Sel., 1819, the hymn underwent another change. As No. 359 it reads :-

> "O Thou, from Whom all goodness flows I lift my soul to Thee In all my sorrows, conflicts, woes, Good Lord, remember me.

"When on my acking, burden'd heart
My sins lie heavily, Thy pardon grant, new peace impart; Good Lord, remember me.

" When trials sore obstruct my way, And ills I cannot fice, O let my strength be as my day; Good Lord, remember me.

"If, for Thy sake, upon my name, shame and reproach shall be, All hall reproach, and welcome shame! Good Lord, remember me.

"When seem with pain, disease, and grief, This feeble body see; Grant patience, rest, and kind relief; Good Lord, remember me.

"When in the solemn hour of death I wait Thy just decree,
Be this the prayer of my last breath,
Good Lord, remember me.

" And when before Thy throne I stand, And lift my soul to Thee, Then with the saints at Thy right hand, Good Lord, remember me."

This form of the hymn was repeated by J. Montgomery in his Christian Psalmist, 1825, No. 188. As Montgomery assisted Cotterill in compiling Cotterill's Sel. of 1819, and altered several hymns by other writers for the same, it seems (from the fact that he reproduced the same text in his Christian Psulmist) that the alterations were made by him, and not by Cotterill. Montgomery attributed the original hymn to "T. Humphries." The text and the ascription of authorship were copied by Bickersteth in his Christian Psalmody, 1833, by Elliott in his Ps. & Hys., 1835, and others, and were for a long time accepted as correct. Cotterill's text of 1819 (sometimes with alterations) is that usually found in modern hymn-books in G. Britain and America. Its use is extensive. [J. J.]

- O Thou God Who hearest prayer, Every hour, &c. J. Conder. [Lent; or, In Affliction.] Written whilst auffering from a severe accident through a fall from a horse, and 1st pub, in his Star in the East, &c., 1824, p. 72, in 5 st. of 6 l., and dated "Sep. 20, 1820." It was included in The Cong. H. Bk., 1836, No. 590; and in Conder's posthumous Hys. of Praise, Prayer, &c., 1856, p. 77. In modern hymnals it is given in its full and also in an abridged form.
- O Thou that [Who] hangedst on the tree. C. Wesley. [For Condemned Malefactors.] Pub. in Hys. & Sac. Poems, 1749, vol. i., in 14 st. of 4 l., and headed, "For Condemned Malefactors." It is based on the Prayer-Book Version of Ps. lxxix. 12 (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. iv., p. 460). From this hymn the following are taken:—
- 1. O Thou that hangedst on the tree. Composed of sts. I. iv.-vii. In the 1830 Supplement of the Wes. H. Bk.
 2. O Thou Who hangedst on the tree. A cente in the Hymnary, 1872, st. i.-iv., very much altered from, and st. v.-viii. based upon Wesley.

3. Canst Thou reject our dying prayer? Composed of st. viii.-xi. in the 1830 Supplement to the Wes.

4. Thou that didst hang upon the tree. A cento in the American Subbath H. Bk., 1858, and others. St. i., viil., x., xi., altered.

5. We have no cutward righteenaness. Composed of st. iv.-vii. in the American Meth. Episcopal Hymns, 1849, and their Hymnal, 1878.

Most of these centos are in extensive use in [J. J.] G. Britain and America.

- O Thou that hearest prayer. J. Burton, jun. [The Holy Spirit desired.] Appeared in the Evangelical Magazine, June 1824, p. 260, in 6 st. of 4 l., headed, "Prayer for the Holy Spirit," and signed "Essex—J. B." It was given an anymously in the Leeds H. Bl., 1858, and has since then passed in a more or less complete form into a large number of hymn-books, and more especially into those of America.
- O Thou that hear'st when sinners cry. I. Watts. [Ps. ki.] This is the third part of his L. M. version of Ps. li. It appeared in his Psalms of David, &c., 1719, p. 143, in 8 st. of 4 l., headed "The Backslider restored; or, Repentance and Faith in the Blood of Christ." In its full form its use is limited, but the cento therefrom beginning with st. v., "A broken heart, my God, my King," is found in a large number of hymn-books. A second cento beginning with st. iv. is in the American Methodist Episcopal Hymns 1849, as "Though I have grieved Thy Spirit, Lord." [J. J.]

O Thou, the contrite sinner's Friend. Charlotte Elliott. [Jesus, the Advocate.] Appeared in her brother's Ps. & Hys., 1st ed., 1835, in 6 st. of 4 L, and headed with the text, "We have an Advocate with the Father." In the Index it was given as by "Wesley" in error, and this ascription was continued therein for a considerable length of time. Lord Selborne cleared up the matter in a note to the hymn in his Book of Praise, 1862;-

"Miss Eiliott's name is now (through the kindness of her brother, the Rev. H. V. Eiliott, in obtaining for me her permission) first made public as the authoress of this hymn. Through some accidental error it is ascribed in the Rev. H. V. Eiliott's collection to Wesley; and the same mistake has been transferred to Ryle's Spiritual Songs, Bourchier's Solace in Sickness and Sorrow, and probably other works."

The use of this hymn has extended to all English-speaking countries. Usually the original text is given as in the H. Comp., No. 139. In Thring's Coll., 1882, there is a change in st. v. l. 2 (suggested by H. H. Pierson, the musician) from "Darken'd with anguish, guilt, and fear," to " O'ercast with sorrow, pain, and fear," which was submitted to Miss Elliott and received her approval.

- O Thou the hope of Israel's host. [Perpetual presence of God desired.] This cento appeared in T. Gibbons's Hys. adapted to Divine Worship, &c., 1784, in 4 st. of 4 l. It is made up of st. i. by Gibbons, and sts. ii.-iv. from P. Doddridge's "Come, our indulgent Saviour, come" (p. 250, t.), sts. ii., iv., v. much altered. It was repeated in the 27th ed. of Rippon's Bap. Sel., 1827, No. 404, Pt. ii., and thence into later collections including Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bk., 1866, &c. [J. J.]
- O Thou Who at Thy creature's bar. C. Wesley. [Testifying for Christ.] Pub. in his Hys. and Sacred Poems, 1749, vol. i. No. 209, in 9 st. of 12 l., and headed, "For a Person called forth to bear his Testimony." Dr. Osborn says, in the Wesley P. Works, 1868-72, vol. v., p. 134, that "this grand hymn was more than once published as a supplement to an apologetic or controversial tract." hymn has supplied the following centes:-

1. Thy power and saving truth to show. This was given in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, as No. 427. It begins with st. v., and is repeated in several collections.

2. Thou Jesu, Thou my breast inspire. This is No. 428 in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780. It begins with st. viii., and is repeated in several collections.

S. Servants of Christ, His truth who know, This cento, beginning with st. v. much altered, was given in the Mitre H. Bk., 1836, No. 218, and was compiled and altered by E. Osler. It is repeated in Kennedy, 1863, altered by E. Guer. As a symmetry pray. This also appeared in the Mitre H. Bk., 1836, No. 219. It was repeated in E. Osler's Church and King, April 1, 1837. In the Index to the bound volume of his Church and King, Osler says he based it upon C. Wesley. The text used by Osler was No. 2 above, as in the Wes. H. Bk. Osler's version, slightly altered, is in Thring's Coll., 1882.

Dr. Jackson, in his official Memoirs of the Rev. Charles Wesley, M.A., in writing of the Hys. and Sac. Poems, in which this hymn is found, says, concerning the hymn:-

"The first volume concludes with a hymn of unusual length, and of almost unparalleled sublimity and force. Nothing could give so perfect a view of the spirit in which he had exercised his ministry, from the time at which he began his giorious career in Mooriields and Kennington-common, to this period of his life. In these world a worse he has rithingly depicted the mights faith. Rennington-common, to this period of his life. In these noble versee he has strikingly depicted the mighty faith, the burning love to Christ, the yearning play for the souls of men, the heavenly-mindedness, the animating hope of future glory, which characterized his public ministry, and which not only enabled him to deliver his Lord's message before scoffing multitudes, but also carried him through his westing labours, and the riots of Bristol, of Cornwall, of Staffurdshire, of Devizee, and of Ireland, without a murnur. As a witness for Christ he freely sacrificed his reputation as a man of letters and of genius; and of life itself, comparatively speaking, he made no account." (Abridged ed. 1848, p. 229.)

O Thou Who by a star didst guide. J. M. Neale. [Epiphany.] Appeared in his

Hys. for Children, 1st series, 1842, No. 23, in 5 st. of 4. 1., and headed "The Epiphany, or Twelfth Night." It is usually described as a translation, but in error. Its use is extensive, the original text as in the H. Comp., with the omission of the doxology, being generally followed. J. J.1

O Thou Who camest from above. C. Wesley. [For Holiness, and for Earnestness in Work.] Pub. in his Short Hymns, &c., 1762, vol. i. p. 57, in 2 st. of 8 l. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. ix. p. 58). It was included in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, No. 318, and has become one of the most popular hymns in tho Methodist denominations. To some hymnbook compilers the opening lines of st. ii.,

"There let it for Thy glory burn With inextinguishable blaze," have presented difficulties which have caused its omission from many collections. Bp. E. H. Bickersteth, in his H. Comp., has done much towards removing this difficulty by rendering the lines :-

"There let it for Thy glory burn Unquenched, undimmed in darkest days."

This reading has been adopted by others. Bp. Bickersteth's note thereto explains the cause and meaning of the change :-

"The Editor believes that this admirable hymn would have been far more popular if it had not been for the very long word 'inextinguishable.' Words of five syllables must be admitted into hymna sparingly; but for a whole congregation to be poised on siz, practically leads to a hymn being passed by. It is hoped that the line given in the text, which only paraphrases the same thought, will be allowed."

In Martineau's Hymns, 1840, and 1873, the opening line of this hymn is changed to "O Thou, Who deignest from above."

O Thou, Who didst with love untold. Emma Toke, nec Leelie. [St. Thomas.] Written in 1851, and contributed to the S.P.C.K. Hymns for Pub. Worship, 1852, No. 117, in 4 st. of 4 l., and appointed for St. Thomas's Day. The various forms which these 4 st. of 4 l. have taken are somewhat perplexing, and we can name only those which are of importance:-

1. The original text as above and in later editions of the same collection.

the same collection.

2. An altered version with a doxology by the editors in the Cooke & Denton Hymnal, 1853, No. 165. This is repeated in full in the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871. (with one slight variation), and, in an abridged form, in Chope's Hymnal, 1864; Windle's Coll., and others.

3. In the Hymnary, 1872, No. 342 is composed of st. i.-iii. of the Cooke & Denson text, and st. iv.-vi. by the aditors.

the editors.

Other altered texts, beginning with the same first line, are to be found. Their departures from the original may be ascertained by a collation with the original as in any edition of the S. P. C. K. Ps. & Hys. [J. J.]

O Thou Who hast Thy servants [children] taught. H. Alford. [Fruits of Holiness.] lst pub in his Ps. & Hys., 1844, No. 61, in 4 st. of 4 l., for the 8th S. after Trinity, and again in his Year of Praise, 1867, No. 47, for the 3rd S. after Epiphany. Another form to adapt it for children is, "O Thou Who hast Thy children taught." It is composed of sts. i., iv. slightly altered. [J. J.]

O Thou, Who when I did complain. S. Wesley, sen. [Ps. czvi.] 1st pub., together | with other Psalm-versions, in his Pious Communicant Rightly Prepared, 1700, in 7 st. of 4 l. It was repeated in full in J. Wesley's Coll. of Ps. & Hys. Charlestown, 1736-7, No. 7; in the Wesley Hys. & Sac. Poems, 1739; in the Wesley P. Works, 1868-72, vol. i. p. 123; and in the Wes. H. Bk., revised ed., 1875. In this last it forms Pt. i. of No. 614. To it Pt. ii. is added, beginning "What shall I render to my God?" which is a cento from C. Wesley's rendering of Ps. cxvi, pub, from his MSS. in the P. Works, vol. viii., p. 200. Pt. i. is in several collections; but Pt. ii, is confined to the Wes. H. Bk. [J, J]

O Thou Whom neither time nor space. Bp. R. Heber. [5th S. in Lent.] This hymn, based upon the Gospel for the 5th S. in Lent, was pub. in Heber's posthumous Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 57, in 4 st. of 4 l. It has passed into several hymn-books, including those for the Harrow and Rugby Schools, the Leeds H. Bk., 1853, Dale's English H. Bk., 1874, and others.

O Thou Whose justice reigns on high. I. Watts. [Ps. lvi.] Appeared in his Ps. of David, &c., 1719, p. 150, iu 10 st. of 4 l., and headed "Deliverance from Oppression and Falsehood; Or, God's care of His People in answer to Faith and Prayer." Three centos are in C. U.: (1) "O Thou Whose justice reigns on high"; (2) "God counts the sorrows of His seints," and (3) "In God, most holy, just, and true." These centos are not in extensive use. [J. J.]

O throned, O crowned with all renown. Archbishop E. W. Benson. [Rogation Days.] Written during Dr. Benson's Headmastership of Wellington College, and first printed in the Hymn-Book for the Use of Wellington College, 1860, in 6 st. of 8 l. In its original or in an abbreviated form it has passed into a large number of hymnals. An altered form of the text is, "O Jesu, crowned with all renown," in Kennedy, 1863, and one or two others, is by Dr. Kennedy. It has failed to supplant the original text as above, and as in Thring's Coll., 1882. [J. J.]

O 'tis enough, my God, my God. C. Wesley. [Penitence and Pardon.] Given in Hys. on God's Everlasting Love, 1741, No. 9, in 11 st. of 6 l. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. iii. p. 18). In the Wes. H. Bh., 1780, Nos. 163 and 164 were included therefrom, the first being st. i.-iii., and the second, "O God, if Thou art love indeed," st. viii.-xi. These hymns have been repeated in other collections. In the first number of the Arminian Magazine, 1778, st. i.-ix. were given with the title "Sulvation depends not on Absolute Decrees." This title is somewhat defiant, when we remember that Toplady's Gospel Magazine was in course of issue at the same time. [J. J.]

'Ω τῶν δωρεῶν. ['Ανεστης τριήμερος.]

O Traurigkeit, o Herzeleid. J. Rist. [Easter Eve.] 1st pub in the Erste Zehen of his Himlische Lieder, Lüneburg, 1641, p. 13, in 8 st. of 5 l., entitled "A sorrowful funeral hymn on the mournful entombment of our Saviour Jesus Christ, to be sung on Good Friday," and with this note at p. 16:- "The first verse of this funeral hymn, along with its devotional melody, came accidentally into my hands. An I was greatly pleased with it, I added the other seven as they stand here, since I could not be a party to the use of the other verses."

The original hymn appeared in the Würzburg G. B. (Roman Catholic), 1628, in 7 st. The st. adopted by Rist is there:-

" O Trawrigheit, O Hertzenleyd, let dass dann nicht zu klagen : Gottes Vatters einigs Kind Wird sum Grab getragen.

The hymn in this form (i.e. st. i. as in the 1628, and st. ii.-viii. by Rist) by its simplicity and force obtained speedy popularity in Germany; passed into Crüger's Praxis, 1656, No. 161, and most later books, and is No. 112 in the Unv. L. S., 1851. Its popularity was greatly aided by the plaintive melody, which appeared with the original bymn in 1628 (see Bäumker, i. p. 490). Tr. as:—

1. 0 darkest woe! This, omitting st. ii., vi., is by Miss Winkworth, given in her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 54, with the original melody Repeated in her Christian Singers, 1869, p. 191, and in the Ohio Lutheran Hyl., 1880, No. 78.

3. 0 grief, 0 wee. A good tr., omitting st. vi., vii., contributed by E. Thring to the Uppingham and Sherborne School H. Bk., 1874, No. 83.

Other trs. are, (1) "O boundless grief," by J. C. Jacobi, 1722, p. 19. (2) "O grief of heart," as No. 301 in pt. i. of the Moravian H. Bk., 1764. (3) "O deepest grief," based on the 1754, as No. 119 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1789 (1849, No. 180).

St. i.-vi. are included in Konnedy, 1863, and in Dr. Thomas's Augustine H. Bk., 1866. St. i., iii., iv., vi., vii., x. are in Allon's Suppl. Hys., 1868, and his Cong. Psalmist Hyl., 1886; the Bapt. Hyl., 1879; Dale's Eng. H. Bk., 1374, &c. Other centos are in the Church S. S. H. Bk., 1868; W. F. Stevenson's Hys. for Ch. & Home, 1873; Harland's C. P. & Hyl., 1876; Boardman's Selection, Philad... 1861, &c. In the Hys. of the Spirit, Boston, U.S., 1864, No. 417, beginning "I praise and bless Thee, O my God," is Miss Borthwick's st. i., iv., and a st. added.

Other trs. are, (1) "Oh faithful Saviour, Jesus Christ," by Miss Manington, 1863, p. 57. (2) "We give Thee thanks, O Lord, who hast," by R. Massie, 1864, p. 25. [J. M.]

O vos fideles animae. [All Souls.] This is the hymn in the Little Office for the dead, in W. Nakatonus's Coeleste palmetum. It is at p. 363 in the ed. of 1669, which professes to be unaltered from the original ed. of 1668; and is repeated in all later cds., e.g. Mechlin, 1859, p. 264. Tr. as: "Ye souls of the faithful," by E. Caswall, in his Macque of Mary, &c., 1858, p. 371; and his Hys. & Poems, 1878, p. 233. [J. M.]

O weep not o'er thy children's tomb. Bp. R. Heber. [Holy Innocents' Day.] Pub. in his posthumous Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 20, in 4 st. of 4 l. It is in use in its original form, and as "Why weep'st thou by thy children's tomb?" It is one of the least popular of the author's hymns.

O Welt, sieh hier dein Leben. Gerhardt. [Passiontide] 1st pub. in the 3rd ed., 1648, of Crüger's Prazis pietatis melica, No. 119, in 16 st. of 8 l., reprinted in Wacker-nagel's ed. of his Geistliche Lieder, No. 15; Bachmann's ed., No. 8, and included as No. 113 in the Unv. L. S., 1851. It is a thoughtful meditation on the Passion. St. iii.-v. were favourites with J. S. Bach and used by him in his St. Matthew and St. John Passion Music. Tr. as :-

1. Extended on a cursed tree. A free tr. in L. M. of st. i., iii., iv., vi., viii.-xi., xvi., by J. Wesley, in Hys. & Sacred Poems, 1740 (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. i. p. 232), and thence, as No. 23, in the Wes. H. Bh., 1780, and since in other hymnals of the Methodist family. Included in full, as No. 402, in the 1857 ed. of Mercer's C. P. & H. Bh. (Ox. ed., 1864, No. 172, omitting the ir. of st. xi.). The tra, of st. ix.-xi., zvi., beginning "My Saviour, how shall I proclaim," were included in the American Subbath H. Bk., 1858, and the Baptist Service of Song, Boston, U.S., 1871.

2. See, World, upon the bloody tree. A C. M. version by P. H. Molther of st. i.-x. as No. 118, in the Moravian H. Bk., 1742, and thence, as No. 442, in pt. i. of the Moravian H. Bk., 1754. In 1789, No. 96 (1886, No. 109) it is altered to "See, world, upon the shameful tree." In his Christian Psalmist, 1825, No. 280, Montgomery omitted the tr. of st. ii., v., vi. In 1856, st. i., iii.-vi. were included in the Evan. Union H. Bk.

8. 0, World! behold upon the tree. A good tr., omitting st. vii., by Miss Winkworth, in the 2nd Ser., 1858, of her Lyra Ger., p. 29, and thence in Schaff's Christ in Song, ed. 1869, p. 174. Her tr. of st. i., iii.-v., xii., xv., xvi. were included, slightly altered, in the Hymnary, 1872, and that of st. xi,-xiii., xv., xvi. altered and beginning "Lord, be Thy Cross before our sight," in Kennedy, 1863.

) what a lonely path were ours. Sir E. Denny. [Jesus ever with us.] Given in the Appendix to Hymns for the Poor of the Flock, circa 1838; in the author's Selection, 1839. No. 260; in the Ps. and Hys., Lond., later Plymouth Brethren collections. In some hymn-books it is abridged to 5 st., and in others it is sometimes attributed to "T. Moore' in error. [J. J.]

O! what, if we are Christ's. H. W. Baker. [Feasts of Martyre.] 1st pub. in Murray's Hymnal, 1852, No. 126, in 6 st. of 4 l., and headed "Ye shall indeed drink of My cup, and be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with." It was repeated in the following year in the Cooke & Denton Church Hymnal, No. 166, where it was appointed for the "Conversion of St. Paul." This was followed in 1857 by the Salisbury H. Bk., No. 161, where it was given as one of the hymns for the "Festivals of Martyra." In 1859 it appeared in the trial copy of H, A. & M., No. 126, with st. iv., l. 2, changed from "Ever like them to bear," to "Like them in faith to bear," and the substitution of a new doxology. These changes were retained in the authorized H. A. & M., 1861, and in the revised ed., 1875. Also found in a large number of hymn-books. [J. J.]

O when my righteous Judge shall come. [The Judgment Day.] Miller's account of this hymn in his Singers and Songs, &c., 1869, p. 182, is:-

"It was in this fourth edition [of the Lady Hunting-don H. Bk.] that there appeared for the first time the striking and well-known hymn by the Countess 'Oh! when my righteous Judge shall come.' It is the second part of a piece on the Judgment Day which has a first part of five verses, beginning 'We soon shall hear the midnight cry.'"

This statement by Miller is based upon information which he received from Daniel Sedgwick. On turning to D. Sedgwick's own copy of the edition of the Lady Huntingdon H. Bk. referred to by Miller, we find, first, two separate and distinct hymns numbered 146 and 147, and beginning respectively, "We soon shall hear the midnight ery," and "O when my righteous Judge shall come;" and, secondly, a note in pencil in Sedgwick's handwriting which reads, "Hymn 146 and 147 seem to be both by the same Author—perhaps the Countess's." On turning to Sedgwick's copy of Miller's Singers and Songs, we find, written by Sedgwick opposite the words quoted by Miller as above, the following:—

"Upon the testimony of the Rev. Thomas Young of Canterbury this hymn was composed by Charles Wesley. None doubt it was wrote at the suggestion of the Countess by C. Wesley."

It is clear that these guesses of Sedgwick are worthless. The history of the hymn, so far as we have been able to trace it, is as foliows :-

(1) In an enlarged edition of the Lady Huntingdon Call., circa 1774 [see Huntingdon Hymn-books, Lady, 6 iv.], it was given, together with "We soon shall hear the midnight cry" (as Nos. 146 and 147), in 4 st. of 6 l., and in common with all the rest of the hymns in the collection without signature. Both hymns were subsequently omitted from all official editions of the hymnshall official editions off sequently omitted from all official editions of the hymn-book, a fact which tells greatly against the guess that they were written by the Countess.

(2) We next find both hymns in the 1775 Appendix by L. Coughlan to J. Bazlee's Select Coll. of Ps. de Hys.

for the Use of the Congregation of Cumberland Street [London] Chapel. [Lady Huntingdon.] They are numbered 295, 296. [See Bazlee, J., p. 119, i.]

(3) "We soon shall hear the midnight cry," is seidom found after this date; but its companion hymn, "O whole my righteous Judge shalt come." This was repeated in Ps. and Hys. 1835; and in Lord Glenelg's numerous hymn-books in G. Britain and America, and is the popular form of the hymn,

The most, therefore, that can be said with regard to its authorship is that it is "Anon. Lady Huntingdon's H. Bk., circa 1774: Rippon's Bap. Sel. 1787." [J. J.]

O where shall rest be found. Montgomery. [The Present and the Future.] Written for the Anniversary Sermons of the Red Hill Wesleyan Sunday School, Sheffield, which were preached on March 15 and 16, 1818, and printed for use on a broadsheet, in 6 st. of 4 l. It was included in Cotterill's Sel., 1819, No. 172, in 3 st. of 8 l., and with st. v. of the original rewritten thus:

Broadsheet, " Lord God of grace and truth 1818. Teach us that death to shun Nor let us from our earliest youth For ever be undone."

Cotterill, "Lord God of truth and grace!

1819. Teach us that death to shun: Lest we be driven from Thy face, And evermore undone."

The latter text was repeated in Montgomery's Christian Psalmist, 1825, No. 514, with "Lest we be driven," altered to "Lest we be banish'd from Thy face," in st. iii., 1. 3. This form of the text was repeated in his Original Hys., 1853, No. 216, and is that in

O! wherefore, Lord, doth Thy dear praise. T. H. Gill. [Praise perfected by Holiness.] Written in 1849, and 1st pub. in G. Dawson's Ps. & Hys., 1853; and again in the author's Golden Chain, &c., 1869, No. 25, in 7 st. of 4 l., and entitled "Praise Perfected by Holiness." It is in C. U. in G. Britain and America. Aithough usually abbreviated, it is given in full in Dale's English H. Bk., 1874, No. 20.

O Word of God Incarnate. Bp. W.Written for W. How. [Holy Scriptures.] and 1st pub. in the 1867 Supplement to Morrell and How's Ps. & Hys. It has been repeated in a large number of hymn-books in G. Britain and America, and is one of the author's most popular hymns. It is usually given unaltered and unabridged as in Church Hymns, 1871.

[J. J.] O worship the King, All-glorious bove. Sir R. Grant. [Ps. civ.] This above. Sir R. Grant. version of Ps. civ. is W. Kethe's rendering of the same psalm in the Angle-Genevan Psalter of 1561, reset by Sir R. Grant in the same metre but in a less quaint and much more ornate style, as a quotation of Kethe's st. i., iii, will show :-

"My foule praise the Lord, speake good of his Name O Lord our great God how doen thou appeare, So passing in glorie, that great is thy fame, Honour and muleftle, in thee f hine most cleare.

ed. of Grant's Sacred Poems, 1839, p. 33. From the Preface to Elliott's Ps. & Hys. we find that the text in Bickersteth was not authorized. It was altered from a source at present unknown to us. The authorized text is in the Hy. Comp., 1876, with st. ii., l. 3, thus-

4 His chariots of wrath the deep thunderclouds form." This text with the omission of the "the" is in extensive use in all English-speaking countries. It is also in use in an abbreviated and slightly altered form as in H. A. & M., 1861; and in the full form, but still altered as before, in H. A. & M., 1875. The 1839 text is in Church Hys., 1871; H. Comp., 1876; Thring's Call., 1882, and others. It has been tr. into Latin by R. Bingham, in his Hymno. Christ. Latina, 1871, p. 143, as, "Glorioso ferte Regi vota vestra carmine." [J. J.]

O worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness. J. S. B. Monsell. [Epiphany; or, Divine Worship.] This hymn for the Epiphany is found in two forms, both by Dr. Monsell, and each is in C. U. The first and most extensively used is the original, which opens with "O worship," &c. It was pub. in his Hys. of Love and Praise, 1863, p. 103, in 5 st. of 4 l. It is found, sometimes altered, in a large number of hymn-books in G. Britain and America. Orig. text in Thring's Coll., 1882. The second form is Dr. Monsell's revision of the 1863 text which he made for, and included in, his Parish Hymnal in 1873, No. 85, as, "Worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness." This is almost unknown.

O ye immortal throng. P. Doddridge. [Christ seen of Angels.] In the D. MSS. this hymn is No. 35, in 7 st. of 8 l., is headed "Christ seen of Angels, from 1 Tim. iii. 16," and is dated "Feb. 13, 1732." It was pub. by J. Orton in his posthumous ed. of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., 1755, No. 304, with the armage's Aymns, &c., 1730, No. 304, with the same heading, but with slight variations in the text. In J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the Hymns, &c., 1839, No. 330, it begins "Ye bright immortal throng." This text is repeated in Snepp's Songs of G. & G., 1872. Usually Orton's text of 1755 is followed. The S. P. C. K. Church Hymns is an exception in favour of a text which is much altered, and a doxology unknown to Doddridge. [J. J.]

Oakeley, Frederick, D.D., youngest s. of Sir Charles Oakeley, Bart., sometime Governor of Madras, was b. at Shrewsbury, Sept. 5, 1802, and educated at Christ Church, Oxford (B.A. 1824). In 1825 he gained a University prize for a Latin Essay; and in 1827 he was elected a Feilow of Balliol. Taking Holy Orders, he was a Prebendary of Lichfield Cathedral, 1832; Preacher at Whitehall, 1837; and Minister of Margaret Chapel, Margaret Street, London, 1839. In 1845 he resigned all his appointments in the Church of England, and was received into the Roman Communion. Subsequently he became a Canon of the Pro-Cathedral in the Roman Catholic ecclesiastical district of Westminster. He d. January 29, 1880. Miller (Singers and Songs of the Church, 1869, p. 497), writing from information supplied to him by Canon Oakeley, says :-

"He traces the beginning of lis change of view to the lectures of Dr. Charles Lloyd, Regius Irofessor, delivered at Oxford about the year 1827, on the 'History and Structure of the Anglican Prayer Book.' About that time a great demand arose at Oxford for Missals and Breviaries, and Canon Oakeley, sympathising with the movement, co-operated with the London booksellers in meeting that demand. He promoted the [Oxford] movement, and continued to move with it till, in 1945, he thought is visibly to draw straining to like views to use if the could and continued to move with it till, in 1845, he thought it right to draw attention to his views, to see if he could continue to hold an Oxford degree in conjunction with so great a change in opinion. The question having been raised, proceedings were taken against him in the Court of Arches, and a sentence given that he was perpetually suspended unless he retracted. He then resigned his Prebendal stall at Litchfield, and went over to the Church of Rame. the Church of Rome.

Canon Oakeley's poetical works included :-(1) Devotions Commemorative of the Host Adorable Passion of Our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, 1842; (2) The Catholic Florist; (3) The Youthful Martyrs of Rome, a Christian Drama, 1858; (4) Lyra Liturgica; Reflections in Verse for Holy Days and Seasons, 1865.

Canon Oakeley also published several prose works, including a tr. of J. M. Horst's Paradisc of the Christian Soul, London, Burns, 1850. He is widely known through his tr. of the "Adeste fideles" (p. 20, i.). Several of his original hymns are also in Roman Catholic collections. $\{J, J, \}$

Occom, Samson (sometimes given as Ockum, and again as Occum), a Mohican Indian, was b. at Norwich, Connecticut, in 1723. He was converted from Paganism under G. Whitefield, in 1739-40, and educated by the Revs. E. Wheelock and Benjamin Pomeroy. In 1748 he removed to Long Island and laboured amongst a remnant of his people. In 1759 he received Presbyterian orders, visited England, 1766-67, where he preached often (once for J. Newton at Olney), and with acceptance, and raised about ten thousand pounds for Dartmouth College, and for Indian education. His later life was spent first among his own race on Long Island, and, from 1786, in Oneida County, N.Y. He d. in July, 1792. Occom's Choice Collection of Hys. and Spiritual Songs was pub. at New London, Counceticut, in 1774 (2nd ed. 1785). He is credited as the author of several hymns, but none of those hymns are found in his own collection. They

1. Now the shades of night are gone. Morning. The date of 1770 is given to this hypon, but on insufficient authority. No evidence connects it with Occom, though it has not, on the other hand, been claimed for any other. It is first found in the Hartford Congregational Coll., 1799, and was brought into general use by the Prayer-Book Coll., 1826. It is in several modern hypothesis. hymn-books

2. Awaked by Sinai's awful sound. Pence with God. By this hymn, from its extensive use, Occom is chiefly known. We are satisfied, however, that in this form is known. We are satisfied, nowever, that in this norm is not his not his. It is first found in the Commerciant Example and Magazine, July, 1802, p. 39, "communicated as original." It is however altered from "Waked by the gospel's powerful sound," which is No. 235 in Josian Goddard's Coll., Walpole, N. H., 1801, and possibly earlier, This older text is probably Occom's own composition

This older text is probably Occom's own composition.

8. When shall we three meet again I. Farking. This once popular hymn has been ascribed to Occom, but the claim is doubthl. We find it in no collection earlier than Leavitt's Christian Lyre, 1830, although it is known to have been sung at an earlier date. It is sometimes given as, "When shall we all next again?" as in II. W. Beecher's Phymouth Coll., 1855. [F. M. B.]

Octoechus, the Greater and Lesser. [Greek Hymnody, & Kiv.]

 $[\Omega\delta\dot{\eta},\Omega\delta\dot{\eta},\Omega\delta\dot{\eta}]$ [Greek Hymnody, Ode. § xvi. 10.]

O'er the shoreless waste of waters. Rp. W. W. How, [Holy Baptism.] Written in 1870 for the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns and

pub. therein in 1871. It is "intended to embody the doctrinal teaching of the Church on Baptism, without reference to any individual case; so that it may be sung before or after catechisings or sermons on the subject." (Church Hys., folio ed., p. li.) [J. J.]

er those gloomy hills of darkness. W. Williams. [Missions.] This hymn was pub. (not in his Hosannah, 1759, as sometimes stated, but) in his Gloria in Excelsis: or, Hys. of Praise to God the Lamb, Carmarthen, John Ross, 1772, No. 37, in 7 st. of 6 l. (Orig. text in Lyra Brit., 1867, p. 631.) It is known to modern hymn-books in the following forms:-

1. O'er those gloomy hills of darkness. The orlginal in full, but more often abbreviated.

2. O'er the gloomy hills of darkness.
given in Rippon's Bap. Sel., 1787, No. 428, with slight alterations, and the omission of st. v. and vii. In the alterations, and the omission of st. v. and vii. In the 27th ed., 1327, it was enlarged to 6 sts. by the addition of "Every creature, living, breathing," &c. This text is repeated in Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bk., 1866.

3. O'er the realms of pagan darkness. This appeared in Cotterill's &c., 8th ed., 1819, No. 239, in 4 st. of 6 l. It can hardy be said to be Williams's text rewritten, there is so little of Williams therein. It would be more accurate to say that it is based upon Williams, as the first stanza of each will show:—

Original. "O'er those gloomy Hills of Darkness Look, my Soul, be still and gaze, All the Promises do travail On a glorious Day of Grace. Blessed Jubil, &c.

Let the glorious Morning dawn."

Cotterill. "O'er the realms of pagan darkness Let the eye of pity gaze; See the kindreds of the people, Lost in sin's bewildering mase: Darkness brooding On the face of all the earth."

This arrangement is in several hymn-books in Great Britain and America.

4. Light of them that sit in darkness. This, in the Irlsb Church Hymnal, 1873, and others, begins with st. 11, of Cotterill's text as above.

The use of this hymn in these various forms is extensive. [J. J.]

Of justice and of grace I sing. LWatts. [Ps. ci.] Pub. in his Ps. of David, 1719, p. 258, in 6 st. of 4 l. It is in use in its original form, and as, "Morey and judgment I will sing," in the Islington Ps. & Hys., 1862, and as, "Mercy and judgment will I sing," in the Wes. H. Bk., 1875. Although found in these three forms its use is limited. [J. J.]

Of Thy love some gracious token. T. Kelly. [Close of Service.] 1st pub. in his Coll. of Ps. & Hys., Dublin, 1802, No. 250, in the following form :-

> "Of Thy love, some gracious token, Grant us, Lord, before we go; Bless Thy word which has been spoken, Bless I ny word which mas been spo Life and peace on all bestow; When we join the world again, Let our hearts with Thee remain! O direct us, And protect us! Till we gain the heav'nly shore, Where Thy people want no more."

This text was rewritten and included in the 27th ed. of Rippon's Bap. Sel., 1827, No. 373, Pt. 2, as:-

" Grant us, Lord, some gracious token Of Thy loss before we part;
Crown Thy word which has been spoken,
Life and peace to each impart;
And all blessings Which thall sanctify the heart."

Both forms of the text are in C. U. in Great Britain and America. [J. J.]

Offertorium. This is the name of the anthem said or sung directly after the Nicens Creed, while, in ancient times, the offerings of bread and wine were being made by the faithful laity. It was generally taken from Holy Scripture, and most frequently from the Book of Psalms. Occasionally it was drawn from some other source. We subjoin a specimen of a metrical Offertory taken from the Mass of the Compassion or Lamentation of the Blessed Virgin Mary, in the Sarum Missal of 1497:—

" Christum cruce mortuum Nostros ob defectus Maesta mater aspicit Pios per affectus; Et clamavit lacerans Capillos et pectus. Heu me! jacet Filius Meus hic despectus, Nuper inter millia Qui fult electus Sicut myrrhae fasciculus Meus sic dilectus."

Old Version. I. Introduction.—The Old Metrical Version of the Psalms, obsolete as it seems, has exercised an enduring influence on the metres and general type of our hymnody; still possesses an interest for a small circle of lovers of curious books; and has even something of an historical value. The parallel of accidents between its originator, Thomas Sternhold, groom of the robes to Henry VIII., and Clement Marot, valet of the bed-chamber to Francis I., who originated the French Metrical Psalter, has been frequently remarked. There is, however, little real resemblance between the godly, sober Englishman and the brilliant poet of France; nor beyond the fact that Marot's success may have suggested the task, is there any trace of Marot's influence on Sternhold. Sternhold's work is distinctly English, and in its first conception scarcely pretended to literary excel-lence. His aim was to make sacred ballads for the people; with one exception (120th P.M.), he wrote in ballad metres (s.m. (25th) and c.m.); and three-quarters of the Version are composed, either by him or his disciples Hopkins and Norton, in common metre, which has thus almost become a consecrated measure, but for its use by the Lake poets, and for Thackeray's caricatures of street doggerel. The early and lasting success of the Version are both due to this adoption of a few simple metres. As Puritanism increased, music decayed. The Scottish Psalter of 1564 is in strong contrast with the English one from the variety of its metres, and shows, both in the earlier pieces by Whittingham and Kethe, and the later ones by Craig and Pont, its affinity with the Psalms of Marot and Beza: but the revised Scottish Psalter of 1650 was reduced to the monotonous uniformity of the English c. M., which had proved of greater practical usefulness. To this English ballad element there was added, in the Genevan editions, an imitation of the metres and tunes of Marot and Beza. And in the Elizabethan editions a slight German influence is discernible.

II. Early Editions.

Sternhold's psalms were originally composed for his own "Godly solace" (Strype) and sung by him to his organ. Some may have been written in Henry VIII.'s reign. They were overheard by the young King Edward, and repeated in his presence. The lated., undated, was dedicated to him, and contains 19 psalms. Its title is :-

Certagne Psalmes, chase out of the Psalter of Inasid and drawe into Englishe metre by Thomas Sternhold, grome of ye kynge's Matestics roobes. [Brit. Mus.]

A 2nd ed. was pub. posthumously in 1549 and contained 37 psalms. The title is :-

Al such Psalmes of David as Thomas Sternholde, late grome of the Kynge's Maiestie's roobes did in his lufe tyme drawe into English metre. (Brit. Mus.)

A 3rd ed. of 1551 (Bodleian) by Whitchurch contains, at the end of Sternhold's psalms, seven others by J. H. (John Hopkins), who in a short preface says that he does not deem them "in any parte to be compared with" [Sternhold's] "most exquisite doynges." There were reprints of this book, both by Whitehurch and John Kyngston in 1553 (Cotton).

III. Anglo-Genevan Psalters.

During the troubles at Frankfort among the congregation of exiles, the Puritan party resolved to frame an order of Service in place of the Book of Common Prayer. This order was drawn up by Knox, Whittingham, Gylby, Fox and Cole, whilst still at Frankfort, but was not printed till they had settled at Geneva. It appeared as :-

The forme of prayers and ministration of The Sacraments, de., used in the Englishe Congregation at Geneua: and approved by the famous and gold learned man, John Caluyn. Imprinted at Geneva by John Crespin, MDLVI.

The progress of the Psalter is connected with the editions of this book, which contain, immediately before the Catechism, the metrical psalms, with independent pagination. The separate titlepage of the 1556 edition is:—

One and Fiftie Praimes of David in Englishe metre, whereof 31 were made by Thomas Sterneholde, dd the rest by others. Cofferred with the hebrewe and in certayn places corrected as the text and sons of the Prophete required. (Bodleian).

The psalms are those by Sternhold and Hopkins, pub. in 1551, with 7 fresh ones, which, from later editions, are known to be by Whittingham. A metrical rendering of the Ten Commandments by Whittingham is appended. Among these psalms is the earliest L. M. "O Lord, consider my distress" (51st). The Psalms of Sternhold and Hopkins had undergone a revision, probably by Whitting-bam, who was a good Hebraist. The general preface to The Forme of Prayers, &c., contains, among other interesting remarks on the value of metrical psalms, an apology for altering the revered words of Sternhold. (It may be noted that Warton's ridicule of the bride-groom "ready trimmed" (shaved), in Ps. 19, really falls on the revisers, not on Sternhold.) This revised text was permanently adopted in all subsequent editions of the Pralter.

The contents of a lost edition of The Forme of Prayers, &c. (1558), cannot be ascertained. But Livingston, in his splendid work on the Scottish Psalter, to which this article is largely indebted, has conjectured, for reasons which will appear below, that it contained 9 fresh psalms by Whittingham, and 2 by Pullaiu. (See 1905 Supplement.)

In 1561 and probably in the earlier half of the year appeared another edition of The Forme, of which there is an unique copy in St. Paul's Cathedral Library. The Pealter in it is entitled :-

Four Score and seven psalmes of David in English mitre by Thomas sterneholde and others: conferred with the Hebrue, and in certaine places corrected, as the sense of the Prophet requireth, whereunto are added the Songe of Simeon, the then commandements and the Lords prayer. (The account here given is from a collation by Dr. Simpson, Librarian of St. Paul's, and another by Major Crawford in Notes and Queries, June 2, 1883.)

The contents of this book are a reprint of all the pieces in 1556, with the addition of 9 fresh psalms by Whittingham; 2 by John Pullain, already, it is probable, published in 1558; 24 with the signature of William

Kethe (W. Ke); and the L.M. 100th Ps. ("All people that" (p. 43, ii.)), set to its familiar tune (which had appeared in the French Psalter of 1551 and was set there to the 134th Ps.), and with the extraordinary signature "Tho. Ster." There are also a version of "The Song of Simeon" and two of "The Lord's Prayer" by Whittingham; a third, of the "Lord's Prayer," anonymous, which is known from the English Psalters to be by D. Cox; and a prose prayer to be said before a man begins his work. It is in this edition that the influence of Marot and Beza's Version is most perceptible. Several of the psalms, by Pullain (148th), and Whittingtom (e.g. 121, 124, 127), and most of Kethe's, are either imitations of French metres, or are set to French tunes. There are 60 tunes, 18 of which are from Marot and Beza's Version; the rest (except Pss. 67th, 125th) are in the 1560 ed. below. This is probably the book alluded to in a passage in "A Brieff Discours off the Troubles begonne at Franckford":-

"The congregation prepared themselves to depart "The congregation prepared themselves to acpair (from Geneva), savinge certeine whiche remained behinds the reste, to witt, to finishe the Bible (the Geneva Bible) and the Psalmes bothe in meeter and prose, whiche were already begoon," &c. (The prose Psalms were finished, and presented to Queen Elizabeth. The metrical Psalter was only advanced another stage towards completion.)

Later Editions.

Later Editions.

Two further editions may be added, although they to a certain extent anticipate the after history, in order to present here a complete view of the development of the Psalter at Geneva. There is an unique edition in the Peterborough Cathedral Library, incorporated in "The Forme of Prayers and Ministration of The Sacraments, dec., used in the English Churche of Scotland." pub. by Henri Marcachal (no place of pub.). The origin of this book is puzzling. The title-page, table of contents, calendar, and sonnet by William Scenaria are identical with the Scottish Psalter, 15e5. But the Psalms are not from the Scottish Psalter. The 15e1 edition (St. Paul's) is first reprinted in block. Then all the remaining numbers are filled up from the English Psalter, omitting its duplicate psalms. At the end are printed "The Commandements of Almighty God" ("Attend, my people"), "A Prayer" ("The Spirit of grace graunt us, O Lord"), "The Lordes Prayer," D. Coze, "The XII Articles of the Christian Faith" ("All my belief," &c.), "A Prayer unto the holy Ghost to be song before the Sermon," "The Lamentation of a Sinner" (2nd), (beginning of it lost), "A thankes gening after the receauing of the Lorde's Supper," and "The Song of Simeon" (W. Witt.). In 1568 an edition of "The Forme of Trayers," &c., pub. by Crespin at Geneva (Hoddeidan), contains a reprint of one of the English complete editions of the Psalters (app.) with the substitution of Whittingham's version of the "None dimittie." The singular feature in both these editions is the preference of the English Psalter to the Scottish, notwithstanding the far closer affinity that existed between the Churches of Scotland and tieneva. The 1568 edition adopts the English version by preference and as a consequence rejects the majority even of the genuine Genevan psalms, written by Kethe. A notice may here be inserted of the unique reprint of the 1561 edition existing in the Britwell Library of S. Christie Miller, Esq., and through probably for the use of the Genevan edition, Two further editions may be added, although they to edition (The. Ster.). It is from this reprint of the Genevan 1561 edition apparently that the pealine are taken for incorporation in the complete Scottish Psatter of 1564, rather than from the Genevan edition itself. Fuller details of this collation than we could embody in this article are given by Major Crawford in Notes and Quaries, June 2, 1883, pp. 423-424.

IV. English Editions, 1559-60.

Meanwhile psalm-singing had become a powerful religious engine in England. In 1559 (see Watte's Hibliotheca) a now lost edition of the Pealler was published. It was pro-bably the illicit edition referred to in the Stationers' Registers:—

"Recevyd of John Daye for a fyne for printing of serten copies without license . . . a quartron of psalmes with notes, the 2d of Octobre, 1559, xii.,2" [A quartron is probably 250 sheets.]

In 1560 appeared the:

Psalves of David in Englishe metre by Thomas Sterneholde and others, conferred with the Ebrue and in certaine places corrected, as the sense of the Prophete required: and the note iopned withall. Very mete to be used of all sorts of people privatly for their Godly solace and comfort: laiging aparte all ungodly songes do ballades, which tende only to the norishing of vice and corrupting of youth. Newly set fourth and allowed according to the order appointed in the Quene's Maiestic's Insurctions. Maiestie's Injunctions

There is no name of publisher. The only known copy is at Christ Church, Oxford. It contains 65 psalms, viz.: the Psalms of 1556, together with the 9 by Whittingham and 2 by Pullain, which we have already noted in 1561 (Geneva), 2 new ones by Robert Wisedome (67th, 125th), and 1 anonymous psalm (95th). The list of appended pieces is also extended. There are metrical versions of "Magnificat, "Nunc Dimittis," (not Whittingham's, in 1561 (Geneva)), the "XII Articles of the Christen fayth," and "The Lord's Prayer," by D. Coz(x). At the end of Whittingham's "Ten Commandments," reprinted from 1556, is Commandments," reprinted from 1556, is added a metrical version of the response ("Lord have mercy upon us," &c.), entitled "An addition." There may have been other response to the relative to the response to the relative being the relative to the relativ pieces, the volume being imperfect. The psalms by Wisedome, though r. M., are not French in character, but German, in the style of Coverdale. The 67th is derived from Luther, but borrows in the first verse from Coverdale's version. (See the psalm in Livingston's Scottish Psalter: it is found only in this 1560 edition.) Cox's rendering of the Lord's Prayer is also a transcript of Luther. (See "Vater unser im Himmelreich.") This affinity with the German will appear more largely in the succeeding English editions. The appended pieces are an indication of a new aim in the English editions, which will appear more clearly in the next section. There are 42 tunes, 24 of which are from the 1556 edition (Geneva), with 18 new ones, 6 of which are from the French Version of Marot and Beza (Livingston.)

appeared an edition of great value in regard to the development of the English Psatter. The title-page is:-

Psalmes of David in Englishe Metre, by Thomas Sterneholde and others: conferred with the Ebrue, & in certain places corrected (as the sense of the Prophet required) and the Note inymed withall. Veri mele to be used of all sortes of people privally for their godly solace and comfort: larging aparte all ingodlys Songes and Ballades which tende only to the nouristing of ince, and corrupting of youth. Newly set fourth and allowed, according to the order appointed in the Quenes Malesties Intenctions, 1560. James V. If any be afflicted lethim pray, and if any be mery let him singe Featmes. (Also the quotation of Colossians iii. 18, and then:—) Imprinted at London, by Thon Hay, dwelling over Aldersgate. Cum gratia & privilegio Regize Maiestatis.

This Pealter contains 83 psalms in all (80 in the body of the book). The psalms of the earlier edition are reprinted, with the exception of Wisdome's 67th (never reprinted), and Whittingham's 67th and 71st, now finally excluded from the English Psalter, though appearing in the Genevan Psatter, 1561, and in the Scottish, 1564. The 95th Psalm, however, is removed from the body of the book, and placed as a canticle before the Te Deum. This version of the 95th retains this position in the complete ed. of 1562 and those that follow it, another version being composed by Hopkins for insertion in the Psalter). All the Canticles, metrical versions of Creed, Lord's Prayer, and Commandments, mentioned in the last section, are reprinted. To these are added 3 psalms by Sternhold, one of which is 23rd, "My Shepherd is the Living Lord, 13 by Hopkins [the 66th, which, though signed "Th. Ster.," is probably, from its double rhyme, by Hopkins (see § x.)], the 75th, which is here anonymous, but afterwards consistently ascribed to Norton, and the old 100th ("Ali people that," &c.), set to its well-known tune, and anonymous as it is in every subsequent English edition (see § x.). Besides these, the number of pieces attached to the Psalter is increased by new versions of Canticles, Creed, &c., by original hymns, and by the insertion of the translation of "Veni Creator," from the Ordinal (see details below): some of these forming a sort of prelude, others an Appendix to the Psalter. It contains in all 40 tunes, 14 of which are set to the appended hymns, psalms, and canticles.

ltymns, psalms, and canticles.

As no account of this edition has hitherto been published, a more extended notice and criticism of it may be in place here. Only one copy is known to exist, which is in the possession of Octavius Morgan, Esq., F.S.A., to whose kindness we are indebted for these details. The size of the book is 7½ in. by 7 in. The date of the book (1561) appears only in the colophon at the end. It is bound up in a volume containing a Prayer Book of 1508, a Bible of 1553, the Homilies of 1660, and the Godly Prayers (no date): the binding is probably not later than 1561. There is a short introduction to the Science of Music, in which the object of the book is stated as use "as well in the colimo place of praying... as privately by themselves or at home in their houses." Before the Psalms there are metrical versions of "Veni Creator," "Venite," "To Deum," "Benedictus," "Magnificat," "Nunc Dimittis," "Quicunque Vult," "The Ten Commandments." After the Psalms there are Ps. 117, T.B.... to be songe before Mornyng Prayer; Ps. 134, T.B.... to be songe before Evenyng Prayer; "The Ten Commandments." After the Psalms there are Ps. 117, T.B.... to be songe before Evenyng Prayer; "The Ten Commandments." After the Psalms there are Ps. 117, T.B.... to be songe prayer Evenyng Prayer; "The Ten Commandments." M. H.Xit.; "The Lordes Prayer," D. Coz; "The XII Articles of the Christyan Frythe," "A Prayer vnto the Holy Ghoste," to be song before become before because and then Prayer Book of 1559. And with this intention on its face it was "allowed," i.e. "approved and permitted to be pritted," by the Artiblishops or the Bishop of Lordon, who were the censors for the Queen.

John Day obtained a patent to print the Psalms in metre on the 3rd of June in this year (Dibdin's Ames). He would risk no more illicit printing: the book was to be lawfully published. It is possible that this patent applied also to the earlier 1560 edition (Ch. Ch.) (if it is Daye's, which is doubtful), which was "allowed" by the censors in the same terms; and looking back at it we now see what was the intention of the versified Canticles ("Benedictus," "Magnificat," "Nunc Dimitie"), Ten Commandments, and Response ("Lord have mercy on us," &c.), The Lord's Prayer and Creed, in that edition. The actiempt to associate the Practice with the Prayer Book, and so take away Genevan suspicious, had begun in the earlier book, was developed in the edition 1661, and was to be completed in 1562. This new movement seems to be connected with the names of Wiedome and Hopkins, Norton and Cox, and perhaps Grindal (see & 1x.). Robert Wisdome, unlike John Pullain, the other new contributor to the earlier edition of 1560, was not a Genevan exile: on the contary, he appears at Frankfort among the party of Cox, which defended the Prayer Book of Edward against Calvin's Service Book introduced by Knox. His contributions to the Pratter also have no affinity with Geneva; the likeness of his 67th Psalm to Coverdale was remarked above. John Hopkins's place of exile is unknown, but it is not probable that he was at Geneva; and he reappears now, bringing apparently Sternhold's 1883, and contributing a large number of Psalms. The Influence of Whittingham, on the other hand, has ceased. He had left England before the edition 1661 was published; two of the psalms by him in the Christ Church edition of 1560 are now rejected, and his contribution to the English edition has attained its maximum; it may even be doubted whether he had any personal share in editing the earlier edition of 1560; the new psalms by him and Pullain then published may have already appeared in the lost Genevan edition of 1585. The German influence is increased by two more translations ("Da pacem" and "Preserve us, Lord, by Thy dear word"): and the admission of uninspired hymns, such as "The Lamentation," &c., is an entire departure from Genevan precedent and in accord with Luth

§ VI. The English and Anglo-Genevan Peatters compared

A careful comparison of these two editions with that of Genera (1561), throws an inter-esting light on the internal history of the English and Scottish Psallers in their ultimate forms. Leaving out of sight the whole contents of the 1556 edition, which is incorporated in the three books, the only matter common to the Christ Church ed. (1560) and the Genevan at St. Paul's (1561) consists of the 9 psalms by Whittingham, 2 by Pullain, and the version of the Lord's Prayer by Cox. The pealms of Whittingham and Pullain, both Genevan exiles, excite no surprise in the Genevan edition of 1561; but their previous appearance in the English, 1560, lends great plausibility to Livingston's conjecture that they had originally appeared in the lost Genevan edition of 1558, and passed thence to England with the exiles; and if this was really the case, then the only absolutely new matter common to 1560 and 1561 (Geneva) is somewhat surprising, viz : — The Lord's Prayer by Cox, the stout antagonist of Calvin. (It is given as anonymous in 1561, not as by Čex.) With this exception, the two editions ignore each other. The version of the "Nune Dimittis," in 1561 (Geneva), is a different one to that in Christ Church, 1560, and written by Whittingham, who was then under Calvin's influence, and did not throw in his lot definitely with the English Prayer Book till 1563, when he became Dean of Durham; his selection of both this and the Lord's Prayer (2) for versification follows the precedent of Beza's continuation of Marot, pub. in 1551. It would be natural also to suppose that if the compilers of 1561 (Geneva) had seen the 95th of Christ Church, 1560, they would not have left that psalm a blank, as they did. The independence of the English work is marked more strongly still, when the 1561 (Geneva) is compared with Daye's edition, 1560-1. If the Genevan editors had known of the three new-found Sternhold's, and eight renderings of Hopkins, all of which they have left blank, it is scarcely conceivable that they would have omitted them. There is only one absolutely new piece common to them both, the Old 100th ("All people that," &c.), signed, in the Genevan edition, Tho. Ster. (1) In these facts we seem to catch sight of two companies of editors at work independently. English one is under the direction of Hopkins and his colleagues, using the old material of Genera with a certain reserve, shown by the rejection of Whittingham's 67th and 71st. The Generan one is under the direction of Kethe, adopting the previous Genevan work in its entirety, and unaware (except in the case of the Old 100th, and Cox's Lord's Prayer, which may have reached them in ms.) of the versions which Hopkins and the others were publishing in England. If now for a moment we look on to the complete Scottish, 1564, and English Psalters, 1565, we see that they are the direct descendants of these two separate movements. The Scottish Pealler adopts the Generan, 1561, in the block. The English adopts the 1560-1 Daye in the block, with a slight reduction of the Genevan element (Whittingham's 115th and 129th, and Pullain's 149th), and only uses the Genevan 1561 to fill in the blanks not supplied by England, with 9 renderings by Kethe.

VII. The Complete Psalter.

In 1562 The Complete Pealter was published by John Daye, entitled—

The whole Book of Padimes, collected into English metre by T. Sternhold, John Hopkins, and others: conferred with the Ebrue, with apt notes to sing them withat. Patishfully perused and aloved according to the order appainted in the Quene's Maiestics Insunctions. Very mete, dec. (See Christ Church tille-page.) Only one copy is known to exist. It was examined by Dr. Allort Ovagregational Padimist Historical Notes, pp. vii., viii.) and by Livingston (Scottish Padler). The details here are from the latter.

This is the first edition in which Hopkings.

This is the first edition in which Hopkins's name is given in full. On comparing it with Daye's edition, 1560-1, we find that all the psalms are reprinted except the 23rd and 50th by Whittingham, the Old Hundredth ("All people," &c.), the 125th by Wisedome (all displaced for the moment, but to reappear in the fuller English edition of 1565); and Whittingham's 115th and 129th, and Pullsin's 149th (all of which disappear permanently from the English Peatler, though preserved in the Scottish, 1564). The new contributions to the Psadler consist of 39 psalms by Hopkins, 25 by Norton, the 102nd signed "J. H.," but probably also by Norton, 8 by Kethe, the 11th signed "N.," but probably also by Kethe (see § x.), and 4 by Marckant. The pieces before and after the Psalms in Daye, 1560-1, are also reprinted. There are given before the Psalms "The Song of the Three Children," and "The Humble Sute of a Sinner." After the Psalms are added "The Complaint of a Sinner," and a second hymn called a "Lamentation." The 9 psalms by Kethe are the same as those in the St. Paul's edition of 1561 (Geneva), and the contrast they present with the new material is very striking. With the exception of the 107th and 134th, they are P. M., and set to French tunes. Livingston thinks they were written with little regard to English rhythm to fit the tunes in the French Psalter; and this may be the explanation of such lines as "honour and majesty," &c., Ps. 104. The whole of the new contributions are, on the other hand, C. M.

The contrast illustrates the entire spirit of the English and Scottish Psalters. In the English the c.m. of Sternhold remains monotonously dominant; and the French imitations of Whittingham and Kethe are only sparingly admitted; in the Scottish not merely are all Kethe's and Whittingham's contributions to 1561 (Geneva) reprinted, but the versions by Pont and Craig, which are adopted instead of those of the English Psalter, generally in-cline to irregular metres. The divergence from the French model is further marked by the versification of "The Benedicite" from the English Prayer Book, and the admission of three more uninspired hymns. (See above.) We seem to see in these, as well as in Wisedome's psalm, and the translations from Luther of 1560-1 (see § v.), the re-assertion of the old influence of Luther on Coverdale. [See English Hymnody, Barly, § IV.]

VIII. Final Alterations.

Though complete as a Version, the book had still some slight alterations to receive, before it assumed its final shape. In the ed. of 1563, of which Lea Wilson has a short notice (MSS. Brit. Mus.) there were inserted some extra psalms in an Appendix. In 1564 (Brit. Mus.) this Appendix contains the rejected 50th of Whittingham, the Old 100th, "All people," &c., and Wisedome's 125th. In the splendid folio of 1565 (Brit. Mus.), this Appendix has disappeared; but the psalms that composed it are inserted as alternative renderings in the body of the Psalter, and Whittingham's 23rd is also aided. The latest addition of all was made not earlier than 1581—an importation from the Scottish Psalter—the alternative 136th Psalm by "T. C.," a misprint for "J. C.," the initials ascribed to John Graig (q. v.).

IX. Authors.

The book was the work of at least twelve hands. (1) Thomas Sterahold is usually described as a Hampshire man (Fuller's Ch. Hist. and Wood's Athenae). An entry, however, in the registers of Awre in Gloucestershire, inserted on a blank page, between the years 1570 and 1580, in printed characters, apparently at a later date, says—

"Let it be remembered for the honor of this parish that from it sounded out the Psalms of David in English metre by Thomas Sternhold and John Hopkins. The former lived in an estate near Blakeney, called the Hayfield; the later in an estate in the tything of Awre called the Woodend. And in the house of the said John Hopkins there is now to be seen the arms of the Tudor family being painted upon the wall of it: and on both sides is written, in Saxon characters, the former part of the thirteenth chapter of St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans, which was done at that time. In perpetuam rei sive operis memoriam."

Miller (Singers and Songs of the Church, 1869, p. 49), to whose industry this extract is due, says that the Hayfield estate is still well known; and that the Woodend estate remained in the hands of the descendants of Hopkins until it was purchased by the present possessors; the house, however, was washed down by the Severn. Sternhold was at Oxford, but left it without a degree. He became Groom of the Robes to Henry VIII., and received a bequest of a hundred marks from him. It has been conjectured that the King's favour may have arisen from a knowledge of his metrical pealms (see R. Brathwaite in his English Gentleman, 1641, quoted by Warton), but this is only a conjecture. He retained his office under Edward VI., and obtained the King's patronage for his verse (see § IL). Wood says that he caused musical notes to be set to his psalms, and that he hoped that the courtiers would sing them instead of their amorous and obscene songs. Both Wood and Fuller speak of his poetry as equal to the best that was composed in those times, "when poetry His paalms should was in the non-age." be judged as ballads for the people rather than as poetry. He is the author of 40 versions, nearly all in the older form of c. M., the ballad measure of Chevy Chace with only two rhymes. He d. in 1549. From his will he appears to have possessed lands in Slackstead and other places in Hampshire, and Bodmin in Cornwall. Miller attributes to him the versification of Certain Chapters of the Proverbs of Solomon, but this is apparently an error (see Cotton's Edd. of the Bible).

(2.) Of John Hopkins very little is certainly known. His residence in Glou cestershire, mentioned above, may perhaps be reconciled with the usual account of him as a clergyman and schoolmaster in Suffolk. Wood conjectures that he may be the same as one John Hopkins. who graduated as B.A. at Oxford in 1544or 1545. He also mentions a John Hopkins, who died at Waldringfield in Suffolk in Oct. 1570, as possibly the same man. Wood speaks of him as "Britannicorum poetarum sui temporis non infimus." Some Latin stanzas prefixed to Foxe's Marture are by him. In the history of the metrical Version we catch sight of him first in 1551. He then disappears (his place of exile being unknown), until the close of 1560, when he brings a large contribution of psalms to Daye's edition, 1560-1; and his name is printed in full, as the largest contributor to the Version, in 1562. His contribution from first to last consists of 60 psalms, all in c. M., but distinguished from Sternhold's by having four rhymes in a stanza-a change which eventually greatly altered the stresses and cadence of the metre. (See § x.)

(3.) William Whittingham was of greater mark. He was senior student of Cardinal College (Christ Church), Oxford (B.A. 1545), and then travelled in France, Germany, and Geneva, returning in 1553. He fled from the Marian reign to Frankfort, 1554, and thence to Geneva in 1555. He there married Calvin's sister Catherine, and succeeded Knox as pastor of the English congregation. He had an eminent share in the translation of the Geneva Bible, and stayed behind the main body of the exiles to finish it. His thanks to the magistrates for their hospitality to him and his he recented and burnt his books at Paul's companions were given May 30, 1560, and he no doubt then left Geneva for England. He left England, however, the same year with the Earls of Bedford and Warwick. He was made Dean of Durham in 1563, and had correspondence thence with Knox across the border. He was fond of music, and is said by Warton to have introduced the use of the metrical Can-ticles in the Cathedral. Wood charges him with acts of vandalism there, especially the destruction of the image of St. Cuthbert. He When Abp. protested against the hubits. Sandys visited Durham during the vacancy of the see, he refused to attend his summons. Sandys excommunicated him, and tried to invalidate his Genevan orders, received from Calvin. Whittingham died before the struggle ended, in 1579. He is the author of 12 pealing in the English and 16 in the Scottish Pralter. The short period of his residence in England in 1560 makes it doubtful whether he can have had any personal share in publishing the 1560 edition, and favours Livingston's conjecture that the psalms from his pen in that edition had appeared in the lost edition of 1558. His influence on the Psalter was, in the first place, that of scholarly revision of the work of Sternhold, and of Hopkins's seven early psalms from his knowledge of Hebrew; and, in the second, imitation of French metres, especially notable in the 1560 Christ Church. The first L. M. is his (51st) "O Lord, consider my distress" (see § III.).

(4.) John Pullain was also one of the original students of Christ Church, Oxford, admitted in 1547. He was a Yorkshire man, previously at New College, Oxford (M.A. 1544). He was one of the Genevan exiles in company with Whittingham and Kethe. He became Archdeacon of Colchester under Elizabeth. His name appears among the signatories of the Articles in Convocation, 1562, and also attached to a petition in the same year "that the pasims appointed at common prayer be sung distinctly by all the congregation . . . and that all curious singing and playing of the organs may be removed." (The "psalms" mean those in the Prayer Book, not metrical psalms). Besides the 148th and 149th Psalms (the latter only found in the Scottish Psalter), he paraphrased Ecclesiastes, Solomon's Song, Esther, Judith, and Susannah. His influence on the Psalter is slight, though of the same kind as Whittingham's: but it is worthy of remark that to his version of the 148th Psalm we owe a fine metre, again employed in the New Version for the same psalm ("Ye boundless realms of joy"), and also in one or two of Watts's richest compositions (e.g. "Lord of the worlds above").

(5.) Robert Wisedome was educated at Cambridge, where he took a B.D. degree. He was curate of Stistead in Essex. His protest against Roman doctrines brought him into trouble for a sermon at Oxford; and about 1538 he was obliged to bear a faggot by Stokcaley, Bp. of London. Two years after-wards he was complained of to Bonner, and summoned before the Privy Council, as parish priest of St. Margaret's, Lothbury, and im-prisoned in the Lollard's Tower. In 1543, in company with his friend Becon and others, Cross. (See Recantation at length in Foxe's Acts and Monuments, ed. 1846, Appendix xii.) He then retired with Becon to Staffordshire, and revoked his recantation. Here, too, he wrote "a postill... upon enery gospell through the yeare," translated from Aut. Corvinus, pub. 1549. And here he wrote an exposition of certain Psalms of David, and turned some of them into verse. If the 67th Psalm, contained only in the Christ Church ed. 1560, and the 125th ("Those that do put their confidence) were among these, they are perhaps the earliest pieces of the Old Version. In the reign of Edward VIth (July 1550), he obtained the rectory of Settrington in Yorkshire, in the gift of the king, and was mentioned by Cranmer (1552) for the archbishopric of Armagh, which he declined. He was deprived in Mary's reign (1554), and at Frankfort was a hot advocate of the Prayer Book of Edward VIth, on the side of Cox. In the autumn of 1559 he appealed to the royal visitors of the northern dioceses against one Thorneton, who had intruded into his benefice at Settrington. He was instituted Archdeacon of Ely in the diocese of his friend Cox, Feb. 27, 1560. He preached at court, and at Paul's Cross that year. His name occurs among the signatories of the Articles, and the petition about organs, &c. (see above, 4) in 1562. He d. at Wilburton (a parish which, with Haddenham, was then annexed to the Archdeacoury) in 1568. [For a full account of Wisedome, see Athena Cantabrigienses, by C. H. and T. Cooper, 1850.] The three pieces by Wisedome have a marked individuality. The 125th Psalm is written in an 8-line stanza, of which lines 1-4 are in the metre of Hopkins, with the double rhyme, and lines 5-8 are in a metre very common in Parker's Psalter, with a middle rhyme in lines 5 and 7. The 67th Psalm (1560) is tr. from Luther, with help from Coverdale. (See Es wollt une Gott genädig seyn.) third piece is the hymn "Preserve us, Lord, by Thy dere word," a tr. from Luther, on which much satire has been expended (see Warton's Eng. Poetry) for its conjunction of Turk and Pope. (See Erhalt uns, Herr, bei deinem Wort.) It is plausible to associate the return to German matter and precedent, and the movement in favour of the Book of Common Prayer, which first shows itself in 1560. in some measure to Wisedome, whose pieces are then first inscried.

(6.) The initials E. G. (the author of the hymn "Da pacem," found first in Daye's edition of the Psalter, 1560-1, though it possibly may have appeared in the lost page at the end of Christ Church, 1560), have been conjecturally attributed by Rev. H. F. Sheppard to Edward Gosynhill, author of The Schole House of Women (a satire), and a Praise of Women (Herbert's Catalogue). But the discovery of the German original ("Gib Fried zu unser Zeit o Herr," composed by Wolfgang Köpfel, and pub. in the Strasburg Gesangbuch of 1533, see p. 276, i.), which is followed in sense and metre, lends greater probability to the conjecture of Mr. Mearns, that the translation is by no less a person than Edmund Grindal, afterwards Abp. of Canterbury, who was a Strasburg exile.

(7.) Thomas Norton was a barrister, b. at London, circa 1532, and d. Mar. 24, 1582 at Sharpenhoe, in Bedfordshire, "a forward and busy Calvinist" (Wood). He was author of a tr. of a letter of Peter Martyr to the Duke of Somerset, 1550; five controversial tracts about the rebellion in the north and the Papal Bulls, in 1569, and a tr. of Calvin's Institutions of Christian Religion, 1587. In a widely different region of literature he was joint author with Lord Sackville of our first regular tragedy, Gorboduc. (1st performed 1562, pirated ed. pub. in 1565, author's ed. 1571.) His initial appears in Daye's edition, 1560-I, between the "Quicunque" and "The Lamentation," but in subsequent eds. it was appended to the former. The 75th Psalm is also included in this edition, though anonymous like the Old 100th. This omission of the initial on the first appearance of a writer is worth noting in reference to the vexed question of the authorship of the Old 100th. He contributes 26 psalms, all in c. M. of the type of Sternhold,

(8.) D. [Richard] Cox. In A Brieff discours off the troubles begonne at Franckford, Dr. Richard Cox is mentioned as D. Cox or D. Coxe (1574). So that there is good reason to be-lieve that the author of the Lord's Prayer rendering derived from Luther is the same. He was born at Whaddon, Bucks (1499); scholar of King's College, Cambridge; then (1519) fellow. He was invited by Wolsey to Oxford, and made one of the junior canons of Cardinal College. He was imprisoned for heresy in Henry's reign. He was Master of Eton; Archdescon of Ely (1540); preceptor to Edward VI.; Dean of Christ Church, Oxford (1546); Dean of Westminster (1549); and one of the compilers of the Prayer Book of that year. He was imprisoned in the Marshalsea under Mary, and deprived of his offices. He retired to Frankfort, where he waged war against Knox and Calvin, and maintained the use of the Book of Common Prayer in the English congregation. He was afterwards at Strasburg with Peter Martyr. He was one of the revisers of the Prayer Book (1552). Elizabeth appointed him to the bishopric of Ely (1559), which he held till his death, July 22, 1581. The impression his character produces is that of an honest, plaindealing man ("fidelis integerque," Leland) standing in the media via of his day. His pleading with Edward for the revenues of Oxford, and with Elizabeth against some unjust exchanges of episcopal and crown lands; a letter excusing himself from officiating in the Royal Chapel on account of the Crucifix. and a remonstrance with the Queen for her treatment of Grindal, speak for his faithfulness. In opinions, notwithstanding his stout defence of the Prayer Book at Frankfort, he rather inclined to the Protestant side; a friend of Bullinger and Gualter, desirous of welding together the Reformed churches by a common confession of faith, and not too fond of the habits.

(9.) Thomas Becon is the well-known carly reformer. He was born about 1512, in Norfolk. He graduated at St. John's, Cambridge, in 1530, and was ordained 1538. He was presented afterwards to the living of Brensett in

He was a friend of Wisedome, and joined him in Staffordshire, when in peril about the Six Articles. In 1542 he was brought with Wisedome to Paul's Cross and recauted and burnt the Looks he had written against them. He was a disciple of Latimer. In Edward VI.'s reign he became (March 24, 1547) Vicar of St. Stephen's, Walbrook, and chaplain to Somerset. He was imprisoned in Mury's reign, but released; two paraphrases of Ps. 103, 112, were written as a thanksgiving for his deliverance. He fled to Strasburg, and wrote thence a letter to the brethren in England. Under Elizaboth he was restored to Walbrook, made a Prebendary of Canterbury, and held the livings of Buckland (Herts), Christ Church Newgate Street, and St. Dionis Backchurch. He d. before July 2, 1567. His works, in 3 vols., are published by the Parker Society. In his Catechism, 1560, he echoes the common-place of the time. "Let no filthy songs be sung. . . but rather songs of Holy Scripture and the Psalms of David set forth in metre in our English tongue." His 2 psalms (117th, 134th) form no part of the regular Psatter. They were added at the end of Daye's ed. 1560-1, as acknowledged psalms: but in the complete edition they merely retain the alternative title, "An Exhortation unto the prayse of God io be soonge before morning (or 'evenyog') prayer." The name T. Becon is given in full in the 1565 edition.

(10.) John Marchant was incumbent of Clacton Magna (1559), and Shopland (1563-8). Livingston, p. 70. He is known only as the author of one or two small pieces; a political poem on Lord Wentworth, 1558-9; a New Year's gift intituled, With speed return to God; and Verses to divers good purposes, circu 1580-1 (Rev. H. F. Sheppard quoting Stationers' Registers). The 4 psalms he contributed to 1562 (118th, 131st, 132nd, 135th), were attributed by conjecture, in the Censura Literaria, to John Mardley, " who turned 24 psalms into English odes, and many religious s." Among the latter, "The Lamenta-" ("Oh! Lord, turn not Thy face"), tion ("Oh! Lord, turn not Thy face"), and "The Humble Sute," both marked "M." in 1562, would be classed. This conjecture is adopted by Miller with a "?" in his Index, and Lord Selborne. But the name is given in full "Marchant," in 1565, and in later edi-tions is sometimes written "Market."

(11.) For William Kethe see Scottish Hymnody and Keths. He contributed 9 psalms to the ed. of 1562, not counting the Old 100th; they had appeared previously, in 1561, Geneva. The imitation of French metres is more conspicuous than in Whittingham's; the 104th psalm is one of the best in the Psalter, and its metro the only surviving result that has achieved success of those attempts to naturalise the French.

(12.) T. C. are the initials of John Craig. (See Scottish Hymnody and Craig, John.) The 136th psalm signed T. C. is evidently copied from the Scottish Psalter, and was not inserted earlier than 1581. "T. C.," as a misprint for J. C., was perpetuated in the English editions—one of the clearest instances of the uncertainty which attaches to the evidence of the signatures. The English critics, ignorant of the Scottish Psalter, have (until Livingston pointed out the error, and even subsequently) allotted the initials to Thomas Churchyard, a late writer of the Elizabethan

X. Details of Authorship.

As the initials of the writers are attached to each piece from 1560 onwards, it would seem easy to identify the authorship. But, as a fact, the signatures of late editions are full of errors, and even in the earliest there are curious printers' freaks.

Thus 119, 127, which are cisewhere W. W., are anon in 1560-1. The c. u. 106th, elsewhere anon, is J. H. in 1564. The interchange of N. and M., common in late editions, is favoured by N. to Ps. 11s in 1503 (Liv.), and 129 in 1569 (Geneva), and N. to 132 in 1564. Other instances will be observed in this and § 1x.

The verdicts here are based on the signatures of Sternhold's 1st edition (Brit. Mus.), 2nd (Loundes and Cotton), 1551 (Bodleian), 1556 (Bodleian), 1560 (Ch. Ch.), 1561 (Morgan's Daye, see § v.), 1562 (Livingston), 1564 (Brit. Mus), 1565 (Brit. Mus.), 1569 (Bottleian and Lincoln Cathedral), 1579 (Brooke), and several editions of the 16th and 17th cents. The psalms of the English Psalter only are noted: ? is attached to the doubtful psalms, and the reasons of the decision are given subsequently.

Comment.—In Sterakold's 1st edition there are several misprints in the numbers: 19 (29), 27 (28), 33 (34), 121 (120), 122 (122), 138 (128). The only pesim here assigned to Hopkins which is doubtfut is 66th, marked "T. S." in 1561, 1562, 1564, 1569; but in 1565, and Scottish 1664, 1566, "L.H." As it has four rhymes, it is probably by Hopkins. A similar conflict of evidence occurs as to 28th, signed "L.H." in 1561, 1562, 1564, 1565, But it is one of the Sternhold." The 162nd is signed "J.H." in 1566, 1569, 1579, and the double rhyme decides it for "Sternhold." The 162nd is signed "J.H." in 1562, 1565, 1566, 1579; but "N." in 1564, 1569, 1579, and later editions. As it has only a double rhyme, it is probably Norton's. The 111th is signed "N." in 1562, 1564, 1565, 1566, and all later editions we have compared; but on its first appearance, signed "N." in 1562, 1564, 1665, 1566, and 1565, it is W.K., and as it is v. w., never used by Norton, except in the dissimilar 136th, and as there is no trace of Norton's work in 1561 (Genera), it is probably Kethe's. The authorship of the 0ld 106th is discussed elsewhere under "All people that on carth do dwell" (p. 43, il.).

XI. Authorization.

A hot dispute, often biassed by party considerations, has raged as to the nature of the authority of the Version. It may be read at large in Heylin's Ecclesia Restaurata, Warton's Hist, of Eng. Poetry, and Todd's Observations; on the Metrical Versions. It is agreed on all hands that it was not sanctioned by Convocation or Parliament; the dispute concerns the nature of the royal authority. This authorization is stated in three formulas of the titlepages, none of which there is any reason to distrust. In the Christ Church edition of 1560 the book is said to have been "allowed according to the order appointed in the Quene's Muiesties Injunctions." In 1562 the formula is "Faithfully perused, and allowed according to," &c. And in 1566 (Bodleian) the formula is adopted, which remains in all subsequent editions, "allowed to be soong before and after morning and evening prayer: as also before and after the Sermon." "The order in the Queen's Injunctions" refers to the 51st in the Injunctions of 1559; which forbade the printing of all books except classics until they had been "perused and licensed" by certain appointed officers of the Queen; books so licensed were said to be "allowed." The titlepages of 1560 and 1562 consequently prove no more than authorized and legal printing. The titlepage of 1566 has been held (even by Heylin, who discredits it in consequence,) to assert the royal permission of use in public worship. The assertion, however, may be more implicit than explicit. By a more celebrated clause of the Injunctions, any intelligible hymn "or song to the praise of Almighty God" might be sung be-fore and after Morning and Evening Prayer, and hence the Psalter among the rest. The use of it before and after sermons was not forbidden by the Act of Uniformity, and had become a cherished custom; which may therefore not have needed express authorization. (It is curious, however, that the Lords Committee in 1641 suggested "to add lawful authority to have them sung before and after sermons' as if the practice was illegal.) The book itself bore on its face the object of use in public worship; parts of it had been so used for years, and in the words of Parker (Dec. 1559, to Exeter, see Paaltars, § YI.), "permitted in this Church of England;" if it was printed, its use in public worship was a certainty. With the most vivid knowledge of all this, the Queen's officers "allowed" it, i.e. licensed it to be printed; the permissive use in church was the corollary of that allowance rather than its gist. If the patents of 1560 and 1568 to John Daye for printing the Psalms could be recovered, they might furnish decisive evidence; but we only know, from Barker's Report in 1582 (Stationers' Registers) that "in priviledge or private license granted to John Daye are among other things the Pealms in metre with notes to sing them in the churches, as well in four parts as in plain song:" which is not more distinct then the titlepages. A comparison of the three other royal authorizations of Psalters seems unfavourable to the interpre-Psatters seems unfavourable to the interpre-tation of "allowance" by "permitted use." Both in King James's Version, in the New Version, and Sir Richard Blackmore's, the word "allowed" is used apparently in the sense of "licensed" or "approved," but the permissive use is granted in other words, such as "recommended" (King James) or

"permitted to be used" (New Version and Blackmore). Whatever be the legal and technical authorization, of its practical adoption by the State, the State Services in 1576 and 1580, which quote it as if it were the only psalm book, are an evidence. (Parker Society reprints, Liturgical Services, 1847.)

XII. Success.

Few books have had so long a career of influence. With the growing Puritanism pealmsinging came to be esteemed the most divine part of God's public service; "the reading psalms, with the first and second lessons, being heard in many places with a covered head, but all men sitting bare-headed when the psalm was sung" (Heylin). Its Genevan parentage, its use as a badge of Calvinism, and the illegal practice of "intermingling Psalms" with the Liturgy brought on it the "frowns of great people," such as Laud, Wren. and Cosin. But the Restoration brought a change of feeling. The Puritans at the Savoy Conference petitioned in vain that it might be amended or superseded; the Bishops held that it lay outside their commission. In 1694 the antiquated words were changed, and a few alterations, drawn from Rous and Barton (according to Archd. Churton), made to give it a more modern air. In 1710 Bp. Beveridge wrote a strenuous defence of it as a venerable monument of the Reformation. Though generally superseded by The New Version, it was used in a few churches within the memory of many still living.

XIII. Merits.

The chief claims to excellence that have been put forward in behalf of the Old Version are its fitness as an instrument of instruction and spiritual good to the common people, and its fidelity to the Hebrew. It has found patrons in Beveridge, Horsley, and Romaine. We ought in fairness to remember the times and the conditions of the work. The great purst of Elizabethau poetry was still in the future; Sternhold's ambition was to make the Psalms the ballads of the court and people; and this consideration determined the metres and treatment. If judged by contemporary ballads, or even the hymns in Henry VIII.'s Primers, or the religious poetry of the age, they will be found in Fuller's words "to go abreast with" them: and this is the explanation of the apparently and this is the explanation of the apparently exaggerated estimates of Sternhold and Hop-kins as poets, quoted in § ix. We must add to this, that they were written for the level of the mass; even Warton tempers his contempt by confessing that "had they been more poetically translated, they would not have been acceptable to the common people." Probably style was a very subordinate consideration to that of faithfulness to the original. This faithfulness has been acknowledged by Keble: and Beveridge, contrasting it with the inaccuracy of the New Version (Defence of the Obl. Version, 1710), points out that it anticipated some of the subsequent revisions of the Authorized Version of 1611. Still, for literary use, it must be confessed to be almost utterly dead. The likeness to the Hebrew is that of the corpse to the living body (Quarterly Review). From the times of Dod the Silkman (see Psalters, Eng., § x.) the abuse lavished on it has steadily increased in the prefaces to new translations of the Psalms. "Their piety was better than their poetry;" "they had drunk more of Jordan than of Helicon;" "sometimes they make the Maker of the tongue speak little better than barbarism, and have in many verses such poor rhime that two hammers on a smith's anvil would make better music," says Fuller. Rochester's epigram ou passing with Charles II., while a parish clerk was singing, is well-known :--

"Sternhold and Hopkins had great qualms,
When they translated David's pealins,
To make the heart right glad:
But had it been King David's fate
To hear thee sing and them translate,
By — 'twould set him mad."

Still, on the whole, it is pleasant to think that in Sternhold's 23rd, " My Shepherd is the living Lord," in the Old 100th, "All people that on earth do dwell," in Kethe's 104th, "My soul, praise the Lord," and one or two more, we still retain some links with so [H. L. B.] venerable a book and history.

When the Old and New Versions gradually gave way to the hymn-book proper, their fall was broken by the adoption in the hymn-books of extensive extracts from their contents. These extracts took the form, sometimes of entire versions of individual psalms, and again of parts of, and centos from the same, or from others. Those of the N. V. so dealt with are given under New Version. It remains for us to provide the same information with regard to the Old Version. In doing this we shall give (1) The first line of each Psalm from the 1565 ed.: (2) the same line, when altered, from the Clarendon Press ed.; (3) the first lines of all parts taken from any Psalm; and (4) the initials of the author, not as in 1565, but as in the foregoing Key in § x.

Olearius, Johann Gottfried, s. of Dr. Gottfried Olearius, pastor of St. Ulrich's Church at Halle, was b. at Halle, Sept. 25, 1685. He graduated M.A. 1656, residing also for short periods at other German Universities. In 1658 he was ordained as assistant to his father at St. Mary's Church in Halle, where he became diaconus in 1662, and in 1685 pastor and also superintendent of the second portion of the district of the Saale. He was finally appointed, in 1688, as chief pastor, superintendent, and consistorial rath at Arnstadt, and also professor of Theology in the Gymnasium there. He d. at Arnstadt, May 21, 1711, after having been for some years totally blind. (Allg. I Biog. xxiv. p. 280; Bode, p. 124, &c.) (Allg. Deutsche Olearius was the author of several devotional works, and composed a number of melodies to alls own hymns. His hymns, appeared in his (1) Jesus! Poetische Erstinge an geistlichen Deutschen Liedern und Madrigalen, Halle, 166a [Berlin], and the second edition enarged and aitered as (2) Geistliche Singe-Lust, Arnstadt, 1697 [Wernigerode]. A number passed into the Arnstadt G. B., 1705, and a fow are still in German C. U. Two have passed into English, one ("Es war die ganze Welt") being noted under J. A. Schlegel (q.v.), and the other being:— of Johann Olearius, Johannes, s. Olearius, pastor of St. Mary's Church and superintendent at Halle, was b. at Halle, Sept. 17 (N. S.) 1611. He entered the University of Wittenberg in 1629 (M.A. 1632, D.D. 1643), where he became lecturer, and, in 1635, adjunct of the philosophical faculty. In 1637 he became Superintendent at Querfurt; and, in 1643, was appointed by Duke August of Sachsen-Weissenfels as his chief court preachor, and private chaplain at Halle, where he became in 1657 Kirchenrath, and in 1664 General Superintendent. When, on the death of Duke August in 1680, the administration of Magdeburg fell to the Elector of Brandenburg, Duke Johann Adolf gave Olearius similar appointments at Weissenfels, which he held till his death on April 24, 1684 (Koch, iii. 346; Allg. Deutsche Biog. xxiv. 279, &c.).

Olearius was the author of a Commentary on the hole Bible, and of various devotional works. He was whole lible, and of various devotional works. He was also the compiler of one of the largest and most important German hymn-books of the 17th cent., viz. the Geistliche Singe-Kunst, of which the first ed. appeared at Lelpzig in 1671, with 1207 (1218) hymne, and the second at Lelpzig in 1672, with 1340. The first ed. contained 302 hymns by Olearlus himself, and marked "D. J. O." They may best be described as useful, being for times and seasons hitherto unprovided for, and filling up many gaps in the various sections of the German hymn-books. They are mostly short, many of only two verses, simple and easy of comprehension, often happy in expression and catching, and embodying in a concise form the leading ideas of the season or subject. Many were speedily adopted into German hymn-books, and a considerable number are still in use.

Of Olearius's hymns the following have whole Bible, and of various devotional works.

Of Oleanus's bymns the following have passed into English :-

i. Gelobet sei der Herr. Trinity Sunday. One of his best hymns. Founded on the Gospel for Trinity Sunday. Olivers. Thomas. was b. at Tregynon.

Olivers, Thomas, was b. at Tregynon, near Newtown, Montgomeryshire, in 1725. His father's death, when the son was only four years of age, followed by that of the mother shortly afterwards, caused him to be passed on to the care of one relative after another, by whom he was brought up in a somewhat coreless manner, and with little education. He was apprenticed to a shoemaker. His youth was one of great ungodliness, through which i at the age of 18 he was compelled to leave his native place. He journeyed to Shrewsbury, Wrexham, and Bristol, miserably poor and very wretched. At Bristol he heard G. Whitefield preach from the text "Is not this a brand plucked out of the fire?" That sermon turned the whole current of his life, and he became a decided Christian. His intention at the first was to join the followers of Whitefield, but being discouraged from doing so by one of Whitefield's preachers, he subsequently joined the Methodist Society at Bradford-on-Avon. At that town, where he purposed carrying on his business of shoemaking, he met John Wesley, who, recognising in him both ability and zeal, engaged him as one of his preachers. Olivers joined Wesley at once, and proceeded as an evangelist to Cornwall. This was on Oct. 1, 1753. He continued his work till his death, which took place suddenly in London, in March 1799. He was buried in Wesley's tomb in the City Road Chapel burying ground, London. Olivers was for some time co-editor with J. Wesley of the Arminian Magazine, but his lack of education unfitted him for the work. As the author of the tune Helmsley, and of the hymn "The God of Abraham praise," he is widely known. He also wrote "Come Immortal King of glory"; and "O Thou God of my salvation," whilst residing at Chester; and an Elegy on the death of John Wesley. His hymns and the Elegy were reprinted (with a Memoir by the Rev. J. Kirk) by D. Sedgwick, in 1868.

Olney Hymns. A collection of hymns by the poet Cowper (p. 265, i.) and John Newton (q.v.), sung originally either in the church or at the prayer-meetings at The Great House at Olney, and pub. as Olney Hymns, in Three Books. Book I. On Select Texts of Scripture. Book II. On Occasional Subjects. Book III. On the Progress and Changes of the Spiritual Life...London: Printed and sold by W. Oliver, No. 12, Bartholomes Close. . MDCCLXXIX. The three "Poems" were added in later editions.

They were probably given out verse by verse, like many of those by Watts and Doddridge, and often suggested by Newton's sermons. In the preface Newton says, that besides the principal motive of promoting the faith and comfort of sincere Christians, the hymns were designed "to perpetuate the remembrance of an intimate and endeared friendship" between himself and Cowper. This project was formed in 1771. Whether it was simply suggested by Newton's perception of Cowper's poetical powers, or intended to occupy a mind in which there were symptoms of approaching madness, cannot be decided. Cowper contributed 67 hymns. Two of them-The Happy Change (" How blest Thy creature is, oh! God") and Retirement (" Far from the world, ch! Lord, I flee") had been written immediately on his recovery from his first attack of madness, at St. Albans, in 1764. "Jesus, where'er Thy people meet," had been written for the opening of the large room at The Great House as a place for prayer-meetings (April 17, 1769). The only other hymn whose date is approximately known is Light shining out of darkness (" God moves in a mysterious way"), which, despite of its rational fortitude, was written under the most painful circumstances (see p. 433. i.). The known hymns by Newton previous to 1773 are few, and during the early part of that year the shock of Cowper's calamity made him "hang his harp on the willows." In his Diary, Nov. 30 of that year, he speaks, however, of then making one hymn a week: and there are memoranda of composition at intervals to Jan. 30, 1778 (see Newton's Life by Rev. Josiah Bull). Twelve hymns by Newton and Cowper appeared in the Gospel Magazine (1771-78): thirteen were attached to Omicron's Letters (1774); R. Conyers's collection has several; and one or two others are found in obscure hymn-books. The complete Olney Collection appeared in 1779, arranged in three books. 1. "On Select Texts of Scripture"; 2. "On occasional Subjects"; 3. "On the Rise, Progress, Changes and Comforts of the Spiritual Life." It contained 348 nymns and 3 other pieces, and has gone through many editions. Except in refined tenderness, Cowper's hymns are indistinguishable from Newton's. Both follow Newton's stern yet wholesome caution, that in hymns the "imagery and colouring of poetry, if admitted at all, should be admitted very sparingly and with great judgment." Both in their best pieces exhibit great excellence of structure. Both authors are vague as to the aim, capabilities, and limitations of hymns. Several pieces are disquisitions or soliloquies ("What various hindrances we meet" is really not a hymn, but a fine instruction on prayer). With the splendid exception of "Glorious things of thee are spoken," there is scarcely a trace of jubilance. Out of the many themes of Christian praise one alone is touched-the surpassing mercy of Jesus to His sinful elect : and even the rapt contemplation of this droops away into sad reflection. Gloom is a characteristic of the book. The despondence, sense of exile from God, and not the gladness, of the Psalms, are selected for versification. The contemplation of nature suggests sorrowful resemblances to the work of grace in the human heart, not the vision of God's majesty and love. Hymns describing the heavy selfaccusation, dejection, desertion of the regenerate, form the largest and most darkly real portion of the book, and those of Newton have more unrelieved dejection than Cowper's. But Newton's despondence arose from his sense of ingratitude for his election, never from doubt of it: and hence alongside of it there are hymns full of rational faith, strong confidence, and, above all, fervent clinging love of Jesus. Verses often occur, which from their direct force, are vigorous maxims: and, though there is a large quantity of tame, sermonlike doggerel, there are a considerable number of pure English hymns, of melodious cadence and Scriptural ring. The earlier hymn-books that most nearly resemble them are Shepherd's Penitential Cries and the Collection by Newton's friend, Dr. Conyers. The intense love of the Saviour, which animates them, endeared them to numbers in the earlier part of this century, and the finest of them are still in C. U. in all English-speaking countries. Omicron. In the Gospel Magazine, 1771, f.e. John Newton.

Omnes una celebremus. [Sunday.] This has not been traced earlier than the Elucidatorium of Clichtovaeus, Paris, 1516, t. 178 b; and his text has been repeated in Daniel, v. p. 216; Neales Sequentiae, 1852, p. 251; and Kehrein, No. 164. The tre. are:—

 In our common celebration. By J. M. Neale, in the Hymnal N., 1854, the Salisbury H. Bk., 1857, No. 18, &c.

2. Come let us all with one accord. Made by Mrs. H. M. Chester for the Hymnary, 1872, and signed "H. M. C." [J. M.]

Omnipresent God, Whose aid. C. Wesley. [Evening.] Pub. in Hys. and Sacred Poems, 1749, vol. i., in 8 st. of 8 l. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. v. p. 8). In the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, st. i., iv.-vi. were given as No. 278, and in the revised ed., 1875, st. vii., viii. were added thereto. In addition to these forms of the hymn the following centos are also in C. U.:—(1) "Holiest Whose present might," at. i. and vi., altered in the American Unitarian Hys. of the Spirit, 1864, and others; and (2) "O Thou Holy God, come down," st. iv. and vi., in the American Unitarian Hys. of the Church of Christ, 1853; Beecher's Plymouth Coll., 1855, and others. [J. J.]

On earth we meet again below. J. Montgomery. [For Sunday School Gatherings.] Printed on a broadsheet as No. 1 of the Hymns for the Sheffield Sunday School Union, Whitmonday, May 27, 1844, in 6 st. of 4 1: also included in Montgomery's Original Hymns, 1853, No. 324. [J. J.]

On our way rejoicing as we homeward [onward] move. J. S. B. Monsell. [Joy.] Appeared in his Hys. of Love and Praise, 1863, p. 124, in 4 st. of 8 l., and appointed for the 1st S. after Trinity. It was rewritten by him for his Parish Hymnal, 1873, No. 155, the principal change being the addition of the first four lines from st. i., as a refrain to each stanza. These changes were made to adapt the hymn as a Processional, and appeared elsewhere before the Parish Hymnal, as in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns 1871, &c. Both forms are in C. U. [J. J.]

On Sinal's top in prayer and trance. J. Keble. [Prophets and Kings desiring to see the Gospel Days.] Dated Sep. 16, 1821, and pub. in his Christian Year, 1827, in 21 st. of 4l. It is based upon the Gospel for the 13th 8. after Trinity. In Nicholson's Appendix Hymnal, 1866, No. 112, is a cento from this poem beginning with st. i. [J. J.]

On the dewy breath of even. Julia Ann Elliott, née Marshall. [Evening.] 1st pub. in her husband's Pe. & Hys., 1835, anonymously, and subsequently with the signature "I. A. E." in the Index. In modern collections it is usually found, as in the Leeds H. Bk., 1853, and the Bap. Ps. & Hys., 1858, where st. i.—ii. are unaltered from Mrs. Elliott, st. v. from the same altered, and st. iv. by another hand. In some hymn-books this lymn is attributed to Miss Charlotte Elliott, but in error.

On the hill of Zion standing. Bp. E. H. Bickersteth. [Missions.] Written for the Jubilee of the Church Missionary Society, 1848, and 1st pub. in the broadsheet of hymns printed for that occasion. It was also included in his Poems, 1849; his Ps. & Hys., 1858; and his The Two Brothers, &c., 1871, p. 257. In R. Bingham's Hymno. Christ. Latina, 1871, it is rendered into Latin as "In Zionis alto

On the mountain's top appearing. T. Kelly [Missions.] This hymn appeared in his Coll. of Ps. & Hys., Publia, 1802, No. 249, in 4 st. of 6 l., and is based on Ps. lii. 7. It was subsequently repeated in the author's Hymns, &c., 1804, and later editions (ed. 1853, p. 555). In Cotterill's 1815 Appendix to his Sel. of Ps. & Hymns, No. 203, st. i., iii., iv. were given in an altered form. This was repeated in the 8th ed. of the Sel., 1819, No. 182; in Montgomery's Christian Pealmist, 1825, No. 487, and again in later collections. Two texts. both beginning with the same opening stanza, have thus come into C. U. They can be easily distinguished by the 3rd stanza of Kelly and the 2nd of Cotterill, which read :-

T. Kelly. " God, thy God will now restore thee: He Himself appears thy friend:
All thy foes shall flee before thee,
Here their boasts and triumphs end; Great deliverance Zion's King vouchsafes to send."

T. Cotterill. "Lo! thy sun is risen in glory!
God Himself appears thy friend;
All thy foes shall flee before thee; Here their boasted triumphs end : Great deliverance Zion's King vouchsafes to send.

When these two forms of the hymn are taken into account, its use is found to be extensive. Cotterill's text has been rendered into Latin by R. Bingham in his Hymno. Christ. Latina, 1871, as "Stat ecce! in altis montibus jam nuncius." [J. J.]

On what has now been sown. J. Newton. [Close of Service.] This hyun is in C. U. in three forms, as follows:-

1. The original in 1 st. of 8 1. This is found in a few of the older collections. The stanza is the sixth of J. Newton's hymn "What contradictions meet," which appeared in the Cincy Hymns, 1779, Bk. ii., No. 26.

No. 28.

2. The same stanzs, with the addition of a dexology as given in Common Praise, 1879.

3. The same stanzs, with the addition of J. Newton's "Short Hymn," "To Thee our wants are known," from the Otney Hymn, 1779, Bk. til., No. 103. This is No. 58 in the Irish Church Hymnal, 1873.

[J. J.]

Once in Royal David's city. C. F. Alexander, nee Humphreys. [Christmas.] 1st appeared in her Hymns for Little Children, in 1848, p. 30. It is based on the words of the Creed, "Who was conceived by the Holy Ghost, Born of the Virgin Mary," and is in 6 st. of 6 l. It is usually given in a correct form, and ranks as one of the most popular of Mrs. Alexander's hymns for children. [J. J.]

Once more before we part. [Close of Service.] The details concerning this hymn, and others which have grown out of it, are as follows:-- •

1. Once more before we part. By J. Hart, in his 1762 Supplement to his Hymns, &c., No. 79, as follows:—

" Once more, before we part, We'll bless the Saviour's name; Record His mercies every beart, Sing every tongue the same.

"Huard up His sacred word,
And feed thereon and grow;
Go on to seek, to know the Lord, And practice what you know.

This is in C. U. in Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bl., 1866. and other collections.

a. Once more before we part. By J. Hart and R. Howker. In 1787 R. Hawker opened a Sunday School at Charles, Plymouth; and then, or shortly after, he pub. his Ps. & Hys. Sung by the Children of the Sunday School in the Pariah Church of Charles, Plymouth, ko., H.D. In this Coll. Hart's hymn appeared in this form :

"Once more before we part, Bless the Redoemer's name; Write it on every heart. Speak every tongue the same. Chorus. Jesus the sinners' friend, Him Whom our souls adore : His praises have no end; Praise Him for evermore.

" Lord, in Thy grace we came; That blessing still impart; We met in Jesus' name, In Jesus' name we part.

Jesus the sinners' friend, &c.

Still on Thy holy word, We'd live, and feed, and grow; Go on to know the Lord,

And practice what we know. Jesus the sinners' friend, &c.

"Here, Lord, we came to live, And in all truth increase; All that's amiss forgive, And send us home in peace. Jesus the sinners' friend, &c.

" Now, Lord, before we part, Help us to bless Thy name; May every tongue and heart Praise and adore the same.

Jesus the sinner's friend," &c.

Jesus the sinner's friend," &c.

The portions above in italica are from Hart's hymns, and the last stanza is also Hart's st. i. rewritten; the rest of the hymn is by. Dr. Hawker. This text was repeated in several later collections.

3. Come, brothren, ere we part. This, as No. 610 in the Comprehensive Rippore, 1844, is composed of st. i. and ii. with the chorus from the Hart-Hawker text, and a new stanza as st. iii. This text is repeated in Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bk., 1868, No. 1849; but in the ascription the fact that at. iii. is from the Comprehensive Rippore, 1844, is ignored.

4. Come, children, ere we part. This text in some American collections for children, and the English Meth. S. S. H. Bk., 1879, is composed of st. i. and iii. of the Comprehensive Rippon text slightly altered.
[W. T. B.]

Once more we meet to pray. Lent. We have traced this hymn to Matthew Wilks's enlarged ed. of G. Whitefield's Col. of Hys. . . Corrected and Enlarged, with some Original Hymns, &c., Lond., 1798, No. 300. It is in 4 st. of 4 L, and headed "Distress." It subsequently appeared in several collections, including the American Baptist Psalmist, 1843; Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bk., 1866, and others. In Spurgeon the text of st. iv. is slightly altered. This appears to be one of the "Original Hymns" named in Wilks's titlepage, but whether by him or not we cannot say.

Once Thou didst on earth appear. C. Wesley. [God manifest in the Flesh.] This is a cento thus composed; st. i. from Short Hys., 1762, vol. ii., No. 790; st. ii., iii., Short Hys., vol. ii., No. 649; and st. iv., Hys. for Families, 1747, No. 28. In this form it was given in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, No. 401, and from thence has passed into several collections in G. Britain and America. In the 1875 ed. of the Wes. H. Bk. st. iv. is omitted. [J. Onderdonk, Henry Ustic, D.D., was b. in New York, March 16, 1789, and educated at Columbia College. Taking Holy Orders, he was for some time Rector of St. Ann's Church, Brooklyn, New York. On the 27th Oct., 1827, he was consecrated at Philadelphia, and acted as Assistant Bishop of Philadelphia to Bishop White from that date to 1836, when upon the death of Bishop White, he entered upon the full charge of the diocese. He was suspended by the House of Bishops on the ground of intemperance in 1844, but restored in 1856. He d. in Philadelphia, Dec. 6th, 1858. Without Bishop Doane's commanding talents, he yet rendered large and useful service to hymnody as author and compiler. He was a member (and apparently a leading one) of the Committee which compiled the American Prayer Book Coll. of 1826 [American Hymnody, § 1.], and was by far the largest contributor thereto. Apart from hymn-writing, so far as we know, he wrote nothing in verse. original hymns contributed to the Prayer Book Coll., 1826, are :-

Although the vine its fruit deny. Confidence in God. A paraphrase of Hab. iii. 17-19.
 Blest be Then, the God of Israel. Praise. A paraphrase of 1 Chron. xxix. 10-13.

3. How wondrous and great. Missions. A paraphrase of Rev. xv. 3, 4, being the Song of Moses and of the Lamb.

4. On Zion, and on Lebenon. Missions. Based on

4. On Zion, and on Lebenon. Missions. Based on the text, Is. xxxv. 2.

5. Seek, my soul, the narrow gate. The Narrow Way. A paraphrase of St. Luke xiii. 24-27.

6. Sinner, rouse thee from thy sleep. Exhortation to awake out of sin. Based upon Eph. v. 14-17.

7. The Spirit in our hearts. Invitation. Based upon Rev. xxii. 17-20. This hymn may possibly have been suggested by Dr. Gibbons's "The Spirit in the word," which appeared in Hys. adapted to Divine Worship, 1769, p. 149. Bp. Onderdonk's hymn is in extensive use. Sometimes it is given as "The Spirit to our hearts."

8. Though I should seek to wash me clean. Need of the Mediator. This is not only used in full, but sts. III.-v. are also used separately as "Ah, not like erring man is God."

is God.

9. When, Lord, to this our western land. Missions,
This, and No. 4, were given in the Prayer Bk. Coll.

For Missions to the new Settlements in the United States.

In addition to these original hymns, Onderdonk contributed to the same collection the following adaptations from others:-

10. Ah, how shall fallen man! Redemption. This is I. Watts's "How should the sone of Adam's race?" (p. 539. L), rewritten from the form given to it in the Northich Translations and Paraphrases, 1781.

11. Heirs of unending life. Trust in God. Of this

11. Heirs of unending life. Trust in God. Of this st. i. is by Onderdonk, and st. ii. and iii. are altered to m Beddome's hymn "That we might walk with God." Sometimes given as "Heirs of immortal life."

12. The gentle Saviour calls. Christ decepting Children. This is altered from Doddridge's "See Israel's gentle Shepherd stand." It is sometimes given as "The Saviour kindly calls." [F. M. B.] [F. M. B.]

One there is above all others, O how He loves. Marianne Nunn. [Jesus the Friend.] The first st. of this hymn is:-

> "One there is above all others :-O how He loves ! His is love beyond a brother's; O how He loves! Earthly friends may fail and leave us, This day kind, the next bereave us, But this friend will ne'er deceive us, O how He loves!"

This hymn appeared in her brother's (J. Nunn's) Ps. & Hymns, 1817, in 4 st., and was intended as an adaptation of J. Newton's hymn as below, to the Welsh air "Ar hyd y From Nunn's Ps. & Hys. it has passed into numerous collections, and sometimes as "One is kind above all others." Orig. text in Lyra Brit., 1867, p. 449. [J, J,]

One there is above all others, Well deserves, &c. J. Newton. [Jesus the Friend.] The first stanza of this hymn is :—

"One there is above all others, Well deserves the name of Friend; His is love beyond a brother's, Costly, free, and knows no end: They who once His kindness prove, Find it everlasting love."

The hymn appeared in the Olney Hymns 1779, Bk. i., No. 53, in 6 st. of 6 L, and headed "A Friend that sticketh closer than a brother." It has come into extensive use, but often in an abridged form. It sometimes begins, "There's a Friend above all others." Orig. text in Lyra Brit., 1867, p. 445. [J. J.]

Onslow, Phipps, B.A., was educated at Exeter College, Oxford (B.A. 1846). Taking Holy Orders in 1847, he was some time curate of Longdon, and of March. In 1859 he was preferred to the Rectory of Upper Sapey, in the Diocese of Hereford. Mr. Onslow's hymns, principally translations from the Latin, were published in the Lyra Messianica, Lyra Mystica, and Lyra Eucharistica, the best known being "Hark! a glad exulting throng " (p. 280, ii.). He is also the author of some prose works, of articles in the Dict. of Christian Antiquities, åс.

Onward, Christian soldiers. S. Baring-Gould. [Processional.] This most successful processional hymn was written in 1865, and first printed in 6 st, in the Church Times during the same year. Usually st. iv.,

> "What the saints established That I hold for true, What the saints believed That believe I too. Long as earth endureth Men that Faith will hold, Kingdoms, nations, empires, In destruction rolled."

is omitted, and certainly to the advantage of the hymn. The form given to the text in II. A. & M., 1868, is that in general use in all English-speaking countries. $\{J, J, \}$

Open thine eyes, my soul, and see. J. Austin. [Morning.] From his Devotions in the Antient Way of Offices, Parls, 1668, where it is appointed for Wednesday at Matins. It is in 7 st. of 4 l., and was included in the reprints of that work, as well as in the editions for Auglican Use by Dorrington & Hickes. In 1874 an altered version was given by Rev. T. Darling in his Hys. for the Church of England, as "Awake, my soul, awake and see." [W. T. B.] is repeated in the ed. of 1887.

Opes decusque regium reliqueras. Urban VIII. [St. Elizabeth of Portugal.] This hymn is found in Maphaei S. R. E. Card. Barberini nunc Urbani VIII. Poemata, Rome, 1631, p. 121, entitled, "On St. Elisabeth Queen of Portugal." It was not included in the Roman Breviary, 1632, but was incorporated in later eds. (e.g. Antwerp, 1697, p. 881), as the bymn at Second Vespers on her festival (July 8). Besides being in recent eds. of the Roman Breviary, the text is also in Daniel, iv. p. 304. Tr. as:-

1. Riches and regal throne, for Christ's dear sake. By

E. Caswall, in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 161, and his Hys. & Poesas, 1873, p. 88. It is used in Roman Catholic hymn books for Missions and Schools.

3. Riusabeth, thy regal wealth and fame. By J. Wallace, in his Hys. of the Church. 1874. [J. M.]

Opie, Amelia, nés Alderson, daughter of Dr. Alderson, a physician at Norwich, was b. there Nov. 12, 1769. In May 1798 she was married to John Opie, the painter, who d. in 1807. Originally Mrs. Opie was an Unitarian, but in 1814 she joined the Society of Friends. Most of her subsequent life she lived at Castle Meadow, Norwich, where she d. Dec. 2, 1853. Mrs. Opie's prose works were somewhat numerous, and included Father and Daughter, 1801, a most popular tale: Temper, 1812: Tales of Real Life, 1813; and others. Her poetical works were Miscellaneous Poems, 1802; The Warrior's Return and Other Poems, 1808; Lays for the Dead, 1833, &c. Very few of her poems have come into use as hymns. The best known is "There seems a voice in every gale." [J. J.]

Opitz, Martin, s. of Sebastian Opitz, butcher at Bunzlau in Silesia, was b. at Bunzlau, Dec. 23, 1597. He entered the University of Frankfurt a. Oder in 1618, and in 1619 went to Heidelberg, where he acted as a private tutor, and studied literature and philosophy at the University, paying also short visits to Strassburg and Tübingen. When the University was threatened by the Spanish troops (they sacked the town under Tilly in Sept. 1622), Opitz left Heidelberg in Oct. 1620, and with his friend, H. A. Hamilton (a member of a Danish noble family), travelled through Holland, Friesland and Jutland. In the spring of 1621 he returned to Silesia through Lübeck, and at Easter, 1622, became Professor of Philosophy and Poetry in the Gymnasium founded at Weissenburg in Transylvania by Prince Bethlem Gabor (Gabriel Bethlen). He resigned this post in the summer of 1623, and then for some time employed himself at the request of Duke Rudolf of Liegnitz-Brieg in versifying the Epistles for Sundays and Festivals according to the metres of the French Psalter (see below), being re-warded with the title of Rath, but receiving no permanent appointment. In 1625 he accompanied his cousin, Kaspar Kirchner, on an embassy to Vienna, where he presented to the Emperor Ferdinand II. a poem on the death of the Grandduke Karl (Prince-Bishop of Breslau, and brother of the Emperor), and was crowned as a poet by the Emperor (who in 1628 also raised him to the nobility as Opitz von Boberfeid). He then became, in 1626, private secretary to the Burgraye Carl Hannibal von Dohna, president of the Supreme Court in Silesia. When, in 1628, von Dohna began the Counter-Reformation, by means of the Lichtenstein dragoons, against the Protestants of Silesia, Opitz wrote poems in his praise, and in 1631 pub. a tr. of the controversial manual of the Jesuit Martin Becanus, "for the Conversion of the Erring" to help on this work. He also executed a diplomatic mission to Paris in 1630, on Dohna's behalf, where he became acquainted with Hugo Grotius. When Dohna was driven out of

In the autumn of 1633 he was sent by Duke Johann Christian of Liegnitz-Brieg as his plenipotentiary to Berlin, and also to the Swedish chancellor Oxenstjerna. When Wallenstein obtained the mastery over the Silesian duchies, Opitz accompanied Duke Johann Christian to Thorn in 1635. He then went to Danzig, where in June, 1637, he was defi-nitely installed as Historiographer to King Wladislaw IV. of Poland. Here, from this place of rest, he did his best, by correspondence and otherwise, to atone for the oppression of his brethren in Silesia. During the pestilence which visited Danzig in 1639 he was accosted on Aug. 17 by a diseased beggar to whom he gave an alms, and whose frightful appearance so affected him that he returned home, sickened of the pestilence, and d. Aug. 20, 1639. (Allg. Deutsche Biog. xxiv. 370: Goedeke's

Opitz was pre-eminently a literary man of the world who knew how to ingratiate himself with people of all opinions. He was one of those writers who exercise an enormous influence over their contemporaries, but whose works succeeding generations are content to leave unread. A long list of his works is given by Goedeke, some ninety (including a considerable number of trom the Greek, Latin, French, and Dutch), of which appeared during his lifetime. In his poems originality and force are conspicuous by their absence, and the great majority have little but their style to recommend them. He became a member of the great German literary union, the Fruitbearing Society, in 1629. His great merit was as a reformer of German proceedy by his ekample of literary style, and by his Buch der Deutschen Poetersy, an epoch-making work, pub. at Breslau in 1624. Here he laid down the rules of German verse, and may be said to have given it the form which it retains to this day. Among his sacred poems his hymns are much the best (he also pub. a paraphrase of the Identications of Jeremiah in 1625; and of Canticles in 1627). He also pub. versions of deteched Padms in 1629, 1630, 1634, 1635, and 1636, and a complete version in 1637 (see Realters, German). His hymns on the Epistics for the Church Year seem to have been written in 1624 (see above), but were apparently first pub. as Die Epistein der Sontage and fürnemsten Faste des gentsen Jahrs, auff die Weiten der Frantzüsischen Padmen in Lieder gefasset, Breslau, 1628 (printed at Leipzig) [Welman Library]. His hymns, Paalm versions, &c., to the number of 248, are collected in his Geistliche Poëmatia, Breslau, 1639. Twenty-nine are given by Mützell, 1858, pp. 187-221. opinions. He was one of those writers who exercise an enormous influence over their contemporaries, but whose

i. Brich auf, und werde Lichte. Epiphany. In his Episteln, 1628, p. 11, in 6 st. of 6 l., and entitled, "On the Holy Three Kings Day. Isaiah 60." Repeated in the Geistliche Poemula, 1038, p. 132, and in the Ohio G. B., 1870, No. 55. Tr. as:—

Zion, awake and brighten. In full by E. Cronenwett, as No. 51 in the Ohio Luth. Hyl., 1880.

ii. O Licht, geboren aus dem Lichte. Morning. His finest hymn, and a special favourite in Silesia. 1st pub. at the end of his Zehen Psalmen Davids, Breslau and Leipzig, 1634, p. 48, in 3 st. of 10 l., and entitled "Morning Hymn." Bunsen, in his Versuch, 1833, p. 865, speaks of it as " of singular beauty in form and contents," and as a "pious prayer for the Fatherland and for the Church in her sore troubles." Repeated in his Geist. Poemata, 1638, p. 231, in the Breslau Kirchen- und Hausmusic, 1644, p. 762, and recently in the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 470. Tr. as:-

Thou Light, from Light eternal springing. A good and full tr. by H. J. Buckell, in his Hys. Breslau in Sept. 1632, by means of the Saxon from the German, 1842, p. 17; repeated, slightly and Swedish troops, Opitz remained behind. altered, in the Dalston Hospital H. Bk., 1848. Walker, 1869, p. 38. (3) "O Light, who out of Light wast born." By Miss Winkworth, 1869, p. 173. [J. M.]

Opprobriis, Jesu, satur. C. Coffin. [Passiontide.] Given in the Paris Breviary, 1736, as the Ferial hymn at Matins throughout Passion Week, and after till Maundy Thursday. It is also in Coffin's Hymni Sacri, 1736, p. 50, and some modern French Brevs. J. Chandler in his Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1837, and Card. Newman in his Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865, also give the text. Tr. as:—

His trial o'er, and now beneath. Chandler, in his Hys. of the Prim. Church, 1837, p. 72, and his Hys. of the Church, 1841, No. 40. It has been repeated in a few collections, and also, altered as "From judgment taken, lo, beneath" in the Hyl. for the Use of St. John the Evangelist's, &c., Aberdeen, 1870. In the Suppl. Hy. to H. A. & M., 1889, Chandler's tr. is altered by the Compilers to "O scorned and out-cast Lord, beneath."

Other tre. are :-

4. Jesu, by cruel taunts distressed. J. D. Chambers. 1857. [J. J.]

Optatus votis omnium. [Ascension.] This hymn is probably of the 6th or 7th cent. It is found in two MSS. of the 11th cent, in the British Museum (Vesp. D., xii, f. 74b; Jul. A. vi. f. 50 b); in a Ms. of the 11th cent. in the Library of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge (391, p. 249); and in the Lat. Hys. of the Anglo-Sazon Ch., 1851, it is printed from an 11th cent. Ms. at Durham (B. iii. 32, f. 26). It was included in the Ambrosian Breviary, 1539, and some Carthusian and Cistercian Breviaries. The printed text is also in Mone, No. 175, and Daniel, i., No. 55. $[J, \mathbf{M}]$

1. Delight and joy of earth. By W. J. Blew. of st. i .- iv., in his Church Hy. & Tune Bk., 1852-55, and Rice's Sci. from the same, 1870. In the 1860 Appendix to the Hymnal N., No. 135, st. i.-iv. and viii. are from this tr., and st. v.-vii. are from Mrs. Charles's tr. of the same hymn altered. This cento begins "Delight of all the earth."

2. O mighty joy to all. This begins with st. v., "O grande cunctis gaudium," and was tr. by W. J. Blew as above, 1852-55.

- 3. At length the longed-for joy is given. Mrs. Charles, in her Voice of Christian Life in Song, 1858, p. 104. This is given in full or in part in several collections, and is the most widely used of the trs. of this hymn.
- 4. 0 wondrous joy to all mankind. By J. Skinner, in his Daily Service Hymnal, 1864.
- 5. The sacred day hath beamed. By R. C. Singleton, in his Anglican H. Bk., 1871.

Opus peregisti tuum. C. Coffin. [Ascension.] Given in the Paris Breviary, 1736, as one of the hymns for the Ascension. It was also included in Coffin's Hymni Sucri, 1736, p. 53; J. Chandler's Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1837, No. 72; and Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. Tr. as:-

 Redeemer, now Thy work is done. By J. Chandler, in his Hys. of the Prim. Church, 1837, p. 72; and his Hys. of the Church, 1841, No. 47. This is in C. U. in its full, and also in an abbreviated form, in addition to the following arrangements, which are based thereupon.

(1) O Saviour, Who for man hast trod. This appeared in R. Campbell's Hys. and Anthems, 1850, p. 77. Of this arrangement st. i., iv., ii. 1, 2; vi. ii. 3, 4, and vii. li. 1, 2, were from Chandler's tr. altered, and the rest by Campbell. In Murray's Hymnal, 1852, No. 82, this text is repeated in full, with the exception of st. ii., li. 1, 2, and st. v., where Chandler's original tr. is given, elightly aitered, instead of Campbell's. In the lat ed. of H. A. M. 1861, No. 123, and st. revised ed. and st. v., where Chandler's original tr. is given, slightly aitered, instead of Campbell's. In the lat ed. of H. A. & M. 1861, No. 123, and the revised ed., No. 146, we have a cento, evidently suggested by Murruy's text, and composed as follows. St. i., Chandler sitered by Campbell: st. ii., H. 1, 2, Chandler; il. 3, 4, Campbell aitered by Compilers; st. ii., Compilere; st. ii., Compilere; st. v., th. 1, 2, Chandler aitered by Campbell; il. 3, 4, Campbell aitered by Compilers; st. v., Chandler aitered by Compilers; st. vi., il. 1, 2, Chandler aitered by Campbell; il. 3, 4, Campbell aitered by Compilers; st. vi. il. 1, 2, Campbell aitered by Compilers; st. vi. il. 1, 2, Campbell aitered by Compilers; st. vii., il. 1, 2, Chandler aitered by Campbell; il. 3, 4, Compilers; il. stead of reading as in the 1875 ed. of H. A. & M. that this fr. is by the "Compilers based upon Latin try J. Chandler, 1837; altered by R. Campbell, 1860; and again altered by the Compilers, 1861." As the strength and beauty of this tr. owes more to Campbell than to Chandler or the Compilers of H. A. & M. This text in H. A. & M. is the most popular tr. of the "Opus peregisti tumm" in C. U., and is widely used.

(2) Bleet Saviour, now Thy work is done. This altered form of Chandler's $t\tau$, st. i.-v., was given in the Scottish Epis. Coll. of Hys., 1858; and repeated, with the addition of Campbell's doxology, in the 1860 Appendix to the Hymnal Noted.

Orbis Patrator optime. Cardinal Bellarmine? [Guardian Angels.] The festival of the Guardian Angels was authorised by Pope Paul V. in 1608; and the office is found in the Breviarium Benedictinum, pub. at Venice in 1612. There the hymns are (1) "Custodes hominum" (see p. 274, ii.), for Vespers, at p. 987; and (2) "Orbis Patrator optime," for Lauds, at p. 992; and they are repeated in this form in the Hymni Breviarii Romani, Rome, 1629, pp. 91, 92. The office is not, however, found in the eds. of the Ram. Brev. prior to 1632, nor was it incorporated in the revised Rom. Brev. of 1632; but in the ed. pub. at Venice in 1635 by the Giuntae (apud Juntas), it is in a separately paged Appendix. which is entitled: "Officia propria sanctorum recitanda ad libitum cleri Romani." In 1635, and in recent eds. of the Rom. Brev., the Lauds hymn, "Orbis Patrator optime," begins, "Actorne Rector siderum"; and the tra are noted under this form of the text (see p. 26, i.), The revised text is also found in Daniel iv. o. 306. We may add that the copy of the p. 306. We may and the bar and Hymni Brev. Rom., Rome, 1629, in the Brit. Mus. (C. 28, f. 1), has numerous as corrections which, in a Ms. note on the fly-leaf, are as-cribed to Pope Urban VIII., whose pontificate extended from 1623 to 1644. "Ορθριος δίδωμι τῷ θεῷ μον δεξιάς. St. Gregory of Nazianzus. [Morning.] A Morning Prayer found in various editions of his Works, and the Anth. Gracca Carm. Christ. 1871, p. 28. It dates 324-389. From the Anth. Gracca Carm. Christ. text Mr Chatfield made his fr. "Tis dawn: to God I lift my hand," and pub. the same in his Songs & Hymne, 1876, p. 120, in 3 st. of 4 l. [See Greek Hymne, nody, § iv.] [J. J.]

'Ως θείος ποταμός. [Time of Pestilence.] Two Cathiamata from the Greek Office of Prayer Oil, given after the 3rd ode of the Canon by St. Arsenius. The only tr. into English is "Christ, mercy's holy River," by Dr. Littledale, first printed in the Church Times, Aug. 13, 1864, and signed "R. F. L." In 1867 it was transferred in an altered form to the People's Hymnal, No. 322, and signed "A. L. P." It is therein appointed for a "Time of Pestilence," for which it is most suitable. The doxology added by Dr. Littledale is not in the original. $[\mathbf{J}, \mathbf{J}.]$

Osler, Edward, was b. at Falmouth in January, 1798, and was educated for the medical profession, first by Dr. Carvosso, at Falmouth, and then at Guy's Hospital, London. From 1819 to 1836 he was house surgeon at the Swansea Infirmary. He then removed to London, and devoted himself to literary pursuits. For some time he was associated with the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, both in London and at Bath. In 1841 he became the Editor of the Royal Cornwall Gazette, and took up his residence at Truro. He retained that appointment till his death, at Truro, March 7, 1863. He was a M.B.C.S. and a F.L.S. For the Linuxan Society he wrote Burrowing and Boring Marine Animals. He also pub. Church and Bible; The Voyage: a Poem written at Sea, and in the West Indies, and Illustrated by papers on Natural History, 1830; The Life of Lord Exmouth, 1837, &c. His hymnological work is mainly connected with the Mitre H. Bk. During 1835-36 he was associated with Prebendary W. J. Hall, the editor, in producing that collection, which was pub. in 1836 as Ps. and Hys. adapted to The Services of the Church of England [see Hall, W. J., p. 481]. He resided in Mr. Hall's house during the time. From the "HALL MSs." we gather that he contributed 15 versions of the Psalms (5 being rewritten from others), and 50 hymns (a few rewritten). Most of these hymns and Psalm versions, together with others not in the Mitre H. Bk., were afterwards given in the monthly numbers of his Church and King, from Nov. 1836 to Aug. 1837. The best known of these hymns are, "O God, unseen, yet ever near," and "Worship, honour, glory, blessing." Several of his hymns are annotated under their respective first lines (see Index); the rest in C. U. are;—

1. Father, Whose love and truth fulfil, Holy Haptien 2. Glory to God! with joyful adoration. Praise to the Father 3. Great God, o'er earth and heaven supreme. Months Stewards of God's Bounties.

4. Great God of bosts, our ears have heard. Ps. 216.

Based on the N. Verrion.

5. Great God, Whose awful mystery. Holy Trinity.

6. I hold the sacred book of God. Martyrs.
7. Jehovah hath spoken, the pations shall hear. Second Advent.

8. Lord, may the inward grace abound. Holy Baptism.

May we Thy precepts, Lord, fulfil. Love.
 Mighty Saviour, gracious King. Advent.
 O God, the help of all Thy Saints. Ps. s.
 O Thou, the Lord and Life of those. Christ the Life of Men.

13. O Saviour, Who didst come. Easter.

14. Saviour, Whose love could stoop to death.

16. See, Lord, before Thy mercy seat. For Schools.
16. Set in a high and favoured place. Advent.
17. Wake from the dead, new life begin. Lent.
18. With trembling awe we come. Lent.

Several of these hymns are not in Osler's Church and King. We have ascribed them and others to him on the authority of the "HALL MSS." It must be noted also that the text in the Church and King often differs from that in the Mitre.

Oswald, Heinrich Siegmund, a. of Johann Heinrich Oswald or Osswald, of Nimmersatt, near Lieguitz, in Silesia, was b. at Nimmersatt, June 30, 1751. After passing through the school at Schmiedeberg he was for seven years clerk in a public office at Breslau. In 1773 he became Secretary to the Landrath von Prittwitz at Glatz, with whom he remained two years, and was thereafter in business at Hamburg and at Breslau. Through J. D. Hermes, Oberconsistorial rath at Potsdam, whose daughter he married, he became acquainted with King Friedrich Wilhelm II. of Prussia, and in 1791 was appointed reader to the king. He accordingly removed to Potsdam, and was in 1791 appointed also Geheimrath. After the king's death, on Nov. 18, 1797, Oswald received a pension, and retired first to Hirschberg, and then to Breslau, where he d. Sept. 8, 1834. (Allg. Deutsche Biog. xxiv. 528; Miller's Singers & Songs, 1869, p. 303; extracts from the Breslaver Zeilung, Sept. 12, 1834, and the Schlesische Provinzialblätter, 1835, p. 289, kindly communicated by Dr. Markgraf of the Breelau Stadt Bibliothek, &c.)

Oswald's hymns, over 100 in all, appeared principally in his (1) Unterhaltungen für gläubige Seeien, Berlin, 1792. (3) Gedichte und Lieder fürs Hers, Berlin, 1793. (3) Letzten Mithellungen meiner der Wahrheit und Religion geseinter Muse, Breslau, 1826. (4) Schwansengesünge, Breslau, N.D. (preface Aug. 1827).

Three or four of Oswald's hymns have passed into German hymn-books. One has been tr. into English, viz. :-

Wem in Leidenstagen. For Mourners. In his Letzte Mittheilungen, 1826, p. 42, in 14 st. of 4 l., and entitled "An exhortation to Tranquillity. To the Suffering. Psalm 50, v. 15." Bunsen, in his Versuch, 1833, No. 813 (Alig. G. B., 1846, No. 333), selects st. i.-iii., x., xii.-xiv. The singing of this beautiful hymn (in Miss Cox's version) formed an impressive part of the service in the church at Edensor at the funeral of Lord Frederick Cavendish, May 11, 1882. Tr.

1. 0! Let him whose sorrow. A very good tr. from Bunsen's text, by Miss Cox, in her Sacred Hys. from the German, 1841, p. 181 (H. from the Ger., 1864, p. 189), included in Alford's Ps. & Hys., 1844, and others. Since its reception into H. A. & M., 1861 (unaltered save st. vii. and the change to the plural), it has attained a wide popularity, and is found in many English and American collections. In the Unitarian Hys. for the Ch. of Christ, Boston, U.S., 1853, the Hymnary, 1872, and others, it begins with st. ii., "Where the mourner weeping," and in C. H. Batqman's Sacred Melodies, 1872, with st. iii., "God will never leave thee." In Dale's English H. Bk., 1874 (in order to make up 4 double st.) four lines, beginning "On Thy truth relying," were added from J. Montgomery's "In the hour of trial" (p. 566, ii.). This form is also in J. L. Porter's Coll., 1876, and Horder's Cong. Hys., 1884.

Another tr. is: "When in thine bours of grief," by Lady E. Fortescue, 1843, p. 71. [J. M.]

Otfrid of Weissenburg, was b. about the beginning of the 9th cent., according to some in Franconia, according to others near the Lake of Constanz. After receiving the elements of his education in the Benedictine monastery of Weissenburg in Alsace, he went, about 830, to the cathedral school at Constanz. He afterwards studied at the school of the monastery of Fulda, where, under the care of Rabanus Maurus, he learned to love his mother tongue. In 846 he left Fulda, and, ofter a short stay at St. Gall, settled as a monk and priest at Weissenburg, where he became head of the monastic achool. Here he wrote and completed about 865 a German Wrote and completed about 005 a Ordinan poetical Life of our Lord (or Harmony of the Gospels), or Evangelienbuch, in 5 books of 15,000 lines (first printed at Basel in 1571; recent eds. by E. G. Graff, 1831; J. Kelle, 1856; P. Piper, 1878; O. Erdmann, 1882; trs. into modern German by G. Rapp, 1858, F. Pachenberg, 1869; J. Kelle, 1870, &.) a worst Rechenberg, 1862, J. Kelle, 1870, &c.), a most interesting work philologically, and the earliest example of a long German poem in rhyme. (Allg. Deutsche Biog. xxiv. 529; Goedeke's Grundriss, vol. i., 1884, p. 22, &c.) Besides this he wrote a number of rhymed prayers in German. Two which have been ascribed to him, and have been tr. by Miss Winkworth, are noted under their first lines, see Du himlieco trohtin (p. 315, i.), and Got, thir eigenhaf ist (p. 443, i.). They are in his manner, but appear to be of later date. Miss Winkworth also gives, a tr. of a section of the Evangelienbuch, which begins thus:-

Manet unsin thisu fart. This is chapter xviii. of Book i., and is on the Epiphany. It is in Wackernagel's Deutsche Kirchenlied, ii. p. 8, in 23 st. of 4 l.; in Erdannin's ed. of the Evangelienbuch, 1882, p. 47, &c. Erdinann, in his notes at p. 370, speaks of this chapter as the "first detailed mystical explanation for the Return of the Magi to their own land]. The removing of the Magi from their home and their home-going by another way reminds us of our Home, the giorious Paradise (lines 1-10); we have lost it by pride, self-will and isobedience, and sojourn in sorrowful banishment (11-30). In order to reach Home again, we must follow the new way of purity, humility, love and self-deutai (31-46)." The only tr, is "Now warneth us the Wise Mens fare." By Miss Winkworth, 1869, p. 17. [J. M.]

Οὐ γὰρ βλέπεις τοὺς ταράττοντας. St. Andrew of Crete. [In Temptation.] The title given by Dr. Neale to his tr. in his Hymns of the Eastern Church is "Stichera for the Second Week of the Great Fast." After the most careful research nothing corresponding to these Stickera can be found in any editions of the Octoechus which have come under our notice; and the Rev. S. G. Hatherly, in the 4th ed. of Dr. Neale's Hys. of the Eastern Church, 1882, says, "These Stichera are not in use in the Church Service." Dr. Neale's tr., "Christian | dost thou see them?" appeared in his Hys. of the E. C., 1862, in 4 st. of 8 l., and was first pub. for congregational use in the Parish H. Bk., 1863. From that date it rapidly grew into favour, until few editors think it wise to countenance its omission from their collections. Some hymnals, including the Sarum, the S. P. C. K. Ps. & Hys., and their Church Hymns, have altered texts, but H. A. & M. is Neale's original tr. [J. J.]

Our blest Redeemer, ere He breathed. Harriet Auber. [Whitsuntide.] 1st pub. in her Spirit of the Psalms, 1829, p. 147, in 7 st. of 4 l., as one of two hymns for "Whit-Sunday." It was some time before it came into common use, but when once brought before the notice of hymnal compilers, it speedily attained to great popularity. It is in common use in all English-speaking countries, and has been translated into several languages. The text as in H. A. & M. rendered into Latin by C. S. Calverley, was given in Biggs's annotated ed. of H. A. & M. as "Qui Pretium nostrae Vitam dedit; ante Supremum." In most hymnals it is given in an abbreviated form, and sometimes with a doxology (not in the original), as in Thring's Coll., 1882. Orig. Text in Hy. Comp., st. i., ii., iv., v., vi., vii., with l. 4, st. vii., changed from "And worthier Thee." The omitted st. iii. is:—

"He came in tongues of living flame To teach, convince, subduc, All powerful as the wind He came As viewless too,"

In Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bk., 1866, and some American collections, the text is tortured into c. M. [J. J.]

Our eyes, great God, have seen Thy grace. J. Merrick. [Ps. laxav.] 1st pub. in his Psalms Translated or Paraphrased in English Verse, 1765; and, again, in the same work, with each paraphrase divided into stanzas for parochial use, by the Rev. W. D. Tattorsall, 1797. In Collyer's Coll., 1812, six stanzas were given as "Arise, great God, and let Thy grace." This was repeated in later hymn-books, and sometimes as, "Arise, O God, and let Thy grace."

Our Father, throned in heaven, Thy name be praised. Bp. T. Ken. [The Lord's Prayer.] Appeared in his posthumous Hys. for all the Festivals of the Year, 1721; and, again, in the same, pub. by Pickering in 1868, as Bp. Ken's Christian Year, &c., p. 284. It forms a part of the poem for the 15th S. after Trinity, which is based upon St. Matt. vi., the chapter from which the Gospel of the day is taken. Although not in C. U. it is very concise and musical, and is worthy of attention.
